Table 20. Annual Average Income of Males 25 Years and Over by Years of School Completed, 1939-1958 . 19

Table 21. Percent Distribution of Income of Families, United States and South by Color, 1954-1961 22

Table 22. Distribution of Income of Families, United States and Eleven Southern States, by Color, 1960 . . 22

Table 23. Distribution of Income of Families of Selected Cities, by Color, 1960 23

Table 24. Distribution of Income of Persons 14 Years and Over with Income for United States and Eleven Southern States by Color, 1950-1960 23

I

Introduction: The State of Optimism

By most measurements, Negroes in the United States appeared to be moving from perennial poverty to relative prosperity at the beginning of the postwar era. Forces at work promised to liberate them from the imbalance that had historically characterized their position in the economy. National economic expansion, technology, and southern economic reorganization had generated new opportunities and higher incomes. There was, in fact, cause for high expectations of basic and accelerated change.

Likewise, the South* had cause to be optimistic. Historically, it had lagged behind the rest of the nation and was generally looked upon as the "nation's number one economic problem," dependent for development upon slow-growth industries and agriculture. The region, since 1940, had been shedding itself of its relative homogeneity of economic structure; it had been moving away from economic backwardness and, as a result of national expansion and reallocation of resources, had been moving toward parity with the rest of the nation.

These developments—southern economic reorganization and improvement in the economic status of Negroes—are two of the principal results of national economic expansion since World War II.

Yet, despite the gains made, both the South and the Negro remain the most depressed segments of the economy and the population. There is some cause for continued optimism about southern economic growth and progress in general. But there is, in reality, little cause for optimism regarding rapid change in the status of Negroes in the near future. Unless unforseeable, "revolutionary," changes take place in Negro manpower utilization and development, the Negro citizen will remain the "forgotten man" in America's affluent society.

The situation of southern Negroes is less favorable than that of Negroes in the rest of the nation because the South has failed to extend the benefits of economic progress to them at a rate comparable to those extended to Negroes in other sections of the country. Personal per capita income in the South has quadrupled since 1940, but it is still less than three-fourths that of the rest of the nation. The income of Negro families and individuals nationally has grown over five times since 1940, but it is still little more than one-half that of white families and individuals; and in the South Negro families have an income of less than one-half (46%) that of white families and only one-half the income of their non-southern counterparts.

Gains have been made in employment, but unemployment is twice as extensive among Negro members of the labor force as among whites. Negroes are still concentrated in jobs of the lowest categories, with limited mobility and a high vulnerability to cyclical fluctuations and adverse consequences of technological changes.

Racial discrimination in employment is still as widespread as segregation and discrimination in education. This latter practice, particularly in vocational and technical training, helps to perpetuate a relatively poor job distribution of Negroes.

Thus, while it cannot be denied that important change has occurred in the economic status of Negroes during the past 20 years, critical questions must be considered regarding the rapidity of this change. Basically, the question facing the nation, the South, and Negroes today is whether Negroes are narrowing the gaps in their economic status. The issue is not whether Negroes have been making progress, but whether it has been rapid enough to enable them to adjust to an economy whose rate of change is cumulative and intense. The issue is whether the momentum of change is great enough, and deep enough, to generate an economic base among Negroes which will guarantee their continued movement up the economic ladder.

Traditional patterns of race relations have never worked in the best interest of the economy of the South or of the nation. Indeed, poor race relations have helped to depress growth.* Thus, the manner and extent to which Negroes are absorbed into the economy will strongly determine the pace with which the South reaches parity of income and economic well-being with the nation. Economic progress of the region is increasingly influenced by its urban and racial climate. And, we may add, pressure for change in southern race relations is increasingly generated by forces imbedded in the region's industrial-urban development.

Even this brief examination of southern economic change and the economic status of Negroes will, there-

*Unless otherwise indicated, throughout this report the "South" means the states of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Virginia. Since Negroes make up about 97% of the nonwhites in the country, census and other data on nonwhites will be considered as applicable to Negroes.

*See William Nicholls, Southern Tradition and Regional Progress. Chapel Hill, 1960.

fore, show also why Negroes have stepped up their efforts to speed school desegregation, which, in large part, derives from efforts to secure a better break economically in the nation and in the region. Hopefully, this study may also bring into focus certain aspects of the challenge to the South, if it is to continue its progress.

TABLE 1. NONWHITE POPULATION FOR ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES, 1950-1960

States	Year 1960	Year 1950	Nonwhite as a Percent of Total Population 1960	Nonwhite as a Percent of Total Population 1950	Increase or Decrease Nonwhite 1950-1960	Percent of Increase or Decrease Over 1950 1950-1960
Alabama	983,123	980,950	30.1	32.1	2,173	0.2
Arkansas	390,079	427,555	21.8	22.4	—37,476	—8.8
Florida	887,679	605,254	17.9	21.8	282,425	46.7
Georgia	1,124,898	1,064,890	28.5	31.0	60,018	5.6
Kentucky	217,999	202,560	7.1	6.9	15,439	7.6
Louisiana	1,045,068	885,065	32.1	33.1	160,003	18.1
Mississippi	920,734	991,795	42.3	45.6	—71,061	—7.2
North Carolina	1,156,707	1,078,945	25.4	26.2	77,762	7.2
South Carolina	834,962	824,870	34.9	39.0	7,092	0.9
Tennessee	589,136	531,461	16.4	16.2	57,675	10.9
Virginia	822,426	736,665	20.8	22.2	85,761	11.6

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population 1960, General Social and Economic Characteristics.
U. S. Department of Commerce, Current Population Reports, Population Estimates, Series P-25, No. 247, April 2, 1962.

II

Structural Reorganization of the South

Economic progress is best evidenced by upward changes in the real per capita income of individuals (and, to a lesser extent, in the income of families). Income determines the spending and saving power of people, while at the same time it provides a measure of the earning capacity of the whole economy and an indicator of individual contributions to the production of goods and services.

On the other hand, structural changes and economic reorganization are best shown by change in industry sources of employment and income, shifts in occupational distribution of employed persons, growth in "value-added" by manufacturing, and characteristics of population change.

The South Loses Its People

Beyond the size of the population (see Table 1) two aspects of population change are of interest here: the patterns of migration between the South and the non-South; and the patterns of migration between rural-farm areas and the city, both within and outside the South.

In the 1950's, the South's population grew 14%. But Table 2 shows that —most of this gain, however, resulted from "natural increase," i.e., an excess of births over deaths.

—only in Florida and Virginia was there a migration gain.

—all other southern states had more people moving out than moving in.

—Arkansas and Mississippi exported so many people that the former actually declined in population in the 1950's and the latter was stationary.

—Negroes were leaving the area in larger numbers than whites.

Another depressing fact: the South's export of people included a high proportion of its youth and its well-educated.

For Negroes this is shown by such facts as —in 1950, 55% of Negroes with four or more years of college were in the South; in 1960, only 48%.

—in 1950, 67% of Negro professional and technical workers were in the South; in 1960, only 48%.

During the decade 1940-50, more than 1.5 million Negroes left the South, and another 1.5 million left during the decade 1950-60. These movements involved 16% and 14% of the Negroes in the region in each of the two periods respectively. In 1940, 77% of all Negroes in the United States resided in the South compared with 51% today.

The leading exporters of people were Alabama, Arkansas, Mississippi, and South Carolina.

Patterns of migration by Negroes among southern states have varied. Florida, for example, is the only state which had an excess of inmigration by Negroes over outmigration in both decades since 1940: a 3% net inmigration between 1940 and 1950 and 17% be-between 1950 and 1960 (see Table 2). Georgia and Louisiana are the only states in which outmigration by Negroes slowed itself after 1950 and began to show a downward trend. In each of the other states, included in Table 2, the upward trend in Negro outmigration continued throughout the 1940-1960 period. Mississippi lost the largest number of Negroes, 326,000, or 30%, between 1940 and 1950, and 323,000, or 32%, between 1950 and 1960.

The movement of Negroes out of the South is both helpful and harmful. By moving out of the South in pursuit of jobs created by national economic expansion, Negroes, as well as whites, find new job opportunities. Simultaneously, the South is being relieved of a sizeable portion of the population which over the years has depended on low-income agriculture for a livelihood.

On the other hand, losses in population drain away much of the best developed and trained manpower, and these losses are from the most productive age group, which has received the benefit of substantial investment by the South in education and training. The loss of these persons from the region is a drain on the economy's human capital.

TABLE 2. POPULATION CHANGE AND TOTAL NET MIGRATION 1950-1960 AND NET MIGRATION OF NONWHITES 1940-1960 FOR ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES (PERCENT)

State	Total Net Change 1950-1960	Total Net Migration 1950-1960	Net Migration of Nonwhites 1950-1960	Net Migration of Nonwhites 1940-1950
Alabama	+ 6.7	−12.0	−22.8	−20.5
Arkansas	− 6.5	−22.7	−35.0	−32.4
Florida	+78.5	+58.3	+16.6	+ 2.7
Georgia	+14.5	− 6.2	−19.2	−22.2
Kentucky	+ 3.2	−13.2	− 7.6	− 7.9
Louisiana	+21.4	− 1.9	−10.4	−17.0
Mississippi	(a)	−19.9	−32.2	−30.2
North Carolina	+12.2	− 8.1	−19.2	−16.2
South Carolina	+12.5	−10.5	−26.5	−25.3
Tennessee	+ 8.4	− 8.3	−10.7	− 9.2
Virginia	+19.5	+ 0.4	− 9.5	− 3.9

(a) Less than 1 percent.
SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, Current Population Reports, Series P-25, No. 247, April 2, 1962.

Negroes Move to the Central Cities

Another population shift is the movement of people to cities and urban areas, both within and outside the South.

By 1960, three-fourths of the Negroes of Florida were urban dwellers (see Table 3). The proportion in Kentucky and Tennessee was about as high, and in Louisiana three out of five Negroes were urban. By 1960, in only four states—Arkansas, Mississippi, North and South Carolina—did the majority of Negroes live where once they overwhelmingly had: on the land, or close to it.

TABLE 3. DISTRIBUTION OF POPULATION BETWEEN URBAN AND RURAL FOR ELEVEN STATES BY COLOR, 1950-1960

States	White						Nonwhite
	1960		1950		Percent Increase or Decrease 1950-60		1960		1950		Percent Increase or Decrease 1950-60
	Urban	Rural	Urban	Rural	Urban	Rural	Urban	Rural	Urban	Rural	Urban	Rural
Alabama	54.2	45.8	42.6	57.4	39.9	−12.2	56.8	43.2	46.2	53.8	+23.1	−19.4
Arkansas	42.4	57.6	32.6	67.4	22.7	−19.2	44.6	55.4	34.2	65.8	+18.6	−23.0
Florida	73.4	26.6	65.5	34.5	111.6	+44.8	76.5	23.5	65.6	34.4	+71.3	+ 1.2
Georgia	54.4	45.6	44.9	55.2	44.1	− 1.9	57.5	42.5	46.8	53.8	+31.4	−16.5
Kentucky	42.5	57.5	34.8	65.2	26.2	− 9.1	70.6	29.4	62.9	37.1	+20.8	−18.6
Louisiana	64.0	36.0	70.3	29.7	12.4	+ 3.1	61.7	38.3	23.5	76.6	+210.7	− 8.6
Mississippi	41.8	58.2	31.5	68.5	40.9	−10.0	32.1	67.9	23.4	76.6	+27.6	−17.7
North Carolina	39.6	60.4	33.6	66.4	34.4	+ 4.1	39.5	60.5	33.5	66.5	+26.4	− 2.5
South Carolina	45.2	54.8	42.0	58.1	29.5	+13.6	33.9	66.1	28.5	71.5	+19.7	− 6.5
Tennessee	48.4	51.6	40.3	59.7	29.7	− 6.8	71.8	28.2	64.1	35.9	+24.1	−12.8
Virginia	56.4	43.6	47.4	52.6	44.9	+ 0.7	53.4	46.8	45.8	58.3	+29.8	− 3.6

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of the Population 1960, General Social and Economic Characteristics and 1950 U. S. Census of Population, U. S. Summary, Detailed Characteristics.

The movement of people to the cities and metropolitan areas of the South symbolizes a basic change in the economic structure of the region, sealing an end to the region's traditional economy.

Negroes have also concentrated in the central cities rather than the suburbs. Charles Silberman has suggested that this ranks as one of the great population movements in modern history.* In the last decade, the twelve largest Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas —New York, Los Angeles, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit, San Francisco-Oakland, Boston, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Washington, Cleveland, and Baltimore — lost over two million white residents and gained nearly two million Negro residents, while the central cities of all Standard Metropolitan Statistical Areas in the nation had an increase of 3.5 million in the Negro population.

However, the influx of Negroes to the large cities of the North and West should not obscure the fact that Negroes have been moving into southern cities as well.

Between 1950 and 1960, the number of whites in the central cities of the South increased only 26%; the number of Negroes in the central city increased 37%. Whereas just a few years ago the large majority of Negroes lived on farms, today about 72% live in urban areas and about one-half live in the central cities of those urban areas. Table 4 shows population data for selected southern cities.

These patterns underscore the fact that Negroes are becoming more urbanized than whites, in the South as well as in the North. The trends are not as great in the South as in the North, but it is clear that Negroes and whites have been moving in opposite directions, i.e., Negroes toward the central city and whites toward the suburbs.

Population redistribution within the South and between regions reflects the momentum of economic change and opportunity. The greatest single factor underlying population migration is economic, or employment, opportunity. The denial of opportunity to Negroes within the South and the attraction of such opportunity elsewhere has been the major motivation.

Employment and Sources of Income

The principal factor determining the distribution of population over broad regions is economic opportunity and the principal dimension of economic opportunity is employment opportunity.

While farming continues to occupy a big place in southern economic life, its relative role over the past 20 years has decreased. Farm employment declined by about 45% in the South between 1940 and 1960. During the same period manufacturing employment increased 23%, and as a source of income by 27%.

These changes have not only meant more factory jobs in the South. They have also involved diversification in employment. For example, the textile industry, once the backbone of manufacturing in the South and responsible for 25% of all manufacturing employment, is now the source of only 18%. Chemicals, transportation equipment, electrical machinery, and fabricated metals have grown as sources of factory employment, and other non-agriculture industries are increasingly

*See his article, "The City and the Negro," in Fortune, March, 1962.

TABLE 4. POPULATION OF SELECTED URBANIZED AREAS BY COLOR, 1950-1960

Urbanized Areas	White 1960	White 1950	White Increase 1950-1960	White Percent Increase 1950-1960	Nonwhite 1960	Nonwhite Percent Nonwhite of Total	Nonwhite 1950	Nonwhite Increase Nonwhite of Total	Nonwhite Increase 1950-1960	Nonwhite Percent Increase 1950-1960
Atlanta	560,124	210,055	350,069	166.7	207,821	27.1	130,055	36.6	86,666	71.5
Birmingham	320,302	195,690	124,612	63.7	201,028	23.2	130,055	39.9	70,973	54.6
Charleston, S. C.*	137,471	96,130	41,341	43.0	78,911	36.5	68,055	41.4	10,856	16.0
Dallas	794,411	395,145	419,266	111.76	137,938	14.8	57,825	13.4	80,113	138.5
Durham*	75,955	67,520	8,435	12.5	36,040	32.2	33,530	33.2	2,510	7.5
Houston	900,817	469,825	430,992	91.7	238,861	21.0	124,760	21.0	114,101	91.5
Jackson, Miss.*	112,093	77,890	34,203	43.1	74,952	40.1	63,830	45.0	11,122	17.4
Little Rock	142,423	78,650	63,773	81.1	42,594	23.0	23,425	23.0	19,169	81.8
Louisville	527,,420	309,940	217,480	70.2	79,239	13.1	57,435	15.6	21,804	38.0
Memphis	344,487	255,273	89,214	35.0	200,018	36.7	150,761	37.1	49,257	32.7
Miami	737,146	208,935	528,211	252.8	115,559	13.6	40,035	16.1	75,524	188.6
Nashville	273,928	200,198	73,736	36.8	72,801	21.0	58,695	22.7	14,106	24.0
New Orleans	579,640	210,055	192,080	49.6	265,597	31.4	181,120	31.9	84,477	46.6
Oklahoma City	385,777	221,195	164,582	74.4	43,411	10.1	20,890	8.6	22,521	107.8
Richmond	238,226	156,625	81,601	52.1	95,212	28.6	73,030	31.8	22,182	30.4

*Cities.

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, U. S. Summary, Detailed Characteristics, Table 53. U. S. Census of Population 1960, General Social and Economic Characteristics, by state, Table 72.

providing more and better jobs for southern workers.

Unquestionably, the South has reduced its poverty. Since 1940, the region has made progress toward achieving a balance between its share of the nation's income and its share of the nation's population. The South had one-fifth of the population in 1930 but received only one-tenth of the income; in 1961, although its proportion of the population had remained at about 20%, its share of personal income had advanced from 10 to 15% (see Table 5).

The figures in Table 6 show per capita personal income. Clearly, the progression in the South since 1940 has been greater than for the nation as a whole. Perhaps the most illuminating figures are those on the bottom line: in 1940, southern personal income was only 58% of the national average; by 1962, it had reached 72%.

TABLE 5. INCOME AND POPULATION OF THE SOUTH AS A PERCENT OF THE UNITED STATES, 1930-1961

Year	Population of South as a Percent of Total for U. S.	Income of South as a Percent of Total for U. S.
1961	20.5	15.0
1960	20.6	14.8
1959	20.6	14.9
1958	20.7	14.9
1940	21.4	12.2
1930	20.8	10.2

SOURCE: Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Economic Characteristics of the South, January 1959.
Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Statistics on the Growing South, November 1962.

These indices, as shown in Tables 5 and 6, indicate the economic progress of the South. A different impression is obtained, however, if dollars and cents, rather than percentages, are used.

In 1940 per capita personal income amounted to $595 in the United States as a whole, only $252 more than that of the South. By 1950 the national figure had grown to $1,494, but the South's per capita income was only $1,011, or $482 lower. By 1961, when the national figure had reached $2,263, the South had a per capita income of $1,652, or $611 lower.

In other words, the South has had large growth in personal income and has made impressive gains in the percentage relationship of its income to that of the rest of the nation. At the same time, there has been an increase in the dollar gap, a gap that is more than twice greater than two decades ago.

The South is, nevertheless, now experiencing substantial improvements in its well-being. The economic lag which kept the region at the rear of American industrialization is being eroded. But Earl Rauber and Harry Brandt, both of the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank, placed the "new South" in its best perspective. Rauber put it this way: "for better or worse the inexorable march of economic history has abolished the South as an economic entity." Brandt said, "with the old rural-agriculture economy gone, the Mississippi Delta farmer has less in common with the Atlanta fac-

TABLE 6. PER CAPITA PERSONAL INCOME FOR ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES, 1940-1962

States	Years				Percent Change
	1962	1961	1950	1940	1940-1950	1950-1961	1961-1962
Alabama	$1,538	$1,492	$ 869	$ 282	208.2	71.7	3
Arkansas	1,533	1,446	807	256	215.2	79.2	6
Florida	1,997	1,965	1,287	513	150.9	52.7	2
Georgia	1,714	1,645	1,017	340	199.1	62.1	4
Kentucky	1,705	1,625	958	320	199.4	69.6	5
Louisiana	1,715	1,626	1,087	363	199.4	49.6	5
Mississippi	1,282	1,229	733	218	236.2	67.7	4
North Carolina	1,709	1,642	1,012	328	208.5	62.3	4
South Carolina	1,516	1,433	882	307	187.3	62.5	6
Tennessee	1,679	1,605	995	339	193.5	61.3	5
Virginia	2,004	1,908	1,234	466	164.8	54.6	5
UNITED STATES	2,375	2,263	1,491	595	150.6	51.8	4
(1) South*	1,724	1,652	1,011	343	194.8	63.4	4
					Percent Change in Ratio
South as Percent of U.S.	72.0	73.0	67.7	57.6	1940-1950	1950-1960	1940-1961
					+17.7	+7.8	+26.3

*Eleven States included above plus West Virginia.
SOURCE: 1940-1950, U. S. Department of Commerce, Personal Income by States, Since 1929.
1961, Survey of Current Business, August, 1962.
1962, Survey of Current Business, April, 1963.

tory worker or sales representative than the latter has with his counterparts in the rest of the country."

The region can no longer be characterized by a relatively homogeneous set of basic economic characteristics and pursuits different from those of the rest of the United States. It may be assumed, therefore, that southern economic growth and organization will be constantly linked to patterns of change in the total economy. Therefore, whatever forces shape the economy as a whole will tend to shape the future of the South, particularly if the region will emancipate itself from traditional race relations, a formidable barrier to its economic progress.

III

Negro Gain Has Been Slight

The Negro population of this country has jumped from about 13 to 20 million since 1940, and it has become predominantly urban. The number of Negroes in better paying semi-skilled and white collar jobs has doubled.

These advances have been important because they represent a new beginning and provide the basis for optimism about the continuing economic improvement of the Negro population. Three aspects of the situation should be observed, however, at this point:

(1) Negroes in the South have not shared proportionately in these advances. Differentials in economic progress by Negroes in the South and the non-South persist. They reflect not only the southern lag in general, but also a substantial lag in employment and occupational opportunity for Negroes in the South in comparison with opportunity in other regions.

(2) Not only have the improvements failed to close substantially the historic gap between Negroes and others, but in dollars and cents the position of Negroes has deteriorated.

(3) There are signs which suggest that the momentum underlying improvements in the position of Negroes has not been sufficient to allow Negroes to overcome their marginal position in the work force, nor sufficient to generate change at rates significant enough to guarantee continuous progress. One of the forces which generated positive change in the position of Negroes in the immediate postwar period was technology. Today it is exerting a negative impact.

Progress appears, at present, to be occurring at a decreasing rate when compared with progress of other Americans. New forces must be vigorously brought into play if the relative gains of the past 20 years are not to be eliminated or wiped out during the immediate years ahead. These forces will have to include intensified training and development of Negro manpower. But, above all, there is a need for vigorous application of public policy in eliminating racial discrimination in education, training, and manpower utilization or employment.

Income: Negroes Running Fast to Stand Still

Income analysis suggests that Negroes are on a treadmill and time is in reality "running out" on them, as a group, in their pursuit of parity with whites. The group has to run exceptionally fast in order to stand still. And Negroes in the South have more difficulty in sustaining their relative and absolute positions than those in other sections of the country.

Undoubtedly the position of Negroes as income recipients and consumers has improved. Three times more Negroes were employed in 1960 than in 1940 in income producing, non-agriculture jobs; thus there are more Negroes with money. Change has occurred in the distribution of income among Negroes, and the huge migration of the Negro population from rural to urban areas and to the central cities has resulted in a large concentration of Negro purchasing power in these areas.

For example, Table 7 sets forth estimates of participation in retail sales by Negroes in ten cities, ranging from $26 million, or 21% of the total, in Durham to $512 million, or 15%, in Houston. In none of these cities did Negroes represent this much sales volume 20 years ago. This is not only suggestive of the impact of aggregate and concentrated purchasing power in the Negro market, but it is also indicative of the kind of economic potential to which southern race relations must adjust.

Not only are there more Negroes with income, but also, in comparison with 20 years ago, fewer of them are in the lowest income brackets and more of them are in the middle and upper income categories. Obviously, this suggests a higher participation by Negroes in the market place.

For example, Table 8 shows a tripling in the proportion of Negro families with incomes between $4,000 and $6,000 between 1945 and 1961, while the number

TABLE 7. ESTIMATED PURCHASING POWER OF NEGROES IN TEN SELECTED STANDARD METROPOLITAN STATISTICAL AREAS, 1961

Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area	Total Retail Sale Estimate	Estimated Negro Participation*	Percent Negro
Atlanta	$1,800,000,000	$306,000,000	17.0
Birmingham	897,000,000	206,000,000	23.0
Durham	125,000,000	26,250,000	21.0
Charleston, S. C.	220,000,000	50,600,000	23.0
Houston	2,050,000,000	512,500,000	15.0
Miami	1,700,000,000	153,000,000	9.0
New Orleans	1,200,000,000	252,000,000	21.0
Nashville	610,000,000	91,500,000	15.0
Memphis	850,000,000	204,000,000	24.0
Richmond	790,000,000	142,200,000	18.0

*Estimate of retail sales made to Negroes trading in central trading areas of Standard Metropolitan Statistical Area; includes Negroes from contiguous counties or total market area.

SOURCE: U. S. Census of Population and Housing 1960, Census Tracts. U. S. Department of Commerce, 1958 Bureau of Census.
J. Walter Thompson Company, Population and Its Distribution, The United States Markets, (New York: McGraw-Hill, 1961).

of families with income over $6,000 has grown from 4% to 20% of the total during the same period. These gains are impressive, but —the rate of participation in the labor force of Negro women and younger people is much higher than among whites;

—60% of the Negro families in this country today still have incomes of less than $4,000 annually, compared with 28% of the white families;*

—white families are abandoning the lower income brackets at a much faster rate than Negroes (a decline of 63% for whites and 33% for Negroes);

—Negroes are reaching the higher income brackets at a slower rate than whites.

Moreover, about 75% of the Negro families in the United States have incomes less than the median income of $5,981 for white families (see Table 10).

Beginning in 1940, the income of Negroes grew at unprecedented rates. It was marked by a growth of approximately 700% in aggregate personal income between 1939 and 1961, an income which is now estimated to be well over $22 billion per year, 5% of the personal income of the nation. In direct contrast to the situation before 1940, when Negroes as income recipients, or consumers, commanded little or no respect in the national and regional economy, they have since 1945 attracted serious competitive attention in the market places of the nation. The power of the Negro market has meaning in the area of race relations, as a "new" force underlying efforts on the part of Negroes

*See also the more detailed Tables 21, 22, 23, and 24 in the Appendix.

TABLE 8. PERCENT DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME OF FAMILIES BY COLOR FOR UNITED STATES, 1945-1961

Total Money Income Level	1961		1945		Percent Increase or Decrease in Ratio Over 1945
	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite
Per Cent	100	100	100	100
Under $4,000	27.7	60.2	75.5	90.1	−63.3	−33.1
$4,000-$5,999	22.4	19.7	16.8	6.1	+33.3	+223.0
$6,000 and Over	49.9	20.1	7.7	3.8	+548.0	+429.0

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, Current Population Reports, Consumers Income, Series P-60, No. 2, March 2, 1948 and No. 38, August 28, 1962.

to eliminate discrimination and segregation and obtain better employment in retail trade, industry, and finance.

But, Negroes made their greatest income gains between 1940 and 1954. Since 1954, they have not progressed in income as well.

In 1939, for example, the median wage and salary income of Negro males was $460, the equivalent of 41% that of white males. Between then and 1955, Negro men substantially gained. Since 1955, Negro males have barely held on to those gains, losing, as Table 9 shows, 3.5 percentage points between 1955 and 1957 and gaining only one point between 1955 and 1960. As of 1960, the wage and salary income of Negro males was still only three-fifths that of white males, just about the same as in 1955 when progress toward closing the income gap between Negroes and whites began to level off.

Similar developments occurred regarding family income. As shown in Table 10, Negro families and unrelated individuals gained 19% on white families and individuals between 1940 and 1954, moving from a ratio of 37% to 56%. Since the beginning of 1955, the percentage relationship has just barely held its own, dropping 5.3 points between 1954 and 1959, reversing itself in 1960 and again reaching 56%, and dropping again in 1961 to 52%.

Two characteristics stand out. On the one hand, relative growth in wage and salary income of Negroes since 1940 has been greater than that of whites; on the other hand, the absolute, or dollar, difference has widened considerably.

White males have stretched the "dollar gap" between their earnings and that of Negroes over three times since 1939. White families similarly have increased the differential between their employment income and that of Negro families.

People spend and save dollars. It is this dollar difference that counts. Pronouncements regarding economic progress which are confined to acceleration concepts and percentage change obscure the real predica-

TABLE 9. MEDIAN WAGE AND SALARY INCOME OF PERSONS 14 YEARS AND OVER WITH WAGE AND SALARY INCOME BY COLOR AND SEX FOR SELECTED YEARS, 1939-1960

Color and Sex	Year						Percent Change 1939-1960
	1960	1958	1957	1955	1954	1939
White
Male	$5,137	$4,569	$4,396	$3,986	$3,754	$1,112	+461
Female	2,537	2,364	2,240	2,065	2,046	676	+375
Nonwhite
Male	3,075	2,652	2,436	2,342	2,131	460	+668
Female	1,276	1,055	1,019	894	914	246	+518
Pecent Nonwhite of White							Percent Change in Ratio
Male	59.8	58.0	55.4	58.8	56.8	41.3	+44.8
Female	50.2	44.6	45.5	43.3	44.7	38.7	+29.7
Dollar Differences Between White and Nonwhite							Increase 1939-1960
Male	−$2,062	−$1,917	−$1,960	−$1,644	−$1,623	−$652	+$1,410	+216 percent
Female	−$1,261	−$1,307	−$1,221	−$1,171	−$1,132	−$430	+$1,221	+193 percent

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, Current Population Reports, Series P-60, No. 37, January 17, 1962; Table 37, No. 33, January 15, 1960. No. 32, September 22, 1957, No. 23, November 1956; Table 11, No. 19, October 1955; Table 11.

TABLE 10. MEDIAN WAGE OR SALARY INCOME OF PRIMARY FAMILIES AND UNRELATED INDIVIDUALS WITH WAGE AND SALARY INCOME BY COLOR, 1940-1961

Families and Individuals	1961	1960	1959	1958	1957	1956	1955	1954	1953	1950	1940
White	$5,570	$5,424	$5,252	$4,882	$4,831	$4,685	$4,331	$4,150	$4,201	$3,390	$1,325
Nonwhite	2,908	3,058	2,672	2,437	2,536	2,429	2,418	2,333	2,357	1,671	489
Dollar Difference Between Whites and Nonwhites	−2,662	−2,336	−2,580	−2,445	−2,295	−2,256	−2,113	−1,817	−1,944	−1,519	− 836
Nonwhite Income as a Percent of White	52.2	56.3	50.9	49.9	52.5	51.8	55.8	56.2	56.1	49.3	37.0
Percent Change in Ratio	1950-1960		1940-1960		1957-1959		1953-1957		1950-1953		1940-1950
	+14.1		+52.2		−3.0		−6.4		+13.8		+33.2

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, Statistical Abstract of the United States, 1962.
U. S. Department of Commerce, Current Population Reports, Series P-60, No. 27, No. 33, January 15, 1960, No. 37, January 17, 1962, No. 38, August 28, 1962, No. 27, Table 15 No. 39, Table 22 dated February 28, 1963.

ment—Negroes are losing ground rapidly in gaining dollar parity with whites. The "dollar gap" trend shown in Tables 9 and 10 means very simply that earnings are increasing for whites at a faster pace than for Negroes.

This is explained in two ways. First, earnings of Negroes have been low over a long period of time. Thus, a smaller gain yields a striking percentage increase. The second explanation is more serious. Notwithstanding their real gains, Negroes are not finding enough jobs in areas where wages and salaries tend to be higher and to increase faster.

Whites are acquiring the highest paying jobs in the higher occupational classifications. The benefits of general economic expansion and technology, therefore, have only "trickled down" to the Negroes, putting more of them into wage and salary jobs. These benefits automatically produced high acceleration in income change, but were restricted tightly to lower occupational classifications.

Thus, despite the unprecedented growth of income among Negroes and the percentage gains made, the fact remains that income progress of Negroes has leveled off. The percent of Negro families in lower income brackets is twice as high as whites, and the differential in earnings of whites and Negroes continues to widen, largely offsetting percentage gains. Accordingly, it is still difficult for Negroes to purchase health, education, and the amenities of life on the same level as other members of the population.

Southern Negroes at the Bottom of Economic Ladder

The individual income of Negroes in the South is only two-fifths that of comparable whites. In other regions, the income of Negro citizens is about three-fourths and that of whites (see Table 11).

The table also shows that southern Negroes have incomes of about two-fifths that of non-southern Ne-

TABLE 11. MEDIAN INCOME OF PERSONS 14 YEARS AND OVER WITH INCOME BY REGION AND COLOR, 1950-1960

	1960				1950
Region	White	Nonwhite	Dollar Differences White and Nonwhite	Nonwhite Percent of White	White	Nonwhite	Dollar Differences White and Nonwhite	Nonwhite Percent of White
Northeast	$3,304	$2,441	−$ 863	73.9	$2,246	$1,622	−$584	72.2
North Central	3,090	2,263	− 827	73.2	2,143	1,652	− 491	77.1
South*	2,473	995	− 1,478	40.2	1,647	739	− 908	44.9
West	3,298	2,474	− 824	75.0	2,114	1,445	− 669	68.9

SOUTH AS A PERCENT OF OTHER REGIONS

	1960		1950
Northeast	74.8	40.8	73.3	45.6
North Central	80.0	44.2	76.9	44.7
West	74.9	40.2	77.9	51.1

*Includes Maryland, Delaware, Texas, Oklahoma, West Virginia, and District of Columbia.
SOURCE: 1960, U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics, Table 103.
1950, U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, U. S. Summary, Detailed Characteristics, Table 175 and Table 97.

groes (females in the South, incidentally, do slightly better). On the other hand, white persons in the South have incomes close to four-fifths that of white persons in the non-South.

The family income situation is slightly better for Negroes. But here, also, the non-southern Negro family enjoys an income at least 50% greater than that of its southern counterpart (see Table 12 and, for more detail, Table 13).

Table 14 shows that in 1960 there was $1,522 separating the median incomes of whites and non-white persons in this country; in 1950, the difference had been only $1,080. Negroes had fallen farther behind. In the South, the 1960 median income of Negroes was $1,478 below that of whites; in 1950, the difference had been only $908. Negroes had fallen farther behind.

In only one southern state, Florida, have the earnings of Negro male workers gained in relation to those of white male workers (see Table 15). In each of the other ten states, not only did the dollar gap increase, but Negroes also lost percentage ground, ranging from a 6% negative change in Virginia to a 25% negative change in Arkansas for male workers; and a negative change in the income of all persons (see Table 14) ranging from a low 7% in Georgia to 21% in Tennessee. In other words, although Negro income between 1950-60 increased sharply, the gap between white and Negro income was growing.

It seems clear that Negroes in the South have not kept pace with the income progress of the region, and that little change is occurring in their income position visa-vis non-southern Negroes.

One may conclude, therefore, that unless greater efforts are vigorously applied to absorb Negroes into the industrial-commercial life of the urban South these trends will continue. They suggest that, in the ab-

TABLE 12. MEDIAN INCOME OF FAMILIES WITH INCOME BY REGION AND COLOR, 1960

	White	Nonwhite	Percent Nonwhite of White	Dollar Difference White and Nonwhite
Northeast	$6,318	$4,371	69.2	—$1,947
North Central	5,994	4,371	72.0	—$1,674
South*	5,009	2,322	46.4	—$2,687
West	6,444	4,937	76.6	—$1,507
Percent South of:
Northeast	79.3	53.4
North Central	83.6	53.8
West	77.7	47.0

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics.
*South includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

TABLE 13. MEDIAN INCOME OF WHITE AND NONWHITE FAMILIES FOR ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES, 1950-1960

States	1960		Pecent Nonwhite of White	1950		Pecent Nonwhite of White	Percent Change 1950-1960
	White	Nonwhite		White	Nonwhite		Increase or Decrease	Ratio
Alabama	$4,764	$2,009	41.8	$2,056	$ 882	43.0	+127.7	—2.7
Arkansas	3,678	1,636	44.4	1,571	726	46.2	+225	—3.8
Florida	5,147	2,798	54.4	2,323	1,444	49.2	+244.5	+1.5
Georgia	5,027	2,188	43.5	2,159	909	42.1	+240.7	+3.3
Kentucky	4,193	2,570	61.3	1,856	1,110	59.8	+231.5	+2.5
Louisiana	5,288	2,238	42.0	2,434	1,023	42.0	+218.7	No Change
Mississippi	4,209	1,444	34.3	1,614	601	37.2	+240	—7.7
North Carolina	4,588	1,992	43.4	2,215	1,056	47.6	+188.6	—8.8
South Carolina	4,893	1,699	34.7	2,391	790	33.0	+215	+5.1
Tennessee	4,333	2,292	52.9	1,946	1,106	56.8	+207.2	—6.5
Virginia	5,522	2,780	50.3	2,519	1,233	48.9	+225	+2.9
United States	5,424	3,058	56.3
South*	5,009	2,332	46.4

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, U. S. Summary Detailed.
U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics.
*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

TABLE 14. MEDIAN INCOME OF WHITE AND NONWHITE PERSONS FOURTEEN YEARS AND OVER FOR ELEVEN STATES, SOUTH, AND UNITED STATES, 1950-1960

States	1960 White	1960 Nonwhite	Percent Nonwhite of White	1950 White	1950 Nonwhite	Percent Nonwhite of White	Percent Change: Nonwhite Increase	Percent Change: Ratio of Nonwhites to Whites
Alabama	$2,371	$ 866	36.5	$1,455	$616	42.3	+48.6	−13.7
Arkansas	1,788	712	39.8	1,117	487	43.6	+46.2	− 7.8
Florida	2,628	1,352	51.5	1,737	847	48.8	+59.6	− 6.2
Georgia	2,470	927	37.5	1,515	610	40.3	+52.0	− 6.9
Kentucky	2,081	1,129	54.3	1,411	862	61.1	+31.0	−11.1
Louisiana	2,799	1,001	35.8	1,767	774	43.8	+29.3	−18.2
Mississippi	2,757	890	32.3	1,236	439	35.5	+47.1	− 9.0
North Carolina	3,035	1,286	42.4	1,872	999	53.4	+28.7	−20.5
South Carolina	2,447	742	30.3	1,684	525	31.9	+41.3	− 5.0
Tennessee	2,117	982	46.4	1,374	799	58.6	+22.9	−20.8
Virginia	2,765	1,247	45.1	1,880	919	48.9	+35.7	− 7.8
South*	2,473	995	40.2	1,647	739	44.9	+34.6	−10.6
United States	3,024	1,502	49.7	2,053	973	47.4

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, Detailed Characteristics.
U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics.
*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

TABLE 15. MEDIAN INCOME OF WHITE AND NONWHITE MALE WORKERS FOR ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES, 1950-1960

States	1960 White	1960 Nonwhite	1960 Nonwhite as Percent of White	1950 White	1950 Nonwhite	1950 Nonwhite as Percent of White	Percent: Nonwhite Increase	Percent: Change in Ratio of Nonwhites to Whites 1950-1960
Alabama	$3,367	$1,417	42.0	$1.809	$ 956	52.8	+48	−20
Arkansas	2,486	993	39.9	1,423	759	53.3	+30.8	−25.1
Florida	3,743	2,073	55.4	2,239	1,185	52.9	+74.5	+ 4.8
Georgia	3,374	1,489	44.1	1,870	919	49.1	+62.0	−10.0
Kentucky	2,928	1,764	60.3	1,701	1,199	70.4	+47.1	−14.4
Louisiana	4,001	1,565	39.1	2,228	997	44.8	+57.0	−14.4
Mississippi	2,757	890	32.3	1,462	605	41.4	+41.1	−21.9
North Carolina	3,035	1,286	42.4	1,872	999	53.4	+28.7	−20.6
South Carolina	3,195	1,135	35.5	2,043	801	39.2	+41.7	− 9.4
Tennessee	2,932	1,598	54.5	1,685	1,142	67.8	+39.9	−19.4
Virginia	3,734	1,906	51.0	2,255	1,221	54.1	+36.1	− 5.5

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, U. S. Summary, Detailed Characteristics.
U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics.

sence of better economic opportunity, loss through the migration of Negro manpower will continue.

Employment, Occupations, and Manpower Utilization

Four other factors exert a marked influence on the position of Negroes in the non-agriculture labor market. They are:

—technology;

—the degree of competition from whites;

—the quality and kind of education received as part of manpower development; and —public policy regarding the elimination of racial discrimination in education, employment, and occupations.

The last factor is assuming a more important function as a result of court decisions to desegregate education and increases in "fair employment practices" programs at local, state, and federal levels.

Change in technology and manpower requirements and the changing patterns of industry expansion suggest that Negroes can no longer depend upon the forces of national economic expansion and technology to generate improvements in employment opportunity. Technology alone has drastically changed the kind of manpower needed by manufacturing industries. The need for unskilled workers has declined, whereas the demand for workers with skills and training has increased. This trend, coupled with a relatively slow pace of manpower development among Negroes, places them in an unfavorable position when it comes to supplying persons with skills who can compete favorably in today's labor markets.

Between 1947 and 1961, the number of employees in mining, manufacturing, contract construction, and agriculture decreased, while the number of employees absorbed by wholesaling and retailing, insurance, finance, the so-called services, and government increased. Noteworthy is the fact that the industries with a declining rate of employment are the industries which have absorbed Negroes. Actually, the source of improvement in the economic status of Negroes during past years has been their movement out of agriculture into mining, manufacturing, and construction where they found unskilled and semi-skilled jobs as laborers and operatives. These are the industries which since 1957 have had either declining employment or relatively little growth in employment. Excluding government, the areas of growth in employment are not the areas in which Negroes have traditionally found employment.

The second general development involves a shift in employment from plant to office in manufacturing industries. Between 1950 and 1961, the number of persons employed in manufacturing increased by more than one million while the number of production workers declined by almost one-half million. This means that increases in manufacturing employment were in nonplant and non-production jobs, a shift, in other words, to office work and white collar jobs, areas of employment which have never absorbed many Negroes.

Increased use of labor saving devices—"automation"—means that employment opportunity in semi-skilled and unskilled work will continue to decline. It will, therefore, become increasingly difficult for Negroes to attain higher or even retain previous levels of employment in those occupations and industries which they had penetrated during the 1940's and 1950's.

Unemployment among Negroes today amounts to more than 10%, twice that of whites. In heavily industrialized areas such as Chicago and Detroit, the differential is even more striking. Furthermore, the duration of unemployment is longer for Negroes than for whites.

In September 1958 the average duration of unemployment for Negroes was 17.8 weeks and for white workers 13.3 weeks. The average length of unemployment in September 1962 for Negroes was 18.0 weeks while that for whites had dropped to 13.0 weeks. Negroes accounted for about one-fourth of all the long term unemployed, but for only about 11% of the labor force. About 29% of the very long term unemployed in September 1962 were Negroes compared with 21% in September 1961. Long term joblessness among Negroes results from discrimination in hiring and inadequate training and inadequate manpower development.

Since 1940, white collar employment among Negro males has gone up 144% and blue collar skilled and semi-skilled employment by 101% in contrast to 31% and 14% among whites in the respective groups. In the same period, Negro females employed in white collar positions increased by 169% and in blue collar positions by 132% in comparison with a white increase of 18% in white collar jobs and a decline of 23% in the number represented in blue collar occupations.

TABLE 16. NONWHITE EMPLOYMENT AS PERCENT OF TOTAL EMPLOYMENT IN EACH MAJOR OCCUPATION GROUP, BY SEX, APRIL 1940 AND APRIL 1960

Major Occupation Group	Nonwhite Men as Percent of All Men		Increase or Decrease in Percent	Nonwhite Women as Percent of All Women		Increase or Decrease in Percent
	1940	1960	1940-1960	1940	1960	1940-1960
Total Employed	9.0	9.3		13.9	12.6
Professional, Technical, and Kindred Workers	3.1	3.5	+0.5	4.6	5.6	+ 1.0
Managers, Officials, and Proprietors except Farm	1.5	1.9	+0.4	2.8	4.8	+ 2.0
Clerical and Kindred Workers	1.6	6.7	+5.1	0.7	3.8	+ 2.1
Sales Workers	1.4	3.0	+1.6	1.1	2.4	+ 1.3
Craftsmen, Foreman, and Kindred Workers	2.7	4.4	+1.7	2.3	8.0	+ 5.7
Operatives and Kindred Workers	6.1	11.6	+5.5	5.0	12.4	+ 7.4
Laborers, except farm and Mine	21.2	27.6	+6.4	*	*
Service workers, except Private Household	17.4	21.1	+3.7	13.1	19.2	+ 6.1
Private Household	(1)	(1)		46.5	47.5	+ 1.0
Farmers and Farm Managers	13.1	8.6	—4.5	30.2	16.4	—13.8
Farm Laborers and Foremen	22.5	23.6	+1.1	62.9	22.6	—40.3

*Not Available.

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, Bureau of the Census, and U. S. Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics.

These percentage gains are impressive, but the fact remains that Negroes have penetrated only to a limited extent job categories above semi-skilled levels.

For example (see Table 16), Negro females make up 12.6% of the total females employed, but they comprise almost one-half, 48%, of all the domestic servants in the economy and only 2% of all the sales workers; this is not substantially different from the situation in 1940. Negro males comprise slightly in excess of 9% of the employed males in the economy, but they are only 2% of the total number of men employed as nonfarm managers, proprietors, and officials, only four-tenths of a percentage point better than the situation in 1940. Yet they are 28% of the laborers.

Table 17 shows similar data for the South only. There has not been a large penetration by Negroes into the growth sectors of employment. Those industries and occupations where Negroes have gained in employment represent the slow growth areas of the economy and labor market.

It has already been suggested that regional differences in employment account in large measure for differences between the income of Negroes in the South and in the rest of the nation, as well as for high rates of migration by Negroes from southern states. Indeed, in none of the major industry categories shown in Table 18 do Negroes in the South keep pace with Negroes in the non-South. Study the last column of Table 18. In every category except "government" Negroes had a smaller share of the jobs in 1960 than in 1950 in the South. Of course there were fewer Negroes living in the South in 1960. But this is a chicken and the egg question. Fewer jobs because of fewer people? Or did people leave because jobs were not there?

But the fact is, Negroes make up only slightly less of the southern labor force today, 19%, than they did a decade ago, when they were 21% of the labor force. In each area of industry employment, the decline in Negro employment exceeds the decline in the Negro labor force.

Table 19 shows how Negroes are represented in various job categories. These tables reveal important contrasts between the percent of the total labor force and the percent of occupations held by Negroes.

We see, for example, in Table 19 that —in the non-South, 6% of the employed Negroes are in professional and technical positions;

—of all professional and technical positions, Negroes hold only 3%;

—in the South, the percentages are 5 and 9.

We also see that Negroes of the South have almost all the household jobs and nearly half of the laborers jobs, both on and off the farm. We see that very few of the clerical and sales jobs are held by Negroes either in or out of the South. In the non-South, however, a good percentage of employed Negroes (10%) are in clerical spots, whereas only 3% of the employed Negroes in the South are so employed.

TABLE 17. DISTRIBUTION OF EMPLOYED PERSONS IN THE SOUTH* BY COLOR AND SEX AND MAJOR OCCUPATION GROUPS, 1950-1960 (PERCENT)

	White				Nonwhite
	Male		Female		Male		Female
Occupation Group	1960	1950	1960	1950	1960	1950	1960	1950
TOTAL	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
WHITE COLLAR OCCUPATIONS	36.9	30.9	59.8	58.8	8.3	5.8	13.2	10.6
Professional, Technical and Related Workers	10.0	6.8	14.0	13.3	2.9	2.0	7.5	6.2
Managers, Proprietors, Officials, Nonfarm	12.6	11.4	4.7	5.4	1.5	1.4	1.0	1.2
Clerical and Related Workers	6.6	5.8	31.5	29.3	2.9	1.6	3.6	2.2
Sales Workers	7.7	6.9	9.6	10.8	1.0	0.8	1.1	1.0
BLUE COLLAR OCCUPATIONS	39.7	36.7	18.6	20.6	30.8	24.6	9.0	9.6
Craftsmen, Foremen (Skilled)	20.5	18.3	1.2	1.3	8.6	6.3	0.4	0.3
Operatives (Semi-skilled)	19.2	18.4	17.0	19.3	22.2	18.3	8.6	9.3
UNSKILLED LABOR AND SERVICE OCCUPATIONS	9.8	9.8	15.1	13.8	36.3	34.3	66.4	64.0
Laborers (Unskilled) Except Farm and Mine	5.2	5.7	0.4	0.5	22.9	23.3	0.9	1.6
Service Workers Except Household	4.0	3.5	11.3	10.4	12.6	10.1	20.8	17.7
Private Household Workers	0.6	0.6	3.4	29.3	0.8	0.9	44.7	44.7
FARM OCCUPATIONS	10.2	21.5	1.7	3.8	18.6	33.8	5.9	13.9
Farmers and Farm Managers	7.2	15.5	0.7	0.9	7.2	19.3	1.0	2.5
Farm Laborers and Foremen	3.0	6.0	1.0	2.9	11.4	14.5	4.9	11.4
OCCUPATIONS NOT REPORTED	4.0	1.3	5.2	2.9	5.9	1.3	5.6	1.7

*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce.
1950 U. S. Census of Population, Detailed Characteristics 216158.
U. S. Census of Population, 1960, General Social and Economic Characteristics—216103.

In sum, it appears that penertation of higher echelons of the occupational scale by Negroes has been relatively limited, and much more so in the South than outside the region. Negroes have entered the mainstream of industrial and civil employment in non-southern communities to a greater degree than in the South. In so doing, they have filled jobs which make possible upgrading, training opportunity, and increased earning power on the basis of personal job qualifications. In the South, Negroes have not shared equitably in the rapid industrial expansion of the past two decades.

TABLE 18. NONWHITES AS A PERCENT OF TOTAL PERSONS EMPLOYED BY INDUSTRY, 1950-1960, UNITED STATES, SOUTH AND NON-SOUTH

	United States			Non-South			South*
	1950	1960	Percent Change in Ratio 1950-60	1950	1960	Percent Change in Ratio 1950-60	1950	1960	Percent Change in Ratio 1950-60
Agriculture	15.6	14.2	− 8.9	2.8	2.8	0.	30.8	30.1	− 2.3
Mining	4.5	3.2	−28.9	3.5	2.1	−40.0	8.4	5.1	−39.2
Construction	5.5	8.5	+54.5	5.6	5.4	− 3.6	17.7	16.9	− 4.5
Manufacturing	6.5	6.8	+ 4.6	4.7	5.4	+14.9	16.4	12.9	−21.3
Transportation	7.6	7.7	+ 1.3	5.2	5.9	+ 1.3	16.1	13.9	−13.7
Trade	6.3	7.0	+11.1	4.2	5.2	+23.8	13.2	12.8	− 3.0
Finance	4.6	4.2	− 4.3	3.8	3.7	− 2.6	9.1	6.6	−21.4
Service	17.1	16.9	− 1.2	11.6	12.1	+ 4.3	36.0	32.4	−10.4
Government	7.9	10.0	+26.5	5.8	8.4	+44.8	10.8	11.6	+ 7.4

*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.
SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 Census of Population, U. S. Summary, Detailed Characteristics Table 16. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics Table 103.

TABLE 19. OCCUPATIONAL DISTRIBUTION OF NONWHITES AND NONWHITES AS A PERCENT OF TOTAL EMPLOYED BY OCCUPATION, SOUTH AND NON-SOUTH, 1960

	Non-South		South*
	Percent Nonwhite of Total Employed in Occupation	Percent Nonwhite of Total Nonwhite	Percent Nonwhite of Total Employed in Occupation	Percent Nonwhite of Total Nonwhite
Total Employed	6.6	100.00	19.2	100.00
Professional and Technical	3.4	6.0	9.2	4.8
Managers, Officials, and Proprietors	2.0	2.5	2.9	1.3
Clerical	4.4	10.1	5.0	3.2
Sales	2.1	2.3	2.8	1.0
Craftsmen, Foremen	3.7	7.7	8.1	5.3
Operatives	7.9	22.2	17.8	16.8
Private Household Workers	30.4	9.0	79.8	18.3
Service Workers	13.3	17.2	37.4	15.9
Farm Laborers	6.0	1.5	47.4	8.8
Farmers and Farm Managers	1.5	0.8	17.9	4.7
Laborers	14.5	9.7	47.6	14.1
Not Reported	14.6	11.1	24.0	5.8

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population 1960, General Social and Economic Characteristics, Table 103 by State.
*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

IV

What Price Discrimination?

An attempt has been made to show the position of Negroes in the economy of the nation and the South. Emerging from the presentation are several implications, a few of which will be dealt with as a conclusion to this report.

Education

Employment determines income; the level of income is related to the kind of job one is able to obtain; and jobs are related to education and training. Thus, to a great degree, the ability of Negroes to pass from poverty and deprivation to parity with the rest of the population depends not only upon removing barriers to employment and occupational mobility. It also depends upon better education through increased school desegregation and upon rapid adjustments and improvements in the process of Negro manpower development (see Table 20).

Not all present underemployment of Negroes can be attributed to discriminatory employment practices; limited opportunities are sometimes available to Negroes for which few exhibit any interest or can qualify. Nevertheless, Negroes face a two-pronged problem: discrimination in employment on one hand and, on the other, an inadequate flow of manpower to meet such limited opportunities as there are. This inadequacy is a cumulative product of segregation in education and manpower development and utilization. This is nowhere more true than in vocational and technical training.

Generally, vocational training available to Negroes is limited mainly to those occupations in which they have traditionally found employment: in the industrial trades, some of which are becoming obsolete, and in those areas where Negroes provide services to Negroes, such as barbering. Technical courses in electronics and tool design, the apprenticeable trades such as plumbing, steamfitting, and sheet metal work, and courses in blueprint reading and welding, are usually not available to Negroes.

Contrast between programs to develop white and Negro manpower can be seen by the course offerings of three southern metropolitan school systems: Atlanta, Houston, and Nashville.

TABLE 20. ANNUAL AVERAGE INCOME OF MALES 25 YEARS AND OVER BY YEARS OF SCHOOL COMPLETED, 1939-1958

Year of School Completed	Annual Average Income
	1939	1946	1949	1958
Elementary:	$1,036	$2,041	$2,394	$3,096
Less Than 8 Years	*	1,738	2,062	2,551
8 Years	*	2,327	2,829	3,769
High School:
1 to 3 Years	1,379	2,449	3,226	4,618
4 Years	1,661	2,939	3,784	5,567
College:
1 to 3 Years	1,931	3,654	4,423	6,966
4 Years or More	2,607	4,527	8,490	9,206

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce Statistical Abstract of the United States 1962.

Houston

In the only vocational and technical high school in the Houston Independent School System, an all white school, full three year courses are offered in: air conditioning and refrigeration mechanics, automobile mechanics, drafting, machine shop, photography, radio and television, and welding. None of these courses is taught in the five Negro schools.

Negroes are offered two years of training in commercial cooking and baking, cleaning and pressing, and trade dressmaking, courses which are not taught in white schools.

Nashville

The only vocational and technical high school in Nashville is an all-white institution. Full courses are offered in commercial art, drafting, auto mechanics, electricity, general clerical, industrial chemistry, machine shop, refrigeration, secretarial training, and office machines; adult evening courses are taught in such areas as sheet metal layout, pipe-fitting, machine shop, welding, aircraft blueprint reading, electronics for office machines, and advanced projection.

Courses offered to Negroes (in only one of the four high schools) throughout the county are auto mechanics, commerce, cosmetology, tailoring, trowel trades, and woodworking. Evening courses are taught in sewing, millinery, auto mechanics, cosmetology, tailoring, trowel trades, and electronics.

Atlanta

The white vocational and technical school in Atlanta is the Smith-Hughes School.* Courses are offered in electronics, tool and die design, instrumentation, machine shop, refrigeration and air conditioning, electricity, iron-working, steam-fitting, plumbing, sheet metal, tool and die making, blueprint reading and drafting, gas fitting, and welding.

Negroes are offered at Carver Vocational School radio and television, industrial sewing, commercial cooking, short order cooking, shoe repairing, auto mechanics, tailoring, bricklaying, drycleaning, practical nursing, and catering.

The contrasts are obvious. Ninety percent of the Negro youth and 80% of the white youth do not go to college. Vocational and technical training at pre-college levels is a real concern. Neglecting the education of the majority of youth who do not go to college will reflect itself most seriously among Negroes, the group most vulnerable to unemployment and automation, because of the imbalance in job development and preparation. We do not need poor quality vocational and technical training programs which serve as dumping grounds for problem students, nor programs that prepare Negro youth for "traditional Negro jobs." We need vocational programs that give sound background in mathematics, science, and other academic subjects, as well as developing marketable skills.

Jobs for laborers and unskilled workers will undoubtedly be considerably reduced by 1970. On the other hand, the economy may well demand, according to some estimates,

—80% more managers
—25% more clerical personnel
—25% more sales personnel
—25% more banking, finance, and insurance personnel
—more blueprint readers, computer operators, metallurgical technicians, machine tool operators, industrial chemists, key punch and machine operators, and other highly skilled people.

But

—no increase is expected in the demand for laborers, and the demand for semi-skilled workers is not expected to rise above 15%.

Restricted vocational and technical training for Negroes is justified by southern school boards on the grounds that jobs in the crafts and technical areas as well as in sales, clerical, and other white collar positions are not generally open to Negroes; therefore, training would be costly and useless. This argument is invalid on its face. School systems have the moral and legal obligation to give all persons the best training and education possible. Moreover, changes in employment opportunity for Negroes in industry, commerce, and government further invalidate the position. President Kennedy's Executive Order 10925 forbidding racial discrimination in federal employment as well as in industries having government contracts has opened new areas of employment opportunity for Negroes. Negroes themselves are using economic and political pressures to achieve improvement in job opportunity. Rapid adjustments in the education of Negroes to meet the demands of new employment opportunity are both urgent and necessary.

Costs of Discrimination

The President's Council of Economic Advisers asserted in 1962 that losses to the economy through racial discrimination result from two factors: (1) inefficiencies in the use of the labor force resulting from failure to utilize fully the existing skills of our population; and (2) failure to develop potential skills fully. The Council estimated that the nation's economy is losing between $13 billion and $17 billion per year in national income and product as result of these two factors.

Fifty percent of the nation's Negroes are concentrated in the South, and the South receives approximately 20% of the nation's total income. A conservative estimate is that the South loses from $5 to $6 billion annually because of racial discrimination.

The South can no longer afford the luxury of wast-

*This school was desegregated on January 28, 1963, but only a token number of Negroes has been accepted for training.

ing a valuable human resource. It cannot continue to deny itself better markets for goods and services by failing to provide a climate of equal economic opportunity for all its citizens. It is equally clear that the nation can ill afford to lose $17 billion per year in income and product. To achieve full equality with other regions of the nation, the South must achieve full utilization of its manpower. For the nation as a whole, the continuing struggle of the cold war makes the full use of America's human resources imperative.

Race Relations and Economic Growth

Despite the relatively low income per person of Negroes, there are twice as many with income as there were a decade or so ago. Negroes have moved ahead educationally. More of them are concentrated in the cities. They are acquiring greater political strength in the urban areas, and they are more sensitive to their role in the politics and market place of the city and the state.

Political strength and purchasing power among urban Negroes can scarcely be ignored by government officials, city planners, business, and industry. With a new industrial-urban orientation, Negroes will increasingly apply political and economic pressures to bring about changes in southern race relations, to step up the momentum of school desegregation, to obtain better employment opportunity, and to obtain access to public facilities.

Rapid racial adjustments by the "new South" are vitally important to the economic health of the region. Tensions generated by poor race relations are not conducive to economic growth. Chaos over school desegregation, boycotts to achieve employment opportunity, sit-in demonstrations, and picket lines, all are simply and tragically inimical to the economic life of the region. Positive steps toward good race relations, the full absorption of Negroes into the mainstream of the region —these are imperative to leadership seeking a healthy South.

Public Policy

Clearly involved in the whole question of improving the economic position of Negroes is the influence of public policy on school desegregation, employment opportunity, and the elimination of segregation in housing and public places.

Low income Negroes and whites in large numbers are relocating themselves in the urban centers of the South just as they are in the North. Without extraordinary economic expansion and rapid improvement in the distribution of income, without swift changes in southern race relations, it is apparent that in the next decade the bulk of southern poverty will complete its shift from the country to the city.

Negro poverty will take its place in the urban slums of the South as a substitute for the traditional rural poverty—which, at least, was relatively self-sufficient. This concentration of low-income people in urban areas raises critical questions for southern city planners and officials.

The national expansion of the economy and technology, which began 20 years ago to alter the position of Negroes cannot be relied upon exclusively to bring about the level of improvement necessary in the future. Public policy will have to play an increased role. This means the expansion and strengthening of programs at local, state,* and federal levels to promote "fair employment practices"; the expansion of minimum wage coverage; more extensive area redevelopment programs; more extensive and inclusive programs of adult education and adult training and retraining programs. All these policies and programs must be advanced along with school desegregation. They will serve to reinforce change generated by normal economic forces.

That Negroes need improved economic opportunity is clear. That poverty among Negroes is being transferred from the rural South to the urban South is equally clear. Welfare dependency in urban areas will not solve the problem. Basically, the solution rests with full opportunity for the development of manpower potential and for employment and occupational mobility.

Employers, government officials, southern educators, southern school boards, and local communities must recognize what continued failure to meet the demands of Negro manpower development will mean. Not only will uneducated and inexperienced Negro manpower continue to contribute to labor surpluses, the very heart of the South's problem, but also the drain on urban economies in supporting undeveloped manpower will continue to impede the progress of both southern and national economic growth.

*On March 17, 1963 Kentucky Governor Bert Combs signed a code of fair practices, making Kentucky the first southern state to adopt such a measure. The code prohibits discrimination in employment and job opportunity, financial assistance, licensing, training programs, parks, and hospitals.

APPENDIX

TABLE 21. DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME OF FAMILIES, UNITED STATES AND SOUTH* BY COLOR, 1954-1961

	1961				1954
	United States		South		United States		South
Family Income Level	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite
Percent	100	100	100	100	100	100	100	100
Under $4,000	27.7	60.2	38.7	80.0	44.1	78.2	53.9	87.0
$4,000-$5,999	22.4	19.7	23.3	13.0	28.7	14.5	24.8	8.7
$6,000 and Over	49.7	20.1	37.9	7.0	27.2	7.4	31.3	4.3
Percent of Change in Distribution Ratio 1954-1961
Under $4,000	−37.1	−23.0	−28.2	− 8.0
$4,000-$5,999	−18.4	+35.8	− 6.0	+51.1
$6,000 and Over	+82.7	171.6	+21.0	+62.8

SOURCE: U. S. Bureau of the Census, Current Population Reports, Consumers Income Series P-60, No. 20, December 1955 Table 2 and No. 37, January 17, 1962 Table 16 P-60, No. 39, February 28, 1963 Table 18.

*Includes Delaware, District of Columbia, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and West Virginia.

TABLE 22. DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME OF FAMILIES, UNITED STATES AND ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES BY COLOR, 1960

	U.S.	Ala.	Ark.	Fla.	Ga.	Ky.	La.	Miss.	N. C.	S. C.	Tenn.	Va.
Under $2,000
Nonwhite	32.4	49.9	61.1	32.1	45.9	39.8	45.1	66.2	50.2	57.7	44.3	35.5
White	11.0	18.9	26.4	13.6	15.3	25.1	14.6	22.0	17.3	14.0	22.4	7.8
$2,000-$2,999
Nonwhite	15.5	17.9	18.4	22.3	21.8	17.9	20.7	16.7	19.9	19.3	19.5	18.6
White	7.6	10.7	14.6	10.5	10.4	11.6	9.6	12.4	11.5	10.5	11.8	5.9
$3,000-$3,999
Nonwhite	13.5	12.4	9.5	18.7	13.0	15.1	13.3	8.0	12.8	10.4	14.3	15.6
White	9.1	11.4	13.4	12.0	11.8	11.1	10.8	13.0	13.6	13.7	12.0	8.1
$4,000-$4,999
Nonwhite	11.4	8.4	4.8	11.6	7.7	11.6	3.5	4.2	7.3	5.5	9.3	11.5
White	10.9	11.7	11.5	12.1	12.2	11.3	11.6	12.2	13.0	13.2	11.4	10.2
$5,000 and Over
Nonwhite	27.2	11.4	6.1	15.1	11.6	15.6	12.2	5.0	9.6	7.0	12.6	18.8
White	61.4	47.2	34.3	51.9	50.2	40.8	53.5	40.3	44.7	48.6	42.5	68.0

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population 1960, U. S. Summary, General Social and Economic Characteristics, Table 65.

TABLE 23. DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME BY FAMILIES FOR FIFTEEN SELECTED CITIES BY COLOR, 1960

City	Under $2,000		$2,000-$3,999		$4,000-$4,999		$5,000 and Over
	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite	White	Nonwhite
Atlanta	8.8	22.5	16.4	40.8	10.0	11.5	64.8	22.1
Birmingham	8.0	22.6	16.0	34.1	11.7	12.4	64.2	20.9
Charleston, S. C.	11.1	42.9	20.5	33.2	11.5	10.2	56.9	13.7
Dallas	7.0	26.7	13.7	40.3	9.9	13.7	69.4	19.3
Durham	8.0	30.2	18.3	42.3	13.1	11.6	60.6	15.9
Houston	7.2	24.9	12.9	36.0	9.9	14.4	70.0	24.7
Jackson, Miss.	5.7	34.2	13.3	44.5	10.9	9.7	70.0	11.6
Little Rock	8.8	31.7	18.7	42.1	11.3	9.8	61.2	16.4
Louisville	9.9	29.5	17.0	31.1	13.5	16.2	59.6	23.2
Memphis	7.5	22.5	24.0	43.0	12.3	15.2	48.4	19.3
Nashville	15.6	32.8	27.0	39.2	13.8	10.9	43.6	17.1
New Orleans	8.8	32.9	18.0	37.0	12.0	12.2	61.1	20.6
Oklahoma City	9.4	28.0	16.7	30.4	11.9	14.7	62.0	26.9
Richmond	6.9	25.4	14.7	35.2	11.2	13.5	67.1	26.0
Norfolk	16.4	30.3	15.4	34.9	10.0	13.6	58.2	21.2

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, U. S. Census of Population and Housing 1960.

TABLE 24. DISTRIBUTION OF INCOME OF PERSONS 14 YEARS AND OVER WITH INCOME FOR UNITED STATES AND ELEVEN SOUTHERN STATES BY COLOR, 1950-1960

	Under $2.000				$2,000-$2,999
	White		Nonwhite		White		Nonwhite
	1960	1950	1960	1950	1960	1950	1960	1950
United States	38.0	48.8	58.2	77.4	11.7	21.2	14.8	15.8
Alabama	44.3	62.3	78.5	88.5	13.6	18.3	11.0	9.3
Arkansas	53.3	71.2	83.8	93.4	14.4	14.3	9.5	5.0
Florida	40.7	55.7	65.3	88.8	13.9	18.9	19.0	9.4
Georgia	42.1	62.0	76.0	93.5	15.1	18.9	13.6	5.2
Kentucky	48.7	64.1	69.2	84.2	12.9	18.2	13.2	12.4
Louisiana	40.2	54.8	73.8	89.3	12.0	18.2	12.8	8.2
Mississippi	49.6	69.2	86.5	96.1	14.7	14.4	8.2	3.1
North Carolina	44.1	61.9	74.8	90.1	17.3	21.2	12.9	7.9
South Carolina	41.9	59.0	80.7	94.8	17.3	22.9	11.8	4.2
Tennessee	48.0	65.0	72.2	87.7	14.5	16.8	13.7	9.9
Virginia	39.7	52.7	65.8	84.4	13.1	20.6	15.0	12.6

	$3,000-$3,999				$4,000-$4,999
	White		Nonwhite		White		Nonwhite
United States	11.4	15.5	10.9	5.1	10.6	6.6	7.9	0.9
Alabama	11.8	10.4	6.8	1.4	9.2	4.1	3.9	0.3
Arkansas	10.9	7.5	3.8	1.0	7.1	3.1	1.8	0.3
Florida	12.2	12.3	9.3	1.2	9.6	5.2	3.7	0.3
Georgia	13.3	9.8	5.8	0.8	9.5	3.8	2.7	0.3
Kentucky	11.0	9.6	8.4	2.6	8.8	3.8	5.3	0.4
Louisiana	11.4	12.6	6.6	1.9	9.8	6.4	3.7	0.3
Mississippi	11.5	8.3	3.0	0.5	7.8	3.5	1.4	0.1
North Carolina	14.8	8.9	6.0	1.3	9.1	3.4	2.8	0.3
South Carolina	15.7	10.2	4.5	0.7	9.2	3.5	1.7	0.1
Tennessee	11.5	9.6	7.5	1.7	8.1	3.8	4.0	0.4
Virginia	12.2	13.4	9.5	2.2	10.4	5.3	5.9	0.4

	$5,000 and Over
	White		Nonwhite
United States	29.3	8.0	8.1	0.7
Alabama	21.2	5.2	2.6	0.2
Arkansas	14.3	4.1	1.3	0.3
Florida	23.6	7.8	2.6	0.3
Georgia	20.0	5.4	2.0	0.3
Kentucky	18.3	4.4	3.8	0.4
Louisiana	26.8	8.0	3.0	0.5
Mississippi	16.3	4.6	0.9	0.0
North Carolina	14.7	4.6	1.5	0.3
South Carolina	8.1	3.8	4.0	0.4
Tennessee	17.8	4.9	2.6	0.3
Virginia	24.6	7.7	3.9	0.4

SOURCE: U. S. Department of Commerce, 1950 U. S. Census of Population, Detailed Characteristics.
U. S. Census of Population, 1960, General Social and Economic Characteriastics.

Pamphlets in the 'Toward Regional Realism' Series

No. 1 — THE SOUTH AND THE NATION

by LeRoy Collins

No. 2 — A HUNDRED YEARS LATER

No. 3 — THE ECONOMIC STATUS OF NEGROES: IN THE NATION AND IN THE SOUTH

by Vivian W. Henderson

INDUSTRIALIZATION:

ACCENT ON THE SOUTH

© BENJAMIN D. SEGAL

PRICE 10¢ A COPY

ACCENT ON THE SOUTH

By BENJAMIN D. SEGAL

PART I

In September, 1957, the governors of the southern states gathered at a Sea Island, Georgia, resort for their annual conference. Mid-way during a discussion of industry in the South, Governor McKeldin of Maryland asked Governor Griffin of Georgia how labor unions are doing in the South.

The answer came in a single crisp word, "Bad."

Perhaps that wasn't a completely fair answer. But no one will deny that the South today, as it was 15 years ago, is organized labor's number one regional problem. The thorough organization of the South has been a dream in labor for years. Now, quietly, under the stormy headlines, basic changes are occurring in the economy of the South that must have vital impact on labor's plans.

To understand them, one must begin by scooping up a handful of the past.

'A Plan of a Machine'

"I wish you, sir, not to show this letter nor communicate anything of its contents to anybody except my brother and sister, enjoining it on them to keep the whole a PROFOUND SECRET."

So wrote a Massachusetts farm boy in a letter dated September 11, 1793. The subject of the mysterious letter was a new invention which the letter-writer, Eli Whitney, had conceived during a brief visit to a cotton plantation 12 miles from Savannah. Whitney, just out of college and hoping to get a teaching job in the Carolinas, was startled to learn of the great difficulty slaves had in separating the seed out of the cotton.

"I involuntarily happened to be thinking on the subject," he wrote, "and struck out a plan of a machine in my mind."

The result was a revolution that swept across the American South like wind-whipped fire, a contradictory revolution that introduced modern machinery at the same time that it increased the need for that most ancient of machines, the human slave.

Two years before Whitney "happened to be thinking on the subject," cotton production in all of America was 4,000 bales a year. One year after his invention was no longer a "profound secret" that figure shot up to 16,000 bales. A decade later it had climbed crazily to over 128,000 bales a year.

Cotton became to the economy of the South what oxygen is to human life.

Droplets

Then a strange thing happened. Whitney's cotton gin hit the South like a shot of adrenalin. But technological progress thereupon almost came to a grinding, sickening halt.

In the North, by the 1850's, the industrial revolution was transforming the land. Roger Burlingame, in his book "Machines That Built America," tells how "the village blacksmith, butcher, miller were being supplanted by the factory, the stockyards, the huge grain elevators and powered flour mills. Standard products poured out from centers already celebrated for particular brands. Thus clocks and watches came from Waltham and Waterbury, New Haven and Plymouth, Connecticut; meat came from mechanical butchering and dressing plants in Cincinnati and Chicago, cloth from Lawrence and Lowell and Providence, shoes from Salem and Lynn, machine tools from Hartford and Chicopee Falls and Windsor, Vermont.

"It was this industrial system," Burlingame wrote, "of which the plantation South knew almost nothing that enabled the northern armies, despite severe military setbacks, to win in 1865."

The South had and has many vital resources. Plentiful water power, endless timberland, bauxite for aluminum, natural gas, oil, phosphate rock, sulfur, zinc, coal, cement iron ore lead feldspar. But despite this the tidal wave of industrialization that thundered from New England through Pittsburgh, Detroit, Chicago, and on to the West splashed only little droplets over the South.

Late Start

As the United States Department of Labor put it in a special issue of its Monthly Labor Review some years ago, "From the colonial period to the present the South has remained predominantly agrarian. To agriculture must be added the economic activities that depend on the wealth, including petroleum, under the earth."

The South began its industrial development late and under unusual handicaps.

The lag in southern industrialization has been attributed to a wide variety of reasons. These range from assertions that southern workers just aren't "efficient" to complaints about unequal railroad freight rates, absentee ownership, lack of industrial research facilities, inadequate banking structure, not to speak of tariff policy.

Whatever the reason or the combination of reasons, the economic gap between the South and the rest of the country by the decade preceding World War II was prodigious.

The Gap

In 1929 if you made a list of all 48 states in the order of their average per capita income — good index to the general wealth of the state and its citizens — you would have found eight southern states solidly clustered at the bottom of the 48. Only Florida, Virginia and Louisiana escaped the bottom, though even Florida, the wealthiest of the southern states, was only 33rd in the nation.

As for the others: South Carolina was 48th; Mississippi 47th; Arkansas 46th; Alabama 45th; North Carolina 44th; Georgia 43rd; Tennessee 42nd; and Kentucky the 41st.

Thus in that year the average per capita income in South Carolina was $252 against a national average of $680. Florida, the best off of the 11 southern states, had an average of only $484, approximately two-thirds of the average for the nation as a whole.

In all, per capita income in the South was one-half what it was in the United States generally.

It comes as no shock then to know what the novelists of the 'thirties documented: that the South had fewer radios and cars, fewer farms with telephones, less life insurance, worse schools, worse hospitals, more illiteracy, more venereal disease, more infant mortality, etc., than the rest of America.

Under the cold statistics lay the painful realities of life.

Depression Years

In the depression years, the South, along with the rest of the nation, suffered. But, for a combination of economic reasons, it recovered more rapidly. Thus 1940 found the South with 57 per cent of the national average per capita income, an improvement of seven per cent in relative standing.

Even this improvement, however, left South Carolina, for example, with a per capita income figure of $286. Mississippi, which had replaced South Carolina as the 48th state, racked up a per capita figure of only $202. And Florida, still the wealthiest state in the South, still had only $471 as contrasted with the national average of $575.

What lay behind this persistent poverty? Only a thorough study of the social, economic and political history of the region would provide a full answer. But there is little doubt in anyone's mind that one of the most important keys to the situation was the snail's pace of industrial development below the Mason-Dixon Line.

In 1930, for example, the 11 southern states accounted for 21.4 per cent of the population of the United States. But they had only 17 per cent of the nation's manufacturing plants. And even this figure tells only a fraction of the story. For this industry was not merely small in quantity; it was poor in quality.

The 35,000 manufacturing establishments in the South employed only 14 per cent of the nation's production workers. They paid out only 10 per cent of the wages. They produced only 12.5 per cent of the total national output of manufactured goods. And they added only 10 per cent of the value added by all manufacture.

Ten years later the South's number of shops and factories had been reduced to 26,000. The dip reflected the havoc of the depression. Because the rest of the country pulled itself together a little more slowly than the South, the percentages looked a little better for the South. It now employed 17.3 per cent of the production workers, paid out 12.1 per cent of the wages and added 12.7 of the total value added by manufacture.

But during the decade the eleven southern states gained 9,000,000 in population. The number of production workers it employed had risen by only 11,000.

Then came World War II. With it came the clangour of steel, the blue glare of arc welding and a crucial chapter in the industrial history of the South.

PART II

The South had a long way to go to catch up with the living standards of the rest of the nation when Nazi bombers streaked across the dawn into Poland on September 1, 1939. These bombers ignited a chain of torturous events that writhed to a close six years later at Hiroshima. In the interval, American democracy hung in the balance.

The exact measure of the health of world democracy in those days might well have been read in the day to day reports that flowed into the big white building in Washington now occupied by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare, but then headquarters of the War Production Board.

As in the Civil War, but more so, productivity was the telling artillery. Guns might thunder on a dozen fronts. But often the ultimate history was being written in American factories. The need for production strained the national economic machine to its bursting point. New facilities, resources, labor, skills and dreams were all urgently needed.

The result was that the underdeveloped South began to ring with the staccato sounds of modern industry. In 1527 the first ship ever built in the New World was put together by Panfilo de Narvaez at Apalachicola, Florida. Four hundred and fourteen year later, under pressure of war, the South began to turn out ships again . . . and planes. When war broke out there were only 20,000 southern workers engaged in the construction of ships and planes. A few years later, in 1943, that number had skyrocketed to 500,000, a 2,400 per cent increase!

New Way of Life

Employment in all manufacturing industries rose in the South. This was especially true in iron, steel, non-ferrous metals and chemical manufacture as well as in the aircraft and shipbuilding already noted.

Between mid-1940 and mid-1945 the nation poured 4.5 billion dollars into industrial expansion in the South (Texas and Oklahoma included). The result: Jobs and a new way of life for hundreds of thousands of the South's people. Men who had until then known only the soil began carrying lunch buckets through the gates of newly built war plants. They learned the sounds and feel of machinery. They learned to work in organized groups. Many of them also learned, for the first time, what unions were for.

All in all, manufacturing employment in the region climbed from 1,650,000 to a peak of 2,835,000 in November, 1943. This high crest receded later to about 2,400,000. But this was still a substantial gain over the pre-war period.

The net result was a healthy boost to the South's per capita income, a bettering of its standard of living not only on a relative but also on an absolute basis.

Striking Advances

A report of the Senate Banking and Currency Committee in 1956 declared: Between 1929 and 1955 the South's average per capita income rose by 257 per cent while it climbed by only 141 per cent for the nation as a whole. "The most striking advances," the report emphasized, "were made during the World War II years. More than half the gains in the 26-year period was made during the five year period between 1940 and 1945."

Economists and sociologists viewing this change were hopeful. They believed that the tempo of wartime growth would continue after the guns stopped firing. However, peace and reconversion forced them to take a second, penetrating look.

This look, according to a report of the National Planning Association's Committee on the South, revealed that "the pattern of war manufacturing facilities expansion in the South was a great deal different from that in the entire country. The industries which had more sound reconversion possibilities and those which would aid particularly in further industrialization accounted for a relatively small part of the industrial expansion program in the South."

Thus, of all the plant expansion below the Mason-Dixon Line, less than a single per cent went for the production of vehicles; a similar fractional amount went for the manufacture of machinery and electrical equipment. This contrasted with figures of four and five per cent for the nation as a whole. Again, while in the United States as a whole the expansion of iron and steel producing equipment accounted for nine per cent of the total spent for expansion, in the South, this figure was only four per cent.

Shortchanged by History

What this means is that the South was short-changed on the quality of the industry it got. The higher-paying, more solid industries went elsewhere. This was not the result of some dark conspiracy of men. Instead it was a conspiracy of history itself.

A Commerce Department study explains why: "The very magnitude and rapidity of this expansion required that full advantage be taken of existing facilities, concentrations of labor force, transportation routes, electric power availability and location of developed natural resources."

The immediate life and death need was for production. We didn't have time to consider the long-range effects of the distribution of new facilities.

As a result, it has been estimated that only 40 per cent of the new productive capacity added below the Mason-Dixon Line was useful after the war ended. The South had gained. But not as much as it might have from a well-planned, balanced program of peace-time expansion.

At war's end, the South's road to industrial equality with the rest of the nation still stretched off to the distant horizon. It is no easy thing to compensate for a century of under-development.

PART III

World War II made one big change in the relationship of the South to the rest of the country. When the smoke cleared, for the first time in history, the American South represented an important cash market. The wartime climb in per capita income meant that, for once, the southern customer, greenbacks in hand, would not be bypassed.

Between 1945 and the outbreak of the Korean War in 1950, Southern income slid backwards. But the accumulated backlog of wartime consumer demand plus the general high level of economic activity in the nation assured that the flow of new factories to the South would not dry up.

A private unpublished survey taken in 1956 for a leading southern organization described it this way: "Hundreds of new manufacturing, processing, assembling, wholesaling and distributing plants were built through which to fabricate and channel new products to new southern buyers. The new consumer market was undoubtedly the biggest single factor in the South's industrial expansion in the immediate post-war years."

Despite this expansion, the relative standing of the South, incomewise, began to drop. In 1945 at the end of the war, per capita income in the South hit its highest point in history, coming to approximately 70 per cent of the figure for the entire United States. By 1950 it had skidded back down to about 66 per cent.

Then came Korea. Once again, as in Warld War II the income pulse quickened. Once again the South began to outclimb the nation, struggling to catch up. Since then in an atmosphere of partial mobilization and high economic activity the industrialization of the South has accelerated and its relative per capita income figure stopped falling.

5,000 Factories

Between the beginning of 1946 and the end of 1955, the decade bracketing the pre-Korea lag and the post-Korea spurt, about 4,000 new plants, each employing 25 or more workers, were added to the southern scene. Two out of every three southern counties gained one or more new plants during the period. In 1956 another 1,060 factories were added (Texas and Oklahoma included.)

Southern industry spokesmen began to issue the most enthusiastic predictions of things to come. Frank J. Soday, president of the Southern Association of Science and Industry, put it this way in a recent article in Manufacturers Record: "Today the South is building her mighty industrial empire at an ever accelerating rate, and is leading the nation in overall manufacturing expansion." Soday outlined the plans of various well known corporations to expand in the South. Then he continued:

"To illustrate the rapidity with which the South has been building its manufacturing potential, the Gulf South area, which includes Texas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama and Northwest Florida, has accounted for one-sixth of all the industrial construction during the last ten years."

At the Southern Governors' Conference in 1955 Soday predicted that the South would have 30 per cent of the country's manufacturing industry by 1965. This year at the conference Soday boosted his estimate. The 30 per cent figure, he told newsmen, "may be a little conservative."

Reasons Why

There are varied reasons for this new burgeoning. Some have existed right along. There is nothing new about the rich profusion of natural resources in the South, or about its good land and river transportation facilities, its excellent harbors, etc. It has low power costs, due in significant measure to the existence of the Tennessee Valley Authority.

Other factors, however, are relatively new. Thus in recent years it has become official policy in Washington to press for the dispersal of defense facilities. Businessmen are encouraged to build their new plants away from the likely bomb-target areas. Another factor has been the Supreme Court decision on basing points. A southern plant that bought steel from Birmingham used to have to pay the same price as if it had been shipped from Pittsburgh. The court's ruling in this matter put the South at less of a disadvantage, as have other agency rulings which diminished rail rate differences.

The attraction of industry to particular states or localities has become a highly formalized science. According to Gordon E. Reckford, of the Office of Area Development, Department of Commerce, "Industrial development today is a matter of supporting logistics, battle strategy, precision tactics and all-out effort under skilled leadership."

If the terms are military it is because there is a war in progress. All but two of the 48 states have official programs aimed at luring industry. (The two exceptions are Texas and California.) Across the South, scores if not hundreds of communities each have their own "development" groups working in dozens of ways to allure the investor.

In Fayetteville, North Carolina, a special assessment is levied to raise funds for the program. Elsewhere other measures are adopted. Since 1950 planned "industrial parks" have cropped up in Fort Smith and Little Rock, Arkansas; Atlanta, Georgia; Columbia, South Carolina; and Norfolk and Richmond, Virginia.

Lest you don't know what an "industrial park" is, it is the "industrial counterpart of the high class residential subdivision," to use the words of another Commerce Department official. By government definition they are tracts of land subdivided and developed in line with a comprehensive plan for the use of a community of industries, with streets, rail tracks and utilities installed before the sites are even sold to prospective occupants.

Aggressive public relations are an integral part of the "precision tactics" referred to by Reckford. Any reader of the Wall Street Journal, Business Week and other such publications must be familiar with the "hard sell" advertising placed by plant-hungry communities.

Among the South's resources about which some of its public relations men brag is "cooperative" or "loyal" labor. To the investor this wordage is a readily recognized euphemism for "non-unionism" or "cheap labor."

Here is the way the mayor of Pelahatchie, Mississippi, wrote to a northern firm two years ago: "Then there is our wonderful labor . . . with lower average hourly industrial wages six to 49 cents below other southern states and from 50 to 95 cents below northern states." This labor, the good mayor continued, "is truly American labor, not inflicted with the 'something for nothing' idea and works together joyously with management."

What's more, the letter continues, the closed shop is outlawed in Mississippi.

The result of such community hucksterism has been a tragic growth in the number of "runaway shops" — factories which are padlocked in the North and reopened in the South . . . at lower wages. Unionists in textile, shoe and electrical industries can provide a lengthy list of unhappy case histories in which jobs have been kidnaped from Northern workers by communities in the South.

On the whole, though, it is fair to point out that runawayism accounts for only a small part of the South's gain. Responsible southern spokesmen do not want their communities to participate in the costly and anti-social game of job stealing. They want to attract new, not yet established, plants. Moreover, increasingly it is understood that runaway plants do not make the best kind of additions to the South's industrial community.

Unhealthy Guests

More often than not, the runaway plant is in an industry in which both profit and paychecks are marginal. This is not what the South needs. Runaways may bring immediate money to a community. But in the long run they take their toll. Sweatshop practices can destroy a community and make it unattractive to future potential investors.

Implicit here is the notion that different kinds of industry bring different results to the cities that win them. What kinds of industry have been most responsible for the new boom in the South? And what have they brought with them?

PART IV

Eli Whitney's cotton gin helped fasten the crown on King Cotton's head over a century-and-a-half ago. Its effects are still evident in the South today. For one thing, Whitney's gin assured that when industry began to move southward it would be spearheaded by textile. And, in fact, the textile mill has for generations been the symbol of southern industry.

Last year the textile industry was still the biggest employer of industrial labor in the South, with a work force estimated by the government to be over 600,000. According to Manufacturers Record, the South now has about 80 per cent of all cotton, rayon and acetate textile manufacture. Four hundred and forty-eight textile mills opened their gates in the South between 1946 and 1955. This represented 11 per cent of all the new plants employing over 25 each.

A check reveals also that one sector of the textile industry — the manufacture of synthetic fibers —is almost entirely a southern industry with new plants sprouting all over the map at present. New synthetic fiber plants are now in operation at Martinsville and Hopewell, Virginia, Pensacola, Florida and Chattanooga, Tennessee (all nylon); Camden, South Carolina (orlon); Kinston, North Carolina (dacron); and Decatur, Alabama (acrilan).

Additional installations — either on the drawing boards or in construction — are spotted at Kingsport, Tennessee; Pensacola; Richmond and Jamestown, Virginia, and elsewhere.

Chemical Industry

This synthetic fiber industry is the "kissin' cousin" of the vast chemical industry, one of the fastest growing of all American industries. It is not surprising to learn that the chemical industry is also on the move — southward. The South is now estimated to have about 36 per cent of this industry. Optimistic forecasters say this will climb to 50 per cent in the next decade. Already there are 20,000 professional chemists and chemical engineers working below the Mason-Dixon Line.

According to Manufacturing Record, "Petrochemicals are the backbone of the southern chemical industry, and over 80 per cent of all the petrochemical plants in the country are located in the South particularly along the Texas-Louisiana Gulf Coast." Petrochemicals have a wide variety of uses, especially in the fast-growing plastics field.

Electronics is another increasingly significant industry in the South. The same magazine asserts that "A host of home-grown industries in the area are manufacturing such products as radio and television sets, geophysical prospecting equipment, magnetic recording tape, radar navigation equipment and a great variety of electronic components."

General Electric, for example, has put up 19 major plants in the South in the last decade, some over the violent protest of its northern workers who charged the giant company was attempting to take advantage of cheap labor. Western Electric, manufacturing arm of American Telegraph and Telephone, has five plants in North Carolina alone.

Atoms and Missiles

Two other major industries deserve special attention. Ever since Uncle Sam constructed his giant atomic energy installation at Oak Ridge, Tennessee, atomic industry has played an important role in the southern economy. Oak Ridge alone employs 22,000 workers who draw around $170,000,000 a year in paychecks. Total investment at Oak Ridge is over $1,250,000,000.

Other atomic operations are conducted at Aiken, South Carolina, Paducah, Kentucky and Plant City, Florida. Manufacturers Record estimates the total investment in nuclear energy installations in the South to be about $3,000,000,000. The magazine, however, normally includes Texas, Oklahoma, Missouri, Maryland and West Virginia in its southwide calculations, so the figure may be somewhat less. Whatever the broken down total is, there is little question that federal atomic expenditures have had significant impact on the southern economy.

Alongside this has been the skyrocketing expansion of the aircraft and missiles industry, also heavily dependent on large defense appropriations for its prosperity. Fairchild Aviation has a plant at St. Augustine, Florida. United Aircraft has engineering facilities at St. Petersburg, Florida, and Howard Hughes is reportedly planning to build jet passenger planes in southern Florida.

Florida Climate

Interestingly enough, the South's climate is an important asset in the race to attract investment. With engineers and technical personnel in short supply, companies have searched for popular locations. Thus when Pratt and Whitney Division of United Aircraft planned a $42,000,000 facility, the recruitment of trained personnel was the prime consideration in determining location.

The firm placed blind want ads in key newspapers. The ads offered work in different parts of the country ranging from California to New England. It found that responses to jobs offered in Florida outnumbered all others combined. The result was selection of a site in West Palm Beach, Florida.

Other major aircraft plants include the Lockheed factory at Marietta, Georgia. One of the biggest manufacturing shops in the entire South, this plant employs 19,000 workers for the production of B-47 jet bombers and other planes. Another Lockheed site is at Dawsonville, Georgia. Douglas Aircraft has a missile-making unit at Charlotte, North Carolina. Hayes Aircraft has a 6,000-worker plant in Birmingham. In addition, key missile research centers have been located in the South, including the Army's Redstone Arsenal in Huntsville, Alabama. Redstone employs 7,000.

The influx of federal folding money — direct or through the hands of defense contractors — is playing a crucial part in the industrialization of the region. In more ways than one, the South is beginning to enter the jet age.

PART V

About a year ago one of the South's leading organizations, the Southern Regional Council, hired a top flight surveying company to

WHERE SOUTHERN WO

(In Thou

Industry	Total	Ala.	Ark.	Fla.	Ga.
Food	271	17	15	34	39
Tobacco	91	—	—	9	1
Textile	602	48	2	1	105
Apparel	240	22	7	8	42
Pulp Paper	113	11	5	13	16
Printing	93	7	4	13	10
Chemicals	190	11	7	12	11
Petrol. & Coal	25	4	1	1	—
Rubber	16	6	—	—	1
Leather	35	1	4	1	4
Lumber	292	33	27	19	39
Furniture	107	3	7	6	9
Stone Clay Glass	76	9	3	9	9
Primary Metals	100	50	4	1	5
Fabricated Metals	83	11	3	11	7
Machinery	84	9	2	4	9
Elec. Machinery	41	2	1	1	2
Transport Equip.	99	14	1	6	33
Instrument	14	—	2	—	1
Miscellaneous	31	1	2	3	5
TOTAL	2603	259	97	152	348

Based on U. S. Census Figures

WORKERS WORK—1956

Thousands)

Ga.	Ky.	La.	Miss.	NC	SC	Tenn.	Va.
39	28	32	13	24	9	29	31
1	11	1	—	45	2	2	20
105	3	3	5	229	135	34	37
42	20	7	26	25	25	36	22
16	2	18	9	11	7	10	11
10	9	7	3	10	5	15	10
11	12	18	7	13	16	48	35
—	2	16	—	—	—	1	—
1	—	—	—	1	—	6	2
4	3	—	1	2	—	13	6
39	12	24	26	40	20	23	29
9	6	2	5	37	4	12	16
9	6	4	4	8	6	10	8
5	10	4	1	3	1	16	5
7	12	2	2	6	1	18	10
9	26	2	3	9	3	11	6
2	11	2	1	11	1	8	1
33	6	9	6	2	1	4	17
1	1	1	—	1	—	6	2
5	2	2	1	4	2	5	4
348	182	154	113	481	238	307	272

prepare an analysis of industrialization in Dixie. The comprehensive study was drawn from information received from federal, state and local agencies, state and local chambers of commerce and local industrial development groups. In all, it represented a major sociological probe of what has been happening to Dixie in the last decade.

Among the things found in this and in a study by the Senate Banking and Currency Committee was that four out of ten of the South's new post-war industrial plants were in what might be defined as 'traditional' industries which were more or less indigenous to the region's economy. Three out out of ten were 'new type' industries in which the South was not strongly represented in the prewar years. The remaining three were in 'service' industries producing primarily (but not exclusively for local consumption.

The report broke down the various industries into the three categories: "Traditional" southern industries like textile, apparel, lumber, and furniture; "new type" industries like paper, chemical, primary metals, fabricated metals, transportation equipment, etc.; and the "service" industries like printing, food processing, and stone-clay-glass. Among these, the "traditionals" are the most difficult to organize, the least organized and the lowest paying industries.

Low Pay Industry

Forty-four per cent of the plants added to the South since 1945 fell into the "traditional" category. The remainder were equally divided: 28 per cent in "service" and 28 per cent in "new type" industries.

What this reveals, on closer study, is that "four relatively low-pay, low-profit industries—apparel, food, textiles and lumber — accounted for nearly one half of all new post-war plants in the South." The industries with the lowest wages showed the greatest expansion.

The surveys disclosed certain other important patterns as well. First, over half of the new plants went into essentially rural counties which had little in the way of industry ten years ago. The others clustered around already industrialized urban centers. Secondly, all across the South, the tendency has been for "traditional" type industries to scatter in the rural counties, with the "new type" industries gravitating toward the urban centers. Third, the same low pay industries which have been seeking out the rural counties are the ones which employ fewest Negro workers.

Sobering Thought

Another way of measuring the "quality" of the South's new industry is to sample the ration of "durable goods" to "non-durable goods" industries. "Durables" are such products as machinery, autos, steel, electronic parts, etc. "Non-durables" include food, tobacco, textiles, apparel, etc. Generally, the durable goods industries pay higher wages, yield better profits and are more basic to the economy.

Before World War II, the South had two workers in non-durable goods production for every one in the durable goods sector of industry. This 2-1 ratio disappeared during World War II when, owing to war-time production patterns, it became evenly balanced.

By 1946, the ratio had dropped again, however, to its pre-war status, and today, a decade later, it has not varied more than a percentage point or two. The figure now stands at 35.6 per cent in durable, 64.4 per cent in non-durable goods production.

As a Senate Banking and Currency Committee report noted: "Employment in non-durable goods predominated in the South, while in the nation employment was greater in the production of durable goods, where income and the earnings of workers are substantially higher."

Still another sobering thought lies in a responsible evaluation of the role being played by the war industries. While the atomic installations that dot the South have potential peacetime application, this is less true of the missile-making plants. To the extent that industrial progress is based on strictly military demands, the foundations of that progress are shaky.

Unlikely as it may appear at present, it is possible that the world will one day decide that disarmament is a safer road to peace than armament. Or, perhaps even more possible, some striking new advance in military technology could conceiveably obsolete the defense plants overnight, as the "sputnik" may have done to conventional aircraft.

Rate Holds Own

Summing up, then, the progress in the South has been marked in the last decade. The rate of increase has, at times, been greater than the rate of increase in the nation as a whole. Today that rate is not ahead of the rest of the nation but is holding its own. This is a triumph of sorts for it is the first time that this has been true during a period of peacetime expansion.

Also, while the heavy predomnation of old-type, low-pay industries has continued, the recent development of metal fabricating, instrument, electronic and other new-type operations in the South augurs well for the future. The higher pay they bring with them means a bigger consumer market which, in turn, once again helps stimulate industrialization.

"Industry in this country is migrating westward and southward with quickening speed.... Old established centers . . . are lagging behind in the racing growth of industry. Younger, less developed areas are sprinting far ahead of the nation's average."

This excerpt is typical of the frothy prose that has been churned out in recent years about industrialization in the South. Is this exuberant journalese warranted by the facts?

The hard facts, boiled down to their essence, are these: (1) The South is building and building fast; (2) but it is not building anywhere near as fast as such articles would lead one to believe; (3) its pattern of growth has its encouraging side, but it has definite drawbacks, too.

Nations Moving Fast

That the South has been progressing industrially, pushing hard to make up for generations of underdevelopment, is well established. But what has been happening all around the South during this last decade of her development? The rest of the United States has been coming up, too. As a result, there is a real difference in the relative rates of growth and in the absolute progress.

A Commerce Department spokesman not long ago nailed this one-sided type of reporting. Citing the above quote, he declared: "It is likely that the above conclusions were reached on the basis of data compiled on the relative growth rates of the various regions. . . Thus it is reported that manufacturing employment in the South Atlantic States picked up by 7 per cent between 1947 and 1954 over 1947. These are impressive figures. But what do they mean?

"They mean that states which by and large have never been very high on the list of heavy industrial states have increased their industrial activities; but, of course, any improvement in these areas looks very good when contrasted with past performance."

The South is like the batter who has never averaged over .180. When, in a given season, he batted .250, the increase was remarkable. But even .250 is hardly anything to cheer about.

Setting the high claims of less responsible southerners into its proper perspective, this Commerce Department expert pointed out that since 1947 the growth of the single state of Ohio has been equal to the absolute growth of the East South Central and West South Central states combined!

Between 1947 and 1953, for example, Ohio picked up 225,497 new manufacturing jobs. The total gain in eight southern states — Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, as well as Texas and Oklahoma — was only 302,940 manufacturing jobs.

Measured in terms of how much value is added by the new manufacture, Ohio gained even more than the combined total of the eight states. (Ohio: $4,833,097,000. Eight states: $4,403,623,000.) This is a reflection on the "quality" of the industry gained by each section

Blunt Talk

There is some evidence that this pattern has been followed since 1953 also.

This blunt talk by government officials is not intended to disparage the very real progress that has been made below the Mason-Dixon Line. It is simply intended to straighten the record. Public relations "puff" is of no long-term help to the people of the South, who are much better off knowing the truth. Furthermore, exaggerated talk about shifts in industry have on occasion made people in other regions of the country resentful toward the South.

The record is plain. There are plenty of reasons to avoid hollow boasting. And there are enough real gains to sustain southern pride without it.

PART VII

Despite all that has happened in the last 10 years, the average southern worker still gets paid less for doing the same amount of work as his northern brother.

The growth of industry has not erased this long-standing feature of the economy—a nasty feature that helps pull down the wages of workers in other regions as well. In union lingo it's called the Southern Differential.

The latest available figures from the Department of Labor show, for example, that the average hourly earnings in the eleven southern states in August, 1957, was $1.63. This contrasts with a national average of $2.07—a difference of 21 per cent or 44 cents per hour.

What's more, the southern worker also gets less in the form of fringe benefits—vacations, paid holidays, medical care, pensions, etc.

Furthermore, this figure of $1.63 tells only part of the story. In Mississippi, North Carolina and South Carolina the average is $1.42 and $1.43 cents an hour—a difference of 65 cents on hour from the national average.

Differential Varies

This gap not only varies from state to state, but from industry to industry and from occupation to occupation within the same industry. The biggest gaps occur in the lumber and apparel industries. A narrow gap exists in mining, for example, where unionism is relatively strong and where wages are often set on a national rather than local basis. The narrowest differentials exist for nonmanufacturing workers in insurance, real estate and finance since there is a relative scarcity of labor in these fields.

They are biggest in unskilled labor categories, smallest in office and maintenance classifications.

Official union policy is to eliminate the geographic differential altogether. The steelworkers, for example, have been largely successful in doing so. But, as the Senate Banking and Currency Committee has reported, "It is . doubtful whether bargaining, where done on a local basis has had any noticeable effects on decreasing wage differentials ..

"Union journeymen's rates in the South are normally much closer to the national average than the rates of their helpers. Studies of union wages in 1955 found that the hourly rate of journeymen in the building trades in the South were 88 per cent of the comparable rate in the country, while the rates of their helpers were only two-thirds of the average wage paid for comparable work in the U. S.

"Similar differentials," the report continued, "were found in other industries. The large supply of unskilled labor tends to depress the rates for this type of labor and the scarcity of skilled labor tends to pull up their wages."

Pocketbook Contrast

Behind this pocketbook contrast between North and South lie two vital factors: a) the relatively weak status of organized labor in the South; b) and the low "quality" of Southern industry, which is so heavily dominated by the low-pay, low-profit industries.

The geographical differential is, fortunately, narrowing as more industry moves South, reducing the labor pool and bringing unions with it. Another factor of top significance has been the increase of the federal minimum wage to a dollar an hour on March 1, 1956. This step, which unions campaigned for nationally, has eliminated some of the worst low-pay categories and raised the general level of earnings throughout the South.

Before the increase went into effect a study of wages as of April, 1954, revealed that 28 per cent of all workers in southern manufacturing (including Delaware, Texas, West Virginia and the District of Columbia) were earning less than a dollar an hour. This contrasted with comparable percentages in other regions ranging from two to eight per cent.

More in Agriculture

If one lumps the earnings of all non-agricultural workers in the South, rather than separating out those in manufacture, one finds that the average weekly salary or wage in the South in 1955 was more than 23 per cent below the average for the United States as a whole. How much below is hard to determine accurately.

The complex pattern of industrialization is, of course, causing shifts in occupational patterns. Thus the proportion of non-agricultural to agricultural workers is rising rapidly, more rapidly than in the nation as a whole. The biggest relative gains have been made in construction, real estate, finance and insurance which have tripled their employment in recent years. Nevertheless, despite these advances, the South still has a greater proportion of its workers engaged in agriculture than any other U. S. region.

These changes take place within a framework of population changes which also stand in contrast to the national pattern. The United States is growing. Its population is booming at the rate of 8,300 per 24 hours. In the South, this is not true. Between 1940 and 1955 population in the whole country grew twice as fast as it has in the South. Mississippi and Arkansas actually saw a net loss of population during that period.

This is not because southern families have fewer children. In fact, the reverse is true. The reason for the lag in population is that there has been and continues to be a strong outward migration from the southern states. In the period April, 1950 to July, 1954 alone, the number of persons (exclusive of military personnel) who left the South was 1,191,000 greater than the number that moved in. In two states the departees represented fully one-tenth of the state's population.

The reasons behind this flow of population are numerous. But the Senate Committee found some very suggestive correlations: "The two states which made the highest gains in population also enjoyed the highest per capita income in the South, while the states whose population declined ranked at the bottom, both in the South and in the nation, in terms of per capita income."

Part of this huge out-migration has consisted of Negroes. At the same time there is a continuing movement of population — especially Negroes—out of the predominantly rural counties to the big cities. So marked has this been that the Negro population as a whole has been relatively untouched by industrialization in the rural counties.

This raises the question of a second type of differential, the race differential. For unchanged by the developments of the last few decades is the fact that Negroes earn substantially less than whites, both in the nation and especially in the South. What's more, the higher the skill and the better education that a Negro has, the bigger the difference between what he will receive and what a similarly trained white man will receive. In 1949, for example, the average white southerner who lacked education entirely earned $1,120. The average unschooled Negro only received $962. This was a difference of 14 per cent.

Move up, though, to the college trained level, and the "race differential" has become much greater. Thus in 1949 the difference was a staggering 48 per cent. In a sense this reduces Negro incentive toward education.

This set of facts merely reflects the truism that the Negro is still not getting a crack at the best paying jobs. Rather, as the white workers move up into more skilled and better-paying work, they leave openings which Negroes have gradually been permitted to fill.

In the traditional southern industries, except for lumber, the Negro is still largely excluded from employment. There have been openings for him, however, in the unskilled categories at the newer type plants in fields like metal fabrication, paper, chemicals, transportation equipment, etc.

CONCLUSION

Will the South ever hit its economic target? Will it ever catch up with the rest of the nation in terms of the well-being, material and cultural, of its people?

The answer to this question hinges on how much and what kind of new industry springs up below the Mason-Dixon Line in the years to come. This, in turn, depends on a multitude of other factors. Nobody, not even the optimistic prophets of southern industry, has all the answers.

It is clear, though, that the economic and social fate of the South depends, as much as anything else, on the economic progress of the nation as a whole. A nation that is backsliding economically doesn't build new plants. In such a context, the South cannot hope for much.

Additionally, certain trends within the world of business will have their effect. For example, research and development activities are playing a vital role in more and more industries. New products are hitting the market with astonishing rapidity. Yet the South has historically lagged far behind in this area, more so, even, than in the general development of industry.

Research Shortage

In the 50 years from 1893 to 1942, only 3.9 per cent of all new patents were credited to citizens living in the nine southeastern states. In the last decade of that period the percentage was even smaller.

This reflects, among other things, a shortage of research facilities which are becoming of supreme importance to business. Southern economic experts are well aware of this failing. The state of North Carolina, for instance, has stood out in its efforts to meet this challenge by planning an integrated state-supported research center.

More important is the whole question of race relations. Race relations have affected the economic mesh of the South in countless ways. They may even, according to some experts, have a direct bearing on the very rate and distribution of industrialization. Take Arkansas:

On October 4, 1957, while the headlines were still focussed on the crisis in Little Rock, Winthrop Rockefeller, chairman of the Arkansas Industrial Development

Commission, charged that the race disturbance there had damaged the economic prospects of the state. Arkansas has been one of the most active of the industry-seeking southern states, and Rockefeller has been spearheading its drive. Now, he said, it would take six months to "accurately estimate the damage that has been done—and damage there has been."

Rockefeller was not alone in this assessment. Everett Tucker, industrial director of the Little Rock Chamber of Commerce put it this way: "Now, and for the predictable future, whenever a company is planning a new factory, it will immediately think of Little Rock as a 'hot-bed' of segregation — which is not true at all. This is going to set our industrial program back considerably."

Another Little Rock businessman, Charles Carpenter, who is a consultant for companies seeking southern sites, explained that business looking for a new location wants "responsible" state government. "To an industrialist," Carpenter declared, "the question in Little Rock is simply whether there is to be law and order or no law and order."

This sentiment has been further reinforced by Leonard C. Yaseen, senior partner of the Fatus Factory Locating Service. According to Yaseen, a large metal products manufacturer who had been actively considering Little Rock for a new plant changed his mind after the disturbance began. He said several other clients had also eliminated Little Rock as a possibility. "Mob action and civic irresponsibility," Yaseen declared, "place a community on industry's blacklist."

According to Yaseen, industry has been diligently avoiding other racial hot spots like Montgomery, Alabama and Clinton, Tennessee. Earlier, the Chattanooga Times had reported that at least 20 corporation projects had been seriously reconsidered because of the flare-up of race troubles in potential locations. The New York Times has quoted a major electronics manufacturer as saying that it will open no new plants in the South until tension subsides.

One big mid-western firm picked Florida as the site for a new installation precisely because it liked the fact that Governor Leroy Collins is considered moderate on the race issue. In a wire to Collins it explained that it considered Collins' leadership as an aid to providing "a type of industrial climate which is essential for business stability and confidence."

Elsewhere in the South, reprisal boycotts by whites against Negro communities and vice-versa have disrupted "business as usual." The results cannot but be discouraging to potential investors.

Nevertheless, there is another side to this story, for nobody really knows yet to what extent such reports reflect the whole picture. North Carolina Governor Luther Hodges—and other southern governors—dispute such claims, say that industry is much more interested in other factors A Business Week survey recently found little evidence that race tension had had any impact on the economy. As one reporter commented, "The money angles are the ones that count."

The proof of the pudding will appear in the future. Plans for the creation of new plants are a long time in birth. The effect of Little Rock, as Rockefeller observed, will not show up for months, perhaps even for years.

Needless to say, there are many many other considerations that will affect the outcome. Economists have not yet determined, for example, what, if any, regional effects the spread of automation will have It is a subject that may require close, expert examination.

Population Shifts

The economic landscape of the South is different. New industry has come — both good and bad. Chemical plants, atomic installations, electronics manufacturing, metal fabrication and other new types of industry are giving the region a real lift. But textile, apparel and lumber, mainstays of the "old" southern industrial community, have increased in number, too.

Population has been shifting — out of the rural districts and out of the poorest states. Wage differentials — based on both geography and race—still prevail to the disadvantage of the southern worker.

Wages have been rising, but the average per capita income is still only two-thirds that in the nation as a whole.

Put them together and such changes add up to tremendous promise as well as a terrific challenge to unionism in America Today, as it was 15 years ago, the South remains organized labor's number one regional problem. The solution of that problem depends on how much imagination, background understanding, initiative and resources labor brings to its job of organizing. But whatever else may be said, that job must be done — for the good of the South and for the good of American workers everywhere.

ACCENT ON THE SOUTH

was reprinted from

LABOR'S DAILY

Economists, sociologists and liberal politicians, as well as union leaders and members, have learned to rely on Labor's Daily for useful information such as this, which often is not available elsewhere.

LABOR'S DAILY
BETTENDORF, IOWA

IN THEIR OWN WORDS

a student appraisal of what happened after school desegregation

In Their Own Words

A student appraisal of what happened after school desegregation

Analysis by MARK A. CHESLER

Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth St., N.W.
Atlanta, Ga. 30303

Single copy 75 cents
Bulk copies 60 cents

PREFACE

This study on the experiences of Negro children in school desegregation in Alabama was conducted by Dr. Mark A. Chesler, Project Director, Center for Research on Utilization of Scientific Knowledge, Institute for Social Research, University of Michigan.

We believe this study has the most serious implications for our hope of the possibilities of one people living together in a democratic society. Certainly, any society which subjects its children to cruelty is in desperate need of taking a new and critical look at itself.

Paul Anthony
Executive Director
Southern Regional Council

January, 1967

"What Happened After You Desegregated the White School?"

Everytime I get talking about my experience at the white school something happens to me. I can't really express myself and I can't really tell what happens. It's like I was kind of in a trance, I was just walking around from day to day and doing what I thought I was supposed to do and trying not to do what I wasn't supposed to do.

Sometimes you say things here and you don't mean it to be a particular insult, but you don't want to step on anybody's toes, so you just have to be careful of what you say and how you say it.

THESE COMMENTS REFLECT some Negro students' reactions to their experiences in newly desegregated white schools in the Deep South. It is clear that placing Negro youngsters into "white" schools is only the first—and in many ways the easiest—phase of the school desegregation process. In many cases real discomfort, overt discrimination, intimidation and insight begin only when young Negroes enter southern white schools. Physical proximity in the classroom sets the stage for young people of both races to cut through or restore myths, to learn about or hide from each other, to cooperate in friendship or separate in hostility. The hope that social interaction leads to growth is dependent upon the youngsters, their teachers, principals and communities.

This report records the comments of 20 Negro teenagers who were among the first members of their race to attend previously all-white public schools in the Deep South. These youngsters and their experiences are not necessarily typical of the South and the desegregation process. They live in three small rural communities in the black belt South, the most hard core areas of white resistance.* Several hours of tape recorded conversation have been abstracted with brief comments, and these direct words of Negro youngsters highlight some of the problems beyond desegregation—beyond the physical introduction of Negro students into previously all-white schools.

Several major themes stand out in these students' reflections and responses to our questions. The character of their teachers and principals seems to be the most important element in their early adjustment to the white school, and vice versa. The reactions of white peers and the lack of development of positive relations across racial lines seems to be a most pervasive issue in

---

The author is Project Director, Center for Research on Utilization of Scientific Knowledge, The University of Michigan. The recordings on which this study is based were made while Dr. Chesler was a Visiting Instructor at Tuskegee Institute, 1966. Appreciation is extended to Eric Krystall, Barbara Oppenheimer, and Marvin Burns for assistance in their collection and to Franklin Neff for critical comments on an earlier draft of this paper.

*A more representative interview study of several hundred such youngsters, their families, and a control sample of non-desegregating Negroes is currently in progress.

these rural communities. It is through experiences with their young white classmates that Negro students have now learned some of the practical realities of interracial harmony, trust and progress. Then, too, these youngsters had to deal with their "back-home" relations, with the Negro community's reaction to such pioneering efforts. These seem to be some of the most critical general issues documented by Negro "desegregators," and it is their feelings and perceptions about the school desegregation process, told in their own words, to which we turn for information.

The school staff

The adult whites with whom these Negro students had the greatest degree of contact were their teachers. More than police, vigilantes or roughnecks, who did call upon some of these youngsters, teachers met with them daily in relatively peaceful circumstances. As adult authority, as knowledge transmitter, as arbiter of classroom process, and as legitimate cultural representative, the teacher is in a position of considerable power and influence. He can encourage classroom norms of openness or resistance, of collaboration or isolation. In many ways the white teacher acts as a role model, often emulated by white students. How was this complex and influential role handled?

Teachers apparently defined their goals and designed their classroom approaches in a variety of ways. In some cases it appeared that teachers almost deliberately misunderstood or underestimated the potential problems facing youngsters attempting to bridge the cultural gap between the races.

> We were not accustomed to saying "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am" and she wouldn't realize that we couldn't do it overnight. If we made one mistake in English and said "yeah," she would write on a little piece of paper and say, "I am going to have you all put out of school for insubordination." It seemed as if all she did the whole time was to just wait for us to say "yes" so she could make a big thing out of it. It seems like if you say "yes" one time, she won't miss it. She will ask you right away, "What's that you say?" She will ask you questions to try to make you say "yes ma'am." She got fed up at me because I got tired of her trying to make me say "yes ma'am" and I started saying, "I think so," or "I don't really think so," or something like that just to keep from saying "ma'am," because I figured she was doing it on purpose.
>
> * * *
>
> I felt at first that they would expect us to say "yassum" and "noum." It was the idea that I just didn't want to say "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am" to a white woman. I found that this was the way they expected any of their students to address them.
>
> * * *
>
> One teacher, he felt that we were just trying to start things. But we were just trying to get things straight. We ended up arguing most of the time instead of getting much done. It was kind of difficult.
>
> * * *

I forgot I was supposed to say "yes ma'am" to her and was saying "yeah, sure," and so on. She said, "Have you forgotten about saying 'yes ma'am'?" I said, "No ma'am, I haven't." She said, "Now let's not forget that." She works around to try to get the opinion of most of the Negroes concerning race. Then she will tell you her opinion and ask you whether you shouldn't feel the same way. Most of the time you don't.

In a number of classrooms, however, it became more apparent that misunderstanding could not possibly be the case. There are many examples where teachers were perceived as abdicating part of their impartial classroom management role, deliberately colluding with white students in isolating or pressuring Negro youngsters, or sometimes taking the lead in such discriminatory treatment.

Some of the teachers will try to be funny. When they get to a word like Negro, they call it Nigger or else try to make fun.

* * *

When we got in there they started throwing rocks and crayons at us. I told the teacher and she went back there, and they all started laughing, and she was laughing with them. And then they went outside and they brought more rocks and they started throwing them.

* * *

Our home economics teacher would have the new machines on one side of the room and the old on the other side, and would put us into groups to let us use the old machines and the white girls use the new ones. And in cooking she would always give out the recipes and stuff and we would always get the small amount. And she would separate us into three groups so that the three Negro girls were in the same group together.

* * *

I had this teacher who divided the class up into groups. The Negroes sit on one side and the white students sit on the other side. She would teach the Negroes like on one half of the class and then she would go over to the white kids. If we came to anything about communism or something relating to civil rights, she would bring up King's name and say something like, "In a little time our freedom will be gone." Their freedom, the whites. She feels that just because she is a teacher she can talk about anything.

* * *

In history class it was very bad. There were always conversations going on between the teacher and the students about the Governor and integration and the President and the federal government and all such that. They were talking against the federal government because the government was for integration and like they were talking against integration because they don't see any sense to it. And the teacher was always saying some kind of wise crack just to hurt your feelings and like that. He was always praising the Governor. The students acted the same as the teacher did in their class, you know, there was always something that they could say and try and hurt my feelings.

* * *

My history teacher would call on me to read mostly all the time, and because I couldn't read very well the children would laugh. The teacher would go out of the class almost every day so the kids could call on me and have fun on me. Every time I would call on someone to read the class would laugh. One of the other problems was my English teacher; he would make up jokes about me and some of the other Negro students said that he made jokes up about them.

* * *

Our teacher was always calling on us when we wouldn't have our hands up, and when we did have our hands up she wouldn't call on us; when we'd take them down, that's when she would call on us. And then one morning in our first period class, my friend was at his desk, and she called him up in front of the class, trying to embarrass him. He had soap on his face that couldn't come off good and she told him that he had soap on his face and that he hadn't washed his face. Well, they'd make remarks about him and laugh at him.

* * *

If I had a test or something, six-week test or something like that, she would get some of the dumbest children to grade my paper and they would put anything down. And when the children made a mistake she said that she couldn't do anything about it, so I just left them alone until the next day. They kept giving me F's on my paper when I made a B or something like that.

When these youngsters were asked to compare their white teachers with the Negro teachers they knew, there was considerable variation in reactions. Some felt the white teachers were intellectually superior, some not; some felt the white teachers were superior managers, some not. But almost all felt there were important differences, especially in the fairness of the teachers to them.

The Negro college is not a very good school for teachers. The white teachers have more opportunities and have more challenge than the teachers in the Negro college could have. And the school of the teacher makes a lot of difference.

* * *

I gather that the teachers at the Negro school are more experienced but they are not up to date. Two or three years ago when they were in college they were, but now there are new techniques. Most of the teachers at the white school, well, they are fresh out of college and they know more and learn more by the modern way. Whereas, the teachers at the Negro school are sort of . . . like, old fashioned. The teachers there have been out of school for quite some time. Some of them don't bother about going back. Here you can learn more because in the classroom you can get more over to the students when you can teach them individually. So therefore, well, both teachers have faults. One such as inexperience and the other who didn't know much about the modern way of work. But basically both teachers are trying to help.

* * *

They're not teaching a lot of the time. They're often doing their monthly report instead of teaching us. And as far as incidents are concerned here, if something happens in the classroom most time it goes unnoticed unless the white students get the worst end of it. But at the old school incidents are always given the best consideration and both parties usually go to the office and get it settled. But the teachers at the white school see it different, and only the Negroes go to the office if the white person gets hurt bad enough to report it.

* * *

I think the teachers at the new school are worse than the ones at the Negro school because they don't give you exactly what you make. At the Negro school they don't give you exactly what you make either, but they're worse here. If you make a good grade they'll give you a bad grade and if you make a bad grade then they still give it to you. But they also make it lower and they don't treat you equally. When something happens they put it all on us and they don't do anything about it. They do stay in their room longer but when something happens they still don't know about it because they don't try to find out about anything. At the old school the teachers stayed out of the room more, but still if you tell them about something they do something about it. But here they just don't treat us equally because we are Negroes and the other children are white.

In addition to the direct influence of the teachers, the school principal was often singled out for attention. More than the teachers, the southern principal is in a particularly vulnerable role vis-a-vis the school staff and the local community. In order to maintain an orderly school system he may have to defend racial desegregation against considerable white and perhaps even Negro resistance. If he disapproves strongly, he must try to resist desegregation without openly threatening or obviously endangering the lives of Negro and white youngsters. These role demands must be met regardless of his views; and when the system changes he must still represent it or resign. Furthermore, he must keep his teaching staff in relatively good order and humor, and support their efforts as far as he can without causing direct harm to youngsters of either race. In these turbulent situations he also has some special direct responsibility for creating a school atmosphere that either supports or denies standards of fair play, justice and peace. How were principals seen to perform these various and stressful roles?

Often these Negro youngsters showed remarkable acuity and insight into the principals' behavior and role conflict; at times they manifested criticism and impatience. When helpful things were done, they were often noted and appreciated; and when harmful or unhelpful stances were taken they were decried. Consider:

> The principal never brought up the question of integration; if he did, he tried to hide it. So the kids kind of rejected us. I didn't have many friends; maybe this was because of the principal also.
>
> * * *
>
> I also heard that all the children had to do was get used to you and they would get better, but toward the end of the school term instead of getting better they were getting worse. I would say that the reason for this was because at the beginning of the school term the principal was really rough and tight on them, but he begun to slack up on them and they began to get like they was the year before.
>
> * * *
>
> I went and reported it to the principal and he said, like the Governor said a long time ago, "Do it like you do it with mud, you let it dry and it will shake off better." He always had some slogan like that to say in every situation.
>
> * * *
>
> [These two girls] came into the bathroom and said, "Two of the Negroes in the hall were trying to fight and we told the principal about it but you know he didn't do anything about it, because they are privileged characters. I don't care, if I could paint my face black so I could be a privileged character too." Then they started talking, "You know we'll be going to the Negro schools this year," and the other girl said, "Yeah and I'm going to get myself one of those Negro boyfriends too." They didn't know I was there.
>
> * * *
>
> See, if something happened during the school hour a group of them would go to the office and tell him something, tell something was stolen and try to trip us all up. He didn't know what to believe most times so he just never paid any attention.
>
> * * *
>
> The principal got a refrigerator and put it in there for us. He went and got drinks for us also. He would ask us in the morning what we would like to have and would go out of his way to get it for us. He was pretty nice.
>
> * * *
>
> It's tough on the principal, although I really can't say why I think that. The girl cheerleaders say that the only thing he thinks about is sex going on in the school, but he hasn't said anything to me about that. I can't see he does that. They say that he's mean and forces things on them they don't want to do. Maybe we think differently because he does the things I want him to do and not what they want him to do. They want to get rid of him and talk about it a lot.
>
> * * *

The atmosphere this year is very different from last year, I guess, because of the change in principals. Last year we didn't have as many students come up to us and talk. It wasn't the matter of having so many friends but they wouldn't approach you in any way. I guess this year the new principal doesn't try to hide the situation that is involved like the old one did. You who came in this year are fortunate because he will talk to you about anything you want. He is trying to get the two races to come together. I think that may be what changed the atmosphere. When you hide things it makes people go around not saying things to each other. Now everybody can talk to one another.

Relations with white classmates

In addition to the classroom and building management personnel, the new Negro student learned from his constant interaction with white peers in the classroom. Educational research has demonstrated how important peer influences and associations are for student learning, and recent laboratory research has emphasized some of the important threat and reward influences of white peers upon Negro youngsters' learning performance. But academic lessons are only one part of the total learning that goes on in the classroom. What do Negro youngsters learn about their white peers; what do they learn about their friendship, their fears, their abilities and their potential for working together?

First, let us examine views of the way white students received and interacted with their new Negro classmates, and the ways these young Negroes felt about these reactions.

> [Kids with] real BB guns would stand around the bus and aim at us and threaten us. Boys would ride around on motorcycles and throw rocks at us from the outside. The elementary kids would throw rotten eggs at us. The police would ignore them.
>
> * * *
>
> You also get used to things written on the bathroom walls, a lot of stuff. But this is something you have to take. When you come to think about it, when kids call you a name you laugh and joke it off. When you get down there, it's a little different because it's white people.
>
> * * *
>
> Really I didn't know how I would take being called a Nigger because I had never been called a Nigger before. I just didn't know how I would take it. I couldn't tell anybody I wouldn't hit anybody when they called me Nigger. But after I got over there and had been called a Nigger about a thousand times during the first six-week period I'd feel a burning inside, and after the third six-week period I'd get over this burning inside, but really a Nigger still seems kind of like insulting to me.
>
> * * *
>
> Sometimes we be going down the hall and if any of the white students was standing in the hall and they see us coming they say here come a black Nigger, you better stand back or something. They would get back up against the wall. In the morning sometime we'd be standing by our locker and they would get off the bus and come in and try to walk close up by the wall or something pretending that they didn't want to get close to touch us or anything.

* * *

For the most part those children over there want to be friendly, some of them do, but their parents tell them what to do and what not to do and all. You can tell that some of them want to say something to you but they are scared that if they say something to you then the other one is going to call them Nigger lover and all that kind of junk. They just go back and tell 'em and so they just don't want to get involved.

* * *

I found myself not acting myself. They expected a whole lot out of me. They expected me to be different. I had to go along with their crude jokes. They were no good but I laughed anyway. They would run things in the ground but I would keep laughing. Lately I have decided that I really shouldn't try to act different from what I really am. I have decided that I don't have to prove anything to anybody. I lost a few friends by doing that but I've gotten fed up with it. When I first came into the situation I wanted to be friendly. I guess anybody wants to be friends with everybody. We got along okay. We joked about the white and Negro relationship. This was good and okay, but I just got tired of it.

* * *

After you go back and look at both sides of the story, you can't blame them really because after all you don't want people to say, "Oh, no, I am scared to touch her because her black might rub off on me." If you were in their situation, you might feel the same way. You have to understand that they're not going to fall in love with you overnight. Nobody likes for his friends to turn their backs on him and laugh at him and all of that. More than likely that would be what would happen.

* * *

And when we'd be in Physical Education class the coach wouldn't be there, he had boys lead the class. We would be playing football. Every day they'd tell the boys to try to hurt us and knock us down and they would do it. One of them would pretend to act nice and tell them not to do it, but he didn't mean it anyway and this other one would tell them to keep on.

* * *

It turned out with three of the characters that were white in the book being played by three Negro girls. There was a scene in the opening part of the play where we had two uncles and the uncles were white boys. When they came in we were supposed to hug them. When we wrote this script, nobody knew who was going to play who so we wrote it just like it was supposed to be written. When the boys found out that we were supposed to hug them, they weren't happy about it; they were pretty upset. One boy said, "I just can't do that." Well we laughed about it but they were pretty serious. I kept getting the impression that it was because of what would happen when their friends saw them do this, or when their fathers or their relatives saw them.

* * *

I was kind of shocked when two white boys and myself were backstage in the wings together and one of them had a gun that we were to use in the play. He said, "If I had to shoot all the Negroes in the school, I would shoot you last." I said, "Why?" He said, "I like you because you know how to cope with our white jokes."

* * *

This is the first thing that comes over them, intermarriage. Well it takes two to marry somebody. Nobody wants to marry them; you just want to be their friends, that's all.

* * *

They have been led to believe that the Negro thinks about one thing, sex.

* * *

No, no, I don't think that. They know that they think about getting married. They are afraid that they may find a Negro that they like, not necessarily that a Negro likes them. Maybe they already got a crush on them. I just believe that they are afraid. If they were not afraid of us, maybe they could stand us a little better. But when you have a guilty conscience yourself, things get down on you a little worse.

These perceptions only begin to hint at the distance that typically separates Negro and white youngsters in many desegregated schools. Negroes report a range of experiences with young whites, from physical violence and threats to name calling, and from joking and teasing to awkward attempts at friendliness. The complicity of teachers in maintaining old patterns is again manifest. In some cases it seems that time and contact have decreased the social distance; in other cases contacts have made Negro youngsters wiser and warier. We were interested in knowing whether Negro students' perceptions of the intelligence and decorum of white youngsters had changed as a result of their contact.

After I got there I wasn't a bit surprised at the attitude of the students there because it had been said before that these kids are absolutely wild. They wouldn't listen to the principal and wouldn't mind the teachers and I wasn't a bit surprised. I was kind of prepared for some of the incidents that happened.

* * *

Some people think that white people are higher class than Negroes, but from the way the children did behave they are lower class people than the Negro. We went in class one day and everybody sat down and when the teacher went out of the room some of the students had spit in the vacant seats that nobody sits in. And they put chewing gum all over the desks. I mean you didn't find too much chewing gum over at the Negro schools; they threw it out the window or trash can. But over there you find the desk packed with chewing gum and stuff like that.

* * *

Before we started school our principal at the Negro school told us to be quiet on the bus, "You should hear how quiet the white children are on the bus and everything." You can't hear anything on that bus, you know, from the time you get on the bus to when you get off.

* * *

I was really surprised as I went to the white school. They say, "Oh, the Negroes are so dumb," but I really found out that the Negroes are not really dumb at all. If they really had the chance and opportunities they would be a lot smarter than the white children because the white children who went to that school ever since the first grade I had caught up with in the first six weeks I went there. Now I was kind of backward on some subjects, like math, because the only time I took that I was in seventh grade and I had a hard time with math. But in all my other subjects I caught up with most of the white children and passed them in the first six weeks. They really get hot with you when you get ahead of them and I really had lots of trouble with that because I was smarter than most of them, most of the other children in my room, especially in the tenth grade. I don't know about the other grades, but I do feel that the white race is not smarter than the Negro. If the Negro kids had the opportunity and would get down to it and work for it, the Negro race could get up with the white race anytime.

* * *

There is just one thing I would like to say. We have a lot of dumb people in our class—you know, dumb white people. It's true! They want to graduate, but they don't want to do anything.

* * *

Well, before I went to the white school I always did think that the white person was smarter than we are. I used to think that they were just born smarter, just because they were white, but I found out this year that this isn't true. There were a lot of them who had more trouble than I had in getting their lessons and they had been in this school and in this situation, maybe not in the same situation, but they had been around their friends and their teachers for eleven years before then. Some of them couldn't do half as good as I could, and I don't see how some of them even graduated. They failed some subjects and took an extra subject, and made D's in that subject and they still passed. I just don't understand it. I think that maybe the reason we think that we aren't as smart as they are is because they've made us feel like we don't know anything.

* * *

I feel that they made us feel that we don't know anything because they always keep us in jobs like in the kitchen or in the yard or on the farms. They never have made us feel like we should be anything; never made me feel like anything.

It is clear that there have been instances where interracial classroom contact has permitted Negroes to break down some of their traditional myths about the superiority of white people. They now see some of the differences among young whites, and can even account for some of their own prior assumptions. What of the other learnings about white people that have occurred? Does it appear that desegregating classrooms has led to cross-racial friendships? Has it led to greater Negro receptivity to white advances, and vice versa? Has it increased interracial trust?

I wouldn't invite a white person to my house unless I trusted them a lot because I wouldn't just invite anybody to my house. They could just be setting a trap by setting a bomb in the house or something, but if it was someone that I knew well and trusted a lot, I would.

* * *

Well, I trust white people less, because since I've been around them I am more familiar with them and their ways. The only thing I knew about white people was when they came around and they would be friendly and all that. When I started school some of those people who I thought would be friendly looked like they were my worst enemies. Everytime they smiled in your face they were just trying to get some information, that's all; and when they get that they are gone and they are just like any other white person. Therefore, I trust them less.

* * *

Like in our class, you see the same people every day and they have gotten used to the fact that they have got to talk to us. We have a nice conversation. We laugh at their jokes and everything and then if you see them on the street, the same person that you have been joking around with all day will look the other way and they won't speak. That kind of thing bothers you. They will talk to you when you are by yourself or with just a few people, but if you are in a group with some of their other friends around, they don't know you at all. That kind of thing makes you distrust their friendship at all.

* * *

Sunday we stopped in at the dairy farm and two of the white boys that went to school last year drove up there and they went in. We was standing up there to the window getting waited on and they looked over and waved to us. That's the way they are when they are out of school; when they are in school they act all different.

* * *

I don't trust white people either because you may think that they are being friendly but come to think of it they are not. In other words, when you get around them they'll be friendly, but if a white person is with me and then we see a group of other white people and they see him with me, they will call him a Nigger lover. So you be thinking that he'd be a friend and the white people get mad; so he just quit being friends. Sometimes he'd be friendly and sometimes he won't.

* * *

They all seem to be afraid of what someone else might think. They can't seem to think for themselves. They can't even follow their own moral right. They are always afraid of what someone else might think. There are very few incidences of violence, killings, etc., but they are afraid to take me home after practice. They say, "Somebody might shoot me." "Take you home in broad daylight, you must be kidding." Sometimes they will take me home and sometimes they will make up excuses. They are just afraid. They are afraid of nothing; there's nothing to be afraid of. Sometimes I invite them to come over, but they think that the Negroes just hate white people; they think they will come over here and get killed. I try to explain to them that there are so many white people over here now that it's a thing that is accepted. One man is just another man that you pass on the street. They can't seem to understand that. The white people who associate with us here are what they refer to as "Nigger lovers."

* * *

I feel that we have given the wrong impression that our relationship with the white kids at the high school is entirely a hostile one. This is wrong although sometimes we talk that way. We have conversations and all and often the boys talk about girls. But the thing is that sometimes you may say something and you don't know who you can trust, even those who look like they're being sincere. You don't know whether you can trust them or if they'll say something behind your back.

The Negro community

A number of critical issues developed in the Negro communities when youngsters decided to desegregate white schools. Some Negro community leaders feared white retaliation, and some deplored any desegregation efforts at all. Others encouraged these transfers and went out of their way to support them. When young Negro students changed to white schools they often left behind their old school and neighborhood peer groups. Were they able to return? Did old friends still receive them openly? Or did going to a white school mean isolation from friends as well as from traditions of the past? With regard to the Negro communities' reactions:

In our community all of them were very encouraging. We had been having small mass meetings around our community to try and encourage people to try to enroll students in this school because you get a better education there. Everyone was very glad that I was chosen to go there and they was trying to encourage me as much as possible to continue.

* * *

Well, the Negro people in my home community didn't seem as if they were at all for it. They would say that we aren't ready to be with the white people yet; "We should stay and try to get ourselves together first before we try and get with somebody else"; integrate the Negro first is what they were saying. But here in this town there were a lot of people who gave me a lot of encouragement and the encouragement enabled me to go on and graduate.

* * *

People in my neighborhood didn't like my going to the white school because they said that I was just trying to be popular and the white school wasn't any better than the Negro school. They said that the Negro school was the newest school. They said that our house was going to be burned and the Ku Klux Klan was going to get us and lots of people was going to get killed. They wasn't going and didn't want those people coming in their neighborhood. Our house did get burned, and when it did people said, "That's what I told you was going to happen."

* * *

Well the colored people in my community, well some of the colored anyway, the Uncle Toms, would tell me to stay in my place and that they weren't going to sit near us over there and get throwed at and called Nigger.

* * *

The way I see it is that people want things to happen but they are waiting for somebody else to do it. They will not realize that those who do something have to sacrifice. They don't realize that those who first went down had to sacrifice. They didn't have all the opportunities and all the extracurricular activities that the Negro school had, like ball games, etc. Another thing, a lot of kids came up to me and told me they would like to come but they would like to be on the basketball team. But we don't have a football or basketball team. They are just plain scared and they don't want to give up anything.

Friends appeared and disappeared throughout the semester. The crucible of change fragmented many superficial relationships, but it also seemed to anneal and highlight others. Some Negro peers were jealous, others threatened; some were interested and asked what was going on, others projected their fears and attacked. This seemed to be one of the areas of greatest surprise and hurt for the desegregating students.

And when I'd come home from school the children would come up to me and ask me, "Well, who did you get into a fight with today?" "What white girl did you beat up?" "And who's your white boyfriend?" They never did try to help us; all they did was try to get funny.

* * *

I noticed that some of the kids at the Negro school would say that we were stuck up. I asked one person why did she think this and she said that because they expect so much out of us, that we are supposed to be smart and have our names on the honor roll and everything. It seems as if they are the first to say you won't speak to them anymore. But they won't give you a chance. They turn away or make some snide remark and that discourages you. They say, "You think you are so big or so important that you can't be around your old friends anymore."

* * *

It's the same way with some of your friends who go to the Negro school. Some people think that because you want to go to an integrated school that you want to be white. I have heard a lot of people say this. When you get into a discussion with someone who is not going to an integrated school, or a heated argument when they can't think of anything else to say, they are going to bring up, "You think you are so good because you go to an integrated school; you think you are white." I found that you are not going to ever get around this. This is one of the things that you are going to have to accept!

* * *

She told her friend, "Guess what, I am over to the 'big Niggers' house." I was wondering how could she say "big Niggers." Just because I went to the white school didn't mean that we were "big Niggers." She got the impression that we were "big Niggers" and had a lot of money and everything which we don't.

* * *

I didn't really lose any friends. The people who were not my friends but acted close to me soon stopped speaking. This year it was pretty bad during basketball season. A group of girls said that we thought we were white. They said that we come to their basketball games and sit up and try to act intelligent because we thought we were white. It was just that group of people because our friends are still our friends and close friends and they don't think that way.

And what of the future?

In reflecting about their experiences, these youngsters indicate something of what we may expect about the future of change in the South. As classrooms and schools change, other major institutions will be forced to keep pace. In the face of these prospects and current debates over civil rights activity and strategy it is illuminating to inquire into these youngsters' feelings about the future. It appears that many of these young Negroes will be followed by more of their race in the school desegregation process. What would be likely to happen if more young Negroes joined them?

To make the school a better place I think it will take courageous Negro students and some large Negro boys that are big and that has lots of courage, and an integrated faculty, and that's about all I think it would take.

* * *

I think the situation would be better if more Negro students went because a lot of the students just pick on you because they think they can get by with it. I don't think a student would hit a Negro student if he thought somebody was behind him to give him just that much more. He wouldn't do it even if he thought somebody was behind him that would see him and tell the student who it was.

* * *

They would be afraid to bother you if they knew somebody else was with you, if they knew somebody else was with you and on your side and would help you if you needed that help. But like it is now with so many whites, they can just pick on you and there are not enough Negroes to do them enough harm back.

* * *

I wish I was going back; I just want some of them to pick at me like they did last year so I can get them back. When we have about an equal number of students we'll see if we can get in a fight over there. We will have the same number in our color as they got in their color so we probably have a better chance of fighting. If they're looking for a fight this year then I'm going to fight.

* * *

You have to be in an area where you can be accepted together. It's not like that down here. That's what's wrong, and it'll take time, a long time, to change.

A long, long time indeed. Will we find new means besides getting bigger Negroes and bigger whites? No one knows now, but it is our hope that this sort of constant public examination of the deeds and processes of change may help us learn how to shorten that time, how to make it more peaceful and less painful. Clearly, changes in schools will not come about without change in other social institutions; just as clearly, school change sets the pace and tone for community change. One certainty is the need to develop, experiment with, and document new change strategies. We need to develop new support systems in Negro and white communities; new ways of encouraging white and Negro youngsters to face one another squarely and without fear of external sanctions. Youngsters who are willing to reach out to one another must be fortified against the familial and communal pressures that promote separation. We need to find new ways to help the principal deal with changing school-community and teacher-pupil relations. Finally we need to develop new ways of helping teachers cope with their own ambivalences, with Negro reluctance and white resistance; teachers need new designs to explore the never-never land of social contact between students. The barriers to growth explored in this paper need to be turned into facilitators of justice, peace and progress. The development of such change strategies requires the best minds and bodies of the South and the nation; it extends the process of change beyond the initial physical desegregation of educational facilities.

Reflections on School Integration: I.

(This is a transcript of a three-hour session with eight Negro youngsters who desegregated and are attending a predominantly white school in the Deep South. All students are in the tenth through twelfth grades. 5/66)

QUESTION: Who made the decision for you to go to a white school and how was it made? What were the first days like?

GIRL NO. 1: The first year my parents didn't decide whether they wanted me to go or not. In fact, they didn't want me to go. While on our vacation we heard on the news that teachers were petitioning the county board of education for desegregating the schools in the county. I decided that I wanted to go down and apply. I took it down to the superintendent's office. In about two days they called and asked that some kids come down and take a test in the school library. It took about a half day. Two or three days later we heard on the news that we students had been accepted. They told the number of boys and the number of girls but didn't give any names. The first day we went down in a block, for they wouldn't let us go to the school at first. They passed out papers from the governor stating that we couldn't come. We went back to the superintendent's office and had a little conference with him. We also had a conference with the principal to get our schedules worked out. As soon as we did get in school some of the kids started checking out and some of the teachers approached some of the students and asked them if they had made their phone calls yet. So there were only us left. About the second semester the school closed. We went to the superintendent's office to get things straight. We asked the superintendent if we could apply to go to other schools in the county. He said it was possible; so, we had a conference with the families involved and six decided to go to _____ and six decided to go to _____. One boy didn't go because he was expelled for insubordination. My mother decided I would go to _____ because she was afraid something might happen at _____. That's really where all the excitement was. When we went we had people constantly following us from the Justice Department. They would escort us back and forth. When we got there we had a nice reception with the confederate flag and state troopers standing all around. The first day we went they stopped the bus. They had each of us to stand up as they called our names so they could count us. As soon as we got off the bus at school, the students inside started calling us names. The first two or three days we stayed in the library and didn't go to class. The principal had to give us a conference one by one. He gave us the rules we had to go by. The first thing he asked us was why we wanted to come there. We all said basically the same thing; that we thought it was our constitutional right to go to any school we wanted to, and that we wanted to further our education. He then told us the regulations of the school. He said there would be no corn chunking (throwing corn kernels in the class) and no smoking. He said that any day he might ask a girl to let him see her pocketbook and if he found any cigarettes or liquor, he would throw her out of school. Then he told us that we were to get cups for the water fountain and we had a separate restroom for the girls. I asked him why we were to drink out of cups and he said that students were leaving the school and that he wanted to keep them there; so he suggested that we drink out of paper cups for the time being. Nobody drank out of the cups and nobody went to the bathrooms. When we went to the other bathrooms, to see what separate booth we had, we saw that on the first day they had written "Private." The next day they had written on a big white sign "Nigger" in red lipstick. They tore up the snack machines and everything. Soon everybody left and there were about ten teachers and six students. The lunch program was cut out so we had to bring our lunches. The teachers taught at two schools and they would leave anytime they wanted to. They went to teach at the elementary school and when we had a class they would come down there. They didn't want to stay in class with us but they felt they had an obligation and, of course, they wanted to get paid. Soon we were subpoenaed to go to court. My teacher approached me and asked me to ask my lawyer not to do anything that would hinder the income of the teachers. I told her I didn't have anything to do with that; but still she told me to be sure to tell him. We went to court and the principal told us that he couldn't excuse us because we didn't have a legal excuse from the school. He said we would have to get an excuse from our lawyer. We had a verbal subpoena, and so did the principal. We all went down to court that Friday morning. All the people who were to appear in court stood around in a circle. The next day the principal told us that it was good we told the truth, but he couldn't excuse us for that day from school. We brought an excuse from our lawyer and finally he accepted it.

When school was out the principal came to each of our houses individually. During this time we had received some threats so we told him about them. He told us that one of the teachers at the school was also threatened. He said he had notified the police; but the police didn't do anything. The sheriff came down to the school and he interviewed us and told us that he knew all of our parents and they were nice and everything.

GIRL NO. 2: My experiences were somewhat different. The first day a news reporter rode the bus with us. All around us were state troopers. In front of them were federal marshals. When we got to town there were lines of people and cars all along the road. A man without a badge or anything got on the bus and started beating up the newspaper reporter. You could tell he was hurt because he was crying. They threw the camera all over the bus and broke it, and they threw the reporter all over the floor. Then they picked him up by the feet and took him to the door and threw him out on the ground. He was crying and bleeding. When we got to the school the students were all around looking through the windows and everything. The mayor made a little speech about fire hazards and all that. He said we couldn't come there because the school was already filled to capacity. He indicated that if six of us came in it would be a fire hazard. He told us to turn around and go back. We turned around and the students started yelling and clapping and everything. We went back to the office of the board of education. When I got home, my parents were at work and I got this call from my lawyer saying I was not to go back. It was quite a while before we went back because we had to go to court. After we got there we were called to the stand. At first it was kind of frightening; they asked us what happened. After court they told us that the decision was that we could go back. When we went back there were no students there at all. There were only two teachers left. The rest of the teachers left so they had to bring a couple of teachers from other places to teach. They were very nice considering what had happened. Very often when we came to school we would see things written all over the front of the building and pictures were drawn all over the walls. They would always draw a little black man with a lynch rope around his head. As you go up the stairs you would see stuff written like, "get rid of Robert Kennedy." Our lawyer had told us to take note of these things that went on but the teacher would tell us to come in and not bother about it. He said the people on the other side of the street were taking note of how we acted and we wouldn't want to make it difficult. The principal was pretty nice. He would let us go about things casually. He wouldn't distrust us. They didn't have a milk machine and he would go out of his way to go to the store to buy cookies and things and would just bring them out and tell us to get them and put our money in the box. He didn't stand around and watch us or anything. One day in April we got a call that said the school would be burned and that there would be no school. We had to go back to court. We decided after court to go back to school. Since nothing was burned but the high school department, we had school in the auditorium. We had classes on each side of the stage, in dressing rooms and wings. The principal got a refrigerator and put it in there for us. He went and got drinks for us also. He would ask us in the morning what we would like to have and would go out of his way to get it for us. He was pretty nice. They told us that they had gotten threats during the last part of the year saying that if they gave diplomas to the three seniors that they would kill them or something. They decided to let us get out of school a day early and give the diplomas to us then. The shocking thing was during the graduation ceremonies. All six of the students got together to make a speech. After we finished, I looked around and saw three teachers crying. The principal had tears in his eyes and he got up to make a little speech about us. He told the truth for he said at first he didn't think he would enjoy being around us. You could see in his face that he was really touched. We said something like we really enjoyed school together and that we were glad they stuck it out and all that kind of stuff. There was one boy who constantly bothered our bus driver. We always got out one period early. He would wait for school to get out and get up on his truck and wait for us and when the light turned green he would just sit there and wouldn't move. The police station was right down the street but they wouldn't do anything about it. This continued until our bus driver told him off. Several times when we would come through town in the morning they would have guns out in the hobby shop. One girl on the bus would always get upset and start crying. They were really BB guns and they would stand around the bus and aim at us and threaten us. Boys would ride around on motorcycles and throw rocks at us from the outside. The elementary kids would throw rotten eggs at us. The police would ignore them. The first day at school here there were not many students but there were some. The principal was not very nice. I'm sure everybody had something to say about him. The students in class were having fake reactions, but I guess everybody had those at first. But later in the year we got to know each other pretty well and got into good discussions with teachers.

GIRL NO. 1: Last year, maybe because of the principal, wasn't a good year at all. Maybe, because we didn't have many activities like we had this year. The principal was just teaching there because he couldn't find a better job somewhere else, for he didn't do very much for the school. The first day there was marching and cameramen taking pictures. The teachers were pretty good for most of them were young graduates of the University. I guess they were pretty nice and everything. It was just that we didn't have any activities and that made it a sorry year. The principal never brought up the question of integration; if he did, he tried to hide it. So the kids kind of rejected us. I didn't have many friends; maybe this was because of the principal also.

GIRL NO. 3: We had this strange teacher. In the first part of the year he didn't say anything to us about our grades. Some of us had pretty good grades on tests and everything. I had the feeling that he didn't want us to do that; he wanted them to do better than we did. He seemed to make the tests harder for he figured that if we failed, it actually was difficult. He never wanted us to say that what he said was wrong. In one case he got mad because he was wrong and we said he was wrong. It was a case concerning the male part of the flower and he said they were the pistil. On the chart the name of the thing was stamen. A couple of the white students agreed with him. As far as he was concerned he was right and there was nothing else to say about it. He felt that we were just trying to start things. But we were just trying to get things straight. We ended up arguing most of the time instead of getting much done. It was kind of difficult.

GIRL NO. 4: This year seemed to be entirely different for me, for it was my first year. It was actually almost like any other first day at a new school. We didn't know anybody and couldn't expect for everybody to come up and kiss us and all of that. The teachers seemed to accept me as well as the rest of the students. Although I didn't have any close friends, I never found anybody who acted like they would die if I got close to them. It has been almost a normal year for me.

GIRL NO. 1: The atmosphere this year is very different than last year, I guess, because of the change in principals. Last year we didn't have as many students come up to us and talk. It wasn't the matter of having so many friends but they wouldn't approach you in any way. I guess this year the new principal doesn't try to hide the situation that is involved like the old one did. You who came in this year are fortunate because he will talk to you about anything you want. He is trying to get the two races to come together. I think that may be what changed the atmosphere. When you hide things it makes people go around not saying things to each other. Now everybody can talk to one another. Most of the students are afraid of their parents.

GIRL No. 3: I had this teacher who divided the class up into groups. The Negroes sit on one side and the white students sit on the other side. She would teach the Negroes like on half of the class and then she would go over to the white kids. If we came to anything about communism or something relating to civil rights, she would bring up King's name and say something like, "In a little time our freedom will be gone," their freedom, the whites. She feels that just because she is a teacher she can talk about anything.

GIRL No. 1: When I first came down she compelled me to say, "yes, ma'am." I realize that it is a way of showing respect and adults like children to show respect. But when somebody compels you to say that, and my parents don't require me to say that to them, it kinds of gets on me. If you didn't say it she would take off points from your grades. I also notice that she didn't like people from the East, West, and North. She doesn't like redheads, for they give her the impression that they are mean. Don't let a person have green eyes because to her they are fierce. If there is anything she wants to know about the race problem, she will call you. She used to call me to see what was going on during the summer. I forgot I was supposed to say "yes ma'am" to her and was saying "yeah, sure," and so on. She said, "Have you forgotten about saying 'yes ma'am'?" I said, "no, ma'am, I haven't." She said, "Now let's not forget that." She works around to try to get the opinion of most of the Negroes concerning race. Then she will tell you her opinion and ask you whether you shouldn't feel the same way. Most of the time you don't.

BOY No. 1: Concerning answering, "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am," I find that this is the way almost any teacher will expect their students to address them. If you think about it, if you were someplace else, you would probably address the teachers the same. In our situation, being Negro, I felt at first that they would expect us to say "yassum" and "noam." It was the idea that I just didn't want to say "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am" to a white woman. I found that this was the way they expected any of their students to address them.

GIRL No. 2: I remember the first year one teacher threatened to have him put out of school because he wouldn't say "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am" to her. We were not accustomed to saying it and she wouldn't realize that we couldn't do it overnight. If we made one mistake in English and said "yeah," she would write on a little piece of paper and say, "I am going to have you all put out of school for insubordination." It seemed as if all she did the whole time was to just wait for us to say "yes" so she could make a big thing out of it. It seems like if you say "yes" one time, she won't miss it. She will ask you right away, "What's that you say?" She will ask you questions to try to make you say "yes ma'am." She got fed up at me because I got tired of her trying to make me say "yes ma'am" and I started saying, "I think so," or "I don't really think so," or something like that just to keep from saying "ma'am," because I figured she was doing it on purpose.

GIRL NO. 1: When I first went there, I ran sort of a little test on all of my teachers to see how many wanted me to say "yes ma'am." I found that she was the only one who tried to compel me to say it. She asked me, "Don't you say 'yes ma'am' to your mother and father?" I said, "No, sometimes I might say, 'yes mother' or 'yes father,' or something like that." She thought it was just terrible. That's the reason she thought I was a bad girl.

BOY NO. 2: The first day at school the teacher made it a point that we would say "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am" to her. One day she asked me something and I said, "Yes." She told me that the correct way to speak to her was to say "yes ma'am" and "no ma'am." About three or four days after school had started, a white student came into our class. She was from the North and had an accent to prove it. She had to drop the course because the teacher was very partial toward her. She would stick with us instead of the white kids and the teacher didn't appreciate that. When we were in class doing something, she would ask the white kids questions and if they couldn't answer them she would ask us, "What do you all have to say?" She could not teach. She would ask us to read certain things in economics and the next day she would come and say the very same thing that was in the book. We didn't need to take that over again because we read it that night. What was the use of reading the same thing over again? Actually we didn't learn anything except what was in the book.

BOY NO. 1: Speaking of the inability of the teachers to teach, what do you think about the teachers down there, do you think they are any better or what?

GIRL NO. 1: Personally, I like the teachers in the white school better than any of the teachers I have ever had. From the sixth grade down, my teachers always called me by my first name; from the seventh grade on they called me by my last name. I feel that it is very impersonal. Maybe it is because my classes were very crowded and my teachers didn't have time to help us as it is in a smaller classroom. When I got to the white school, the teachers were much more personal. None of them have ever called me by my last name. They take, or some take, more time with you; therefore, I feel that they are better.

GIRL NO. 3: I don't think they are any better or any worse than any other teacher I have had. People are people and some teachers are good and some are bad. I find that some of the teachers there are better and some are worse.

You can't put the teachers together and say, "These teachers are better," or "These teachers are worse."

BOY NO. 1: What I had reference to was, I found at the Negro school there is much more strictness of discipline or many more strict teachers. The teachers are more experienced and their teaching techniques are different and their presentation of the lesson plan is better.

GIRL NO. 2: It's not necessarily that they are more experienced in teaching techniques, it's just that they have techniques of their own. You are used to their techniques and you have just got to get used to other teachers' techniques. You can't just say that this teacher's techniques are better because he has a better teaching technique because you are used to them. Maybe, after and if, you get used to the teaching techniques that are unfamiliar to you, you might like them.

BOY NO. 1: Once before we did mention teachers being better or worse and everybody else said that you could not compare the teachers actually because every teacher has his own teaching technique. But I would disagree; I would say our teachers at the Negro high school are better. The teachers here are inexperienced—most of them are just out of college and they are not, just do not have the technique. Wait, let me! No, let me finish. At the Negro school, there are teachers who have more class activities, the teacher explains things and we have more class discussions, whereas at our high school, we read the book and have a test. That's about all there is to it. Some people may say that is the teacher's technique, his own technique. You can't say he is worse or better, that's just his technique, but I would say there is a difference.

GIRL NO. 1: Now, mainly he was speaking about just one teacher who is an individual. Again, you can't compare science with English; you will always give illustrations with slides and visual aids and things like that. I feel that English is usually a most boring subject.

BOY NO. 1: But both as far as teaching techniques and what goes on in the classroom, and how the teacher gets lessons over to the students, that's how you tell a good teacher.

GIRL NO. 1: Maybe she is better to you because she was teaching a difficult subject. Take for instance, science, you can always give movies, any visual aid—anything is interesting in science. Those things will always be more interesting to most people. But English is usually boring. Grammar, and how to punctuate, verbs and things like that. And it's usually nothing to worry about too much. Then if the teacher can make him interested, then she is a good teacher.

BOY NO. 1: What I'm saying is that you said you have never been to any other school except the high school and you cannot compare other means and ways of teaching techniques. What I'm saying is that you haven't been a student at the high school so you couldn't compare.

GIRL NO. 4: Now, during the time I was at the Negro high school, we used to go to one man and the classrooms were overcrowded and I'm not saying that the teachers were bad, but we didn't do anything that was not customary. And when I changed schools that was when I found that the work was harder. I guess because classes were smaller and it's according to how the teacher lectures—whether it's boring or whether it's interesting.

BOY NO. 2: I gather that the teachers at the Negro school are more experienced but they are not up-to-date. Two or three years ago, when they were in college they were, but now there are new techniques. Most of the teachers at the white school, well, they are fresh out of college and they are sure they will know more and learn more by the modern way. Whereas, the teachers at the Negro school are sort of . . . like, old fashioned. The teachers there have been out of school for quite some time. Some of them don't bother about going back. Here you can learn more because in the classroom you can get more over to the students when you can teach them individually. So therefore, well, both teachers have faults. One such as inexperience and the other who didn't know much about the modern way of work. But basically both teachers are trying to help.

GIRL NO. 3: The Negro college there is not a very good school for teachers. The white teachers have more opportunities and have more challenge than the teachers in the Negro college could have. And the school of the teacher makes a lot of difference.

BOY NO. 1: Well, what would you rather have, an "A" student with a "B" character or a "B" student with an "A" character? The teachers at the Negro school have more experience, well, they've done it every year. They learn by experience. Each time they make a mistake, they're warned that that's one they've made. Even though these teachers in the white school are new they have just gotten out of college—that doesn't mean too much.

GIRL NO. 1: They have to learn by experience also. So, you've got to give them time to learn too. We just can't say A character or B character and teachers with an A character are better teachers than those with B character. You also have to grade B character over a period of time. You just have to give them time too.

GIRL NO. 1: I knew a lot of teachers at the Negro school before I came here. It seemed to me they were trying to maintain a reputation they had for being tough and for putting students out of class and sending them to the office and all of that. A lot of times things we should have discussed in homeroom, we'd discuss at our English period because we didn't have enough time in homeroom. A lot of teachers at the white school go to a lot of trouble trying to figure out ways of staying out of class so late by taking long coffee breaks. One time our history teacher was out of class so late that he came in at almost the end of the class period and gave us half an hour of notes to be taken in ten minutes. I don't think this is fair.

GIRL NO. 1: The impression that I got of the Negro teachers, maybe because so many students go there, is that they try to build up some sort of big impression for themselves. When I went to the white school it didn't seem that way. I guess because the classes were so small. Everybody has a pretty good impression and the teachers wouldn't go out of their way to help you just to make an impression or practice some discipline just to get back at you.

GIRL No. 3: I kind of think the way you do. At the Negro school some of the teachers seem to have a complex. They seem to want to show you that they are just as good as the white teachers at any other place. I want to show you I'm great too. They go all out of their way to do little things that really don't help you learn anything; but they think they are making an impression on you. That didn't help me any; I just wanted someone who could teach, who could help me without putting on an act.

GIRL No. 1: I found this too. When they wanted me to apply for the white school, I was happy and I told two of my teachers. One teacher constantly reminded me that I am a member of the Negro race and that since I was going to school with white children, I would have to change because they are different. She said that if I am going to school down there, I would have to stop being bad. Every time I'd do something she'd tell me I better change because that is why the whites didn't want us down there now because we are so bad. Things like this lead Negro children to think that they are actually in a minority and are different.

QUESTION: Why do you think she did that?

GIRL No. 1: I really don't know. I kind of think she really thought that. That they didn't want us because we're noisy. After I got over there I found out differently. They're as bad as we are. You just can't say that because we are Negroes and they are whites that we are different. Everything that my instructor told me to look out for was just the opposite of what she had led me to believe.

GIRL No. 3: The same thing happened to me. Whenever you tell somebody you want to do something different you get this. I told one of my teachers that I planned to apply to the white school and she told me what to do and what not to do. People really make you believe that you are different, you know, "little black girl is stupid," and that we have to act differently around white children. When you get into the situation children are children, they are going to do what they want to do anyway. It kind of makes you feel funny because you don't like to feel that you have to act in a different way because you want to make a good impression on the white kids. I want to be me.

GIRL No. 1: It's the same way with some of your friends who go to the Negro school. Some people think that because you want to go to an integrated school that you want to be white. I have heard a lot of people say this. When you get into a discussion with someone who is not going to an integrated school, or a heated argument when they can't think of anything else to say, they are going to bring up, "You think you are so good because you go to an integrated school; you think you are white." I found that you are not going to ever get around this. This is one of the things that you are going to have to accept!

QUESTION: Have you lost any friends as a result?

GIRL NO. 1: The people that I had in mind were not my friends in the first place.

GIRL NO. 2: I didn't really lose any friends. The people who were not my friends but acted close to me soon stopped speaking. This year it was pretty bad during basketball season. A group of girls said that we thought we were white. They said that we come to their basketball games and sit up and try to act intelligent because we thought we were white. It was just that group of people because our friends are still our friends and close friends and they don't think that way.

BOY NO. 2: The first year that I went down there, we had this friend who lived sort of out in the country. My father went and picked her up for dinner one day. After we finished eating dinner, she asked me how I was getting along at my new school. I told her. She asked my father if she could use the telephone and he said, "yes." She had known us for the six years that we have lived here and before. She was talking with one of her friends on the phone and she didn't know we were listening. She told her friend, "Guess what, I am over to the 'big Niggers' house." I was wondering how could she say "big Niggers." Just because I went to the white school didn't mean that we were "big Niggers." She got the impression that we were "big Niggers" and had a lot of money and everything which we don't. Actually my father didn't want me to go down there at first. Considering my going to school, I said that actually any Negro child can do this because all he has to do is fill out an application. She still couldn't get rid of the idea that we were "big Niggers." I just can't understand how they can say that. I said I'm no different than you are. Every time we would go over to her house, she would call some of her friends over and introduce them to the "big Niggers." I just stopped going over there. It's not only the children who are that way but it is the grownups also. A few neighbors around my house think it's a crime for me to rake or cut the lawn cause they think I'm so important. Once they learn that we are no different from them, and white people are no different from colored people, the situation will be much better. I'll be glad when that day comes.

GIRL NO. 2: That's the way a lady in our neighborhood is. She doesn't think that we are any better than she is but she thinks that we think we are. She will do anything to get us out of the neighborhood. She talks about me when I come down the street. You can tell when someone is talking about you because they look at you from the side and talk out of the corner of their mouth. She told some of the neighbors that we think we are rich just because I was one of the first Negroes who integrated the school. She looked at me and watched me walk down the street and the lady she was talking with told me that she said, "You ought to see her when she gets off the bus, she throws her head up like she is so big." It used to hurt me and I talked with my mother about it and she and I decided to ignore it because you find people like that in every group. It's going to be hard, just as I'm reading a book by Sammy Davis, Jr., "Yes I Can." He didn't know anything about the difference between a Negro and a white because his father protected him. And that was wrong. When he got in the Army the men painted him white and rubbed him with turpentine. They said, "See the white paint comes off but your brown don't." They did awful things to him. He had the talent and wanted to make it big. When he did, the whites got mad at him because he did and the Negroes got mad at him because there weren't any Negroes at his party. That's the way it is here. The whites got mad at us for going to that school and the Negroes got mad too.

GIRL NO. 1: I noticed that some of the kids at the Negro school would say that we were stuck up. I asked one person why did she think this and she said that because they expect so much out of us, that we are supposed to be smart and have our names on the honor roll and everything. It seems as if they are the first to say you won't speak to them anymore. But they won't give you a chance. They turn away or make some snide remark and that discourages you. They say, "You think you are so big or so important that you can't be around your old friends anymore."

GIRL NO. 3: If you really look at it, I don't know if jealousy is the right word, but it seems as if they want to be a part of it too, and they are angry because you are in it. It doesn't make very much sense because they can do the same thing but nobody has the initiative to do it.

GIRL NO. 1: What I have noticed is that many of the kids say they want to change schools or they want to participate in the activities, but their parents say they can't. Some say they are scared or something like that. I believe that a lot of them wanted to but they feel that they don't have the opportunities we had. It was easy for us because we had help.

GIRL NO. 3: I was talking to one boy and I want someone to explain to me what he meant. He said he was thinking about applying to the white school but that he changed his mind because he said he thinks he will be intimidated for the school belongs to me now. I didn't understand him but I never got the chance to ask him what he meant. It just didn't make sense to me; I couldn't understand it.

BOY NO. 1: He probably felt that since you were among the first who integrated the school and since there was only a few of us that maybe he felt that he would be intruding on something that you had started, that you had begun.

GIRL NO. 3: Maybe that is how he felt, but I wish that we or that somebody could make people see that we were not just going there to get our names in the papers. Somebody had to start it sometime. We were not just going to say that we are the only ones that go to the white school. We were going, or rather we were doing this to help everybody. Why can't they see that it's their school too? If they want to go, why don't they just go?

GIRL NO. 1: The way I see it is that people want things to happen but they are waiting for somebody else to do it. They will not realize that those who do something have to sacrifice. They don't realize that those who first went down had to sacrifice. They didn't have all the opportunities and all the extracurricular activities that the Negro school had, like ball games, etc. Another thing, a lot of kids came up to me and told me they would like to come but they would like to be on the basketball team. But we don't have a football or basketball team. They are just plain scared and they don't want to give up anything.

BOY NO. 1: Going back to what you said about representing everyone. A person really can represent no one but himself. When I went, I didn't go for what you might call the Negro cause.

GIRL NO. 3: I didn't mean like that. If I had been one of the first to go, maybe I would have felt different. I am glad I didn't go that first year because I don't think I would have been able to stand up the way you all did. I think that more people should go.

QUESTION: Talk a little about your association with white students.

GIRL NO. 1: Sometimes when we are sitting in assembly we have a few students who don't want to sit by us and they make insinuating remarks like, "I had better not get too close to you," or something like that. You go to the bathroom and you see little notes and everything.

BOY NO. 2: It turned out with us talking about the governor and his administration. They all said that he is doing a good thing. I said, "You are dang right. He is doing a good thing. Had it not been for him, the university wouldn't be as integrated as it is; if he hadn't made a fool of himself trying to defy the federal government." He is always talking about this sovereign state so I asked them what did "sovereign state" mean, and would they refer to our state as being sovereign. They said yes. I asked them how they could possibly think this when we are getting money from the federal government; we are getting food from the federal government; the federal government is practically supporting you. If it were not for the federal government, we really couldn't have anything, schools or anything.

GIRL NO. 3: When I first decided to come to the white school I got a lot of suggestions from teachers and friends; but the best suggestion I got was to be open minded. I had no idea how it would be; I could only come and find out. You tend to form impressions or ideas of what it's going to be like. They are going to think you are going to be a certain way so don't try to be that way. They are going to think you are like this because all Negroes are like this so you have got to try to be different. Negroes can be prejudiced too and can have ideas about whites too. It's just as simple as not knowing what it's going to be like so you got to be open minded. If you are not going to be open minded and try to learn together you can't want to progress. Not being open minded is going to hinder you.

GIRL No. 2: In our English class we had to try out for all kinds of parts in the play. We got upset at first because our English teacher didn't try out the Negro boys for anything but the part of the Negro. She didn't try any of the white boys out for that part either. We got upset because even though they were Negroes, and they have to be in the part, she could have thought of making us feel a little better by letting the white boys try for the part.

QUESTION: Well, what did you do about it?

BOY No. 1: We went to the principal and asked him about it. He said that the part did call for a Negro. Well, I agree with this. The part called for a Negro and there were two Negro boys in the class so both of us tried out for the part. However, she might have let us try out for some other parts also. The principal said that if we did let a white person play the part then the thing would become a comedy and everyone would sit up and laugh and the actual meaning of the play wouldn't come out. The play is supposed to build up a better relationship between the whites and the Negroes. The principal suggested that we go on and do it. We never said anything to the instructor about it.

GIRL No. 2: After the two Negro boys tried out, I began to think that the Negro girls could only play the parts of colored women and Negro slaves. I sort of got a little frustrated. But she had all of the girls both white and Negro to try out for the other parts. It turned out with three of the characters that were white in the book being played by three Negro girls. There was a scene in the opening part of the play where we had two uncles and the uncles were white boys. When they came in we were supposed to hug them. When we wrote this script, nobody knew who was going to play who so we wrote it just like it was supposed to be written. When the boys found out that we were supposed to hug them, they weren't happy about it; they were pretty upset. One boy said, "I just can't do that." Well we laughed about it but they were pretty serious. I kept getting the impression that it was because of what would happen when their friends saw them do this, or when their fathers or their relatives saw them.

QUESTION: Would you have done it?

GIRL No. 2: I don't think I would have been any less embarrassed than they, but I would have done it. You see I don't really care about what anybody is going to say if they see me hug him. They just gave me the impression that it was more what would happen when their friends saw them do this. They just have to maintain their relationship with their white friends.

Now they have us shaking hands. At first they didn't want us to do anything but just wave at each other. One of the boys was making a big scene knocking down chairs and everything saying, "No, no, I can't do that." One of them was supposed to rub his sister's hair. "No I can't do that." Then he changed his mind and said he might be able to rub her hair but I can't hug her. The other one wouldn't say anything. He said it didn't make any difference with him.

GIRL NO. 1: After you go back and look at both sides of the story, you can't blame them really because after all you don't want people to say, "Oh no, I am scared to touch her because her black might rub off on me." If you were in their situation, you might feel the same way. You have to understand that they're not going to fall in love with you overnight. Nobody likes for his friends to turn their backs on him and laugh at him and all of that. More than likely that would be what would happen.

GIRL NO. 2: In the play I was the daughter and I was the only Negro in the whole family. They go around and call everybody brother and sister and mom and dad and they get to me and call me sister. When we sat around the table, I was expecting them to move their chairs over but they didn't do that. I was kind of shocked when two white boys and myself were backstage in the wings together and one of them had a gun that we were to use in the play. He said "If I had to shoot all the Negroes in the school, I would shoot you last." I said, "Why?" He said, "I like you because you know how to cope with our white jokes." I asked him what he meant and he said that when he tells us jokes we just laugh about them and don't get upset. I didn't know whether to take it as a compliment or not.

BOY NO. 1: I found myself not acting myself. They expected a whole lot out of me. They expected me to be different. I had to go along with their crude jokes. They were no good but I laughed anyway. They would run things in the ground but I would keep laughing. Lately I have decided that I really shouldn't try to act different from what I really am. I have decided that I don't have to prove anything to anybody. I lost a few friends by doing that but I've gotten fed up with it. When I first came into the situation, I wanted to be friendly. I guess anybody wants to be friends with everybody. We got along okay. We joked about the white and Negro relationship. This was good and okay but I just got tired of it.

GIRL NO. 4: What about the junior and senior banquet?

GIRL NO. 2: We had a meeting and the instructor asked how many of us thought we were coming. All of the Negroes' hands went up. There was one white girl whose hand went up. After she looked around and saw all of the other white students who didn't raise their hands, hers went down again. She was the main one who wanted to have it. Just when she saw their reactions, I think she was afraid she might lose her friends if she came. She keeps avoiding the principal so he won't ask her if she's coming. She keeps saying that she is not sure. The instructor said, "Well why don't you want to come?" She said, "I am not sure now." She's not sure but she might be out of town.

GIRL NO. 1: You talk about the reason they don't want to come is maybe because they didn't want to sit next to us. One day we were sitting around talking and I asked some white girls just why they didn't want Negroes to sit next to them or touch them or anything. They came up with the reason that they don't believe in intermarriage. Now, what does marriage have to do with sitting by somebody?

BOY NO. 1: Maybe they feel that if they get friendly with us and sit beside us and talk that might lead to something.

GIRL NO. 1: Well, it takes two to marry somebody. This is the first thing that comes over them, intermarriage. Nobody wants to marry them; you just want to be their friends, that's all.

BOY NO. 1: They have been led to believe that the Negro thinks about one thing, sex.

GIRL NO. 2: No, no, I don't think that. They know that they think about getting married. They are afraid that they may find a Negro that they like, not necessarily that a Negro likes them. Maybe they already got a crush on them. I just believe that they are afraid. If they were not afraid of us, maybe they could stand us a little better. But when you have a guilty conscience yourself, things get down on you a little worse.

GIRL NO. 1: I think they get many of these ideas from their parents. Most of the adults feel that integration results in intermarriage, especially in the elementary school.

GIRL NO. 2: There was one girl in my homeroom who is okay. She would talk to us and when we are in some kind of trouble, she will help us out. I found that she likes a lot of things that I like. She doesn't sit around and keep it to herself and her white friends. Like when we are doing something and you have to pick someone to be on your team, a lot of white students will pick some white students first because they are white. She is different, she will pick you because she thinks you are good.

GIRL NO. 3: As part of being somebody you aren't, I have trouble, because you don't want to be over nice, yet you want to be nice. In one class I have, there are only five of us in there. There are two white boys, two white girls, and myself. Usually, I don't sit with anyone. If we are going to talk or anything our teacher tells us to be quiet. They will start their conversation about anything. It is just boring to me. Someone might say, "Why don't you come and sit with us?" I can't tell them that I don't want to sit with you because I don't enjoy talking with them. I have to laugh at their stupid jokes or they'll think I'm square. It's just that you can't act yourself around them. You want to be with your friends, the Negroes. I can be me more then. If it were a place where whites and Negroes lived together and did things together it'd be different. I guess it's just the situation that makes it that way.

GIRL NO. 2: Like when we had our first party, everybody started running all over the building. It ended up with all of the Negroes having a party in one room and all the whites having a party in another. Everybody enjoyed this because we wanted our music and they wanted theirs. We just couldn't all be together and enjoy the same music. I like to do the "Dog" but to their music all you can do is jump around. Their music has a louder and faster beat than ours. We would end up playing one record that they liked and they would end up playing one record that we liked. I only like one record out of their collection and that was "Hang on Snoopy" and that wasn't too much. So we just ended up having two parties. We all enjoyed it.

GIRL NO. 3: Something else concerning the divided society. There is a girl that goes to choir practice with me. We have something to talk about together sometimes away from school. She is a friend of mine but not that close. If the town were arranged differently, the situation would probably be different.

GIRL NO. 1: We need more activities together so we'll have more in common. Maybe gradually in two or three years we'll do more things together like proms and dances.

GIRL NO. 2: It's tough on the principal, although I really can't say why I think that. The girl cheerleaders say that the only thing he thinks about is sex going on in the school, but he hasn't said anything to me about that. I can't see he does that. They say that he's mean and forces things on them they don't want to do. Maybe we think differently because he does the things I want him to do and not what they want him to do. They want to get rid of him and talk about it a lot.

GIRL NO. 1: Those who say that always break the rules anyway, like smoking. Last year they got away with some of it, but this year it's different. If you get caught, you got to pay the consequences.

QUESTION: Tell us some more about the kids in your classes. Are they friendly . . . are they as smart as you thought they were?

ALL: No! (LAUGHTER)

GIRL NO. 3: In our class one of the white boys decided that he is not going to do anything. He isn't going to cooperate. The teacher asked him to read a poem and he said he would rather not. She would just call on somebody else.

GIRL NO. 1: There's a lot of white students who act like they think they are doing you a favor if they let you be their friends. It's like it is a privilege for you to be their friend. Well, that's not the kind of friend I need. If you are going to be my friend I don't care what you are or what you claim to be. This one girl acts as if it is a privilege, and that you ought to be glad that she is going to be your friend. She acts like a counselor over you. There's a lot more like this too. They will talk to their friends about you, then they will come and get your opinion about something, then they will turn what you said to just the opposite and start something.

GIRL No. 3: What makes me feel sort of bad is when you go to a place out of the South, where there is integration and it is so perfect. People seem wonderful and you just forget about what you are, about your color and everything. Then when you come back you see that it is just the opposite. It makes you sick. You realize how perfect society can be but people just don't care enough to try to start it. It just makes you think. You see a way that you would like for things to be but it just can't be.

GIRL No. 2: I'm so used to white people objecting to many of the things that I do that I think I'll leave. I kind of question myself: "Here is a friend but does she really mean it?" I don't want to be that kind of person. I want to accept someone to be my friend without this kind of doubt. I think it's just being here. I get somewhere else and find white people being very nice and kind and I say to myself: "Look what they're doing." I don't want to feel that, I want to accept it.

GIRL No. 1: Like in our class, you see the same people every day and they have gotten used to the fact that they have got to talk to us. We have a nice conversation. We laugh at their jokes and everything and then if you see them on the street, the same person that you have been joking around with all day will look the other way and they won't speak. That kind of thing bothers you. They will talk to you when you are by yourself or with just a few people but if you are in a group with some of their other friends around, they don't know you at all. That kind of thing makes you distrust their friendship at all.

QUESTION: Are you girls saying that you are more distrustful of white people now than you were a few years ago? Is that the common reaction or not?

GIRL No. 2: If I had been around them all of my days and know how they react with me in school is different from the way that they react with me out, I could go along with it. When I was in the North I went to an integrated group and I didn't think anything about it. Now when some of them are being nice to me I find myself saying: "Look what they are doing for me, going out of their way to do it."

BOY No. 1: I don't know if this is representative of everyone, but I find that in our schools, the white kids will turn on each other. They will be friends and then when something happens, they always point the thing to the other. Even though they are friends, they can't seem to trust each other.

QUESTION: That doesn't happen among Negro friends?

BOY No. 1: I would say it was not as prevalent.

QUESTION: What other things do you see down there among the white kids?

BOY NO. 1: They all seem to be afraid of what someone else might think. They can't seem to think for themselves. They can't even follow their own moral right. They are always afraid of what someone else might think. There are very few incidences of violence, killings, etc., but they are afraid to take me home after practice. They say, "somebody might shoot me," "take you home in broad daylight, you must be kidding." Sometimes they will take me home and sometimes they will make up excuses. They are just afraid. They are afraid of nothing; there's nothing to be afraid of. Sometimes I invite them to come over to some of the activities. But they think that the Negroes just hate white people, they think they will come over here and get killed. I try to explain to them that it is a thing that is accepted. One man is just another man that you pass on the street. They can't seem to understand that. The white people who associate with us are what they refer to as "nigger lovers." I find that this is not only at the school but is characteristic of the entire white population. All of them are afraid of what others will think. I don't know very much about the city council but I think this exists in the city council.

GIRL NO. 2: We were talking about the junior-senior banquet, and —— asked whether the whites and the Negroes would want to avoid each other at the banquet. I said, "Why don't you sit next to me and we'll set an example." He said to me later, "Do you really want to sit by me?" I'm always joking around so I said, "Oh yes, sure, you know I want to sit by you." I was only joking, but maybe he took it seriously. He said to me later, "Do you want to sit next to me because I can't do that—my friends wouldn't like it?" I said, "Oh, that's all right. I will bring my date and we can sit on the other side of you." I was just joking around. I didn't know whether he was taking me serious or not but he asked me again and I said, "No, that's all right."

BOY NO. 1: He was serious—because he asked me. (LAUGHTER.) What do you think about this desegregation for next year? How will it work? That's between Negroes and whites.

GIRL NO. 1: All kids coming down here, they are going to be this, on that and on the other thing. If the whites hear all this half of them will drop out. Many of them have left already. But you can't just turn down the Negroes because parents say, you picked the best kids, you didn't pick my son or daughter and they start this rejection toward the school. Then next year you beg them to come down and they won't. They say you said you picked the best ones and you didn't pick my son or daughter then. I don't know what we are going to do about it. We got problems here.

QUESTION: What kind of reactions do you think white teachers would get from predominantly all Negro schools?

GIRL NO. 2: I know of one teacher who left, but she wasn't a good teacher, that's why.

GIRL NO. 3: They have one now. They said he was accepted fairly well.

You just have to think about personality. I don't know—can't be much worse.

GIRL No. 2: From what I've heard from students about the white teacher that was just the excuse she gave for leaving, that Negro kids don't know how to respect white teachers. Wherever you go kids are going to act like this. Maybe she felt funny teaching a class of all Negroes and not any whites.

GIRL No. 4: Well I think I would have felt the same way had I been in her place. At least some will try to show her we're bad, we don't need you. Negroes are prejudiced too, at least some are. Make her feel different. Nobody wants to feel that way, you know. She is going to think she is different, and she is different. She would think she had a special reason for leaving. I think I would have left too.

GIRL No. 1: Why did she come? She should have gone. Children are going to be children, and they will act like this! I guess it's just the way the teacher has to handle the class. Maybe the way she presents her work. If you send down a Negro teacher to an all-white school, or an integrated school, you send your best Negro teacher and if you send a white teacher to an all Negro school, you send your best white teacher. I don't think that she was their best. If she couldn't cope with the students like the Negro teacher can, she wasn't that good. I heard that she sat around in her chair all of the time. You know most teachers walk around in a classroom. She would still have to discipline her class. If she just didn't make it seem like "I'm white." She wasn't their best teacher. They should have sent one of their better white teachers and it would have worked out.

GIRL No. 3: There is just one thing I would like to say. . . . We have a lot of dumb people in our class . . . you know, dumb, white people. (LAUGHTER) It's true! They want to graduate, but they don't want to do anything. I noticed this before. I was absent a lot and I was behind, had a lot of back work to do in order to catch up. There was one time I didn't finish my short stories. I had seventeen and I turned in sixteen. I noticed that she didn't give me credit but for the sixteen. I know that there are some white kids . . . well this one boy, he never does his homework, he doesn't even bring books to class. He could get an "I" and he can make it up. It should be the same for all. The teacher would always say, "Did you understand it?" and he would say, "No, I didn't." She would say, "Well, see me after class and bring it in later at the sixth period." He is just far behind and yet, he is going to graduate. It's the same way with another girl.

GIRL No. 1: I guess they expect a lot from you. I kind of noticed that when they are in class they don't recite and can't answer questions right. The majority of the white kids in our classroom have a don't-carish attitude. They say I don't care about school. Maybe they feel that they are going to graduate without much trouble anyway, they'll get a passing grade and it seems that they aren't going to college. Probably they are going to get married so it doesn't really matter just so long as "I get my degree."

BOY No. 1: Last night the superintendent, myself, and the coach were discussing this attitude that was in the school and it seems to be the problem with the team. These kids seem to have the idea that if they can't win, they don't care. Coach was saying that actually they don't care and that in home games, this attitude was prevalent in the parents and it rubs off on the kids. It's been like this since she has been here, the white people act like they don't care. They have never been together and they just have an "I don't care" attitude.

BOY NO. 2: What about the boy who comes to class unprepared and has no excuse, does exactly nothing and the teacher asks him why he doesn't have his work? And he answers, "I was sick," "I had to work" or "go to band practice." And she says bring it in tomorrow. Tomorrow comes, then the next tomorrow—all day—and then he still doesn't turn it in. And actually he doesn't do anything in class but yet, he could be making good grades. She is actually giving him grades. She is just doing it, just to pass him. He thinks, I am doing you a favor just by coming to school when he actually isn't doing anyone any good because the time she takes up with him trying to explain things to him, he is actually hindering everybody instead of trying to help them because he actually does nothing in the classroom. He just sits there occupying space. That's all he is doing.

GIRL NO. 1: If he doesn't graduate I think maybe he will go into the armed services. If he doesn't graduate he is not coming back to school another year. He just doesn't care.

QUESTION: What are you people going to do after you finish classes, when you finish high school?

BOY NO. 1: Our plans after we graduate from school . . . I think all of us plan to go to college.

BOY NO. 2: The white kids always talk about getting married or joining the armed services, so I asked one what he is going to do when he gets out of the armed services. He tells me he is going to get a job somewhere. I say get a job doing what? I try to tell him that the world is becoming more mechanized day by day; I mean it's going to be hard to make a living. He tells me that he is going to do this and he is going to do that. I say he's going to be lost. But he says he can find something and I try to tell him that it's not going to work. Then he thinks I am being uppity and all this, so he gets mad and walks off.

GIRL NO. 1: Oh, I think most kids feel that college isn't for everyone—which is true, and that some people are better off in trade school, better off married, some are better off lost.

GIRL NO. 4: In our English class, I believe it was at the end of the semester, our teacher divided the class into two groups—the group that was planning to go to college and the group that was not. And it seems to me that the majority of the kids, well, the kids in college preparatory groups are the ones that have a closer relationship than the ones in the other group. I feel that, they don't have anything to say to the other group. I mean, this was before the division was made as well as now. There is only one girl in the non-college group and the other girls are in the college prep group. This seems to have some relationship to the atmosphere in our class.

QUESTION: You said not many of you were friendly with the white kids after school, I'm wondering if you are friendly with each other?

BOY NO. 1: Yes!! That's all we can do. We have to talk to somebody, so we just have to talk to each other.

GIRL NO. 1: One thing we have different in the white school, we don't have dances. Our main activity should be the high school. The white kids have to go outside and maybe that's why they are not more together. You see, we can go to the other school.

QUESTION: Suppose you were approached and asked for suggestions about going to a white school? What would you tell them?

GIRL NO. 1: I would say that there are really no activities, you should be willing to take the insults they sometimes make, and you won't really be accepted as best friends all the time because sometimes that's not true. But I realize that myself.

BOY NO. 2: I would tell them to be prepared for a change because it's a great change from the other school to this high school and don't form any opinions about the school. Just come and more or less observe. One thing is the change in social atmosphere. I mean that you can joke around, just more freedom. But down here, sometimes you can say things here and you don't mean it to be a particular insult but—you don't want to step on anybody's toes, so you just have to be careful of what you say and how you say it. Really, there's a strain. There also seems to be more homework here.

GIRL NO. 1: You see, there seems to be more activities to take up school periods and I find I talked to one of my old friends and they say that they are way behind in their books. It's just that we don't have so many activities. I think it's up to anyone to come and make their own suggestions because like I found people gave me advice and it was different advice that they gave me even though they weren't in the situation. I don't think I can because I am in the situation and right now if I were to give advice it'd be different from others in this room. I think that the only thing I could tell them would be to make up their minds to want to come and when they get here to be themselves and don't put on a big show. This is not to say you have to be different in order to get along with other people. It's not that way at all. You find that people judge you by your group without getting to know you at first. The Negro group is such and such. After that they get to know you as the individual as you are.

BOY NO. 2: Another thing about impressions, when I was down here a year ago I got the impression that they were trying to push me around and I was called a show-off. I was called this often and constantly. I got to the point where I believed it. So my first year down there I got the attitude, you know, that I don't care about this and that. Well, when I got down there I found out in a couple of months that it wasn't like this. But after I had practiced this for so long, then after I started changing myself it was difficult to change and I couldn't really start changing until this year. I lost quite a few friends that I really didn't mean to, because of my attitude last year. So far as giving people advice on what to do down there, I hardly know how to react myself in certain situations. I would tell them just don't and use your own discretion as far as possible. But I would not tell them, you know, especially, they did this and they did that to me, because this really proves to be a handicap and it's very hard to correct the mistake that you have gotten influenced beforehand.

GIRL NO. 2: I find that you should watch out for a couple of things. My advice is for you not to do things in class that would impress the teacher or impress the students—or maybe impress yourself. And that's one of the things you find later on, just do your job and don't try to impress anybody, and you will get a little better reaction, where you wouldn't try to impress anybody.

GIRL NO. 1: Well, I would like to offer a few suggestions—give them my reaction. Tell them what to expect and maybe some of the things I came in contact with may cause them to be separated and things like that. But they can use it or not.

QUESTION: Do people call you names to your face?

GIRL NO. 1: Yes, not regularly, but maybe after a person gets angry with you and they call you names every week or pass you by without speaking. This makes you angry.

GIRL NO. 2: It's not as much as it was before.

BOY NO. 2: You also get used to things written on the bathroom walls, a lot of stuff. But this is something you have to take. When you come to think about it, when kids call you a name you laugh and joke it off. When you get down there, it's a little different because it's white people.

GIRL NO. 2: I find myself, I don't think about it now. We call each other a nigger right off, y'know we joke about it. But you turn around and a white person call me a nigger I don't know how to take it. When the whites see Negroes calling each other nigger then they use it. So I catch myself and when I'm joking around in the halls I don't say it down there.

GIRL NO. 1: I had this white friend this summer. We were just talking about things, the school situation and stuff, and she asked me what did I think if she called me a nigger. I told her I'd be offended. So she said she could see this because where she went to school some of her friends call her a peck or a cracker and they laugh it off. But if I called her a name like that she'd be offended too.

BOY NO. 1: Well, I'd like to say this. I feel that we have given the wrong impression that our relationship with the white kids at the high school is entirely a hostile one. This is wrong although sometimes we talk that way. We have conversations and all and often the boys talk about girls. But the thing is that sometimes you may say something and you don't know who you can trust, even those who look like they're being sincere. You don't know whether you can trust them or if they'll say something behind your back.

GIRL NO. 2: All in all the situation is not bad. There always is a rotten apple but we expected this. Some people ask what it's like down there and they expect me to say it's tough and mean. But it's not like that at all. It's nice, considering the situation. Things are better than they were last year.

QUESTION: Have any of you had any of your white classmates to your homes, or have you gone to any of theirs?

BOY NO. 1: I've been to the front door. (LAUGHTER) When I invited one over he was cautious about it. I had four or five over on some business to check on some studies. After the first visit the ice was broken and some of them came by again. And once he was cautious about going into the house. I said, "C'mon, nobody else will know." (LAUGHTER) I got him into the house and we had a good time. He came by once on a friendly visit, and they stay outside sometimes and blow their horns.

GIRL NO. 2: One day this girl took me home and when we got there she just sat in the car and I said, "If you want to come in, come in." She said, "Sure." She walked in through the house and looked into every room. So I took her around and told her this was the living room, and this was the kitchen, and this was the bedroom and so on. She just looked and stared. She said, "Your house is really nice," in a surprised tone. I said, "Thank you." There was another girl who associated with us last year when things were pretty hot. Sometime later I saw her in school and she said she wanted to come over but it was hard. I invited her and didn't tell anybody. So she came and we talked and joked. She brought all her brothers and everything.

BOY NO. 1: A lot of them were surprised to find that I lived in a better house than they did. I almost got into a fight one day over this visiting bit. I asked _____ about would he invite me over for a visit. He said, "No!" And I asked, "Why not?" He said, "Going to school is okay, but that's the limit." I said, "What do you mean?" At first I was joking around because I didn't expect him to invite me to his house. But I said, "I'll tell you what I'll do. I'll come over and pretend like I'm cutting the hedges and I'll go around the back and come in the back door." (LAUGHTER) Well, we got serious about it and he said he just couldn't invite me to his house. So I said, "Well, I invite you to come to my house anytime you want." He said, "I won't do that either." And I said, "Well, why not?" He finally said, "Let's face it, a spade is a spade." I swear I almost hit him. I was mad. I stopped the conversation and walked away right there. If I had said anything else I would have hit him. Ooooh! (LAUGHTER)

GIRL NO. 2: You see, a lot of things start off joking around and digging about race and stuff and then it suddenly gets serious. They sometimes do things just to see my reactions; and I try to keep them to myself. They once in a while come up behind me and say, "Boo! I'm a segregationist."

BOY NO. 1: I think actually some of them are trying to make fools of us. They make a joke out of race and are grinning and laughing at us. It's not a joke. But I don't get sucked in, I know what it is. I go along, because I go out of my way to make somebody happy. But I tell them, I know what's going on and nobody's pulling the wool over me.

GIRL NO. 1: We were sitting in class one day and a boy said, "White for the right." I said, "What makes you say that?" He said, "Don't take me seriously. I'm only fooling." But he wasn't laughing or even smiling.

BOY NO. 1: Sometimes we come back from a weekend and talk about girls and stuff. Then we have a regular conversation. Then sometimes it goes back to joking about race like, "Hey, nigger boy, c'mere and shine my shoes." And then I joke right back.

GIRL NO. 2: One day in the school bus we were going on a trip. Most of us got in the front and the white kids were in the back. And someone said, "Hey, isn't it supposed to be the other way around?"

GIRL NO. 1: Then some of them really express how they feel, and they don't hide it from us. I like them better because you know what to expect from them. Like there's one boy, he'll tell you he likes the governor and believes in the governor. He says it in a joking way but he means it. He's telling the truth and you know what to expect from him.

GIRL NO. 3: There's a problem when you talk about the society again. I have a close white friend. She was in camp with me, and camp is different y'know; we were tight together there. I was thinking of inviting her down here but I can't because our society wouldn't accept her here. And I can't go to her society because she lives with white folks . . . I guess that's right because she is white folk. (LAUGHTER) You have to be in an area where you can be accepted together. It's not like that down here. That's what's wrong, and it'll take time, a long time, to change.

Reflections on School Integration: II.

(This is a transcript of an hour and one-half session with seven Negro youngsters who desegregated and are attending a predominantly white school in the Deep South. All students are in the ninth through twelfth grades. 8/66)

QUESTION: Who made the decision for you to go to a white school and how was it made? What were the first days like?

GIRL No. 1: Well, last year we got these applications to fill out, it was a freedom of choice thing, and you chose the school that you wanted to go to the next year. I chose to go because I felt that I could get a better education here. I knew that the school that I was then attending wasn't giving me exactly what I should have had. We needed more materials and things there that we didn't have. As far as the Science Department was concerned, it just didn't have the chemicals we needed and I just decided to change. When I went over the students there weren't very friendly and when I graduated they still weren't. They didn't want us there and they made that plain, but we went there anyway and we stuck it out. The lessons there were harder, lots harder, but I studied and I managed to pass all my subjects. I had the most trouble in Physical Education, that's where we'd play games. They'd get dirty in the games and try to hurt us. I was outside one day, as a typical example; we were playing and the teacher had gone inside. The boys started calling names and I tried to ignore them, I had been instructed to do so by my parents. I tried to ignore them, but you know there's only so much you can take. So when they called me nigger or black nigger, well I just called them yellow nigger or something back. And that just leads from one word to another and pretty soon we had a pretty heated argument started and, you know, I just tried to forget it, just forget that they were talking, ignore them again. That's when they started throwing green pecans, they were on the trees there. I reported it to the teacher and she acted as if it wasn't anything. I went and reported it to the principal and he said, like the Governor said a long time ago, "Do it like you do it with mud, you let it dry and it will shake off better." He always had some slogan like this to say to us. I would always get into a lot of trouble in P.E. but I don't think that I would get into the trouble really, the trouble would come to me. They'd always start something, throwing something at me, or calling me names. In Physical Education, I was the only Negro in their class. It was a class of three grades, kids out of the tenth, eleventh and twelfth grades. And everytime I reported something to the teacher she acted as if it wasn't anything, so then I just started hitting them back if they hit me. One day this girl and I started throwing books, she hit me with a book and I picked it up and I hit her back, then she threw a purse and I picked it up and threw it back, and everything she threw I hit it back. Then the next thing the P.E. teacher heard about it and called us into the shower room, and I don't think this other girl liked that. So we went into the shower room and she talked to us and she told me that I brought a lot of these things on myself and she talked as if it was my fault that the girl hit me. Well, I told her that I didn't think it was my fault. She got real angry with me that day and at the end of that six week period I had a D. I got a D. in P.E., the easiest subject there was; when I got an A in Biology for the same six weeks, and B in Chemistry and like this.

GIRL No. 2: One of our worst problems was the lunch system. Our cooks were very rough; I would go through the lunch line and they would fix my food up sloppy. We reported this to some of the people in the community and they talked with the principal about it. One of my other problems was that my history teacher would call on me to read mostly all the time, and because I couldn't read very well the children would laugh. Everytime I would call on someone to read the class would laugh. The teacher would go out of the class almost everyday so the kids could call on me and have fun on me. One of the other problems was my English teacher; he would make jokes up about me and some of the other students said that he made jokes up about them. I decided to go because I had no experience with going to school with white children before and a few of my friends were doing it so I decided I would too.

GIRL No. 3: I made my decision to go for one main reason, even though I was kind of popular at my old school. Most of the children who were valedictorian or salutatorian at the old school went to college. They had to study very hard and some of them couldn't even pass their entrance examination. I decided I wanted to go to college after I finished high school, so what I wanted to do was go to a school so I could get the proper education so when I went to college I wouldn't be embarrassed by my fellow students who thought I was so smart. That was the reason I made this decision to go to a white school and I think that is my main reason for going. After I got there I wasn't a bit surprised at the attitude of the students there because it had been said before that these kids are absolutely wild. They wouldn't listen to the principal and wouldn't mind the teachers and I wasn't a bit surprised. I was kind of prepared for some of the incidents that happened. Really, I didn't know how I would take being called a Nigger because I had never been called a Nigger before. I just didn't know how I would take it. I couldn't tell anybody I wouldn't hit anybody when they called me Nigger. But after I got over there and had been called a Nigger about a thousand times during the first six-week period I'd feel a burning inside, and after the third six-week period I'd get over this burning inside, but really a Nigger still seems kind of like insulting to me. Anyway I got over being called a Nigger but I didn't get over being hit with paper. I just couldn't take that. I had one very mild and calm teacher. Well one reason I say this was he didn't want me to tell him anything out loud and I had to be sure to go back and whisper to him if I was telling him anything about the students. One day I had to call him and tell him the students were hitting me with paper and but he didn't hear, so I called to him louder and he answered, but he still didn't make any mention of the kids throwing paper. I also heard that all the children had to do was get used to you and they would get better, but toward the end of the school term instead of getting better they were getting worse. I would say that the reason for this was because at the beginning of the school term the principal was really rough and tight on them but he began to slack up on them and they began to get like they were the year before. Well, we went to the graduation and there were incidents at the graduation, and it was just like the students said. The principal wouldn't take anything serious; everything would go so calm with him. He would make some joke about it or have some kind of slogan or motto to make about every incident. My sister was in that one incident and we went to the office and I think that was pretty serious, blood on the coats and shirts and everything and he took it so calmly. He told us that everything would pass over easy, well, we just could leave it there. Well, we could see that he wanted to rest there, because he said that that would be the end of it. But later he decided he wanted to go further because he called the superintendent's office, but he didn't know who was in the superintendent's office and that's why he got into it, because some men from Washington were down asking questions and going on and they came right over to the situation. But, in all, I think I got what I was going there for, even if it was only for one year. I think if I was sent back to school this year I don't think it would do any good because what I wanted to go there for would be the whole three years, tenth, eleventh, and twelfth grades. I think that's the only way it would help me in college. I did get a great deal of what I was going for. The lessons are harder, especially our English and Literature. The school is better than the old school, for instance, the library and the typing room. They have more typewriters and more books in the library; you could double it from the school we went to before. In the home economics classroom they have more machines; and this is another place that we found that we were discriminated against. Our home economics teacher would have the new machines on one side of the room and the old on the other side, and would put us into groups to let us use the old machines and the white girls use the new ones. And in cooking she would always give out the recipes and stuff and we would always get the small amount. And she would separate us into three groups so that the three Negro girls were in the same group together. In the lunch room we had trouble also. Near the end of the school term a girl's plate was shattered with something a boy threw in it. The principal just looked at that and I think just passed it over. Anyway it was a great experience for me and I think all the other children that went.

GIRL NO. 4: Well, I decided to go because I figured that I could get a better education there and there would be better facilities for me than at the other school I went to. When I started it seemed as though it was going to be pretty nice. At least the first day the students and instructors were pretty friendly, but after about two weeks of school trouble began for me. The first of the week I just ignored everything as I had been instructed to do, but one day about the last of the week I was hit in my back by a rubber band. I turned around and I didn't see anything, everyone looked so innocent. There were two Negro girls sitting in back of me so I asked them "Who hit me?" and they told me the boy who hit me. I hit him back, and it went on. We were going to a pep rally, and the pep rally was pretty nasty, for me at least, because the students were throwing spit balls around, shooting rubber bands that would hit you in the back, and sailing airplanes in the bleachers. They were at the top of the bleachers and they would sail things down that would hit you in the back of the head and everything. The instructors were down there but they were acting like nothing was going on, so we just ignored it. I missed school on Monday because the busses that had been picking us up at our home had been stopped because of the man that lived next door to us. He owned the land and said the bus was travelling over his private property, so we didn't go to school because the bus didn't come for us. But Tuesday I was in school, and after lunch I was going to my class and one of the students shot me and hit me in my back with a rubber band, so I turned around and hit him back. I went to my classroom and approximately fifteen minutes after I got into the classroom the principal came and asked the instructor if he could speak to me. So after I went into the office I found that this boy that I hit was in the office too. The principal asked me if I hit this boy, and I said yes. Then he asked me why and I told him why — all the trouble that I had had with this boy in the beginning — and so he asked this boy had he had any trouble out of me. This boy said no, he had never seen me before. I knew that that was untrue because I was an unusual person over there, he would have noticed me before just because of the color of my skin and all. Another way I found out he was telling a story is that I had hit this boy back once before and then he still told the principal that he had never seen me before. So the principal told me that it was settled, and I went back to my classroom. The next day at school I was called out of my classroom during the first period and we went to the counseling room. They told me that they wanted to talk to me and wanted me to tell them what happened. So I told them and they wanted to know whether I was telling the truth. They also wanted to know whether I was being paid to do the things that I did — such as go to that school — and was I being informed by anyone to do those things. I told them no. They were also recording the things I said on a tape recorder. All the other Negro students were called in and they were taped too about this incident and asked if they knew about this boy hitting me and anything. Some of the students said no but they knew about them being hit themselves; well, they told them that that wasn't the point. And so they told me first period that it was settled, but third period I was called into the office again. I went into the office and the principal told me that I was suspended by him for five days and he said after that it was out of his hands, but it might be further suspended by the board of education. So after my five day suspension was up I thought I would come back to school, but I never did, not during that semester. As I was leaving the office there was a deputy standing there; as I started to go down the hall he said, "Hey," so I just kept on walking because my name wasn't hey. He said come and go with me for you are under arrest. I said for what. He said for assault and battery. I said who was the arrest made by and all and he told me. So I went along and stayed all night in jail; my parents tried to get me out but they failed; it wasn't possible for them to do so. At first they were not going to let my parents sign the bond, then they were going to let people who were eligible sign the bond. So my parents went home and they were back early next morning and they got me out of jail. I had to go on trial too so the lawyer that we got told us that we would have to go on trial. When the day of the trial came and we went into the courthouse, the counselor said that there wouldn't be any need of going through a trial since my main point was getting back into school. So they didn't have the trial and I thought I was going to get back into school pretty soon, and my mother kept trying to catch up with the superintendent. My mother made several trips to his office but never could get in touch with the superintendent to find out when I was going to go back to school. He never was there, and she also make an appointment but he wasn't there at the time of the appointment. So by this time it was near the end of November, I think, the first of December, when a man from Washington came and interviewed me. He told me that I would get back to school pretty soon and I was informed by the superintendent of the school that I could come back in school in January. He said there wouldn't be any need of me coming in the first semester because I wouldn't get any grades for it. So I started school January 3rd and tension was high there. The students were still yelling and everything and some of the instructors were pretty nasty but some of them were pretty nice. This typing instructor was real bad. When my books would be misplaced or put in the trash can and I would ask her about them she would say you should keep them in your own place, I'm not responsible for them. I couldn't even turn my back and some of my books were missing and moved. I'd have to go around the room and she doesn't even know anything about it. For an example, one day I was carrying my books to the room and I had to go out. When I came back my books were gone and my bag also. I didn't say anything, I asked her if I could go to the office. She said is it important and I said yes it is, and she said well what do you want. I said I want my books and she said oh, your books, I think they are in the trash can. She left the room before the class period was all done and I assumed that she had gone to the office, because by the time the bell sounded and I went to the principal's office the principal was already informed about what happened. He said you'll just have to ignore those things, the best way to solve the problem is to ignore those things. That was his usual saying. So, some more incidents that I had in typing was that everytime I would come in the room the typewriter would have a staple in the machine or my desk would have powder from the eraser. I went back to the principal and he must have called the instructor about it because it didn't happen any more. Another incident I had after I got back in school was a terrible fight I had. I was getting off the bus and one of the guys hit me in the face and of course I got off the bus behind him and he just turned, that's what he said. But he later changed it and said that I pushed him and so that's why he hit me. I went into the office myself, and the principal had to send for this boy. When he got into the office he acted like he still wanted to fight me and wanted to jump on me then. The principal had to talk to him and then sent him out for a few minutes to get control of himself but I still was in the office telling him what happened. When this boy came back he told his side of the story and the principal asked him what he called me. He told him he wouldn't like to repeat what he said so the principal told him that he knew what he said anyway. Well, I wanted to call my mother but the principal insisted that I shouldn't call my mother because he didn't want any trouble aroused. If it was, he said, it probably would be in Washington by tomorrow that I called my mother. I said I still wanted to call my mother because the first time that I got in trouble things were done over her head and she didn't know anything about it. I said that I just insist that I call my mother. He said no don't call her so I didn't call my mother. So about third period the superintendent and two men from Washington were there and they interviewed all of us and asked what had happened. So this time both of the students were suspended for three days. Those were about the worse incidents that I had, after that I still decided that I would go back because it had been a great experience.

Boy No. 1: Well, when they gave out the choice to decide on which school you would go to I decided I would go because I would get a better education. When school opened a group of us went over there into the auditorium and we stayed in there for a while until they made out the forms and things for which class we were going to go to. Our teacher was always calling on us when we wouldn't have our hands up, and when we did have our hands up she wouldn't call on us, when we'd take them down that's when she would call on us. And then one morning in our first period class, my friend was at his desk, and she called him up in front of the class, trying to embarrass him. He had soap on his face that couldn't come off good and she told him that he had soap on his face and that he hadn't washed his face. Well they'd make remarks about him and laugh at him. And then he went and took his seat. And when we'd be in P.E. class the coach wouldn't be there, he had boys lead the class. We would be playing football. Every day they'd tell the boys to try to hurt us and knock us down and they would do it. One of them would pretend to act nice and tell them not to do it, but he didn't mean it anyway and this other one would tell them to keep on. So one day, we was playing football and this one boy hit me and I hit him back and then I wouldn't play football no more that day. I told him that I wanted to go see the coach and he told me to run five laps around, and I ran five laps, and then he took me to the coach's office. He wasn't in so he told me to come back and run the rest of the period and I wouldn't run. He told me that if I didn't run he was going to whup me and I told him he wasn't going to whup me and I wasn't going to run. The period was nearly up then so we changed classes and he told me to come back the next day. So I went back the next day and then he asked me what I had to tell him. I told him that I didn't have nothing to tell him today since he didn't want to listen to what I had to say yesterday. So then when my card came up I had an F in P.E.

Boy No. 2: Well, I thought I would get a better education here and learn more. The first day I went here and I had trouble with the teachers. She would call on me all the time and when I wouldn't be ready she would call on me. Like if I had a test or something, six week test or something like that, she would get some of the dumbest children to grade my paper and they would put anything down. And when the children made a mistake she said that she couldn't do anything about it, so I just left them alone until the next day. They kept giving me F's on my paper when I made a B or something like that, so I went and told the principal. He said that he had to look into it, so he looked into it and told the teacher that from now on she's suppose to grade the paper. And then another problem I had was when I was going to the lunch room after I got my arm broken playing P.E. You see my arm was broken and I couldn't pick up nothing with one hand. When she gave me something I didn't want she'd say get what I give you and go ahead on. And when I see the white kids get in they say to her that they don't want that and she doesn't give it to them. When I sit down, sometimes I would be the only one in there and they'd throw cups and everything. Once when I was with a group of other Negroes someone threw something in a girl's plate next to me and I went and told the principal. He stood up and that next afternoon those boys who I told on trailed me all the way home and stopped me and asked me why I told on their friend. I said because I wanted to and they pulled out a knife and said if you tell again we gonna cut your neck off, and then I just went off. And then the next day they started saying that's the nigger that I'm going to cut his head off and all that. I went and told the principal and he said there was nothing he could do about it. Everyday when I come home they follow me and try to run me off the road or something like that.

Girl No. 5: I went because I knew that the curriculum was greater and they had more equipment and better facilities. When I first went I had trouble with Physical Ed; I was the only Negro in that class because I was the only Negro in my grade. When I was playing, the teacher, the coach would tell the P.E. instructor that he would let the boys play with the girls. We were playing bombard, and all the boys said they must all try and get the nigger. They would throw the ball and always hit me, so next time I said I wasn't going to play. I went back and sat down on the bleachers and the teacher said for me to go back out there and play. I said that I wasn't going to play because they kept hitting me with the ball too hard. She said that they weren't hitting me any harder than they were hitting the white children. So I went back out there and played and the next thing this white girl hit me real bad. And when we first started school we didn't have a bus to ride, so we had to walk, and my brother would take me in his car. Then his car stopped working then and we had to walk home. And this one evening some boys followed us home and he tried to run over one of my sisters. We told the principal the next day and he said that he couldn't do anything about it. And when we were walking home my mother picked me up and she called these Washington people and they came down and he told me to write a report on it and send it to Washington. I told them about everything but my letter didn't get to Washington because people in the post office did something to it. When these men came back they asked me why I didn't write to them and I told them I did, but they said that they didn't get my letter. I guess they went to the post office and checked on it. They would hold up a lot of our mail and it would never get to us. One day I was walking down the hall and this boy shot me in the back with a rubber band. I went to the office and told the principal. He asked me who did it, and I said that there were lots of kids walking behind me and I didn't know. He said that there wasn't anything he could do about it. When we went to court and I had to testify about this girl who stuck this boy with a pencil, I told him that I didn't know anything about that but that they had shot me. He said he didn't ask me about that and he had asked me about this girl and this other boy. And one day I was the only person in my class and this boy threw a pencil and it hit me. This policeman's boy was picking up these pencils and crayons and handing it to this boy. He threw and he hit me and I told the teacher. She asked me if it hurt and I said no, but this boy shouldn't have hit me with it anyway. She said well, just forget about it then. When I was going to study hall this boy was throwing rocks at me and this other girl. This Negro girl was already in the study hall and they locked me out of the class and she couldn't open the door. When we got in there they started throwing rocks and crayons at us. I told the teacher and she went back there, and they all started laughing, and she was laughing with them. And then they went outside and they brought more rocks and they started throwing them.

QUESTION: Are the teachers at your new school any different, any better or worse, than at your old school?

GIRL NO. 5: I think the teachers at the new school are worse than the ones at the Negro school because they don't give you exactly what you make. At the Negro school they don't give you exactly what you make either, but they're worse here. If you make a good grade they'll give you a bad grade and if you make a bad grade then they still give it to you. But they also make it lower and they don't treat you equally. When something happens they put it all on us and they don't do anything about it. They do stay in their room longer but when something happens they still don't know about it because they don't try to find out about anything. At the old school the teachers stayed out of the room more, but still if you tell them about something they do something about it. But here they just don't treat us equally because we are Negroes and the other children are white.

GIRL NO. 1: Well, I don't know what teachers are the best but I know the teachers over at the old school, some of them, do the best of their ability. They teach us what they can, some of them, and the white teachers over here are better educated and they have better ability to teach us than some of the Negro teachers. That's the only way that I can say that the teachers are better at the white school than at the Negro school. The grading system was that if you make a high grade, like if you made an A you would get an A. But over here you would get a B, and if you made a B you might get a D minus or an F. I know in one class that I thought I got a B and this one teacher always gave me C's, and I improved in my class but still the highest mark in that class was a C minus.

BOY No. 2: Well, I think the teachers are worse here because they don't give you what you make. When you have a test one teacher gives some of the students your paper to grade and then she would go over it and she would take off for spelling. I had a teacher who was real nice; she helped you out with your lesson and if they was bothering you she would make them stop and punish them. She would give you what you make, and if you didn't make it then she would help you out and give you a few points to make you pass.

GIRL No. 4: I think the teachers at the white school are better than the ones at the Negro school because they teach you better and they do stay in the classroom.

GIRL No. 5: I think its hard to say which teachers are better because teachers here and at the old school both have their bad points. For that matter at any Negro or white school they all have some good points and some bad points. The teachers at the Negro school could teach more than they do, but like it has been said, they don't spend enough time in their classroom. When they do they're not teaching a lot of the time. They're often doing their monthly report instead of teaching us. And as far as incidents are concerned here, if something happens in the classroom most time it goes unnoticed unless the white students get the worse end of it. But at the old school incidents are always given the best consideration and both parties usually go to the office and get it settled. But the teachers at the white school see it different, and only the Negroes go to the office if the white person gets hurt bad enough to report it.

GIRL No. 3: It is kind of hard to compare the teachers at the school because each has their bad points. I think at the old school the teachers would do better if they'd get more education and more facilities and equipment to work with. They don't have these things and just don't care. I think that they would prefer to be in the lounge. And at the white school they do stay in the room more. I had a few just teachers over here, about two, that would give you just what you make. They really were better teachers, especially, as I said before, in English; they had more materials because they would send out for these work books and they could explain the lessons better than the Negro teachers. But as far as their personalities was concerned the teachers at the old school were the best and I think everybody should know that and the reason for that. But there are some things that can improve at the Negro school I went to, because I think they'd do better if the teachers had stricter rules they would go by. But at this school now we went a great deal further in our books than we did in the former Negro school I went to.

QUESTION: How did the Negro community react to your going to a previously all-white school?

GIRL NO. 2: I think the Negro people in our community gave us quite a deal of encouragement because when our house was bombed they really went in and helped us a great deal. But I guess you can see there the whites' attitude from our house getting bombed; they weren't too cooperative in our going to the white school. But the Negro people were really cooperative because when we had problems in school they got a civic leader and went together and formed this committee to go and see the principal at school about some incidents that happened in the lunch room and that really improved.

GIRL NO. 4: Well, the Negro people in my home community didn't seem as if they were at all for it. They would say that we aren't ready to be with the white people yet; we should stay and try and get ourselves together first before we try and get with somebody else; integrate the Negro first is what they were saying. But here in this town there were a lot of people who gave me a lot of encouragement and the encouragement enabled me to go on and graduate and be the first Negro girl to graduate from a previously all-white school. They were very nice to me because I had a very hard time getting to school and I had to catch ways of getting to school. The people in this community drove me to school and then I could catch the Negro school's bus back. But in my community they weren't at all for it, and now that I've graduated they still say I don't see any good that you've done, any reason why you went there. Talking about my graduation, everything inside went fine but after I stepped out the door after the line marched out somebody hit me with a raw egg and the egg slid down my gown. I didn't know what to do then. I didn't want to run because they would say that I was afraid but I should have, I just stood there. I just had to think and get myself together and then I walked around to the car and waited to meet my mother, but she got mixed up and went to the wrong door looking for me. So I went to the car and she saw what had happened so she, my father, and my aunt took the robe to the principal and the senior advisor and showed it to them so they couldn't say that I just said it happened. They saw what was on the robe and he said I sure do hate it that that happened, that's all he could say, the principal, we sure are sorry about that. Commencement exercises, well, things weren't too bad; a man from the Health, Education and Welfare Department in Washington drove me to the exercises. He was waiting at the door of my dressing room to get me, and he and my mother and this white lady who's working with group desegregation were waiting for me. I didn't have any trouble getting out of there.

GIRL NO. 1: The Negroes in my community didn't have too much to do with it but the whites would ask the older heads of the community who was the girl. I don't think that they ever found my house, but no one would tell them who it was. But they were picketing my uncle's house because that was where I caught the bus. My uncle stays at the end of the road from my house, and my house is sort of back up in the hills. That's why they never found my house. And the whites would watch the bus every morning when I went to school, and this man who runs the store, he would watch the bus every morning and I would turn my head so he couldn't see me.

BOY NO. 1: Well, in my community the people was all for me going to the white school, but in other parts of town they would say we shouldn't be going over there and they would be frightened to send their children because they would be afraid that their house would get burned, or bombed, or either they would hurt their children. So they wouldn't send them over there. But even though in my community they was all for me going, only a few still sent their children to the white school.

GIRL NO. 2: Well, in comparing the opinions of the two races the Negroes in my community gave me a lot of encouragement but still they didn't want to send their children. They would want to wait until the barriers were broken down, and then I think they would send their children. But yet they thought it was nice that I was going and they hoped that I didn't have any trouble. That was in the community where I stayed, but the people in the city and around here gave me a lot of encouragement and also helped and also tried to do things like having us get to school and helping us solve problems that arose. The white people, well, they stopped speaking and just looked at you real hard and they didn't say anything. And as I said we had hard stares and they stopped speaking to us, like we had committed a crime, I guess.

BOY NO. 2: Well the colored people in my community, well some of the colored anyway, the Uncle Toms, would tell me to stay in my place and they weren't going to sit near us over there and get throwed at and called Nigger. The white people would pass by at night and throw bombs like the fourth of July. One time a carload of white people passed by and throwed a cherry bomb up on the house and this scared us.

GIRL NO. 5: Well, people in my neighborhood didn't like my going cause they said that I was just trying to be popular and the white school wasn't any better than the Negro school. They said that the Negro was the newest school. They said that our house was going to be burned and the Ku Klux Klan was going to get us and lots of people was going to get killed. They wasn't going and didn't want those people coming in their neighborhood. Our house did get burned, and when it did people said that's what I told you was going to happen. And when I'd come home from school the children would come up to me and ask me, well, who did you get into a fight with today? What white girl did you beat up? And who's your white boyfriend? They never did try to help us, all they did was try to get funny. They would ask well, who rode the Negro bus yesterday, you just ride your white bus and stay off our bus. There aren't many more people going to the white school this year, and there's only two going; the others stayed up at the Negro school.

GIRL NO. 1: The only trouble we were having was the first day the bus

brought us home. Our mother carried us to school that morning but the bus brought us back that afternoon. The next week this man in front of us told us that he didn't want the bus coming over on his property even though the Negro bus had been coming over it for two years and he hadn't mentioned it. He said this bus, because it was supposed to be a white bus, was destroying his land. So we had to meet the bus out the road after that, it was about a mile and a half out there. We had quite a few incidents on the bus, like throwing paper. We sat in the front of the bus because he said we would be more protected because we would be sitting closer to the bus driver and it would be safer for us to sit in the front seat. But I think that was just another disadvantage because we couldn't see behind us and we was just a target up there in front. The bus driver couldn't keep his eyes in the mirror all the time because he had to watch the road. He was a nice bus driver and everything but he was quite nervous, and when he got mad he really got nervous, and he would drive all across the road. But he was real good and tried to help us solve our problems, because he carried some of the children to the office. After the white children get off we was just afraid and we was just the first ones that got on. It kind of improved from the first term on the bus, it kind of improved.

GIRL NO. 4: Well, at the beginning of the school year the bus driver was an old white friend of my family and he was very nice, but some of the white kids made a report that he couldn't control the children. So they took him off and they put a horrible bus driver on.

QUESTION: How was he horrible?

GIRL NO. 4: Well, she never did bother the kids when they bothered me but she just would say that she wished that these Niggers would get a bus of their own or something like that.

GIRL NO. 1: Well, the first day of school I rode the formerly all-white bus and it wasn't any trouble at all for me. Well, in about two weeks we had to walk to the road because the bus was transporting over private property. The Negro bus had been going over it for two years and I don't see how the white bus could have been doing any more damage to the property than the Negro bus, unless it, the reason it was doing damage, was that it was better than the Negro bus. So in other words, we had to walk to the road. They stopped both busses and we had to walk to the road and ride it.

QUESTION: Do you trust white people more or less now that you've been to school with them?

GIRL NO. 5: Well, I trust white people less now because you can never tell about them. They try and act friendly but when they get behind your back they'll start talking and they'll stretch everything you said farther and they'll add more to it and they'll take it around until it gets to their parents. Then the parents will take it to their friends and their friends might be Ku Klux Klan. You can't hardly say much to the white students because they are slick and sly and you can't hardly trust them.

BOY NO. 2: Well, I don't trust white people either because you may think that they are being friendly but come to think of it they are not. In other words, when you get around them they'll be friendly, but if a white person is with me and then we see a group of other white people and they see him with me, they will call him a Nigger lover. So you be thinking that he'd be a friend and the white people get mad; so he just quit being friends. Sometimes he'd be friendly and sometimes he won't.

GIRL NO. 4: Well, I trust white people less, because since I've been around them I am more familiar with them and their ways. The only thing I knew about white people was when they came around they would be friendly and all that. When I started school some of those people who I thought would be friendly looked like they were my worst enemies. Everytime they smiled in your face they were just trying to get some information, that's all, and when they get that they are gone and they are just like any other white person. Therefore, I trust them less.

BOY NO. 1: Well, I don't trust white people at all, because they'll pretend that they are your friend and when you turn your back then they'll hit you and call you some silly name. They'll turn their back and pretend that they don't know nothing about it.

GIRL NO. 1: I trust white people less because there was this white lady that my mother knew and she had promised to send my sister to college, but after I attended the white school she wouldn't have anything to do with my mother.

GIRL NO. 2: Well, I trust white people less now than I did before and it's just that you can't be sure about them. You can't be sure where you stand with them ever. Some of them will smile in your face, and some of them really mean it, I think, but they don't want any other white person seeing them talk to you because they are afraid that they'll be called Nigger lover or something. Then, too, there are very few Negroes now that you can trust.

GIRL NO. 3: Well, I don't know whether I'd trust them less or more than I did before because the white people in our community wasn't really close with us but you really found out what the white people's attitude was by going to school with them. I don't trust too many white people and I don't think that they trust me either. For instance, I don't say anything to them. Like this teacher asked me one question but to get the whole information she had to ask me five more and that really made her mad with me. I wouldn't tell them anything but yes and no and sometimes not that. But you really know how to act more intelligent around a white person if you are with them every day. I think some Negroes just get excited when they are around a white and they laugh in his face, and at his little funny jokes, and at what he says. He can give you the twinkle in his eye so that it makes Negroes go crazy. Well, I think you really find out when you go to a white school that when I see one do that it makes me mad instead of friendly. I know that now I get madder quicker with a white person since I went to this school. You really find out his attitude; you know that he didn't mean anything he says because he smiles at you one minute and he's ready to cut your neck off the next. So it really makes you mad when you really find out about him. They really try to take advantage of you with their smiles and their funny words, they really try to take advantage of you.

QUESTION: Are the white kids in your classes as smart as you thought they were?

GIRL NO. 3: On that question, I was really surprised as I went to the white school. They say, "Oh, the Negroes are so dumb," but I really found out that the Negroes are not really dumb at all. If they really had the chance and opportunities they would be a lot smarter than the white children because the white children who went to that school ever since the first grade I had caught up with in the first six weeks I went there. Now I was kind of backward on some subjects, like math, because the only time I took that I was in seventh grade and I had a hard time with math. But in all my other subjects I caught up with most of the white children and passed them in the first six weeks. And I was so surprised with the white children that made F's, and they would be thinking that the teachers were so hard. Most of the children hated my English teacher because she was hard and I think a great many more white children made F's than I did. They really get hot with you when you get ahead of them and I really had lots of trouble with that because I was smarter than most of them, most of the other children in my room, especially in the tenth grade. I don't know about other grades, but I do feel that the white race is not smarter than the Negro. If the Negro kids had the opportunity and would get down to it and work for it the Negro race could get up with the white race any time.

GIRL NO. 1: Well, before I went to the white school I always did think that the white person was smarter than we were. I used to think that they were just born smarter, just because they were white, but I found out this year that this isn't true. There were a lot of them who had more trouble than I had in getting their lesson and they had been in this school and in this situation, maybe not in the same situation, but they had been around their friends and their teachers for eleven years before then. Some of them couldn't do half as good as I could, and I don't see how some of them even graduated. They failed some subject and took an extra subject, and make D's in that subject and they still passed. I just don't understand it. I think that may be the reason we think that we aren't as smart as they are because they've made us feel like we don't know anything.

GIRL NO. 4: I feel that they made us feel that we don't know anything because they always keep us in the kitchen or on the yard or on the farms.

They never have made us feel like we should be anything; never made me feel like anything.

GIRL No. 4: Before I went to the white school I had a feeling that white students were smarter than I; I don't know why, maybe I heard that white people are so smart. But after I went to school with them I learned that the white students really aren't as smart as we are. Comparing the chance that the Negro has had and the chance that the white has had they aren't as smart as the Negro. If the Negro had had the same opportunity as the white has had I would say that they would be smarter than the white. But as it stands the Negro is just as smart as the white if he really gets right down to it.

QUESTION: Why do you think it is that some white people don't want you to go to school with them?

GIRL No. 5: I think they don't want us over here because they have better equipment and they have more facilities and things and they know that we can catch on real fast. When we catch on then we can get better jobs and we will be up with them and maybe we'll pass them. Like they want us under them now and they want to be over us; later on in the future we might be over them and they'd be under us and they are afraid of that.

GIRL No. 1: Well I think it's just a deeply rooted custom in their bones that the Negroes are and should be under them. I guess when they brought our foreparents from Africa they just don't ever think we'd be compared with them. It's hard to get in their heads that the Negro will be equal to them one day.

GIRL No. 2: I think that the whites don't want us to be in school with them because they think or have read in the Bible that one day a black nation will rise up from the East and conquer the world. I think that they think that we might be that black nation. And I think that they think that we think we might be that black nation.

GIRL No. 4: The only reason that I can see is that they think that we will excell over them. They don't understand the Negro and naturally when you don't understand something you're afraid of it. They are afraid of us and don't want us with them. They're afraid of what we can do if we just get what they have—you know the opportunities they have, the facilities they have—just think what we could do.

GIRL No. 3: I think the whites don't want us at the white school because after we get through telling them all our business and doing everything that they want us to do, if we are not doing that then they don't understand it. And if we're not working in the kitchen or in the yard, and if we get up and want an education, well, they just don't understand this. They just won't know what else we'll be wanting to do after we get over here so they really don't want us over here to find out. They want us to stay in our place and they don't want us to get out of our place; they think our place is in their yard or their kitchen or something like that.

QUESTION: What do you think about Negro fellows being drafted to serve in the army in Vietnam?

GIRL NO. 3: Well, that is a confusing subject, but I know that the Negro is improving in the United States, he's getting more now than he has been getting, and I think that if a person is getting what he's supposed to, if he's being treated fairly, he's supposed to help defend his country. Say, for instance, if a parent is feeding a child in a house and is giving the child the correct amount of food and not neglecting it, the child should be able to help defend the household. He should help do the things around the household and obey his parents and I think that's the way it is with the Negro being drafted into the army. I wouldn't say it would have been fair a while back, but if the Negro really gets what he should in America, then he should help defend his country. On the same subject I think that they should give the Negro more than they are now. For instance they are helping the Vietnamese people and those people aren't even in America. They should spend all the money they are spending, as Senator Kennedy said, on the Negro people to help them improve their race. I do think that they should be giving them more than they are now.

GIRL NO. 1: I think that the Negro should be drafted into the army as well as the white man. I mean the Negro is living in this country and he's just beginning to get some of the things he's supposed to have and he should want to fight for his country. But that's not enough, because the Negro people have been behind for so long in this country that they should draft all the white people and let us catch up. (LAUGHTER)

GIRL NO. 3: Well, you have to look at it both ways. For a long time the Negro has been deprived of opportunities that should have been given to him a long time ago. If he couldn't go to a restaurant and eat here in America then he shouldn't go somewhere else and fight for his country. But if he's going to fight for his country then he should be able to eat where he wanted and sit anywhere he wanted. I think he should defend his country if it's necessary, but I think he should be defended in his country also before he goes to try and help defend people outside of his country.

BOY NO. 1: Well, I don't think the Negro should be drafted. The white people want to rule the world and I think they should go and draft all the white people if they want to rule the world.

GIRL NO. 5: I think that the Negro should be drafted into the army, because it's like when you go to school, you have to participate in the activities. The army is like activity and he should participate in it. He should because he's fighting for his country and if he don't fight then they might say that its not his country. He should go into the army and prove to them that it is his country. He should go and fight.

QUESTION: What kind of reactions do you think white teachers would get from predominantly Negro schools?

GIRL NO. 5: I think that if a white teacher went to the Negro school that we would have to give them the best courtesy. We would have to respect them, probably more than we did the colored people. I guess because the teacher would go back and say that we were ignorant, the principal would probably be saying that we would have to respect them and show our courtesy and show how intelligent we are because they go back and tell these other people. Probably if a colored teacher goes to the white school then they treat this teacher the same way.

BOY No. 2: Well, if a white teacher came then they would have a great respect for them. They won't holler and they will be saying Yes Ma'am and all that and the place will be so quiet.

GIRL No. 3: I think that if a white teacher would go to a Negro school they'd be accepted in a bundle of arms, because the Negroes so easily accept a white person. You know Negroes do accept white people quicker than white people accept Negroes. Look at the Negro as a whole, if they hadn't been affiliated with the white man they think they just won't get the white person to like them and they do just anything if they can get them to like them. That's why I think a white teacher would be accepted readily in a Negro school by most students.

GIRL No. 1: I think a white teacher wouldn't be accepted with the students any more than any other instructor. It has been stated that Negroes don't know how to react to white people, but I think as the generation grows older and the students are more familiar with this racial problem that they would know how to react toward her. I think they would react toward her no more than any other teacher.

QUESTION: Do you see, or are you friendly with, your white classmates outside of school?

GIRL No. 5: I received a telephone call when I went to school and this girl asked me to meet them in front of the school. When I went back to school I told the principal about it and they said she hadn't called, that it was somebody playing a joke. When I went to school in Physical Education class this girl wrote me a note and told me to come to a party. I didn't know where so I told her something and then this other girl wrote me a note and told me that they were telling stories, that they weren't having this party. I wouldn't invite a white person to my house unless I trusted them a lot because I wouldn't just invite anybody to my house. They could just be setting a trap by setting a bomb in the house or something, but if it was someone that I knew well and trusted a lot I would.

QUESTION: What are your plans after you finish high school?

GIRL No. 1: Now that I have graduated I plan to enter college in September. I don't know as of yet what my major will be, I'll probably decide that in my second year.

GIRL No. 3: When I finish high school I'm not sure what college I would go to, I'm not decided but I am decided on my career. I want to be a social worker, that's why I want to take up social work in college after I finish high school.

GIRL No. 4: After I finish high school I would like to go to the white college and I would like to major in math and in science.

BOY No. 2: After I finish high school I haven't decided which college I want to go to but I would like to major in Engineering.

GIRL No. 1: I am definitely undecided on what I'd like to be but I have thought about being a social worker in and around the community after I finish school. Lately I've been thinking about the Peace Corps and working in foreign countries.

QUESTION: What do you think it will take for race relations to get better down here?

GIRL No. 1: Well, what I think it would take to improve the condition is more students and integrated faculty and that most Negro students act like they know what they're doing. They should not be afraid and act like they're down to business and then the situation will improve.

GIRL No. 5: I think to make school a better place I think it will take courageous Negro students and some large Negro boys that are big and that has lots of courage, and an integrated faculty, and that's about all I think it would take.

QUESTION: What do you think would happen if more Negro students went to the white school?

GIRL No. 4: I think the situation would be better if more Negro students went because a lot of the students just pick on you because they think they can get by with it. I don't think a student would hit a Negro student if he thought somebody was behind him to give him just that much more. He wouldn't do it even if he thought somebody was behind him that would see him and tell the student who it was.

GIRL No. 1: I think it would be better if more Negro students were at school because, like she said, they would be afraid to bother you if they knew somebody else was with you, if they knew somebody else was with you and on your side and would help you if you needed that help. But like it is now with so many whites, they can just pick on you and there are not enough Negroes to do them enough harm back.

QUESTION: Were you allowed to join any of the organizations this year?

GIRL No. 1: When we got there they already had the cheering squad and the band picked out and they had been practicing during the summer. If you want to do anything you really got to start on it this year, you know sign up this year before and you get on it the next year.

GIRL No. 3: Most of the clubs and organizations they have, most of the students were elected in these clubs and organizations and you know I wouldn't be nominated, not last year anyway. To go back to the question on changes down here I think that depends. Now some of them you can change by nonviolence but some of them you just going to show them that you're going to knock something out of them before they'll let you alone. It just depends on the kind of student it is.

GIRL No. 1: Well, as before stated I think that depends; at first they have to try you and find out what kind of person you are and after they find out what type of person you is well then they will leave you alone. It doesn't matter whether it be violent or nonviolent after they find out what type of person you is.

GIRL No. 3: Referring to Negro students going to white schools, if they want to play they can stay over at the Negro school, but if they want to make the grade they're going to work when they come. If they're ready to work then they can come but if they're ready to play on every football team every game that comes up and every dance, well then they can stay because they give you time to do it.

QUESTION: How have your Negro friends reacted? Have you gone back to see them at school?

GIRL No. 1: Well, some of my friends made a lot of wise cracks like, you know, why don't you go over there and play with your little white boyfriend, are you talking to me, golly. But I don't think they really meant anything, if they were really my friends I'd think that they were, you know, just kidding. Most of them around my age were still nice to me, it was just the adults in my neighborhood that acted real snobbish and everything.

GIRL No. 4: Well, from some of the people I got real encouraging words and that helped me to go on over. In some cases some of the old people that didn't know any better, they felt that we were out of our place. Some cases stated they felt that it was all right. "You can be the first to go on but I wouldn't want my child to go. I think it's nice that you're going and I hope you have a nice time and all."

GIRL No. 5: Around my neighborhood my friends would call me "Cracker," and they would say "go on little white girl" and I would tell them that the color hadn't rubbed off me yet. They'd be telling me to go down the road and play with my white friends and asking me who I was going to the prom with, what white boy was taking me to the prom. And when they see a white boy up the road they'd say come up here and get your girlfriend, here she is and all that.

GIRL No. 4: Everytime I get talking about my experience at the white school something happens to me. I can't really express myself and I can't really tell what happens. It's like I was kind of in a trance. I was just walking around from day to day and doing what I thought I was supposed to do and trying not to do what I wasn't supposed to do. As far as the things that I was studying, I won't know until this year after I enter college whether I really learned them or whether I just memorized them.

GIRL NO. 1: I went away up North and there I attended school. There it's already integrated and everything. I have an inferior complex toward some Negro and some white. While I was there in school, you know when you're down South you don't want to get too close to a white person for fear that they'll turn on you or something and you feel kind of like you got to stay by yourself. When a white person talks to you it kind of strikes you kind of hard. Up there they aren't trying to ask you anything or anything like that. They aren't trying to get any information from you, you are just going to school. But anyway, after I left this school I still felt the same way, that these white children were prejudiced toward me, that they didn't want to be around me, even though they were friendly. I just couldn't get it through my head that they were just being nice without trying to get anything from me.

GIRL NO. 4: I can be a witness to her experience, but it's not only with the whites, it's with Negroes too. I had a greater number of things than many of them—I feel that I don't know who to trust. Sometimes I don't know if someone's being nice and sincere or not. I guess its because when I was out the first semester so many people told me they were trying to get me back in school. The leading people in the community sometimes did things that leave me confused.

Reflections on School Integration: III.

(This is a transcript of an hour and one-half session with five Negro youngsters who desegregated and are attending a predominantly white school in the Deep South. All students are in the tenth through twelfth grades. 8/66)

QUESTION: How did you go about deciding to go to the white school, and what were some of the experiences you had there?

BOY No. 1: I heard it was a better school, and had better equipment and facilities than the Negro school that I was going to.

GIRL No. 1: Well, I understood that you had a chance to get better prepared, a better education than at the Negro school.

BOY No. 2: Not only that, it was a better equipped and higher educated school, an all around better school than the Negro one. My parents asked me if I wanted to go, what did I think about going to this school, and I told them I would like to go and they said I could go.

GIRL No. 1: I wanted to go and decided myself. My parents wouldn't make me go if I didn't want to. But I wanted to and then they let me go.

QUESTION: Did they call you any names?

BOY No. 2: Well not the first day, but later they called us names such as Niggers and all that.

GIRL No. 1: They would stare at you and look at you hard and they wouldn't say too much.

BOY No. 1: Most of the first day if the teachers asked you a question and you answered they mostly laugh.

QUESTION: How were the teachers compared to the teachers you had at the Negro school?

GIRL No. 1: I would say they were more prepared than some of the Negro teachers. I would say that most of them were nice, most of them. Some of them, about two or three, would always make a spectacle of Negroes, you know, would say something about Negroes. Especially one teacher would always try to say something to the kids and they would get a conversation up and all they would do is talk, look back at us and laugh.

BOY No. 1: Yeah, the first day of class I walked in the room and she said, "Have a seat." She said today we have a new student, today, today all day. It was different and that's all.

BOY No. 2: They are not better than Negroes. Most Negroes wear dresses but they are no better here. They may wear better things because they're more able because they've taken all the Negroes' money and stuff from them.

Boy No. 1: Some of the teachers will try to be funny. When they get to a word like Negro, they call it Nigger or else try to make fun. When my father got a ticket for driving or something they talked about that and made wisecracks about it and asked how come they have to pay a ticket and he didn't have to pay out.

Boy No. 3: And again there is the problem of overcrowding classrooms in the Negro school; especially in the seventh grade there'd be about 60 students in the classroom. Over here our home-room teacher got mad at me the day after the election. The children started talking about the election and so we told them that we would have a colored sheriff and all that. We started talking about how many Negroes there were and the black camouflage and he got mad. The next day didn't nobody go to school but me and he told me he didn't want to hear no more about the election and no other kind of party, not in his room.

Boy No. 2: The same day the election was, he brought the same things up in his classroom while I was in it. He wanted to find out who was running for offices and things like that. He wanted to make out that he was now kind of intending to go with the Black Panther movement. And so that's why he is trying to find out everything — he's saying he might want to come down and decide if he'll vote in the party.

Boy No. 3: The history teacher had a little election in her room and the children voted. But we didn't vote because we didn't want to.

Girl No. 2: During the election the children would take stickers and stick them on our seats on the bus and when we got up off the bus they would start clapping their hands and stuff like that.

Boy No. 3: And they would trade their stickers for Black Power or Black Panther stickers.

Boy No. 2: I just gave him one and they would trade them. Except they won't trade with us.

Girl No. 3: In history class it was very bad. There were always conversations going on between the teacher and the students about the Governor and integration and the President and the federal government and all such that. They were talking against the federal government because the government was for integration and like they were talking against integration because they don't see any sense to it. And the teachers was always saying some kind of wisecrack just to hurt your feelings and like that. He was always praising the Governor. The students acted the same as the teacher did in their class; you know, there was always something that they could say and try and hurt my feelings. They said anything, like how they was 'feared of all of us, what they thought of the way things were running about integration, or anything like that. They would come right out and say it, especially in that class, because they knew that nothing could be done to them in that class.

GIRL No. 4: You asked why did I go to the white school. Well, I don't see why I shouldn't go there since we don't have a school that big to attend and they don't have anything in the Negro school for equipment. My parents were getting taxed and they planned to use most of that money in the white school and they get all that equipment. I don't see why I shouldn't go there and get some benefit from it. You know, that's the primary reason for going over there, to get a accurate education. But the students weren't friendly at all and I didn't have any white friends.

QUESTION: What about your friends in school, do you have any white friends in school? Do any of them try to be friendly with you?

BOY No. 3: If they try to be friendly then a gang of them get up and talk to that one and then they try and push him. Then he tries to be funny or smart, too.

BOY No. 2: And, you don't never have anything to say regardless of what he's doing.

BOY No. 1: I was in the bathroom one day and a boy pushed me down, I mean pushed me. He went running down the hall and I went to the principal. I also told you one day I was walking down the hall and a boy tripped me and my friend told the assistant principal. I got tripped and he told the assistant principal and he just didn't do anything about it and when the principal came the assistant told the principal.

BOY No. 2: The assistant just jumped me once and then told the principal that I would have killed him. I didn't want to fight him. He said I told him I'd kill his damn head and was cussing him or something. But I didn't cuss him. He made it much worse the way he told it to the principal. But he's a dirty man anyway. He told my friend straight out, "Nigger you go to the office for chewing gum." Another friend of mine went to this class he taught and she said that he was always trying to bring on all of this stuff about Negroes and stuff just so they could talk against us.

GIRL No. 2: Right after you got tripped in the hall that day I went to the bathroom and a lot of girls was talking. They said "You know this Nigger got knocked down in the hall." And some of them said "Yeah, somebody ought to knock all of them down." And one day, two of them went and told the principal that they were fighting in the hall but he didn't do anything about it. They came in the bathroom and said: "Two of the Negroes were in the hall trying to fight and we told the principal about it but you know he didn't do anything about it, because they are privileged characters, I don't care if I could paint my face black so I could be a privileged character too." Then they started talking, "You know we'll be going to the Negro schools this year" and the other girl said, "Yeah and I'm going to get myself one of those Negro boyfriends too." They didn't know I was there.

QUESTION: How did the principal seem? Did he seem fair toward you?

GIRL No. 1: He was nice.

BOY No. 1: The trouble was he was just as strict on the white children as he was on us.

GIRL No. 2: I think that he was more strict on them than on us.

BOY No. 2: That's what made it worse. See if something happened during the school hour a group of them would go to the office and tell him something, tell something was stolen and try to trip us all up. He didn't know what to believe most times so he just never paid any attention.

QUESTION: How did the teachers at the Negro school react when you told them that you were going to transfer to the white school?

BOY No. 2: Well, we didn't know that we were going to transfer until about the middle of June. We definitely went to register earlier but we didn't know that we were going to transfer until this part of last year. The Negro music teacher over there, he was friendly and he told me to try and get the best out of it and they was pretty nice to me.

GIRL No. 3: Yeah, all the teachers at the Negro school was very nice and they tried to encourage us and told us to do the best that we could.

QUESTION: Well, how did your friends react to you since you changed schools?

GIRL No. 3: Well, they were encouraging us too and trying to encourage us to do the best that we could. Some of them were trying to get into there too next year and they were trying to encourage me last year.

BOY No. 1: They used to play a lot and tell us don't let the white children whup us and all like that.

BOY No. 3: This year the principal wrote a paper to everyone that had attended another school and wanted to transfer school through the year of 1966-67. He told them they should come Friday and enroll. I went on the school bus but the school bus was packed with children and they turned the school bus around right after we got into town and I had to get off and go and enroll. They said that no Negro student could go in and enroll but those few that went last year. Everybody else that wanted to go didn't have to register. They were just supposed to go over there in September and start school.

GIRL No. 3: Then the principal told us that he wasn't registering any student that did not attend the school the previous year before and all the students that wanted to come over and register could come but he wasn't registering anyone until the board of education decided what number he could register to go over there. Everyone who came over there, except us, from the year before, he turned them around.

GIRL No. 2: The way the letter was written it could have been interpreted that all the students that went last year and wanted to go this year, too, could come; but he really meant for ones that went last year. Then we read the letter over and mother interpreted it as being just the students that went last year.

BOY NO. 3: Yeah, and he told my mother that the children that had filled out the sheet to go said they were going to get them another sheet and if you didn't want to go you didn't have to go there but if you still wanted to go they could put it right down there.

QUESTION: Now you've told us about your schools, why don't you tell a little bit about your association with the white students?

BOY NO. 2: Some people think that white people are higher class than Negroes but from the way the children did behave they are lower class people than the Negro. We went in class one day and everybody sat down and when the teacher went out of the room some of the students had spit in the vacant seats that nobody sits in. And they put chewing gum all over the desks. I mean you didn't find too much chewing gum over at the Negro schools, they threw it out the window or trash can. But over there you find the desk packed with chewing gum and stuff like that.

GIRL NO. 2: My association with the white students, you know you can get along with them as long as they didn't have anything to do with us, until they called us names or something like that. They always pick at you and whenever they do something to you they always dare-devil you with a crowd behind you or something like that. Personally they never did anything to me. When all the Negroes was out together standing out in the hall, when they saw that none of us was looking they would throw something at us and like that. I remember once going to class and somebody put stickers all over my desk. When I got in there I found them all over the place, one down where I sit and one about where I write at and then I took it off and put it in the trash can. You know they are always putting something on my desk or doing something like that.

BOY NO. 1: Well, they usually stay away and just like she said if they are going to do anything they do it in a crowd just about. She told you about it, but one day in the halls just before the spring holidays in March I got off the school bus one Friday and I was a janitor in a church and was going to clean the church up. I saw two boys in the car and they had a girl friend of theirs with them and they stopped and asked me if I wanted to fight. I told them "Yeah I'll fight," if they fight why not? I had another friend with me too, and he picked up some rocks and started throwing them across the street. They said that they ain't playing with no rocks and so those kids talked and then they wouldn't get out. So I told them "Let's go" and the other reached for his seat and gave him a shotgun. He pointed it at us and all that. When we got back to school they didn't say anything about it. But on Tuesday or Wednesday they said, "We could have killed you." I said, "Yeah, you all say if you all meet one of us in the road you'll blow our brains out but that's one you all missed." (LAUGHTER) You see I was brave after they missed me. The sheriff came over to the school to see about it and so they got so worried one of them just didn't say nothing after that. He kept quiet.

GIRL No. 1: There weren't too many friends but we were in gym class where we dress up every day. We took our shoes off and left them in the gym and we were playing. They hid them so we couldn't find but one of them, and they had the other one hid on their feet, and they pretended that none of them knew anything about it. The principal came over, finally, he must have talked to them about it. Another afternoon we were going to our history class. We would usually come up to the room everyday and start studying before classes began and one day they had spread some crayon dust in the seats that we sit in. I told the teacher and she didn't say anything to them, but she gave me this old nasty rag to clean it with and told us that that was all right. I got some tissue from my pocketbook to clean it with. I wanted to tell her about it before I said anything to anyone else. One morning we were standing in the hall and some of the boys brought some bee-bees, you know, shots, and we were standing by the lockers and they threw them all over the hall and mostly to the front by the principal's office. All the teachers came running down the hall and I think they found out who did it though . . . some of the boys.

BOY No. 1: I wouldn't exactly call them friendly but there was a sister and a brother that would ride our bus. They went to school in December. But when we came back they weren't there any more. The girl was in the same class we were in and the boy was a senior. But they were just about the only children that would try to talk to us and try to have anything to do with us. After they stopped nobody else did. One day they shipped all these clothes down to our place and I found an old hat and I sewed up the rim. I wore it to school. I just wore it for the devil of it. The teacher honked her horn and she got mad and she told me to leave it in my locker. So I put it in my locker and when I went to eat lunch and came back somebody had stolen the hat. I reported it to the principal and none of them wanted me to wear the hat to school. The principal told me he couldn't be responsible for it, the hat, because it was something that you weren't supposed to wear to school. He told me if I could get the hat all well and good, but if I couldn't there wasn't anything that he could do about it. And another day I went to school I was wearing a pin, it wasn't a "Black Panther" pin, it was an "End the War in Vietnam" pin. My teacher read what was on it and I think he didn't like what was on it, so he went and told the principal. The principal had been reading the pin for about five days every time when I went to lunch. Later that day I was in study hall and he called me into the office and told me not to wear the pin to school no more. He couldn't fine me for wearing the pin but he said he could punish me for not obeying him. Around the last part of school, when these boys say something we would say it back to them so they started cussing us. One day we started cussing them back and they thought we were going to fight, at least the teacher did, and he went and told the principal and the principal called us to the office and he told us if he had any more trouble he would had to put us out of school.

QUESTION: Before you came to the white school did you think that most of the white students would be smarter than you? Tell me why and what about now?

BOY NO. 1: Well, I didn't have too much thought about it myself, some of them are smarter but they ain't all that smart. Some of them are real dumb.

GIRL NO. 1: You know, I thought some of them would be smart and some of them would be dumb and that's just the way it was. Some of them are smart and try to get the lesson and some of them are dumb just like the Negroes. I think that anyone could go over there if they studied and they could do just as well as the white children do.

BOY NO. 2: I did think at least the majority would be pretty smart except for one or two of them in the classroom. But in the class I was in about half of them was pretty bad.

GIRL NO. 2: Well I thought I could do just as well as most of them if I tried and I did try. Some of them are smarter and some of them are just as dumb as some of the Negroes are. I guess most of them just don't try. I think I did do just about as well as some of them did.

BOY NO. 3: Well, the teachers are very hard about the lesson because they would try to flunk you all they could and if a white person had the same answer as you had and it wasn't a full answer they took five points off your paper and like took off two off his paper.

QUESTION: Now that they are building a private school for the white students how do you think that would affect things at school?

GIRL NO. 1: Well, for myself I don't care if there be a private school for the whites; I wouldn't mind if all of them would go over there, but I know that all of them aren't going over there. Maybe the ones that have enough money will go but that's not going to be too many of them. Maybe some of them might go to other public schools. I don't think that too many of them are going to be going to the private school. I think over half of them that went over should be over there next year.

BOY NO. 1: Well, about my thought about private schools I don't know how it'll stack up. I wasn't too much for going to this school because it was a white school. I went because it was a better school and a higher school and we have accomplished what we was trying to accomplish. We wanted to get some colored students because it was better equipped. If they go to a private school it won't make too much difference because the Negroes will still be going to a higher school and a better equipped school.

BOY NO. 2: Well, I don't think that it will be too bad as it is, and it don't make too much difference if they don't associate with us or anything. I believe that they may act a little better than they did last year. This would be because there aren't too many of us here and probably a lot of white friends left that made them not to say anything and pick at us. Some of them won't be here and they'll probably like the private school a lot better.

GIRL NO. 2: Well, I guess the white community, the ones that they would go, I guess they are glad that they can get their children out from around the Niggers as they call them. You know they can get them away from us but I guess those that are unable to send their children, they don't have any feelings toward it since it won't help them any. Around where I live the Negro community don't mind as long as they will be more for the Negroes to go and get a better education.

BOY NO. 2: The Negroes in my community hardly say too much about it but they are saying that the white people have been in the school of their own and they are entitled to go to school. That's what they say — let them be alone.

QUESTION: How did the people in your community and your neighbors react when you decided to transfer schools?

GIRL NO. 1: In our community all of them were very encouraging. We had been having small mass meetings around our community to try and encourage people to try to enroll students in this school because you could get a better education there. Everyone was very glad that I was chosen to go there and they was trying to encourage me as much as possible to continue.

BOY NO. 2: Everyone was encouraging me too and telling me that if I needed any help that I could come to them. If they could help they would. And they were kind of glad that I was going.

BOY NO. 1: During the time that we was told that we was eligible to go just about everybody was in the mass meeting movement. I was attending mass meetings and just about everybody I saw would shake my hand and encourage me. Just everybody was encouraging, there wasn't anybody discouraging me.

QUESTION: Why do you think the white folks don't want their children going to school with Negroes?

GIRL NO. 2: Well, myself, I have no idea. I've heard that they think their children are too good to go to school with us and we're a bad influence upon their children. That's some gossip I've heard; I really don't know.

BOY NO. 1: I just think they're stupid.

GIRL NO. 3: For the most part those children over there want to be friendly, some of them do, but their parents tell them what to do and what not to do and all. You can tell that some of them want to say something to you but they are scared that if they say something to you then the other one is going to call them Nigger lover and all that kind of junk. They just go back and tell 'em and so they just don't want to get involved.

BOY No. 1: One day we found out it was mostly a big act because in the lunch room they had Negro cooks. They pretend they hated Negroes so bad but some of the girls would even help the Negro cooks serve the plates and all like that.

BOY No. 2: And they would be laughing and talking to the cooks and even having fun.

GIRL No. 1: A lot of the students that went last year, if you see any of them this summer around home in the fields working, they have Negro children working with them or people cooking for them and all that.

BOY No. 2: Yeah, and you see some go to Negro houses and play and Negroes go to their houses and play. But when you all go to school they are all different then.

GIRL No. 1: I just think they are stupid.

BOY No. 2: It's just that I haven't been brought up around too many white people myself and I never play with them. But from my part it don't make no difference if I play with them or not now, because they don't know any more than me. It don't make no difference if they don't speak to me, then I don't speak to them and that's just it.

GIRL No. 2: Well, Sunday we stopped in at the dairy farm and two of the white boys that went to school last year drove up there and they went in. We was standing up there to the window getting waited on and they looked over and waved to us. That's the way they are when they out of school; when they are in school they act all different.

QUESTION: Have any of your ideas changed any since you've been going to that school?

BOY No. 2: At least some of mine have because I thought they were all pretty close and clean, but the way the children act they are nasty. They're not trustful. If you turn your back you get knocked in the head or something and then you don't see some of them so you have to keep on the watch for some of them and find out who did it or what. I heard people say that Negro children don't act their age but the white children is the children that don't act their age. White boys in the eleventh and twelfth grade will be riding around playing and hollering and kicking like children in the first and second grade.

QUESTION: Did you all ride the bus? How were things on the bus?

GIRL No. 1: Noisy. Before we started school our principal at the Negro school told us to be quiet on the bus, "You should hear how quiet the white children are on the bus and everything." You can't hear anything on that bus, you know, from the time you get on the bus to when you get off.

BOY NO. 1: Just about twice every week the bus driver had to stop the bus to quiet everything down.

GIRL NO. 1: Fighting and doing everything else.

BOY NO. 2: On the bus I ride they just keep up so much fuss, they just throw paper and stuff like that. One afternoon they threw paper at me, they just kept hitting and hitting me with it so I didn't say anything. The next time I got on the bus things started balling up and I said if you hit me I going to fight you this evening. One boy threw and he hit me so I hit him back and we throwing paper by the hour. (LAUGHTER) I sat back down and he didn't say anything so I just went on back to the front of the bus. Once in the winter time when its gets real cold they'll try to let all the windows down in the back of the bus and freeze you. See, the bus driver asked me to sit on the back seat and he put all the girls up to the front and all the boys to the back.

GIRL NO. 2: We had special seats but it was a front seat. You know we couldn't see anything so when you get hit with a piece of paper we just look back.

GIRL NO. 1: I was getting most of the hits 'cause I was in the seat behind them and there wasn't anybody in the seat but me. When we first started school he told them to leave those two seats, don't let anybody sit in those seats. But probably the children would stop sitting there probably for about two evenings and then by third afternoon mostly the small children, they would come up front and sit there. I guess he would tell them not to sit there but they ended up sitting there. A lot of the children who lived near the school came home with a lot of white students and in the morning the bus was real crowded. Our bus would pick them up, in the morning our bus would be real crowded and this little white girl she came in and she sat down next to me. The bus driver was looking in the mirror and he saw that she was sitting there and he told her to take a seat in the back. When we got to school the children started talking about it and saying that the little girl sat down in the seat beside me.

GIRL NO. 2: And as someone sits down next to you everybody would holler here's a seat, come back down here and sit down. The bus driver would look up and see that she was sitting down beside her and he told her get up and go down back and find a seat. He tickled me and I laughed. When we first started school everyone on the bus would speak and say good morning and he would never say anything. We did this for about a week and he never said anything, so from then on we didn't say anything.

GIRL NO. 1: And then one morning our bus was broke down and all the parents took the children to school in their cars. He (the bus driver) came along in his car and picked us up and carried us to school and he opened the door just as nice for us, the back door. He spoke to us just as we spoke, nice good morning, and he spoke back. We didn't say anything. We got out and went to school. He was talking about the bus, he didn't know what was wrong with the bus, but he was talking nice and all.

BOY NO. 2: Well, I go on the school bus, but the bus driver and I haven't spoke since I started riding the bus. I don't think I ever will speak to him. I think that if I speak to him I don't think he will return the answer, the way he reacts. One day I wanted to get off, and he said he don't let anybody off where they don't supposed to get off. And so I say that I see you letting children get off where they don't suppose to get off; they get off any place they want to get off when they tell you to stop.

QUESTION: What kind of reaction would white teachers get from predominantly Negro schools?

GIRL NO. 1: Well, I don't think any of them from around here would go to an all colored school to teach. Maybe one from up North would come down here and maybe he'd go over there to teach or something like that. Probably he'd be all right as far as the students are concerned, but I don't think any of them around here would. If the only school they could teach in was a colored school I don't think they'd teach around here. Honestly, I think they'd do him or her anyway they could, you know, to flunk them and anything like that. I think they'd do anything to her, or him, or whatever it would be.

BOY NO. 2: I think that it would be ordinary because most of the Negro children are used to the way white children act by the way we tell them and by the way the teachers act but last year there probably would have been a lot of fuss raising.

QUESTION: Were you allowed to participate in the organizations at school?

GIRL NO. 3: For most of the organizations they had in school you had to maintain a certain grade to be on it. I think if you had a high enough grade you could be on it.

BOY NO. 2: Most of the plays and that they had at night and you know, it wouldn't be too neat to go because you'd need a lot of bodyguards.

QUESTION: Did any of you ever go back to the Negro high school for anything? How did you feel?

ALL: Same way.

BOY NO. 1: Yeah, I went over there about four times.

BOY NO. 2: Well, you could go over there and sit in the classroom and the teacher probably wouldn't even know it.

BOY NO. 1: Most of them knows you and asks you how you are doing and they say get the best of it and do the best you can.

QUESTION: Suppose some friends at the Negro school asked you for some suggestions about the white school, what would you tell them?

Boy No. 1: It probably be all in their favor because there ought to be a hundred Negroes or more going.

Girl No. 3: I think that for myself I'd tell them something about the students, and the way the teachers treat them. I'd tell him maybe some of the teachers would treat him ordinary the way they treat the white students, but some of them try all they could to fail you. I'd encourage them to do the best they could and to study hard. There are many of these affairs or certain incidents, such as throwing paper at you, or calling you Nigger or talking from gossip, but they wouldn't do anything really big to you besides throwing paper or something at you. They wouldn't really hurt you in a big way.

Boy No. 1: I don't even believe in that this year myself. There will be about as many colored children going to school as white. Last year they did things because they outnumbered us about twenty to one, but I think now it will be a different story.

Boy No. 2: I wish I was going back; I just want some of them to pick at me like they did last year so I can get them back. When we have about an equal number of students we'll see if we can get in a fight over there. We will have the same number in our color as they got in their color so we probably have a better chance fighting, if they're looking for fight this year then I'm going to fight.

Boy No. 1: Some of the white children must respect a colored child as being more powerful and as stronger or something, because every time one of them come up to us to fight it wouldn't be one of us backing down.

Girl No. 2: You don't fight many small boys, most of them would be big and they walk over and they say you all boys want to fight?

Girl No. 1: Myself, I don't think they're going to let as many Negroes over there as the white. If they let any more go it would only be about five or ten. I don't think that they'll accept half as many Negroes as white.

Boy No. 2: I believe that they will accept as many because President Johnson said that they will cut out segregation this year. There will be integration this year and anybody can go to any school of his or her choice.

Girl No. 1: You see, the school isn't very large and they are going to say that the school is overcrowded and all this. They don't have that many white children over there and I don't believe that they're going to let that many colored children go there.

Boy No. 1: I mean the school will hold over five hundred students. I don't know about how many will register but there ought to be about a hundred Negro students over there.

Boy No. 2: For the school, they had some rooms in the school that they wasn't going to use. I believe that the school ought to hold about 500 students. There will be more room with children going to the private school.

GIRL No. 2: In the Negro school our classroom had mostly about sixty, just about the same number of students in each class.

BOY No. 2: We went for about three six-week periods this way with about 93 children in the classroom. When they divided it they had about 50 or 60 students in the class.

BOY No. 1: The Negro school is the largest but they don't have a gym, they don't have a cafeteria, they don't have a library, and they don't have no kind of equipment in the laboratory, and they don't have no kind of gym clothes to put on when you go in the gym or outdoors when you go out to practice football.

GIRL No. 1: Matter of fact they don't have anything in that gym but a wall and a few seats sitting in it and they have them broken down.

BOY No. 2: Sometime you have to stand up to take tests.

QUESTION: If the Negro candidate wins the election in November how do you think it will affect things in the community?

BOY No. 1: I would be so glad. I mean it would probably help the Negroes because there is a Negro running for sheriff and running for just everything in the county election. If the Negro wins for sheriff it probably be the first one in any county. They got some Negroes who call themselves deputies but they don't wear the clothes that other men wear, they wear khakis and are out in the field. If the Negro wins we probably will have it better, like now, if they catch you driving without a driver's license they will probably give you a twenty-five dollar ticket and if they catch a white person they will probably give him a ten or maybe a twelve dollar ticket.

BOY No. 2: They are not going to stop no white people. When they deputize them I think they told him you a Nigger sheriff, for the Niggers. Those Negro deputies even shot a Negro. They are not trustworthy, I'll tell you. I don't like them myself and I don't fool around with them, you may get shot right quick.

BOY No. 1: They had a bodyguard the first day that we went. When the white kids started fighting their canes started beating us, that's what they did. They wouldn't have the white kids. You know they thought they could fool the Negro people that they was doing something and that the people was on our side.

BOY No. 2: One night I think he was in one of the churches and they come out there and they asked what happened. And one of the leaders said they should get out there so he don't go back and tell his white folks there. One day we was in school in history class and the teacher started talking about the white children and she said that they ought to start thinking about the Negro, the day they came over and the first day and the second day. They had Negro guards and they had forgotten about that.

QUESTION: Well, how did the Negro deputies act while they were guarding people?

BOY NO. 1: They wasn't even on the school campus. They stood outside the road and three of us came in a car together, and we passed on by them. The two on the left looked and the two on the right looked and they turned their head and looked the other way and then we went on into the school. At least they didn't even come on campus, they just stand out there in the road. If everyone want to jump on us they would be behind on the road and we had to go to school.

GIRL NO. 2: I think if everyone wanted to jump on us they would have killed us, it wouldn't have done any good. That's what they wanted to do to us, beat us or jump on us or do what ever they wanted to do.

BOY NO. 2: Because we was on the other side and the guards was on the other side of the building.

BOY NO. 1: If the white kids had jumped up the deputies would have helped them maybe.

GIRL NO. 3: They might not have come.

BOY NO. 1: They might have come but you can bet that they wouldn't have hit anyone, because by the time I knowed I was going, until the day I went, I got discouraged one time. That was the time that they had that killing. People told me that you better not go. At least I didn't know that they was going to have deputies and all like that, and I didn't look for it the first day. The principal told us not to come the first day so we went the second day. I guess they wanted to tell the students what to do or how to act or something.

GIRL NO. 1: I heard the same thing, that he had conference with the children, told them just how he stood, what they could do and what they couldn't do. He said it might just be better if you all didn't come the first day. He told us he couldn't tell us not to come but it might be better if we waited to the second day.

QUESTION: Now you said the white kids would always do things behind your back but did any of them come up to your face and tell you things or call you names?

GIRL NO. 2: They may call you names to your face but they wouldn't hit you when you could see them. You know, they call you a Nigger or curse you or something like that.

BOY NO. 2: At least, every time one of them call me something I call him something back. When they call me Nigger I call them a cracker or something. You're not white, you're red.

GIRL NO. 2: Most times they call you something, you know, they curse you and call you old damn Nigger or something, anything they want to call you.

BOY NO. 2: Yeah, they made a sling shot one morning and they shot pecans here on the bus. They actually shot pecans off a sling shot.

GIRL NO. 2: But you know in the hallways you would hardly ever see any boys their size come up to them and say you want to fight. You see these great big boys that are about this wide and all around are these great big old boys. Way bigger than you so they looking down on you asking you if you wanna fight.

BOY NO. 2: Even in the class and on the bus we didn't have no big boys that size. Well, in the cafeteria one day one big boy did ask me for my ice cream. Now sometime they will beg in the cafeteria, some of them. I gave it to him that day but they won't get nothing else from me though. (LAUGHTER)

GIRL NO. 3: Sometimes we be going down the hall and if any of the white students was standing in the hall and they see us coming they say here come a black Nigger, you better stand back, or something. They would get back up against the wall. In the morning sometime we'd be standing by our locker and they would get off the bus and come in and try to walk close up by the wall or something pretending that they didn't want to get close to touch us or anything.

BOY NO. 2: And when they did walk up side close to the wall we'd begin laughing and everything. They think they're so much that they can't walk beside us, but when they go down to the cafeteria they're standing and they'd be eating and the Negro cooks could be putting their hand all over the rolls, especially. And they'd be eating out of their hands.

BOY NO. 1: I know you been talking about a black power party if we get a Negro sheriff. I know they having a basketball game out to the school one night and some boys come up here to the store and get some beer, you know, under age. Somebody caught up with them, the sheriff or somebody, and he didn't do anything to the boy, but he took the lady's license and if it had been a Negro boy he probably would have them expelled from school and all.

QUESTION: Did any of you have any doubt whether you are going to pass to the next grade?

BOY NO. 2: I doubt it myself. I didn't study as hard as I should have.

BOY NO. 1: I doubted it myself the first part of it.

GIRL NO. 1: I failed.

BOY NO. 2: Well, none of the boys are promoted.

BOY NO. 1: I mean if we have a test and we get a 70 the teachers would bring it down to a 60 or 68½ on my card.

BOY NO. 1: At least in history, you see, we have about a week to study one subject but the teacher sit up there and talk about integration so much the four days. Then on Friday she come up and give one big whole week's lesson and have us get that and have a test on it that Monday. It's different for the white kids because they get the kids that had her last year and get the notes and you see they already know what happened and she would help them anyway.

BOY NO. 2: And they already know the majority of the questions on the test because they would go down to her house at night and she would tell them.

GIRL NO. 2: Walking down the hall some children out of their class would say what are you going to have on the test, is it going to be hard. She'd say, well you know those notes I gave you the other day, just study those real good, I heard her.

BOY NO. 2: Yeah, I've seen actually some students would have special notes and they'd be typed out by her. She'd say something about getting us some notes, the ones that failed, but she never said anything about giving me no notes and I was failing. I never asked her for no notes but I went and asked her some questions and she acted like she didn't want to answer them. She said what's the matter with you, what's you doing in class for the reason why you couldn't get it and all that.

GIRL NO. 2: I had a lot of trouble in history. That's the only class that I really doubted, you know, I flunked the first semester but I passed the last semester. I have to take my first semester over next year. I was kind of surprised he passed my last semester because I was kind of sure that he had flunked me.

BOY NO. 2: We could go to summer school and pay $15 a month to make it up.

BOY NO. 1: I mean I have to go next year and make that grade up and, you know, go and take it over.

GIRL NO. 1: If I was absent when I got back to school the next day the teacher would probably have my notes typed or written up for me and I didn't have to ask her for them.

QUESTION: Can anyone think of anything else that would happen if Negroes got elected?

GIRL NO. 1: I think things might be a little better in the school situation. It could do something about the Negro school especially; it could get equipment and at least they need to build another school if they are not going to let the colored children go to the white school. They need to build another school because that school is entirely overcrowded, I think. They can't do anything out there and they don't have the equipment either; they don't have anything out there.

BOY No. 2: Well, I'll feel more free to talk to the sheriff and tell him how I feel about certain things, you know. You may be afraid to tell a white person what you want to tell him, actually, you can hardly talk to a white person like you talk to a Negro person, you know someone from your own race. If we get all Negroes they probably wouldn't have too much to say neither. If we have control for many years then maybe the children come up being afraid of law like most Negro children being afraid of law.

GIRL No. 3: Probably everything would be better, you know, better schools and the board of education. Probably we can get some of the things that we want, you know, better schools and things that the whites have.

THE MOB STILL RIDES

A Review of the Lynching Record,
1931-1935

COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
710 Standard Building
Atlanta, Ga.

PRICE

10 cents per copy

$1.00 per dozen

Postpaid

First edition, 7,000, March, 1936
Second edition, 5,000, July, 1936

THE MOB STILL RIDES

A Review of the Lynching Record,

1931-1935

COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
710 Standard Building
Atlanta, Ga.

CONTENTS

Foreword 3

Summary of Findings 5

I. Geographic and Racial Factors 5

II. Lynched on Minor Accusations 6

III. Unfounded Accusations 8

IV. Lynchers Seldom Punished 9

V. Why Lynchers Go Unpunished 11

VI. Peace Officers and Mobs 11

VII. Prevented Threatened Lynchings 13

VIII. The Distribution of Lynchings and Threatened Lynchings . 15

IX. The High Cost of Lynch-Bent Mobs 16

X. The Threat of Legal Lynchings 17

XI. Some Suggestions 18

XII. Factual Newspaper Reports Needed 20

XIII. Lynching and Racial Exploitation 22

XIV. In Conclusion 23

FOREWORD

The twenty-one lynchings of 1930—as many as took place in the two previous years combined—gave rise to an exhaustive case study of the lynchings of that year by the Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching, an association of well-known citizens of the South who undertook the task at the request of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation. The results of that study were summarized in an eighty-page pamphlet, "Lynchings and What They Mean," and later in a 500-page volume entitled "The Tragedy of Lynching." These were written and compiled by Dr. Arthur F. Raper, Research Secretary of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, who directed and in large part conducted the studies.

Five years have passed and the lynching habit seems as strongly entrenched as it was in 1930. The record, which meantime showed a most encouraging decrease to the "low" of eight in 1932, went up to twenty-eight the next year, and to twenty in 1935. Whatever the cause of this trend, it is most disquieting and indicates that the mob is still potentially and often actually in the saddle in large areas of our country.

Confident that society continues to endure these barbarities chiefly because of misapprehension as to their nature and results, we are convinced that the fundamental remedy is to bring the facts into the limelight and keep them there. That, in brief, is the purpose of this little volume, in which Dr. Raper summarizes the results of careful studies, made by himself and Prof. Walter Chivers, of the eighty-four lynchings of the past five years. It is confidently commended to all who wish to know the truth regarding these tragic occurrences.

Commission on Interracial Cooperation.

Atlanta, Georgia.
March, 1936.

MOB VIOLENCE IN THE UNITED STATES, 1889-1935

*The space between the two lines indicates the number of threatened lynchings prevented.

THE MOB STILL RIDES

A Review of the Lynching Record, 1931-1935

SUMMARY OF FINDINGS

A study of the eighty-four lynchings of the past five years reveals the following facts:

(1) A larger proportion of the lynchings of this period occurred in the South than ever before, and a larger proportion of the victims were Negroes.

(2) Eleven per cent of the mob victims were not accused of any crime; an additional thirty per cent were accused only of minor offenses. Of the other fifty-nine per cent, many were not guilty of the crimes with which they were charged.

(3) Contrary to the general impression that rape is the chief cause of lynching, only eleven per cent of the victims were even accused of this crime. Scarcely one-fourth were accused of rape and attempted rape combined.

(4) Courts rarely indict lynchers, more rarely convict, and almost never impose sentences commensurate with the crime. Indictments have been returned in but one lynching in twelve, and convictions in scarcely one in thirty.

(5) There is evidence that peace officers participated in several lynchings, and connived in many more.

(6) Over nine-tenths of the lynchings occurred in the open country, and a little over four-fifths in counties where the per capita income and taxable wealth were below those of their respective states. Over three-fourths of the threatened lynchings prevented were also in the poorer rural counties.

(7) When a mob does not lynch it sometimes dominates the court, and so brings about a "legal lynching."

(8) Nearly twenty per cent of the persons lynched and threatened by mobs were mental defectives.

(9) The number of lynchings declined from a yearly average of 124 between 1895 and 1905, to seventy between 1905 and 1915, to fifty-three between 1915 and 1925, and to seventeen between 1925 and 1935. The past decade, however, shows more lynchings in the latter half than in the first half—the only decade in which this was true.* The number of attempted lynchings also rose during the latter half of the decade.

The optimism of ten years ago is waning; lynchings are not fading naturally from the American scene; the mob still rides.

I. GEOGRAPHIC AND RACIAL FACTORS

The typical lynching is in the rural South, the mob victim is a Negro, the lynchers are native-born whites, and the courts punish no one. Though some lynchings occur outside the South and some victims are white, lynching is increasingly a Southern and a racial phenomenon. In the last decade of the last century nearly one-fifth of the nation's lynchings were outside the South and nearly one-third of the victims were white; during the past five

*This is for 1925-1934, inclusive. The record of twenty lynchings for 1935 exceeds the average for the preceding decade, or for either half of it.

Rex Scott, Negro, in Perry County, Kentucky,[22] for wounding a white man in an altercation; an unidentified Negro, in Jefferson County, Alabama,[23] for "insulting" a white woman; Dock Rogers, Negro, in Pender County, North Carolina,[24] for slightly wounding, by accident, the wife of a white bootlegger with whom he was quarreling over a purchase of liquor; Fell Jenkins, Negro, in Claiborne Parish, Louisiana,[25] for no crime; Luke Murray, Negro, in Lawrence County, Ohio,[26] for threatening a white man with a knife.

Lynchings on minor charges are not peculiar to the last five years. During the past half century more persons have been lynched on such charges than for any other cause, with the single exception of homicide. The fifty-year record runs thirty-seven per cent for homicide, six per cent for felonious assault, sixteen per cent for rape, seven per cent for attempted rape, seven per cent for theft, two per cent for insult to white persons, and twenty-five per cent for miscellaneous minor offenses, such as trying to act like a white man, bringing suit against a white man, refusing to pay a note, seeking employment in a restaurant, being boastful, and taking sides with a Negro in a fight with a white man. It should be noted that contrary to the common impression, less than one-sixth of the 3,798 persons lynched since 1889 have been accused of rape, and less than one-fourth have been accused of rape and attempted rape combined.

III. UNFOUNDED ACCUSATIONS

It should be observed also that there is often a marked difference between the reported and the real accusations against the person lynched. The following cases from recent years are by no means unique:

The lynching last fall of Elwood Higginbotham, Negro, at Oxford, Mississippi, forcibly illustrates this difference. According to the newspaper reports Higginbotham had "murdered" a white man. Higginbotham's trial, however, showed clearly that the charge against him should have been "justifiable homicide"—he had killed the white man in self-defense when the latter, in company with others, came to his house at night, broke down his door and pushed into his bedroom with a flashlight in one hand and a pistol in the other.

At Franklinton, Washington Parish, Louisiana, in January 1935, Jerome Wilson was lynched. Accused of shooting an officer, he had been tried, found guilty and sentenced to death. The case was then appealed to the Louisiana Supreme Court, which ordered a new trial. Three days later the mob took Wilson from the jail and lynched him. The original trouble had arisen when a range rider went to the home of the landowning Wilsons to check on the report that one of their mules had not been dipped. Since he made no explanation of his mission and exhibited no evidence of his legal right to inspect the stock, the Negroes demanded that he get out of the lot. He resented this independence, went away angry, and returned later with a number of armed officers. Shots were fired and returned and in the fusilade one of the officers was killed. There is reason to believe that he was shot by a fellow officer, since the Wilsons had only shotguns and the officer apparently was shot with a pistol. Nevertheless Jerome Wilson was accused of the crime and lynched for it before the courts had a chance finally to pass upon his guilt.

On the night of May 12, 1933, William Kinsey, Negro tenant farmer, was lynched in Warren County, Georgia. He was accused of "murder"; actually he had killed a white man in self-defense. The trouble had arisen during the

22. January 24, 1934.
23. August 23, 1934.
24. August 27, 1933.
25. January 10, 1933.
26. June 11, 1932.

day when a young white landlord upbraided the Negro for not plowing the cotton properly. The Negro, several years older, maintained that he knew how to plow cotton; the young man left the field, threatening to come to the Negro's house that night. This he did, accompanied by two cousins and his uncle who had a reputation for "putting niggers in their place." The four arrived shortly after dark and demanded that Kinsey come out. When he refused to do so the uncle fired into the house and killed Kinsey's brother. Kinsey returned the fire and killed the uncle, but was himself wounded by the young landlord. The white men fled; Kinsey crossed the field to the home of a white neighbor who took him to a doctor in Warrenton. Soon after his arrival he was taken from the doctor's office and lynched.

In December 1933, Cordie Cheek, Negro, was lynched in Maury County, Tennessee. He had been accused of attempted rape, but the grand jury investigating this charge found no ground for indicting him. An hour after his release from the Nashville prison, where he had been held for safekeeping, he was kidnapped and lynched.

There is reason to suspect that the Negro lynched at Caledonia, Mississippi, in July 1933, accused of insulting a white woman, had been falsely accused by persons desiring to get possession of his good cotton crop. Perhaps the most preposterous accusation of the whole five years was that against Dennis Cross, helpless Negro paralytic, who was lynched at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in September 1933, on the charge of attempted rape.

IV. LYNCHERS SELDOM PUNISHED

Though lynching is obviously a crime, violating both the Federal Constitution and the laws of the several states concerning murder, riot, assault, and the like, in many communities it is still regarded as an expression of popular justice. Hence only a few lynchers have been punished and most of these have received light sentences.

On the morning of November 13, 1935, following the double lynching of Ernest Collins and Bennie Mitchell, Negro juveniles, in Colorado County, Texas, the county attorney was quoted as saying, "I believe the lynching of these two youthful Negroes by a mob of seven hundred persons, including several women, was an expression of the will of the people." The county judge, after saying he was "strongly opposed to mob violence," declared: "The fact that the Negroes who so brutally murdered this girl could not be adequately punished by the law because of their ages prevents me from condemning the citizens who meted out justice to the ravishing murderers." The principal difference between official attitudes in this lynching and in most others is that in this instance the court officials announced publicly that they were sympathetic with the mob.

In most lynching cases it is impossible to find witnesses who will go before the grand jury with testimony fixing responsibility for the crime. When there are witnesses willing to testify, they are not always called. Even when witnesses appear before the grand jury and name members of the mob, it is often impossible to secure indictments. This is clearly illustrated by the unsuccessful attempts to indict persons identified by witnesses as participants in the Cordie Cheek and Norris Dendy lynchings.

On December 13, 1933, Cheek was released from the Davidson County jail at Nashville, and went immediately to the home of his uncle, near Fisk University. Shortly after he arrived there, a group of white men in two automobiles from Maury County came to the house and took him back to Maury County, where he was lynched. The license numbers of the cars were written down by witnesses to the abduction. A half dozen persons were located who were willing to give testimony to the grand jury. One of them, a Negro woman who had formerly lived in Maury County, was acquainted with two of the men in the kidnapping party. The principal witnesses in this case were willing to assume the personal risk incurred by giving their testimony to the grand jury. The prosecuting attorney of Maury County took no notice of this evidence, while the Davidson County prosecutor failed to cooperate when the grand jury took up the case. The outcome was that no one was indicted.

On the evening of July 4, 1933, Norris Dendy was lynched in Laurens County, South Carolina. A number of eye-witnesses to the crime made affidavits as to the lynching and those responsible for it. Finally some of these witnesses, who had left the state for safety, were called back before the grand jury, but no indictments were returned. The attitude of the public prosecutor is suggested by the fact that he drew up a technical indictment against the weapons used by the lynchers, rather than against the persons using the weapons. A recent investigation as to the possibility of securing indictments in this case indicated that the prosecuting attorney is still unsympathetic with such efforts. The three lynchings at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1933, further illustrate the unwillingness of court officials to utilize evidence available for the indictment of lynchers. Even when the judge and prosecuting attorney favor indictment, it is difficult to get a grand jury to act.

Indictments have been brought against lynchers in but two of last year's twenty lynchings—at White Bluff, Tennessee, and Tampa, Florida. Those at Tampa were not forthcoming until William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, threatened to cancel plans for a national convention there next summer unless responsibility was placed for the fatal flogging, tarring, and feathering of Joseph Shoemaker, white.

The case at White Bluff is also unusual, in fact unique, even in the checkered history of lynchings. A Negro man was accused of having slapped a white woman who was drinking beer in a Negro store. In broad daylight five white men took him from the custody of officers, at the same time taking a gun from one of the latter. They drove a few miles into another county and shot the Negro to death with the officer's gun. Then they came back to town and returned the gun to the officer, with the statement that they had meant only to whip the Negro, but had been forced to kill him when he attempted to pick up a rock.

Without delay the five were indicted, tried, and acquitted. The presiding judge was indignant. "I am astounded at your verdict," he told the jury. "By your action you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future." He immediately issued a bench warrant and had the five defendants held on the charge of conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. In Dickson County, where the abduction took place, the grand jury indicted them for interfering with officers. Unable to make bond, the five are in jail awaiting trial. In the other eighteen lynchings of 1935, no one has been arrested, indicted, or otherwise made to answer to the courts.

In the five years under review arrests were made in only thirteen of the eighty-four lynchings. Indictments were returned in only seven cases[27] and convictions were secured in only three.[28] It is obvious that in most communities where lynching occurs, it is not considered a crime, by public opinion or by the courts; state laws against murder, riot, assault, and abduction go for naught when lynchers are the offenders. Even South Carolina's legal provision of an indemnity of $2,000 for the family of a lynching victim has been denied to every one of the six families eligible for it in the last six years.

27. The instances with indictments, arrests, or persons held for questioning were as follows: In 1935, at White Bluff, Tennessee, and at Tampa, Florida, already mentioned; in 1934, at Manchester, Tennessee, eight white men were indicted for lynching a Negro; at Newton, Texas, the white male escort of a white woman allegedly raped by a Negro was held in jail for questioning; at Hazard, Kentucky, seven white men were indicted for lynching a Negro. In 1933, at San Jose, California, one white man was arrested, but not indicted, for lynching two white men; at Princess Anne, Maryland, four white men were arrested, but not indicted, for lynching a Negro; at Greenville, South Carolina, seventeen white men were arrested, but not indicted, for lynching a Negro; at Ninety-six, South Carolina, four white men were indicted for lynching a Negro; at Louisville, Mississippi, seventeen white men were indicted for lynching a Negro. In 1932, under West Virginia's anti-lynch law, Greenbrier County was ordered to pay $5,000 to each of two Negro families. In 1931, at Ironton, Ohio, seven white men were indicted for lynching a Negro.

The Federal Kidnapping Law also has proved inoperative where lynchers are involved. This was clearly demonstrated in the case of Claude Neal, who on October 26, 1934, was taken by a mob across the state line from the jail at Brewton, Alabama, to Marianna, Florida, where he was lynched. Considerable publicity was given this interstate kidnap-lynching over the radio, which informed the public in advance relative to the proposed itinerary and plans of the mob. The lynching early in 1935 of Abe Young at Slayden, Mississippi, following his abduction from Rossville, Tennessee, also came under the Federal kidnap law, but the Federal courts took no notice of it. This lynching, too, was advertised—news hawks drove from Memphis, sixty miles away, to witness it. In both cases the interstate kidnappers have gone unpunished.

The punishment of lynchers between 1900 and 1930, as shown by Chadbourn in Lynching and the Law is as follows: In Texas, 1930, two lynchers received sentences of two years; Georgia, 1930, two lynchers, life; Georgia, 1926, two lynchers, four years to life; Virginia, 1923, two lynchers, one and two years; Oklahoma, 1922, seven lynchers, life; Georgia, 1922, three lynchers, one to four years; Alabama,* 1920, three lynchers, fifteen years to life; Alabama,* 1920, three lynchers, $100 to three months; Minnesota, 1920, one lyncher, sentence unknown; Texas, 1920, three lynchers, two years—suspended; Alabama,* 1919, twenty-eight lynchers, $100 to fifteen years;[29] Illinois, 1903, eleven lynchers, indeterminate sentences; Missouri, 1903, one or more lynchers, ten years; Alabama, 1900, three lynchers, ten years to life.

Thus goes the record over the decades: only a few convictions, and sentences seldom commensurate with the crime.

V. WHY LYNCHERS GO UNPUNISHED

Lynchers go unpunished because punishment of their crime depends upon the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched; the officers of the law have already shown their unwillingness or inability to administer justice; and lynchers, in most cases, are responsible only to the local courts.

Expecting these officers and courts to arrest and punish lynchers is like expecting a dethroned government to punish those who overthrew it. It is a grim fact that lynching mobs which burn courthouses are not wholly illogical. They and their sympathizers constitute the effective majority in the community where a lynching occurs. The disapproving minority, white and colored, is deterred from taking steps against the mob by fear of personal violence, incendiarism, and boycotts.

Many a white planter, teacher, physician, doctor, merchant, or banker actually sympathizes with the Negro when a lynching occurs, but sooner or later finds himself compelled to subordinate his sympathy for the victim to his fear of the mob. The wealthier white families are often inconvenienced

28. Lynchers have been punished for only three of the eighty-four lynchings in the past five years, and in not one of these cases was the punishment commensurate with the crime: at Manchester, Tennessee, 1934, eight lynchers received sentences of three to five years; St. Joseph, Missouri, 1934, one lyncher received one year; Ironton, Ohio, 1931, one lyncher (a minor) received one to ten years in an industrial school.

*It should be observed that thirty-four lynchers were punished in Alabama in 1919-1920. These convictions were secured in response to the quick and determined action of Thomas E. Kilby, then Governor of Alabama.

29. No records are available for the period 1903-1919.

them, a Negro woman who had formerly lived in Maury County, was acquainted with two of the men in the kidnapping party. The principal witnesses in this case were willing to assume the personal risk incurred by giving their testimony to the grand jury. The prosecuting attorney of Maury County took no notice of this evidence, while the Davidson County prosecutor failed to cooperate when the grand jury took up the case. The outcome was that no one was indicted.

On the evening of July 4, 1933, Norris Dendy was lynched in Laurens County, South Carolina. A number of eye-witnesses to the crime made affidavits as to the lynching and those responsible for it. Finally some of these witnesses, who had left the state for safety, were called back before the grand jury, but no indictments were returned. The attitude of the public prosecutor is suggested by the fact that he drew up a technical indictment against the weapons used by the lynchers, rather than against the persons using the weapons. A recent investigation as to the possibility of securing indictments in this case indicated that the prosecuting attorney is still unsympathetic with such efforts. The three lynchings at Tuscaloosa, Alabama, in 1933, further illustrate the unwillingness of court officials to utilize evidence available for the indictment of lynchers. Even when the judge and prosecuting attorney favor indictment, it is difficult to get a grand jury to act.

Indictments have been brought against lynchers in but two of last year's twenty lynchings—at White Bluff, Tennessee, and Tampa, Florida. Those at Tampa were not forthcoming until William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, threatened to cancel plans for a national convention there next summer unless responsibility was placed for the fatal flogging, tarring, and feathering of Joseph Shoemaker, white.

The case at White Bluff is also unusual, in fact unique, even in the checkered history of lynchings. A Negro man was accused of having slapped a white woman who was drinking beer in a Negro store. In broad daylight five white men took him from the custody of officers, at the same time taking a gun from one of the latter. They drove a few miles into another county and shot the Negro to death with the officer's gun. Then they came back to town and returned the gun to the officer, with the statement that they had meant only to whip the Negro, but had been forced to kill him when he attempted to pick up a rock.

Without delay the five were indicted, tried, and acquitted. The presiding judge was indignant. "I am astounded at your verdict," he told the jury. "By your action you will make Cheatham County the dumping ground for lawlessness in the future." He immediately issued a bench warrant and had the five defendants held on the charge of conspiracy to inflict corporal punishment. In Dickson County, where the abduction took place, the grand jury indicted them for interfering with officers. Unable to make bond, the five are in jail awaiting trial. In the other eighteen lynchings of 1935, no one has been arrested, indicted, or otherwise made to answer to the courts.

In the five years under review arrests were made in only thirteen of the eighty-four lynchings. Indictments were returned in only seven cases[27] and convictions were secured in only three.[28] It is obvious that in most communities where lynching occurs, it is not considered a crime, by public opinion or by the courts; state laws against murder, riot, assault, and abduction go for naught when lynchers are the offenders. Even South Carolina's legal provision of an indemnity of $2,000 for the family of a lynching victim has been denied to every one of the six families eligible for it in the last six years.

27. The instances with indictments, arrests, or persons held for questioning were as follows: In 1935, at White Bluff, Tennessee, and at Tampa, Florida, already mentioned; in 1934, at Manchester, Tennessee, eight white men were indicted for lynching a Negro; at Newton, Texas, the white male escort of a white woman allegedly raped by a Negro was held in jail for questioning; at Hazard, Kentucky, seven white men were indicted for lynching a Negro. In 1933, at San Jose, California, one white man was arrested, but not indicted, for lynching two white men; at Princess Anne, Maryland, four white men were arrested, but not indicted, for lynching a Negro; at Greenville, South Carolina, seventeen white men were arrested, but not indicted, for lynching a Negro; at Ninety-six, South Carolina, four white men were indicted for lynching a Negro; at Louisville, Mississippi, seventeen white men were indicted for lynching a Negro. In 1932, under West Virginia's anti-lynch law, Greenbrier County was ordered to pay $5,000 to each of two Negro families. In 1931, at Ironton, Ohio, seven white men were indicted for lynching a Negro.

The Federal Kidnapping Law also has proved inoperative where lynchers are involved. This was clearly demonstrated in the case of Claude Neal, who on October 26, 1934, was taken by a mob across the state line from the jail at Brewton, Alabama, to Marianna, Florida, where he was lynched. Considerable publicity was given this interstate kidnap-lynching over the radio, which informed the public in advance relative to the proposed itinerary and plans of the mob. The lynching early in 1935 of Abe Young at Slayden, Mississippi, following his abduction from Rossville, Tennessee, also came under the Federal kidnap law, but the Federal courts took no notice of it. This lynching, too, was advertised—news hawks drove from Memphis, sixty miles away, to witness it. In both cases the interstate kidnappers have gone unpunished.

The punishment of lynchers between 1900 and 1930, as shown by Chadbourn in Lynching and the Law is as follows: In Texas, 1930, two lynchers received sentences of two years; Georgia, 1930, two lynchers, life; Georgia, 1926, two lynchers, four years to life; Virginia, 1923, two lynchers, one and two years; Oklahoma, 1922, seven lynchers, life; Georgia, 1922, three lynchers, one to four years; Alabama,* 1920, three lynchers, fifteen years to life; Alabama,* 1920, three lynchers, $100 to three months; Minnesota, 1920, one lyncher, sentence unknown; Texas, 1920, three lynchers, two years—suspended; Alabama,* 1919, twenty-eight lynchers, $100 to fifteen years;[29] Illinois, 1903, eleven lynchers, indeterminate sentences; Missouri, 1903, one or more lynchers, ten years; Alabama, 1900, three lynchers, ten years to life.

Thus goes the record over the decades: only a few convictions, and sentences seldom commensurate with the crime.

V. WHY LYNCHERS GO UNPUNISHED

Lynchers go unpunished because punishment of their crime depends upon the same peace officers and court officials whose impotence they demonstrated when they lynched; the officers of the law have already shown their unwillingness or inability to administer justice; and lynchers, in most cases, are responsible only to the local courts.

Expecting these officers and courts to arrest and punish lynchers is like expecting a dethroned government to punish those who overthrew it. It is a grim fact that lynching mobs which burn courthouses are not wholly illogical. They and their sympathizers constitute the effective majority in the community where a lynching occurs. The disapproving minority, white and colored, is deterred from taking steps against the mob by fear of personal violence, incendiarism, and boycotts.

Many a white planter, teacher, physician, doctor, merchant, or banker actually sympathizes with the Negro when a lynching occurs, but sooner or later finds himself compelled to subordinate his sympathy for the victim to his fear of the mob. The wealthier white families are often inconvenienced

28. Lynchers have been punished for only three of the eighty-four lynchings in the past five years, and in not one of these cases was the punishment commensurate with the crime: at Manchester, Tennessee, 1934, eight lynchers received sentences of three to five years; St. Joseph, Missouri, 1934, one lyncher received one year; Ironton, Ohio, 1931, one lyncher (a minor) received one to ten years in an industrial school.

*It should be observed that thirty-four lynchers were punished in Alabama in 1919-1920. These convictions were secured in response to the quick and determined action of Thomas E. Kilby, then Governor of Alabama.

29. No records are available for the period 1903-1919.

by the disorganization of Negro labor which usually occurs as the result of a lynching. For example, in the fall of 1935, near Moultrie, Georgia, a plantation owner suffered considerable financial loss when his Negro laborers left the neighborhood after the lynching of "Bo" Brinson. The planter demanded that the sheriff restrain the mob from further violence against his workers, and at first thought that indictments against the lynchers were highly probable. In such cases, however, the white man soon decides that he cannot afford to risk the ill will of the lynchers and their friends. So nobody takes an aggressive part in the prosecution of the lynchers, and they go unindicted and unpunished.

A South Carolina attorney who had helped to indict a number of lynchers thus described the means by which they were acquitted: "To see jury lists packed, witnesses swearing lies, and defense lawyers capitalizing upon a lynched Negro as a potential rapist—all in a planned effort to acquit known lynch-murderers—leaves one with a feeling of helplessness." Said a Mississippi Baptist preacher about the lynchers in his community, "There would be no use to call them to the witness stand—any man who will lynch will lie!"

VI. PEACE OFFICERS AND MOBS

Very few peace officers defend their prisoners to the point of endangering themselves. The last case on record was that of the Sheriff of Oconee County, South Carolina, who was clubbed into unconsciousness by the mob that lynched Allen Greene in 1930. On the other hand, not a few officers cooperate in the lynchings, in some instances conniving, in others participating.

Now and then the sheriff is merely ignored, as at Wiggins, Stone County, Mississippi, last June, when a mob apprehended R. D. McGee, a Negro accused of rape, conducted a mock trial, found him guilty, and lynched him in broad daylight a short distance from the edge of town. When asked where the sheriff was while this was going on, a citizen replied, "He was around some place, but the mob just ignored him." A similar case was that of the lynching of Abe Young at Slayden, Mississippi, last spring—people came all the way from Memphis to witness the affair, but the county sheriff, a woman, arrived only in time to cut the body down.

The sheriff was ignored also by the mob which lynched Bodie Bates at Calhoun City, Mississippi, last fall. The sheriff was with the bloodhounds following a trail through the swamp when the accused Negro was apprehended in town and taken to the square, where he was publicly questioned by members of the mob. In the late afternoon the sheriff took the Negro to the county jail at Pittsboro, only to have the mob take him out and lynch him soon after dark.

In many instances peace officers connived with the mob or neglected to take obvious precautions against it. A recent example was the lynching of Elwood Higginbotham at Oxford, Mississippi, last September. In this case the Negro prisoner, who had killed a white man in self-defense, on order of the court had been placed in jail at Jackson for safekeeping. The court also ordered the sheriff to place extra guards around the defendant when he was brought back to Oxford for trial. However, after the evidence had been presented and the jury was deliberating, with two of the jurors holding out for acquittal, a mob went to the jail and, without meeting any determined resistance, took the prisoner out and lynched him. The officers said they were so "taken by surprise" that they were unable to identify any member of the mob.

A few days later, near Vienna, Georgia, a Negro, accused of drunkenness and of defying the sheriff, was taken from the latter while being transferred to a jail in an adjoining county. The circumstances were such that the Vienna News, of October 3, suggested official connivance in these words:

"It is unfortunate that an officer of such importance should be placed under the stigma of being unable to prevent the lynching of a prisoner whose crime is against the person of that officer. . . . If the affair were engineered by enemies of the sheriff, seeking to arouse suspicion of complicity and destroy him politically, then it is even more a diabolical plot."

There is good reason to believe that peace officers have participated actively in many lynchings, as in those of A. T. Hardin and Dan Pippin,[30] near Tuscaloosa, Alabama; in that of Cordie Cheek at Nashville-Columbia, Tennessee;[31] and in that of Norris Dendy at Clinton, South Carolina.[32] In the Tuscaloosa case a third intended victim, who was left for dead but recovered, swore that the three deputies who had the prisoners in charge actively participated in their lynching. This charge and supporting evidence were given to the district prosecuting attorney, to the Governor of Alabama, to the Attorney-General of the State, and to the Justices of the Alabama Supreme Court, but nothing ever came of it. In the case of Cordie Cheek, kidnapped in Nashville and carried to Columbia to be lynched, the participation of at least one peace officer was sworn to by an eye witness. In the lynching of Norris Dendy witnesses testified before the grand jury that a Clinton policeman took an active part.

Several Tampa policemen have been indicted for the death of Joseph Shoemaker, previously referred to; and officers shot to death two Negro prisoners in their jail cells at Gretna, Louisiana.[33] Thirteen of the twenty persons lynched in 1935 were taken from officers of the law. Apparently to be in the hands of officers very often affords little or no protection from the mob.

The generally sympathetic attitude of sheriffs and other peace officers toward lynchers is explained by the pressure of community excitement, the presence in the mob of their acquaintances and friends, the actual physical danger involved in effective efforts to oppose the mob, and the final fact that the political situation in the typical lynching community is such that the desires of the lynchers who are voters or potential voters are virtual instructions to the officers, while the enforced political impotence of the Negro leaves him without any effective claim upon them.

VII. PREVENTED THREATENED LYNCHINGS

From the chart on page four it will be seen that since 1921 the number of threatened lynchings prevented has exceeded the number of persons lynched, with the number of preventions tending to be larger when lynchings are most numerous and in the year immediately following, and smallest when lynchings are fewest.

Of the 243 preventions of threatened lynchings since 1930, over three-fourths were accomplished through the removal of the accused persons from the areas where the crimes occurred. Determined force was used in most of the remaining cases. In forty-two of the fifty-three reported preventions in 1935, "the prisoners were removed or the guard augmented or other precautions taken. In the eleven other instances, armed force was used."[34]

In a few cases the officers "out-talked" the mob. The sheriff of Pike County, Mississippi, pointed out that it is very difficult to defy a formidable

30. August 2, 1933.

31. December 15, 1933.

32. July 4, 1933.

33. At Gretna, Louisiana, on November 1, 1935, according to newspaper reports two Negro prisoners fired out of their cells on peace officers and were subsequently killed by them. As reported in the newspapers, these killings perhaps were incorrectly listed as lynchings by the Tuskegee reports.

34. From a news release given out by Tuskegee's Department of Records and Research at the close of 1935.

mob, but not very difficult to outwit it. During the past year this sheriff, with the assistance of his deputies, prevented two threatened lynchings. On September 19, at Summit, a Negro boy was accused of attempted rape. The sheriff questioned the boy, found that his alibi was false, and then came face to face with the mob which demanded that the accused be handed over. The sheriff told them he was sure he had the guilty man, but that the Negro had not yet made a confession and he believed they would like for the accused to do so. He reassured the mob of his belief that the Negro was guilty and that he would confess as soon as he was placed in jail. Thus the sheriff retained custody of the accused, took him to the local jail, secured a confession from him, and promptly removed him to the "mob-proof" jail at Jackson, where he remained until secretly brought back for trial. Immediately after he had been given the maximum sentence, twenty years, the sheriff whisked him away again to the strong jail at Jackson.

Shortly after this a Negro boy at McComb, in the same county, wounded a white man with a knife and was placed in the county jail at Magnolia. When the sheriff heard that a mob was forming, he put the accused in his car, eluded the mob and rushed him away to Jackson. A few days later the Negro was brought back to the county for trial. After receiving the maximum sentence for wielding a knife, he was held in the local jail. One evening two men came to the sheriff's home, one a relative of the injured white man and the other a sort of professional lyncher, who has accumulated a prized collection of ghoulish souvenirs of his numerous lynching exploits. They demanded the keys to the jail but were refused. Unable to get the keys, they said they would take the prisoner anyway. The sheriff reminded them that two heavily armed men were standing guard at the entrance of the jail, with instructions to shoot anyone who attempted to enter. "Well, when are you going to send the prisoner to Jackson?" they asked. The sheriff did not know the exact day. The men left saying, "We'll get that nigger anyway." Shortly after they were gone, an officer from the state prison arrived and arrangements were made to transfer the prisoner to the penitentiary early next morning. Soon after sunrise a car carrying him sped away toward Jackson. At nine o'clock the sheriff learned that the road to Jackson had been blockaded at several points since seven-thirty—but the car with the prisoner had gone through half an hour before the blockades were set up. Said the sheriff, late in 1935, "If I can out-think the mob for two more months my four years in Pike County will record no lynching."

In each of these cases, it will be observed, the threatened lynching was prevented by the merest margin. The sheriff frankly admitted that if the professional lyncher referred to above had been on hand in the first case, he doubted seriously whether he could have retained custody of the accused Negro.

Many other threatened lynchings in 1935 were barely prevented. At Blackshear, Georgia, on April 24, a Negro charged with attempted rape was moved to a jail in another county, after a relative of the woman involved had sent a mutual friend to the sheriff demanding the prisoner. The sheriff replied that he could not let him be taken from the jail. The man then suggested that they could take the prisoner while he was being transferred. The sheriff obligingly told him to which jail the Negro would be taken and by what route, and was surprised, he later reported, to find the road open all the way. What he would have done had a mob appeared he did not say. When he reached the designated jail, however, he decided that another move would be safer, so he took the prisoner to another county, whence he is to be brought back for trial.

Two threatened lynchings were barely prevented in Jackson County, Georgia, during the past year. On June 23 an escaped Negro convict raped a white woman. The sheriff, on the way to the scene, came upon a strange Negro riding a bicycle. The Negro was taken back to the house of the victim and was identified. The men of the family, according to local reports, were given "ample opportunity to dispose of him." They failed to act, however, so the sheriff took charge of the prisoner, removed him to a distant county jail for safekeeping and brought him back for trial under the protection of the National Guard.

The second case was on the afternoon of August 2, when a Negro was accused, falsely it seems, of attempting to enter a white girl's room. He was taken in custody by local people who notified the officers. The sheriff placed him in the county jail. On the following evening a number of men came to the jail demanding the Negro. The sheriff steadfastly refused; he secured the active cooperation of the county and town peace officers; his wife hid the jail keys in a neighbor's stove. He then told the mob quite frankly that they could not take the man except over his dead body; that he had taken an oath to protect his prisoner, and that if they had wanted to lynch the Negro they should have done it before they asked him to take charge.

Two other threatened lynchings were barely prevented in Georgia during the year. In Oglethorpe County, in June, a demented Negro, accused of fatally beating and robbing two white farm women, was rushed by an alert deputy to the jail at Athens, then to Winder, then to Fulton Tower, Atlanta. Only then did the pursuing mob turn back. The other was at Moultrie, in November, when a mob came near taking from the National Guard a feeble-minded Negro who had just been given the death sentence for killing a white man.

The chief factors accounting for the prevention of threatened lynchings are: first, the determination and alertness of the peace officer to protect the prisoner in his charge, including his request for and use of the National Guard; second, local leadership, best illustrated in 1935 by the case at Cleveland, Mississippi, where the President of the Delta State Teachers College used his influence in averting a threatened lynching; and third, the influence which local Negroes may exercise, as at Moultrie where the defendant's counsel requested National Guard protection for the accused in response to the urgent appeal of a group of local Negroes, and as at Sparta, Georgia, a few days ago, when members of the Hubert family exercised effective tact in securing the cooperation of the leading white people to keep a Negro murderer from being lynched at his trial. In this latter case the presiding judge, the veteran James B. Park, instead of using the National Guard appealed to the crowded courtroom for support of the orderly process of law and received a unanimous standing vote.

The narrow margin by which many threatened lynchings have been prevented indicates that with any widespread agitation of the race situation, whether by politicians to gain votes or by secret organizations to secure paid memberships, the number of lynchings might easily have been doubled.

VIII. THE DISTRIBUTION OF LYNCHINGS AND THREATENED LYNCHINGS

A casual glance at a map showing the lynchings and the threatened lynchings of 1935, or those of the last five years, shows that they occur in the same areas, and are concentrated in the lower South. But what differences in economic and cultural conditions are there between the communities where lynchings have occurred and those where threatened lynchings have been prevented?

It has become common knowledge that lynchings occur most frequently in the most rural and poorest communities in the South. The single city lynching in 1935, at Tampa, Florida, was not representative: the victim was a white man, accused of being a Communist; he was flogged, tarred, and feathered and died from exposure. Six other lynchings occurred in counties which had towns of eight to fourteen thousand population, but in every instance the lynching took place in smaller towns or in the open country.[35] With the exception of Tampa, the largest urban community involved was Oxford, Mississippi, with a population of 2,890. The other thirteen lynchings of the year took place in counties in which the largest towns have a population of 2,500 or less. In the seventy counties where occurred the eighty-four lynchings of the last five years,[36] the only cities appearing are Vicksburg, Jackson, Birmingham, Tampa, St. Joseph, and San Jose.

Specific measures show that most of these seventy counties are economically below the average of their respective states. The per capita value of products from farm and factory combined was below the state average in four-fifths of the counties, and in nearly four-fifths of them the per capita value of taxable property was below the state average. The per capita bank deposits and revenue receipts were below the state average in nine-tenths of the counties, and the per capita retail trade in over four-fifths. Three-fourths of the counties had relatively fewer automobiles than their states, four-fifths had fewer electric subscribers, five-sixths had fewer income tax returns and fewer telephones.

Most of the eighty-two counties with prevented lynchings in 1934 and 1935 are also below their state averages. In nearly three-fourths of these counties the per capita value of agriculture and industry was below the state average; about four-fifths were below the state average in per capita value of taxable property and per capita bank deposits; three-fourths were below the state average in per capita retail trade and nine-tenths in per capita revenue receipts; four-fifths had relatively fewer income tax returns, two-thirds had fewer automobiles and fewer homes with electricity, and nearly three-fourths had fewer automobiles.

Thus it is seen that counties with lynchings and those with prevented lynchings were much alike in economic status, with the prevention counties in general making a slightly better showing. A number of counties, in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, and Maryland, had both lynchings and preventions.

It is significant that practically all the counties outside the South with mobs fell below their state averages, while most of those within the South which reached their state averages were in Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina, and Arkansas—the lowest ranking states in the Union in wealth and culture.[37]

The figures emphasize a truth arrived at through case study of the mob outbreaks in the several states; namely, that in most of Mississippi and in considerable areas in other deep-South states the community leadership still considers lynchings necessary. These areas may be characterized as not yet above the lynching level. Here the leadership of the mob is commonly made up of the leading people of the community, as was the case in the recent Mississippi lynchings at Wiggins, Calhoun City, Slayden, and Oxford. On the other hand, in the areas where community leadership does not condone lynching, the mob is led by and composed of the less responsible elements of the community.

35. Bogalusa, Louisiana, population of 14,029, with the lynching in this county occurring at Franklinton, which has a population of less than a thousand; Columbus, Lowndes County, Mississippi, 10,731, with the double lynching in this county occurring six or eight miles from the town; Fort Lauderdale, Broward County, Florida, 8,666, with the lynching staged five miles away; Moultrie, Colquitt County, Georgia, 8,027, with the lynching ten miles from the town.

36. Fourteen of the eighty-four persons lynched were in counties where two or more persons have been lynched in the past five years.

37. See Vance, R. P., Human Geography of the South, p. 422 (U. N. C. Press, 1932).

The mob in the "lynch-level" area is usually small, comparatively orderly, going about its task in a businesslike way under recognized leaders, seldom mutilating its victim beyond hanging him by the neck and shooting the body full of holes. The mob in the community above the lynch-level is composed of scores, hundreds, or thousands of excited people with no recognized leaders, a seething mass which in milling about generates its own sense of power until some insignificant happening sets it in reckless motion. Then it is capable of destroying public and private property and of torturing the victim with extended mutilation or slow burning. The same sadistic savagery readily occurs in the lynch-level area if the recognized leaders of the community fail to maintain their leadership of the mob. Relatively, at least, there are orderly and disorderly mobs: an "orderly" mob supplants peace officers and the courts; a "disorderly" and leaderless mob recklessly defies peace officers and courts. The former is bourbon and plutocratic; the latter is proletarian and anarchistic.

Thus the economic and cultural factors of an area determine not only the probability of the emergence of a lynch-bent mob, but also the general character of the mob which forms. There is little comfort for good citizens in the realization that the "nicest" lynchings occur under the restraining hands of the best people of the community, and that the "worst" lynchings occur when the community leaders abdicate and the substrata elements come into power. This points to the real tragedy—the mob itself.

IX. THE HIGH COST OF LYNCH-BENT MOBS

Mob members readily and naturally repudiate the peace officers and court officials. Whether of the "orderly" or "disorderly" type, the mob insists upon its own desires. As a logical thing it either lynches the accused, or stands as a referee over his court trial, with the frank threat of lynching should the court fail to carry out its desires: no questioning of guilt will be countenanced, no element of mercy tolerated. Such mob-dominated court sentences are, of course, properly called "legal lynchings." In the instances in which the lynch-bent mob does not lynch and cannot dominate the court, it often exercises a galling surveillance over the Negro community, with frequent intimidations and ready threats of death. Once a mob has formed, the best thing that can happen is bad.

A lynching comes at a high price to the community: irresponsibility is winked at when deadly weapons are carried without license and used without reason; dogmatism is enthroned when mob members assume that the accused is guilty of the alleged crime, and that the man they have is the one they are looking for; prejudice dominates, for mob members do not weigh evidence, and do not deliberate, but proceed upon pre-conceived notions.

Lynchers kill and then defend their murderous action against any who would make them responsible for their deed. The typical lynching literally forces the local institutions and articulate persons to condone it. The local community pays the bill when it defends lynchers.[38] The court, in pretending that it is unable to find out who did the lynching, degrades itself to the point of protecting murderers. The ministry and members of the church, by their failure to be effective advocates of justice, compromise the church's position into practical protection to the mob members. Educational leaders, civic leaders, business men, in fact the whole community, by pretending that the lynchers cannot be identified, accommodate the community to their protection. Thus the institutions and leaders of the community become confederates in the high mockery of the court's inability to punish, and confederates in the debasement of citizenship which occurs when the mob forms, when it lynches, and when its members are allowed to go unpunished.

38. The whole region, too, pays for lynchings and mobs, for institutions which do little or nothing to punish lynchers naturally work out formulas to justify their actions, and so the wider community pays for defending mob violence. It becomes hypersensitive and resents comparisons with other areas. The result is that the majority of the people in the lynching area tend to turn from the disturbing facts of the present to the glamor of the past for status and security. And so a whole region fails to get at the fundamental causes which underlie the formation of the mob—the first and greatest factor in the lynching pattern.

Just as the community in its very being pays for the formation of the mob, it also pays for what the mob does. Financial considerations alone are far from negligible. It costs money to replace courthouses—as at Sherman, Texas, in 1930, and at Shelbyville, Tennessee, in 1934—to repair jails, to replace private property destroyed, and to maintain martial law. The financial costs are smallest where the moral costs are largest—that is, where the "best people" are the mob members.

X. THE THREAT OF LEGAL LYNCHINGS

Convinced of the terrific price which the community pays for a lynching, it is sometimes felt that lynchings should be prevented by any possible means, even to the point of legal lynching by court sentences. Such a decision was frankly acknowledged by a juryman in the Jerome Wilson case at Franklinton, Louisiana, late in 1934, when the death sentence was imposed to prevent the mob from lynching the accused and other members of his family. Subsequently the case was appealed to the State Supreme Court, and when a new trial was granted early in 1935, the mob, fearing that it might be deprived of its intended victim, took him from jail and lynched him.

A mob may make a difference in the demands and methods of the state prosecutor. At Cleveland, Bolivar County, Mississippi, in 1935, the prosecuting attorney, hearing the hundreds who stood just outside the barbed wire enclosure of the National Guard around the courthouse, picked up a burlap sack under the table and exhibited to the jury what he claimed were chunks of flesh from the body of the woman the Negro on trial was accused of having murdered. Since when have prosecuting attorneys in Mississippi, or anywhere else, needed to bring human flesh into the courtroom to convict a Negro accused of murdering a white woman? Was it not the presence of the mob which led to this ghoulish exhibition?

Even the judge sometimes feels it is his duty to recognize mob pressure. In the recent trial of John Henry Sloan, at Moultrie, Georgia, the judge is reported to have requested a promise that the defense attorney would not move for a new trial, threatening otherwise to adjourn the court immediately after the trial to prevent such a motion. The promise was refused, and two days after the trial the judge adjourned the court, contrary to his usual practice of letting the term run until it expired by law. The defendant in this case, a mental defective,[39] was sentenced to die on December 10, 1935. In the

39. The defendant's low mentality was common knowledge and, except for the fear that such testimony might have caused a lynching, numerous witnesses would have given such testimony at his trial.

The Negro threatened by a mob near Lexington, Georgia, was definitely of low mentality; said the Oglethorpe Echo, September 19, 1935: "Forbearance of the public upon apprehension of the Negro and at his trial, as commendable as it is, may be attributed to some extent to the known low mentality of the Negro. . . . He is evidently hardly of sufficient mental capacity to know right from wrong." The Negro lynched last year at Louisburg, North Carolina, was mentally deranged.

The case of John Henry Sloan, at Moultrie, Georgia, also demonstrates the cost to the community of the Negro's defenselessness. This half-witted Negro could readily be "chased like a rabbit" by white people, even white boys. Such was the case leading up to the tragedy on the night of October 16, when he shot and killed Otis Gay, a young white man. "He had borrowed a gun from a white man," runs an account of his crime, "and he was returning home down the road and was set upon and chased by some white men and boys who threw rocks and sticks at him. He was thoroughly frightened and ran as hard as he could, finally outdistancing his pursuers. About a mile farther down the road Otis Gay, the man he killed, and a girl were sitting by the side of the road. Sloan was still thoroughly frightened. As he passed the place, the man suddenly rose. Sloan thought he was about to be attacked again and being scared he raised the gun almost involuntarily and shot and killed Otis Gay."

meantime the United States District Court granted a writ of habeas corpus and the case is now pending.

It is, indeed, a question whether a community is worse off when it has a lynching and defends it, or when it prevents a threatened lynching by prostituting its citizenship and institutions to the demands of the mob. Which would have been the better, for instance, for the jury sitting on the Elwood Higginbotham case in Oxford, Mississippi, in September 1935, to have agreed that they would send Higginbotham to the electric chair in order to prevent a lynching, or to attempt, as did some of the jurors, to give a verdict on the basis of the evidence and thus to precipitate a lynching?

Seemingly, the National Guard would have been the surest way to provide protection for the prisoner when in Oxford for his trial. Many able jurists, however, maintain that it is most difficult to have a fair and impartial trial in a community where the National Guard is necessary, holding that the very necessity for the Guard indicates that the community is unable or unwilling to deal with the case judicially.

It is straining at a gnat and swallowing a camel for a community to console itself with the fact that the mob was led by the "best people" and the lynching was "orderly," or that the court officials and leading citizens prevented a lynching by promising the mob that the man would be tried immediately, sentenced to death without fail, and executed just as soon as the law would permit.

XI. SOME SUGGESTIONS

There is urgent need that effective means be worked out for the punishment of lynchers, for the constructive prevention of threatened lynchings, and especially for the eradication of lynch-bent mobs.

It is self evident from the facts presented above that a community which will have a lynching will seldom punish its lynchers, while a community which would punish lynchers will seldom need to. The punishment of lynchers, in the very nature of the case, can be realized only by applying in the local community the standards of the wider community which does not countenance lynching. This may best be effected, first, by placing the responsibility for the apprehension and arrest of lynchers in the hands of state or federal police; second, by holding the trial of the lynchers outside the affected area; third, by arranging for state or federal prosecutors to share the responsibility of the prosecution. The added cost of these services are legitimate state or federal expenditures, since neither the state nor the federal government can afford to permit the collapse of the judicial system in any local area.

The application of state or federal authority to the problem of lynching raises several interesting questions: Would the community accept the state or federal assistance, or would it pit itself against the "outside" agency attempting to administer laws out of harmony with the local ideas of justice? In short, would the activities of a state or federal agency succeed in punishing the lynchers, or would they precipitate a miniature civil war? Would an organized local opposition to "outside" prosecutions, as at Princess Anne, Maryland, in 1933, be repeated in other lynch communities under similar circumstances? Even if lynchers can be punished, will their punishment tend to reduce the violence of white people toward the Negro, or will it merely shift the plane of violence from that of lynchings to premeditated private murder, which crime would be handled by the local court? Even so, might there be some gain in shifting the violence from lynching, which is commonly condoned, to private murder, for which there is public condemnation of long standing?

There is need, too, of devising effective means by which mobs that have formed can be kept from lynching, and from dominating the courts. The first and greatest need is for adequate police service, which means state policemen with authority as state officers rather than as assistants to local peace officers, to facilitate the immediate removal of the accused to a place of safekeeping. A second need is for strong jails, equipped and manned to withstand the onslaught of a mob; they could be built at strategic points throughout the state. A third need is that the trial of the accused person be conducted outside the affected area, lest it be dominated by the mob.

More adequate police service, stronger jails, and effective court procedures can be at best only restraining factors. In the long run, the real value in punishing lynchers, and in keeping mobs which have formed from lynching, will be measured largely by their influence in preventing the formation of mobs.

The more fundamental approaches will have to do with raising community standards above the lynching level in the areas of low economic and cultural rating, while in the areas with higher wealth and cultural rating the greatest need is that responsible employment and community participation be provided for the substrata elements of the population. The economic approach, to be effective, must include the reduction of the rural handicap, which now leaves the average rural dweller at a distinct disadvantage. In most Southern communities, where the relationships of man to land have been worked out on a basis of racial factors, it seems next to impossible to correct the rural handicap without extending to Negroes as well as to whites opportunities for the ownership of productive land. So long as the vast majority of rural dwellers, white as well as Negro, are forced to fit themselves into the chronic dependency of the present farm tenant pattern, they will have little incentive to apply themselves diligently and intelligently to their agricultural tasks.

An extension of the ownership of farms would facilitate the greater participation of the people in community affairs. In a large proportion of communities with lynchings and threatened lynchings practically no Negroes vote, and in many instances less than one-sixth of the whites. With such a centralized control, it is comparatively simple and almost natural for education, health, police, and other essential public agencies to render their services with such partiality as to perpetuate the present racial and class differentials out of which lynchings naturally come.

It is necessary, too, for city dwellers to realize that the impoverishment of rural people inevitably means an increase of unemployment and decreased wages for city dwellers. It is equally important that the white man, with or without property, in town or country, understand that enforcing dependence and subservience upon the Negro means that the great majority of white people, who by the very nature of the situation are in competition with the Negro, will occupy a place but little above him.

The religious approach, too, can be productive. Many of the most outspoken enemies of lynching are editors of religious papers, denominational leaders, and ministers in the largest and wealthiest churches. These church leaders will need to devise ways of infusing their abhorrence of mob violence into the local ministers and church leadership. This is a difficult task, for the local minister is under the same pressure to conform as are local editors, bankers, educators. Church study courses, conferences, and summer schools can help churchmen understand the causes and consequences of mob outbreaks. "The pastor," said a leading Southern churchman some time ago, "in the absence of passion and excitement should instill into the minds of his hearers reverence for human life and personality and the danger and crime of mob rule."

Fundamental to all these means is the educational approach, which has the responsibility of discovering and interpreting the conditions out of which mobs arise, the facts about lynchings, and the role of peace officers, court officials, and the general public in these breakdowns of law and order. The vastness of the educational task is suggested by the fact that the typical white Southerner, even of high school and college level, still assumes that the Negro is innately inferior, that he is predisposed to commit certain crimes, that most of the persons lynched are accused of rape, and that mob violence is necessary for the protection of the white woman. It is distressing to take a poll of college seniors in some of the better schools in the South and learn that the majority of them still believe these fallacies. The approach of the Southern Association of Women for the Prevention of Lynching is strategic —Southern white women are studying the facts about lynchings and by thousands are repudiating the mob and pledging themselves to its eradication.

The teachers in elementary and high schools, no less than in colleges, can do much to break down the unfounded prejudices and fears which fire the mind of the mob. Teachers of literature and the natural sciences, as well as of the social sciences, can readily integrate into their courses the facts about the accomplishments of Negro authors, artists, athletes, educators, patriots, and scientists.

Church and school programs can be effective in proportion as they help the people of the South, Negro and white, to understand the backgrounds out of which mob violence emerges, and the good sense of correcting these conditions. The teachers and preachers of the South would do much to free the region of mob outbreaks if they could make it clear that lynching is an outgrowth not only of the South's peculiar historical past, but also of an army of dependent farm tenants, low incomes, inadequate diet, disorganized plantation economy, depleted soil, and a tangled racial situation with its threads reaching in and paralyzing every effort of the white man to raise his own status, while keeping the Negro down.

XII. FACTUAL NEWSPAPER REPORTS NEEDED

The whole educational approach to the reduction of lynching is seriously handicapped by incomplete and frequently distorted reports of why lynchings occur. There is need for factual newspaper accounts in every case.

It should be borne in mind that lynchings occur most frequently in the poorest and least populous communities, where press service is least adequate and news writers are under the greatest subjection to local opinion. The local paper, except in rare instances, does the "safe" thing: it handles the story so as to remain acceptable to the community; it withholds facts unfavorable to the lynchers and paints the person lynched as the worst possible enemy of the community.

The central press services, in turn, nearly always receive the story from a local correspondent, frequently a person identified with the home paper. The result is that distant readers, as well as those at home, usually have opportunity of reading only the pro-lyncher's explanation of the affair.

The Higginbotham case at Oxford, Mississippi, serves to emphasize the need for factual reports. Said the local weekly, the Oxford Eagle, on May 23, 1935: "Capture of Elwood Higginbotham, negro, brutal murderer of Glenn D. Roberts, was thought to be near Thursday morning. . . . The slaying of Mr. Roberts, which occurred about ten o'clock Tuesday night, has shocked the entire community. Mr. Roberts had had some difficulty with the negro a few weeks previous but nothing serious was expected when he accosted the negro, who is a tenant on the farm of Glenn Baird, a near neighbor of Mr. Roberts. However, in an argument, the nature of which has not been disclosed, Higginbotham shot Mr. Roberts in the face at close range with a shotgun killing him instantly."

The news items in the Eagle on May 30, and again those on September 12 and 19, which appeared immediately before and after Higginbotham was lynched, did not mention the well-established facts that the white man had started the trouble by driving cattle across the Negro's field; that he had armed himself and with other white men had gone to the Negro's house at night; that he had broken down an outside door to get into the hallway and then had knocked open the door of the bedroom where Higginbotham and his wife had retired, and that it was under these conditions that the Negro had shot him. When the editor of the Eagle was asked why he had not carried the actual facts, he answered frankly that he lived in Oxford, and that the race situation made it practically impossible to do so.

An Associated Press release appearing in the Montgomery Advertiser and other papers on September 18, 1935, said, ". . . . Witnesses testified at the trial that the white man was 'shot down in cold blood' when he went to Higginbotham's door to 'have a talk' with him." This story also made no mention of the unchallenged facts recited above.

Thus the people who read the Oxford Eagle and those who read the central press stories had no opportunity to know the really essential facts in this case.

On the other hand, the local paper and the press services might have carried the defense counsel's charge to the jury: "The court charges the jury for the defendant that if you believe from the evidence in this case that the deceased went to the home of the defendant on the night of the homicide and entered the home of the defendant in a rude and angry manner and then and there held a pistol pointing toward the defendant, and the defendant then and there had reasonable grounds to believe and did believe his life to be in immediate danger at the hands of the deceased, the defendant had the right to shoot and kill the deceased in his necessary self-defense, and the jury should find him not guilty." They might have included the comments of an ex-prosecutor of a near-by court, who expressed the opinion that no jury would convict the Negro on the known evidence, and that if one did the court would set aside the verdict, or an appeal to a higher court would bring a reversal. If the papers and press services had given these facts to the public, the people of Oxford, and of the South, could better have judged whether the community was protected or betrayed by the seventy-five men who smeared their faces with mud, took the law into their own hands, and lynched the accused.

In reporting the lynching of Bodie Bates at Calhoun City, Mississippi, the local paper carried the headline, "Attacker Is Hung by Mob," in spite of the fact that the Negro was accused only of threatening to break into a girl's room. The lynchings at Slayden, Wiggins, Hernando, and Columbus in Mississippi, at Franklinton, Maringouin, and Gretna in Louisiana, at Columbus in Texas, at Louisburg in North Carolina, and at Yreka in California were all reported by the local papers in routine pro-lyncher fashion—the lynching had occurred, the mob victim deserved his fate, the lynchers had expressed the will of the people.

At Fort Lauderdale, Florida, the newspaper "neither condemned nor condoned" the lynching; it merely pointed out that it had been caused by legal delay in the punishment of four other Negroes in the county. The small daily at Moultrie, Georgia, carried factual reports of the lynching of the unaccused "Bo" Brinson, but made no editorial comment. So the record shows that in seventeen out of twenty lynchings last year, the local newspapers justified or implicitly condoned them.

With the possible exception of the weekly papers of Dickson and Cheatham counties, Tennessee, the News, of Vienna, Georgia, has the distinction of being the only small town paper to speak out editorially against a local lynching in 1935. On the other hand it should be noted that the daily papers of Raleigh, Nashville, and Miami vigorously denounced the lynchings at near-by Louisburg, White Bluff, and Fort Lauderdale, and that the year's single city lynching, at Tampa, was roundly condemned by the press of that city.

Most of the larger Southern dailies are definitely committed to the eradication of lynching, and they are not without responsibility to effect some arrangement with the press bureaus by which their readers may become acquainted with what actually happens when a lynching occurs in a remote rural community, rather than being permitted to read only what the lynching element in that community wants the public to know. This could easily be done if the press bureaus, representing the South's leading newspapers, would send a special correspondent into each community where a lynching occurs or is threatened. Thus a service of the greatest importance could be rendered.

XIII. LYNCHING AND RACIAL EXPLOITATION

With most lynchings occurring in the South and the Negro, "America's tenth man," furnishing ninety per cent of the victims in recent years, one logically looks to the Southern racial situation for the underlying causes of lynchings. Formerly an instrument of popular justice in frontier communities, and still retaining something of its frontier character, lynching and the threat of it are now primarily a technique of enforcing racial exploitation—economic, political, and cultural.

Economic exploitation of the Negro by the American white man is as old and as continuous as the Negro's presence on American soil. Slavery, peonage, low wages, restricted work opportunities, and inferior educational and other public welfare facilities record his principal economic handicaps in the developing American scene.

The exploitation of the Negro extends from its broad economic base into all the vital phases of political life. State, county, and municipal governments—the legal instruments of the whites—secure more money for white schools by diverting to them a portion of the public monies which belong to the Negro. For much the same reason the Negro has poorer public health service, poorer police protection, and frequently a smaller pauper allowance or relief order. He seldom sits on a jury, and almost never has a voice in the allocation of public funds.

Most insidious of all has been the cultural exploitation of the Negro. The typical popular story, from political platform and pulpit, commonly represents him as an amiable simpleton, lacking in morals, intelligence, and ambition. Black-faced characters are good drawing cards for white audiences, perhaps because white people like to see Negroes dependent and docile, and in ridiculous roles. All this rests on certain rationalizations, chief of which is the assumption that the Negro has been ordained to a position of subservience and servitude. Thus his political impotence and economic helplessness are enforced.

The exploitation of the black folk has been something of a profession. Many business men and politicians have capitalized race prejudice to gain larger profits through lower labor costs or to make their political and institutional leadership secure. The South's Watsons, Bleases, Heflins, and Vardamans in politics and other fields have not been mental dwarfs. They saw a harvest for themselves and reaped it. The success of the professional Negrophobe has rested in no small degree upon conditions which he has been instrumental in creating and maintaining.

In most communities of the South the role of the Negro is rigorously defined. He has the poorer schools and a disproportionate share of illiteracy, fewer public health nurses and greater morbidity, fewer parks and a higher juvenile delinquency rate, smaller houses and more unmarried mothers, limited employment and longer bread lines, longer hours, smaller wages, and a higher death rate. The whites who thus define "his place" insist that he stay in it and promptly suppress any revolt against his economic dependence, political impotence, and cultural subservience.

The whole spotted fabric of lynching has one thread running through it: The Negro must be kept in his place. Lynchings and threats of violence are but the more extreme expressions of the white man's determination to continue his exploitation of the Negro, which is most thorough when the Negro knows that he chooses between subservience and annihilation. Rural whites may point out that it is about time for another lynching when they think the Negro no longer fears one.

To understand why the mob emerges most often in the rural Southern community with a low economic and cultural rank, it is well to remember that exploitation, prevalent in practically all communities, is often carried out by cruder methods in poorer communities than in richer ones. To maintain their control over Negro labor, the leading white people lynch in some communities. But it is the poorer rural whites, who live on about the same plane as the landless Negroes near-by, to whom man hunts, mock trials and lynchings prove most attractive. The racial dogma is precious to them because it is proof that they are superior. They find a welcomed reassurance in the color of their skins and the license it affords. Momentarily they escape the boredom of their restricted lives; for a time they are people of importance—they assume the role of society's protectors; they flourish weapons; they hunt down the accused; they determine his guilt; they destroy him, sometimes with protracted torture. In reality, lynchings come out of the state of mind of white people much more than out of the crimes committed by Negroes, just as witches were burned in Boston, not because there were witches in Boston but because of the state of mind of the people in Boston.

So Negroes are lynched, some accused of capital crimes, others of little or nothing. Most of the victims are hanged and then riddled with bullets, some are dismembered or burned; some of the bodies are removed at once, others are left as gory spectacles for men, women, and children to view—a topic of conversation in shop, sewing circle, and home. And native-born white lynchers, some with property and more with none, are seldom indicted and almost never convicted.

XIV. IN CONCLUSION

Local civilization has broken down when a mob forms; and there is no simple substitute for local civilization.

It should be emphasized that activities for ridding the American scene of lynching involve not only more adequate police service, stronger jails, more efficient court procedures, and the proper custodial care of mental cases. It is fundamentally important also that the poorer rural areas of the South be brought to share more equitably in the economic and cultural wealth of the nation. Any effective program must be geared to the task of lifting above the lynching level the poorest rural areas and the poorest elements in a yet larger region. In this task the county, state, and federal governments all have responsibility. It is, of course, the part of wisdom that the contributions of each be so correlated that whatever responsibility can be borne locally shall be left there. At the same time, in no instance should the local community be permitted to lynch and then protect its lynchers from punishment, and thus violate the essential nature of the state and nation of which it is a part.

OTHER BOOKS ON RACE RELATIONS

"The Tragedy of Lynching," by Arthur F. Raper. Detailed case studies of the twenty lynchings of 1930, made under auspices of Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching and published by University of North Carolina Press, 500 pages, $2.50.

"Lynchings and What They Mean," 80-page summary of findings of above study, 25 cents.

"Singers in the Dawn," a brief anthology of American Negro poetry. Sketches of forty American Negro poets, with selections from their work. Excellent for programs, classroom study, and personal use. 24 pages, 10 cents.

"The Quest for Understanding." What to teach children regarding race relations. Of special interest to teachers. 24 pages, 5 cents.

Ten assorted pamphlets—"America's Tenth Man," "Recent Trends," "Judge Lynch," "Southern Opinion," "Burnt Cork and Crime," "The Bible and Race Relations," and other titles, four to sixteen pages each. Entire assortment, 10 cents.

ORDER OF

Commission on Interracial Cooperation

710 STANDARD BUILDING

ATLANTA, GA.

MORE MONEY FOR YOU?

YOUR RIGHTS UNDER THE MINIMUM WAGE LAW

Labor Program
The Southern Regional Council
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia 30303

THE UNITED
BANK

We have a new federal law that may mean more pay for you.

It is called the Fair Labor Standards Act, or the Minimum Wage Law.

You should know what the new Fair Labor Standards Act says about your job.

You should know what to do to get the wages the law says you are supposed to get.

Read this pamphlet for more information. See the back of this pamphlet for the name of someone to help you.

$ 40 a week pay

8 A.M – 12:00
1 P.M – 5:00 = 8 hrs. a day

½ hr. change clothes and clean up = 8½ hrs. a day work 5 days a week X5

42½ hrs. a week

$.94 an hour

42½ hrs. work | $40 a week pay

How much is your weekly pay before deductions?

If you don't know for sure, ask your boss.

How many hours a week do you work?

When you figure your hours count in —

- time to change your clothes where you work if you are required to wear a uniform or work clothes
- time to get your work ready
- time to clean up your work
- time spent doing errands for the boss even if it is on your lunch hour.

Now divide the hours you work into your weekly pay (before overtime is figured).

The figure you get is your hourly rate.

If your pay is less than $1 an hour—or if your pay is exactly $1.25 an hour—

you may be entitled to a raise in your hourly rate.

If you work more than 44 hours in a week or if you work more than 40 hours in a week you may be entitled to overtime pay.

Does your son work in the kitchen of a big restaurant?

Are you a porter in a school?

Does your sister or daughter work in a laundry or dry cleaners?

Is your wife a cook in a hospital?

Anybody who has a job in any of these places probably should be earning at least

$1 an hour for 44 hours in a week and at least

$1.50 an hour for all hours over 44 hours.

If you already earn more than $1.00 an hour, you should earn time and a half (one and a half times your regular rate) for hours over 44 anyway.

If you work on:

A big farm that has at least 7 or 8 regular full time workers during the season or

A big motel or hotel

then you probably should earn at least $1.00 an hour, but the law does not require overtime pay.

Here are some places where you probably should earn at least $1 an hour for 44 hours plus time and a half for hours over 44 —

Construction company

Big Retail store

Big drug store

Big automobile, trailer, farm implement dealer

Big gas station

Bank

BEFORE $1.25 ⟶ NOW $1.40

and

FOR ALL HOURS OVER 40 HOURS

$2.10 an hour

Maybe you have been earning $1.25 an hour or more for some time now.

If so, that may mean that you were covered by the Minimum Wage Law before, and beginning February, 1967, you should be given a raise.

You should now get at least $1.40 an hour for 40 hours work in a week
and at least
$2.10 an hour for all hours over 40 hours.

Do you work in a —

Bus company?

Department store?

Road repair crew?

Railroad station?

Wholesale company?

Big gas station?

If you do, and that job paid $1.25 an hour for 40 hours before February, 1967 —

then probably after February, you should earn at least $1.40 an hour plus time and a half (at least $2.10) for overtime.

If you are a woman worker—and if you get paid less than the men for the same work—

you may be entitled to earn as much as they do.

If your boss employs school children during school hours—or if children are doing dangerous work even after school or in the summer—
this may be against the law

If your boss sells to the federal government or works for the government—you are protected by the minimum wage law.

notice to employees
THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT (FEDERAL WAGE-HOUR LAW)
A MINIMUM WAGE
$1.40 an hour
OVERTIME PAY 40
1 1/2
A MINIMUM WAGE
$1.00
OVERTIME PAY
44
1 1/2
NOTE:

Does your place of work have a big brown and white sign that says—

NOTICE TO EMPLOYEES

THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT REQUIRES . . .

Read the sign. You may find that you or someone you know is entitled to be paid more than he now gets.

If you think you are not getting the right amount — here is what you should do.

Tell somebody in the group that gave you this pamphlet

Or write a letter or a postcard to the Wage and Hour Division of the U. S. Department of Labor nearest to you.

Or telephone the Wage and Hour
Division

Or go to the Wage and Hour Division yourself.

The people at the Wage and Hour Division will NOT tell your name to anybody.

You have a right to ask for help.

Your boss can NOT fire you for asking.

The addresses and phone numbers you need are on the back page of this booklet.

THE UNITED
BANK

The Wage and Hour Division will give you a report in a month or so.

If you are getting the right amount already, they will explain to you why you are not entitled to more.

If your boss has not been paying you the right amount, then he will have to begin to pay you the legal rate that you are supposed to get.
Also he may have to pay you back the extra amount that you were supposed to get for the whole time that you were underpaid

So you see, it is really worthwhile to ask.

If you have any questions about this get in touch with:

Price .15
0-50cc .10
50 or More .08

February, 1967

NEIGHBORHOODS

WHERE HUMAN RELATIONS BEGIN

A STUDY OF RESIDENTIAL PATTERNS IN PHILADELPHIA, WASHINGTON, D.C. & BALTIMORE

This study was prepared by Mrs. Margaret Price, formerly an Atlanta newspaperwoman, who now resides in Washington. Mrs. Price has prepared a number of research reports for SRC, primarily in the area of registration and voting.

"Where, after all, do universal human rights begin? In small places, close to home — so close and so small that they cannot be seen on any map of the world. Yet they are the world of the individual person: the neighborhood he lives in; the school or college he attends; the factory, farm or office where he works. Such are the places where every man, woman and child seeks equal justice, equal opportunity, equal dignity without discrimination. Unless these rights have meaning there, they have little meaning anywhere. Without concerted citizen action to uphold them close to home, we shall look in vain for progress in the larger world."

— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt

NEIGHBORHOODS

WHERE HUMAN RELATIONS BEGIN

Single copy .50¢; Bulk copies .40¢ each.
Southern Regional Council, 5 Forsyth St., N.W., Atlanta, Ga. 30303
February, 1967.

FOREWORD

One stubborn citizen, with a generous endowment of energy and intelligence, can involve his neighborhood and sometimes his city in a drive to prove that interracial housing works.

Across the nation such individuals have sparked moves to encourage white citizens to stand firm, and not to panic, when the first Negroes move into their neighborhood.

Most of these efforts have been in old, established sections of central cities, often the only neighborhoods open to Negroes. Cut off from white suburbs by overt and subtle prejudices, they have to buy houses where they can.

Their desperate need for housing often is exploited by unscrupulous real estate dealers, who in turn encourage and play upon the fear of white residents in a changing neighborhood. In such cases only the dealers profit, for the white home owner in his fright sells low and the Negro in his desperation buys high.

Where white residents decide to fight the panic-peddlers they can find allies among the Negroes who have bought homes. They also want to protect their investment. They know the speculators can turn single family homes into rooming houses, crowd three families into a house built for one, slip through variances in the zoning code, and in time turn the neighborhood into a slum.

Every city in the country with a sizeable Negro population knows something of such pressures and faces the prospect of one mid-city neighborhood after another turning into a racial ghetto. The supply of decent housing available to Negroes has not begun to keep pace with their increase and the shortage will become even worse if present population trends continue.

Figures obtained for Congressional Quarterly by the Center for Research in Marketing predict that by 1970 at least 14 big cities in the United States will have Negro populations of 40 percent or more. A majority of the population in Washington, D.C., already is Negro and three other cities are expected to top the 50 percent mark. The projections show that by 1970 the following 37 cities (100,000 population or more) will be 30 percent or more Negro:

	% Negro 1960	% Negro 1970		% Negro 1960	% Negro 1970
Washington, D.C.	54	68	Winston-Salem, N.C.	37	34
Richmond, Va.	42	51	Jackson, Miss.	34	34
Compton, Calif.	39	51	Newport News, Va.	34	34
Gary, Ind.	39	50	Savannah, Ga.	36	33
Jacksonville, Fla.	41	47	Mobile, Ala.	33	33
Baltimore, Md.	35	47	Montgomery, Ala.	35	32
Detroit, Mich.	29	47	Portsmouth, Va.	34	32
Newark, N.J.	34	46	Baton Rouge, La.	30	32
St. Louis, Mo.	29	46	Philadelphia, Pa.	26	32
New Orleans, La.	37	45	Camden, N.J.	23	32
Nashville, Tenn.	38	43	Chicago, Ill.	23	32
Trenton, N.J.	23	42	Columbus, Ohio	16	32
Birmingham, Ala.	40	40	Cincinnati, Ohio	22	31
Shreveport, La.	35	40	Berkeley, Calif.	20	31
Atlanta, Ga.	38	39*	Beaumont, Tex.	29	30
Memphis, Tenn.	37	39	Greensboro, N. C.	26	30
Oakland, Calif.	23	39	Dayton, Ohio	22	30
Chattanooga, Tenn.	33	38	Saginaw, Mich.	17	30
Cleveland, Ohio	29	38

These changes are part of a trend that has accelerated since World War II. The Negro population once was largely southern and rural. The mechanization of farms and the hope for better futures sent Negroes into the great urban centers. At the same time, white families began leaving the cities, lured by the easy mortgage money available on the new suburban houses, the chance to have a yard, and better schools for the children. New express highways and money to buy a car made commuting easy. Their tax dollars, of course, went with them.

Negroes moving into the cities from the rural South often lacked the skills and the education which would have allowed them to compete in the job market; many of those otherwise qualified were barred by prejudice from good jobs and homes.

Cities have faced mounting welfare costs when they could least afford them. Schools have become overcrowded and resegregated. The bright promises which attracted so many Negro families failed to materialize. The resulting tensions, hatred, and bitterness led to riots over a score of cities in the summer of 1966 alone.

*A publication of the Atlanta Region Metropolitan Planning Commission dated April 1, 1966, establishes a percentage of 44.4 Negro population for the corporate limits of Atlanta as of 1966.

Middle income Negroes who could afford a decent house found the doors to suburbia closed, or open so small a crack they were afraid to take a chance and subject themselves and their families to rebuffs, or even violence.

Many northern cities have laws outlawing discrimination in public accommodations, schools, employment, and housing. These are good as a first step but too often the laws have too many loopholes, the penalties are too weak, or the enforcement agencies too understaffed to depend on these alone to solve the problems of discrimination. The federal government, through its vast powers and money, undoubtedly will have to play an increasingly large role in ensuring equal treatment for all.

The federal government, too, will have to help cities meet their other vast needs, for rapid transportation, low cost housing, mortgage guarantees for renewal and new construction for parks, civic centers and other amenities, if the deterioration of cities is to be halted.

But, until the day when cities have the plans and the money in hand to revitalize, what happens? Do the ghettos spread inexorably? The lucky cities have a band of Negro and white citizens already working to stem the tide.

This is a report of three such groups — in Philadelphia, Washington, and Baltimore — selected to illustrate different approaches of varying scope. This brief account of the structure and activities of the three was written not for the social scientist or intergroup specialists but to suggest to men and women who live in cities, or who would like to return, some methods they might use to save a neighborhood and perhaps a city.

Each group knows that no single neighborhood can stem forever the tide of encroaching ghettos, tightly hemmed in by all-white suburbs. They know they are a holding action until citizens and their governments — city, state, and national — act to relieve the pressures.

When that day comes, groups such as these will offer a nucleus of goodwill and experience upon which to build the open city of the American promise.

WEST MT. AIRY NEIGHBORS — Philadelphia

Last year, a California analytical firm submitted a $34,000 report on the schools in the Germantown section of Philadelphia. It recommended a major overhaul of the system, to stem the flight of whites to the suburbs and halt the trend which was turning Germantown into "a poverty-stricken Negro ghetto."

The report advocated a system of four-year schools divided into elementary, middle, and high school levels with a central facility where all pupils below the ninth grade would be bussed for special classes a half day each week. Estimated cost of the program was $36.7 million.

The central facility would be integrated. The other middle and elementary schools, presumably, would be predominantly white or Negro because of residential patterns. After all, Germantown was not yet ready for total integration, the analysts reasoned, and would have to begin slowly at the central building where "this confrontation under a controlled situation can reach the unconscious prejudices."

After the report, which was financed by a foundation grant, was submitted to the school board, survey analysts appeared at an open meeting to explain the details to Germantown citizens. An audience of 150, about equally divided between white and Negro parents, heard an explanation of the plan, which was well drawn and impressively buttressed with statistics.

Ordinarily, such an audience might be expected either to listen with a degree of gratitude and acquiescence, or to object with sincere, if somewhat muddleheaded, emotion.

This, however, was not an ordinary audience. If the report had been tossed into a buzz-saw it could not have been torn apart more effectively.

This could have been foreseen, for a large number of those in the audience were from the West Mt. Airy section of Germantown and belonged to the West Mt. Airy Neighbors Association. Members of this group tend to be both articulate and well-informed. They had done their homework and for every statistic which indicated that Germantown citizens weren't ready for interracial schools and neighborhoods, they could present a counter statistic.

The West Mt. Airy representatives, in short, were not impressed. When a vice president of the analytical firm said the ghetto prediction was made on "statistics nationally," the West Mt. Airy residents made it clear they did not fit the pattern.

The majority from West Mt. Airy felt the school board should spend its time and money in improving the existing school system. They argued that imaginative programs to foster excellence in each school would encourage white parents to return or stay in the city.

As for the central facility idea, a mother of three children who attend a West Mt. Airy elementary school summed up: "It is, after all the frills are removed, a weekly field trip where all races sit around for a few hours painting pictures or weaving place mats!"

West Mt. Airy is well beyond that stage.

The central facility plan has been shelved.

The Community

What kind of a place is West Mt. Airy and what were some of the facts citizens cited to disprove the contention that once Negroes move into an area it is on a downhill path?

First, West Mt. Airy is a fortunate community. Measured by most national and city standards, it is above average. To illustrate, the 1960 census showed that West Mt. Airy had:

A population of 15,735, living in 5,045 households, showing little change from 1950, in contrast to other old Philadelphia sections which had substantial population losses.

Twenty-one percent of the population, and 16 percent of the households, were nonwhite.

Total population was almost evenly divided between those under 40 and those above. Among whites, however, 55 percent were over 40 and of these 30 percent were 60 years or over. Only 19 percent of the nonwhites were 40 to 60 years of age, and only seven percent were 60 or older. This meant there were more school age children among the younger Negro families.

Of 4,000 West Mt. Airy families for whom the 1960 census had data, 21 percent had incomes under $5,000, 40 percent between $5,000 and $10,000 and 39 percent above $10,000. This was well above the citywide rate — 39 percent with incomes under $5,000 and only 14 percent above $10,000.

Twenty-four percent of the population over 25 years of age had completed college; the proportion was exactly the same for whites and Negroes.

Twenty-eight percent of all men were in the professional category, 16 percent were managers or proprietors. Among nonwhite males, 22 percent were professionals and among nonwhite females, 24 percent.

Eighty percent of the households had cars, compared to 56 percent for the city; 17 percent had two cars, and three percent had three or more.

Fifty-four percent of the whites and 79 percent of the Negroes owned their homes. Citywide, the rate was 68 percent for whites and 43 percent for Negroes.

Sixty-three percent of the residences were one family houses, about a third of these detached and the rest row houses or twins, as semi-detached houses are called in Philadelphia.

The average number of persons per household was small — four persons for nonwhites and three for whites.

Values of the owner-occupied houses had remained stable, despite a tremendous volume of new housing in the city and suburbs, with the average price about the same in 1960 as in 1950. About 25 percent of the houses were valued by their owners at under $10,000 and 36 percent at $15,000 or more.

Physically, West Mt. Airy lives up to its boast of being a "Green Country Town in Philadelphia." Its 1,100 acres, or 150 city blocks, are bounded on two sides and partially bisected by a vast park and stream valley belt of 1,385 acres. Stone walls and a few towers marking the site of colonial mills and several old buildings survive from the eighteenth century but an enlightened city, beginning in 1873, returned most of the parkland to its original wilderness state for public enjoyment.

One of the oldest homes in West Mt. Airy is Upsala, an outstanding example of Federal architecture built in 1798. Beginning early in the 19th century, prosperous Philadelphians built large estates and summer homes there and in 1884 the Chestnut Hill branch of the Pennsylvania railroad was extended to serve them. Many of these big, old houses remain, surrounded by large lawns and adjoining smaller houses gradually built over a period of 50 or 60 years. Only about 10 percent of the houses were built in the past 20 years. The typical house is built of native stone.

A West Mt. Airy Neighbors brochure describes the area today: "The early farmhouses contrast with Sir Walter Scott Gothic, stock-brokers' Tudor and Cape May gingerbread . . . as became the fashion of the '80's and '90's. The solid stone twins with the sunparlor identify the blocks built in the early 20th century and the completion of row houses filled in much of the remaining open areas."

West Mt. Airy is a short ride to downtown Philadelphia, by commuter train, trolley, bus, or car. Sports facilities, including tennis courts and golf courses, and supervised playgrounds are in or near West Mt. Airy. It is next to Chestnut Hill, as fashionable in-town as the Main Line in the suburbs.

Until the 1950's, this was a settled neighborhood of stable population and property values. It was also a white neighborhood, except for one pocket of Negro families who had lived in the area for years.

Change

Then, change came to West Mount Airy. Housing tastes shifted and there was less demand for the big, old houses. Residents faced the prospect of seeing some of these converted to apartments, rooming houses, or commercial purposes.

Other forces in the city at large threatened the stability of West Mt. Airy. The white population in Philadelphia was dropping as the Negro population increased, from 380,000, or 18 percent of the total, in 1950 to 535,000, or 27 percent, in 1960. Instead of new housing for this increase, the housing market available to Negroes was shrinking. Big urban renewal projects made scant provision for the displaced poor and an estimated 71.7 percent of those forced to move were unable to find decent housing. In one such project slums were razed to make way for a middle class housing development and 20,000 poor were displaced; the majority had to move into houses as bad, if not worse, than those from which they had been evicted. At the same time, the white exodus from the city was eased by the federal government. White couples, some of whom might have preferred to stay in the city, found they could buy homes in the suburbs with small cash down payments and mortgages underwritten by the Federal Housing Authority or Veterans Administration. This massive aid to the new suburban housing market had a side effect in the city, depressing the value of old houses there to a point where banks were reluctant to issue VA or FHA mortgages.

Negroes did not have the choice of moving to the suburbs. Both Pennsylvania and the city of Philadelphia have fair housing laws, but they exempt owner-occupied one and two-family houses and 61 percent of the houses in Philadelphia fall in this category. Negroes who could afford to buy a house had only a restricted choice. Inevitably, West Mount Airy, with big old houses for which there was a limited market, would be considered by Negroes who wanted to get away from the overcrowded mid-city districts.

One Negro family had bought a home in West Mount Airy in 1951; it was more than a year later that a second Negro family bought there. By the end of 1955, 46 nonwhite families had purchased homes and by 1958 the Negro population had increased to 12 percent. Most of the Negroes tended to cluster on certain blocks.

Two groups meanwhile had begun thinking something should be done to ease the transition period and guard against panic by homeowners — the Churches Community Council and the Allens Lane Art Center. The latter operated one of the first integrated day camps in the city and had made it clear that its recreational and cultural events were open to all. Beginning in 1956 the Churches Community Council sponsored a series of meetings to discuss "How to Maintain Real Estate Values and the High Standards of Our Neighborhoods." These two organizations, by having begun discussions early on the problems of changing neighborhoods, provided a nucleus of citizens for the later group which would work for orderly change.

Meanwhile, the concern of some homeowners over the influx of Negro families was heightened when the school board, in a redistricting move to ease the plight of some badly overcrowded schools, sent Negro children from nearby areas to West Mount Airy's Henry Elementary School. Almost overnight, the school became predominantly Negro. A few more houses went up for sale. Many white parents switched their children from public to private schools. Blockbusting speculators moved on the area, in the familiar pattern.

WMAN

West Mount Airy was fortunate in having George Schermer as one of its residents. In 1958, Schermer, then chairman of the Philadelphia Commission on Human Relations, invited several residents to his home to discuss neighborhood changes. Out of this initial meeting in the Schermer living room grew West Mount Airy Neighbors, Inc. (WMAN), formed early in 1959.

From the start, Schermer suggested that the organization concentrate, not on racial stabilization, but on making West Mount Airy so attractive residents would not want to leave. Schermer felt the most important asset was a sense of community and that this should be promoted by a series of activities. He advised against programs which would suggest a fight against panic, or the posting of signs "This House Not For Sale," which he thought would be as bad as having "For Sale" signs. Members agreed and this emphasis on the attractions of the community has been the guiding principle since.

Almost casually, one of the attractions promoted is the demonstrable fact that different races can live together harmoniously.

WMAN did not ignore the existence of racial problems, however. A few blocks in the area were near a panic state and WMAN sponsored block meetings to discuss racial changes, property values, and blockbusting.

Along with George Schermer, West Mount Airy had one other big asset from the start — Mrs. Beatrice Chernak, principal of the Henry Elementary School, which serves most of the children in West Mt. Airy. She was appointed principal in 1957 when many parents already had removed their children and sent them to private schools and others were talking of doing the same thing; morale in the school was slipping badly. Mrs. Chernak was determined Henry School would be a good one, an asset to the community. She had strong allies in the Home and School Association of Henry School (this is structured under the Board of Education and works somewhat as a Parent Teacher Association elsewhere). WMAN gave active support to Mrs. Chernak and the Association.

Night after night Mrs. Chernak met with small groups of parents to convince them that they should keep their children in Henry School, that school standards would not be lowered. She convinced many. She helped direct Home and School Association meetings under psychiatric leadership where Negro and white parents could voice their fears of living together and sending their children to the same school.

Throughout, Mrs. Chernak has been one of WMAN's strongest props. Today, she is a legend in the area. She visits or calls new families in the area to invite them to send their children to Henry School. One of the favorite stories about her is that she has been known to look out her office window, see a young woman obviously about to become a mother and then dash out, hand extended, to say, "Come in, dear. I know you will want to see the school your child will attend."

Last year, the Philadelphia Inquirer called Henry "one of the most exciting schools in town," with a good library and art and music courses augmenting above average scholastic courses.

More young white families are moving into the area, with their school age children; these and the white children who are now returning from private to public school boosted the 1966 white enrollment at Henry to 31 percent.

Whites make up a much larger percentage of the general population — 75 percent — but many of these are older families with children now grown.

Activities

One of WMAN's early decisions, which has contributed greatly to its success, was the decision to hire a part time executive secretary. Mrs. Ruth Steele has held this post for the past four years. She operates from an office in her home in West Mount Airy, coordinating WMAN activities of over 800 members. WMAN has always been self-sustaining, deriving income from contributions and dues — $5 annually for families — and occasional fund raising events.

WMAN's greatest resource is a body of intelligent men and women, Negro and white, who like their neighborhood and intend to keep it a pleasant place. By now, they have enough experience to allow them to move quickly to block any change which threatens the residential pattern.

One committee keeps an eye on zoning. Every request for variance is scrutinized carefully and then WMAN decides whether to support or oppose. Their record is notable; in one area, zoning requirements were upgraded and the minimum allowable lot size was increased.

Currently, they are working with three other organizations in surrounding neighborhoods on long range plans for a survey of the area's commercial district, hoping that eventually they can apply for city funds for renovations and a public parking lot.

Another group works on preserving and improving the physical appearance of the neighborhood and keeps a close watch for violations of city sanitation codes. A collection from members and commuters financed planting, grass cutting, and flower pots at the three railroad stops the past two years; this Christmas wreaths will brighten the stations. This group also has persuaded the railroad company to start work on major repairs to walkways and approaches to the stations.

WMAN was instrumental in the passage of a city ordinance limiting the display of "For Sale" or "Sold" signs to seven days after an agreement of sale has been signed.

The Real Estate Practices Committee has obtained the signatures of more than 30 real estate brokers to a code of ethics which commits them to a promise to refrain from panic peddling and pressure tactics. In return, WMAN steers potential customers to these brokers. Mrs. Steele maintains a list and, on a rotating basis, recommends these brokers. Some of these now go out of their way to encourage sales to white families.

Occasionally, an unethical broker will solicit houses to sell, but WMAN is ready. Members are asked to report such approaches to the central office and then circulate a "Don't Call Us—We'll Call You" form. This informs the broker the property is not for sale, nor is other nearby property (space is provided for signatures and addresses of neighbors). The broker is asked to refrain from further solicitation and told that a second approach will be reported to the Pennsylvania Real Estate Commission as a violation of that body's regulations.

Property values now are stable and houses range in price from about $10,000 to $100,000, with a few even higher.

A Community Relations Committee tries to anticipate trouble and where necessary moves swiftly to meet it, providing leadership and guidance to blocks at the first hint of panic.

After some complaints of youths loitering, racing cars and motorcycles in one area, the Recreation Committee talked with the boys and found they not only needed something to do in their spare time but that they wanted to earn pocket money. A youth employment service was set up and one housewife now acts as a clearing house for teen-agers who want odd jobs and residents who need help in yard work, baby sitting, and other chores. The committee also has sponsored teen-age dances every other week at a school. Members are now trying to acquire land for a community swimming pool.

A public relations committee promotes West Mount Airy as an attractive place to live. A brochure detailing the advantages of the area has been widely circulated, through company personnel offices, churches, and clubs. A well-publicized House Tour each spring spotlights the diversity of the area: homes shown have ranged from a converted, 200-year-old weaver's cottage and a remodeled carriage house and stable, to a Victorian house and a contemporary rambler.

Favorable publicity resulted from a square dance held one year for Philadelphia's foreign students and from the entertainment another year of the families of 60 United Nations employees invited from New York for a typical American weekend. West Mount Airy also has an amateur theatrical group and Allens Lane Art Center provides a series of cultural events.

Each year WMAN gives an annual community service award. Several years ago this went to the officers and men of the 14th Police Precinct for their "tireless service and helpful friendliness."

Today

West Mount Airy Neighbors believes the hardest part is over, although there still are some problems, and the area could backslide. As Mrs. Steele puts it, "A certain amount of continuing vigilante work is necessary."

There has been some slight expansion of the housing market available to middle income Negroes, both in the city and in the suburbs, thanks to the work of other fair housing groups. This has eased the pressure for additional houses for Negroes somewhat in areas such as West Mount Airy.

Mrs. Steele said there is a creeping ghetto on the first blocks off the main commercial street, in an area of small row houses, and that WMAN "is not reaching them" and must try to develop greater contact. In another area of row houses where two white ethnic groups are concentrated, desegregation is being accepted calmly, in part due to the active role of their church.

Mortgage money has been no problem. Also, some houses have been sold by Negroes to whites. In one instance, a Negro bought a house for $22,000 and then, two years later when he moved from the city, sold it to a white family for $26,000.

The upper grades of the area school are more predominantly Negro than the lower, indicating that a better racial balance is in view.

A more personal measure of WMAN's racial climate was the reaction to the recent arrival of one Negro family. This family had moved into a housing development in a white Philadelphia suburb several years ago. They were met with such violence that the Governor had to call out the National Guard to restore order. After the Guard was withdrawn the family continued to be subjected to harassment and threats which never stopped in the years they lived there. Finally, this year the family gave up. They bought a home in West Mount Airy.

When a reporter heard of this he talked to Mrs. Steele and neighbors; all reacted in the same way: leave them alone, they have had enough trouble. The reporter agreed and as a result newspapers merely carried a few paragraphs that the much publicized family finally had been hounded out of their suburb and had moved into West Mount Airy — they did not pinpoint the street.

Mrs. Steele said West Mt. Airy residents do not believe in effusive greetings and the "brotherhood bit" delivered along with a plate of cookies. So, she and a number of other women wrote notes saying simply, in effect, welcome, we are pleased to have you in the neighborhood. The young wife replied in a note with one line Mrs.

Steele and WMAN members will long remember. It is wonderful, she said, to be able at last to wheel my baby carriage in front of my house without fear my baby will be spat upon.

The Future

Two years ago Matthew Bullock, Jr., WMAN's first Negro president, in his annual report said, "In a sense, the first phase of our organization's life is over. We have put out the fires we were created to combat. I do not mean that negative pressures on the area have ceased completely, but our handling of them has become routine." Then he went on to chart the future course:

"We shall, of course, continue our established activities and will become increasingly involved in the municipal planning for the Germantown area. More important, however, in a society which is turbulent with change in the area of human relations, our organization and our community are in the vanguard. We have already learned many lessons that many communities have not yet even faced. It is a fascinating fact that civil rights issues have inevitably raised a variety of positive issues. You can't look at school integration without looking at the whole problem of manpower utilization. Similarly, you can't look at integration of neighborhoods without questioning the meaning of community. The elimination of fear opens new horizons in human experience.

"In a society characterized too much by personal alienation, the recognition of other human beings, however different, as a spiritual resource is increasing. This is at once an individual and a social awakening. I have been impressed with the number of people whom I have met who speak of West Mt. Airy as though the community has nurtured a kind of vital spark within them. We do have a special atmosphere or flavor, call it what you will, that intensifies our feeling of humanity . . . In our nation in which there is so much talk of the 'Great Society,' West Mt. Airy is progressing toward the 'Great Community' . . ."

NEIGHBORS, INC. — Washington, D.C.

Eight years ago a small Washington group called Neighbors, Inc., set out to prove that a racial balance could be struck in at least one neighborhood of the nation's capital.

Born amid near panic and facing formidable odds, NI proceeded with a special sense of urgency, knowing that success or failure would have wide significance. With Washington acquiring a growing number of new African embassies particularly sensitive to discrimination and with a large foreign press corps which looked on race as one of the big, and discrediting, stories in the United States, the NI experiment was close at hand for easy observation.

NI also could not escape the attention of the President and the Congress. In time it offered evidence that no single neighborhood can survive indefinitely as a racially unrestricted showplace surrounded by a growing nonwhite population forced to live in overcrowded ghettos.

Today, the schools and some streets in the once all-white section served by NI have a larger Negro school population than either white or Negro families would like. However, the panic that followed the first large inflow of Negroes in the mid-1950's has subsided and racial transition has been slowed. The NI community is one of the few desirable ones in the Washington area into which Negroes can move without fear of humiliating rebuff from white neighbors. Some white families also have been moving into the area, although at a slower pace than Negro families. The latest census tract figures available for the four sections of the NI territory showed that in 1964 the nonwhite population was 7.5 percent in Shepherd Park, 36.2 in Takoma, 7.8 in Brightwood and 64.9 in Manor Park.

But, what does this mean in human terms?

"When all this started," one white housewife told a reporter, "we were looked upon as very suspect. Now, I think, integration is no longer a dirty word here."

"We're not idealists, just practical people," another commented. "Me, I love this neighborhood. The people are stimulating. I've lived here for 15 years, and I intend to stay. Integration is happening; I'm accepting it."

A Negro father who moved into the neighborhood when he couldn't buy a house near the Virginia school where he teaches is sure that "my kids won't grow up hating all white kids as I did when I was growing up in the South."

District of Columbia

A judgment on whether NI is a success can be made only against an awareness of the tremendous pressures for Negro housing in Washington and of the problems unique to the District of Columbia.

The 1960 census listed a 54 percent nonwhite population for Washington, the first large city in the nation with a Negro majority. By 1966 the percentage had risen to 63 percent and school enrollment was 90.8 percent Negro.

However, the nonwhite proportion of the population of metropolitan Washington, which includes Maryland and Virginia suburbs, has remained constant at between 25 and 30 percent since 1860. The difference is that of today's 25 percent Negro population, four of five live in the District. Only 6.1 percent of the suburban population is nonwhite.

Between 1950 and 1960 the white population of the District dropped by one-third, while the white population in the surrounding suburbs increased 91 percent.

The central city of Washington contains 61 square miles, less than five percent of the standard metropolitan area, and had a 1960 population of 763,956. The remaining 1,237,941 metropolitan area residents lived on 1,424 suburban square miles.

White residents driving from their offices to homes in the Maryland and Virginia suburbs or in Washington west of Rock Creek Park see only comfortable, predominantly white neighborhoods. The average tourist in Washington, on his rounds between his hotel and federal landmarks of the picture postcards, also sees little of the "other Washington."

Periodically, residents are shocked out of their complacency by newspaper reports of a city they rarely see. One such report summarized a 1966 housing study by the National Capital Planning Commission which found:

> Forty-one percent of Washington's population lives in inadequate housing — a total of 103,000 households with 299,800 persons. This covered 81,000 individuals in houses which were overcrowded, 104,700 in those which were substandard, and 114,000 in those which were too costly, taking more than 25 percent of the householder's income.
>
> Subsidized dwellings are needed for 37 percent of Washington's population. At present, public and other subsidized housing is available to 6 percent.
>
> Nearly one-fourth of the District's population lives in "abject poverty — the lowest form of deprivation."

"The poor are being squeezed by . . . growing low income housing demand, rising housing costs and diminishing supply of housing available to them . . . Conditions of housing occupied by the poor are worsening, and the poor are being shifted geographically. As a result, other neighborhoods are declining rapidly. In short, slums are being shifted with low income families."

Housing problems in Washington do not all center on the Negro poor. There are 104,000 low income white individuals, many of whom also need assistance.

And, there are Negroes who can afford decent housing, but find a large portion of the market closed to them. The National Capital Planning Commission reported there is an affluent group in Washington of 93,500 white persons and 23,800 Negroes. In the middle and lower income groups are almost the same number of persons of both races — 120,000 whites and 124,800 Negroes.

In the 1950-60 decade, nonwhites were sold 2.2 percent of the metropolitan area's new houses and rented less than one-tenth of the area's new rental units, according to figures released by the Civil Rights Commission following a hearing on Washington housing problems in 1962.

The Metropolitan Washington Housing Program has estimated that "if some 4,000 Negro families were to settle in the suburbs each year, with the area's rapid growth this would merely continue the present ratio within the District." An estimated 300 Negro families moved into predominantly white Maryland and Virginia suburban developments in a two year period ended in 1965. There are now a scattering of new, predominantly Negro housing tracts opening in the suburbs.

All of these pressures have a profound impact on a central city section such as the one covered by Neighbors, Inc.

NI Territory

Neighbors, Inc., is concerned with an area of 250 city blocks in the northern section of the District, east of Rock Creek Park and running into the Maryland border on the north. Some 50,000 live here, in four neighborhoods — Brightwood and Manor Park in the south, Takoma and Shepherd Park on the north. There are about 8,000 houses, with a wide range in price, from blocks of small $15,000 houses to others where some prices run over $100,000. A majority of the houses are owner occupied. Most of the 6,100 rental units are in apartments, where the median rent is about $100.

The architecture is indeterminate for the most part but houses tend to look solid and pleasant on tree-lined streets. The predominant impression, except in the most expensive sections, is of comfort rather than style.

A few Negroes moved into the area after the Supreme Court held in 1948 that restrictive covenants are not enforceable by the courts. (Such covenants in wills or deeds provided that certain property could be sold only to Caucasians.) By the mid-1950's Negroes, desperately in need of housing, were moving in at a rapid pace; white families were fleeing, and the real estate speculators and blockbusters were working in force. Many of the long-time residents had been convinced that in a year or two the area would be all Negro.

Marvin and Naomi Caplan and their three children were one of the few white families to move into the area in 1957, when they bought a house in Manor Park. They liked the spaciousness of their house, the convenience of city living, and wanted their children to grow up in an integrated neighborhood. Before long, they wondered if they would be the last white family on the block.

Caplan, then a reporter, decided to act. His first idea of working through an exciting civic organization was abandoned, for the group was apathetic on the issue of orderly racial transition but adamant on its stand against Negro members. He did, though, persuade the organization to schedule a meeting to discuss neighborhood change. Few members attended, but 75 other white and Negro residents did. After hearing a talk by a member of a Philadelphia stabilization group, a third of those present decided to set up a similar organization.

Quite early, Caplan and others to whom he had talked decided it would be impossible to try to stabilize only their own neighborhood of Manor Park and so included the three adjoining neighborhoods in their plans. The small group drafted a statement of purpose and announced a public meeting would be held in a church. At this June, 1958, meeting, attended by 100 residents, Neighbors, Inc., was organized.

Caplan, in a statement at a hearing on housing in Washington held by the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights in April, 1962, explained the thinking behind NI:

"Our formation in June, 1958, was an act of resolution and despair. Those of us who came together, colored and white, were dismayed at the bitterness, tension, and often insane behavior that attended the entrance of Negro families into what had formerly been an all-white neighborhood. We were sure there had to be a more sensible alternative to the prevailing pattern of entrance, panic, and flight. We were united in our resolve to try to establish a neighborhood in which people of different races could at least talk to each other and work together on common problems . . ."

Block Meetings

In the first months, NI, with neither staff nor money, concentrated on the most urgent problem, halting the panic selling of white residents. The area was then about 25 percent Negro, but white families moving out were being replaced almost solely by Negro families. All homeowners suffered in the exchange, with white families selling at below market prices, Negro families buying at an inflated price and the speculators pocketing the difference.

NI founders began a series of block meetings, concentrating particularly on the streets where a new Negro family had moved. This involved finding a sympathetic resident who knew many of his neighbors and who was willing to sponsor a meeting, preferably in his home. The block meetings were kept small and one of the early NI members usually appeared to answer questions. These generally centered around fears that the quality of schools would deteriorate with a growing Negro population, that real estate values would drop, the neighborhood would deteriorate, and the family would lose status by living in an integrated neighborhood.

NI emphasized that innundation was not inevitable, that if white families decided to stay and made this known to others who in turn refused to give up their homes, the neighborhood could be stabilized. National surveys were cited to prove that property values do not drop in integrated neighborhoods unless homeowners flood the market. NI spokesmen pointed out how much money speculators were making by their blockbusting tactics and read public records from the D.C. Office of the Recorder of Deeds to prove their point.

At these meetings white residents often met their new Negro neighbors and realized for the first time that their aims for maintaining and improving their property were identical. In this way, too, some white families for the first time met Negroes with comparable, or superior, economic and educational background.

In January, 1959, six months after formation, NI received a grant from the Eugene and Agnes Meyer Foundation and a full time executive director, Mrs. Margery Ware, was hired.

Expanded Activities

NI was now ready to broaden its program. The block meetings had begun to change the pervading sense of hopelessness and had brought in new members ready to volunteer their services.

As in all changing neighborhoods, this one was beset with rumors that property was deteriorating and it was necessary to convince residents and prospective homeowners this was not so. A Block Leaders Training Course was organized to encourage the formation of block committees to tackle problems of upkeep on their streets. A system of 75 block spotters was set up to report any nuisance to the NI office. One group worked with churches and synagogues to oppose an increase in the number of liquor stores in the area. District Commissioners were persuaded to install better street lighting and provide better trash pickup service. NI also successfully fought changes in the zoning code which would have permitted greater density in some sections and kept an eye on efforts to sell property for income or commercial purposes in violation of zoning regulations. The Recreation Committee sponsored a Family Fun Night for all residents at a local church, more swimming lessons at a city pool in Takoma Park, and various clubs for gardeners, bridge players, etc.

At the end of the first two years, NI could point to two specific accomplishments. For the first time since the panic selling began, a few white families had moved into the area. Mrs. Ware admits these were received with great sighs of relief, as an indication the NI message was getting across. Then, after a two year campaign by NI and the American Veterans Committee, backed by 40 other organizations, the three local newspapers agreed to eliminate the "colored" designation in classified advertisements of houses for rent or sale.

Spreading the Word

In 1961 a three-year Taconic Foundation grant allowed NI to step up its activities. A community organization specialist was employed to concentrate on real estate pressure tactics and parents' efforts to improve the area schools.

NI also issued a brochure describing the attractions of the area: one bus fare to the heart of town, excellent schools with no split shifts, shopping centers within a short walk, movie theaters and libraries also within walking distance, well-established churches and synagogues, recreation facilities in nearby Rock Creek Park, and a community in which all are welcome. Thousands of these were distributed, often with a covering letter to new Congressmen and government officials inviting them to settle in the area. (And some of them did. A number of top ranking officials now live there.)

NI was receiving attention in other ways: publicity releases to newspapers, an article on the organization in the Atlantic Monthly by NI President Marvin Caplan, talks by NI speakers to civic groups in the District, Maryland, and Virginia. A leaflet containing quotations from prominent individuals about NI's work was given wide distribution.

Meanwhile, NI began the first of a continuing series of events to build a sense of community pride. Under the sponsorship of a number of dignitaries, including an ambassador and two cabinet officers, a reception was held for the diplomatic families of new nations. The affair was held in the auditorium of a local elementary school. There were puppet shows for the children, a string quartet provided background music, later two concert pianists gave a recital. Portions of the event were recorded by the Voice of America. The third annual NI report noted:

"The national and international implications of this event — a friendly welcome to newcomers to our country, not from professional diplomats but from the ordinary residents of an American neighborhood — were immediately apparent to everyone...

"The reception was also a visible demonstration that rather than lose status by living in an integrated neighborhood, residents gain prestige."

In 1962 the organization sponsored the first of its annual Spring Home Tours to which the general public is invited for tea and a tour of six or seven of the most attractive homes. These not only raise funds but have interested a number of visitors in buying in the area.

The following year NI held an Art and Book Festival, now another annual event. Both Presidents Kennedy and Johnson have sent letters of commendation. As many as 300 members have been involved in planning, organizing, and staffing the two-day festivals held at the local high school. Art, books, and records are sold, entertainment is provided for children, there are craft demonstrations, international booths, and garden club exhibits. The Washington Post art critic termed the second festival "one of the finest displays of local professional talent ever seen in this city under one roof."

An annual picnic, a spring clean-up campaign with prizes for outstanding accomplishment, a hospitality and welcoming committee, a neighborhood commons cleared and planted by adults and children, all contribute to the sense of community. Boys and girls are involved in a number of projects through Junior Neighbors, divided into junior and senior high school groups.

A monthly newsletter, Neighbors' Ink, edited by volunteers, keeps members posted on organization activities, tells them about newcomers, and offers members a chance to air their views in letters to the editor. A rumor column examines any tales spreading about the area and refutes false stories with facts.

Buying and Selling

The Washington real estate industry has been one of NI's toughest problems. Brokers have been more unyielding than in the two other cities of this report. A majority of the largest Washington firms refuse to handle property in the NI area. NI spokesmen charge that salesmen in these companies ignore the section when showing homes to white clients and discourage Negro clients altogether. In the early days, after the first influx of Negroes, this meant that transactions were left for the most part to speculators and blockbusters.

Now, because of NI's vigilance and a 1964 D.C. regulation outlawing blockbusting, there are only sporadic attempts to frighten homeowners into selling. Speculators have moved to other areas, concentrating particularly on a suburban Maryland county.

Whenever NI does learn of speculative practices in the area, these are reported in the monthly newsletter. For example, the May, 1965, issue noted that the Office of the Recorder of Deeds showed that a home was purchased by a real estate firm (the street address of the house and the firm were identified) for $16,800 and sold four weeks later for $24,000. An earlier issue told of a house bought for $24,000 and sold three months later for $32,450.

Today, a small number of general real estate firms, and a larger number of reputable Negro firms, sell property in the area.

In one of its brochures, NI advises those who are being transferred or moving for other compelling reasons that there are a number of steps that can be taken to safeguard their own interests and those of their neighbors. The first suggestion is to notify NI, which has a Housing Information Service available to prospective buyers and sellers, without remuneration. This service may know of a desirable buyer and can certainly recommend a reputable agent. NI warns against dealing with a speculator, for experience has shown this will only mean the seller will get a lower price. Also, the seller is asked to insist that the agent show the house on an "open" basis for "agents who show your house only to white or only to colored prospects are short-changing you. They are tapping only half the available market in the community." The seller is asked, too, to tell neighbors why he is selling, explaining that he is not running and will make every effort to get a responsible family for new tenants.

NI cooperates with fair housing groups in the District and the suburbs in efforts to encourage white families to move back to the city and Negro families to move to the suburbs.

NI was one of the groups influential in persuading the District Commissioners to issue a fair housing order in 1964. This was done under the Commissioners' police powers and outlaws racial and religious discrimination in the sale and rental of all housing except small-scale rentals in owner-occupied property. It also prohibits discrimination by lending institutions.

Mortgage money never has been a particular problem in the NI area. However, at one time the Federal Housing Authority seemed to be under-appraising property. The NI staff gathered facts and made a formal protest. As a result, FHA reevaluated the area and raised appraisals.

Property values as a whole have climbed. Between 1960 and 1964, for example, they rose about 10 percent.

Schools

NI's most critical problem is the racial composition of schools, particularly at the junior and senior high school levels. In the first year of operation, 1959, members realized that parental apprehension about the schools was one of the strongest factors influencing white families to leave. They cited the one-third Negro enrollment of the Paul Junior High School. At the beginning of the 1966 term, 91.7 percent of the Paul student body was Negro. A new junior high, Rabaut, which draws part of its student body from the NI area, was 99 percent Negro. The area high school, Coolidge, was 92.4 percent Negro.

Negro percentages in the four elementary schools were: Brightwood, 91.6; Shepherd, 64.5; Takoma, 70.2, and Whittier, 98.4.

These unbalanced racial compositions have caused many white and a sizeable number of Negro families to send their children to private and parochial schools.

In a city with a public school enrollment only 9.2 percent white there are obviously factors beyond the control of any single group. Neighbors, Inc., however, hopes to hold the white pupils now enrolled and encourage others to attend by improving the quality of education offered in the public schools. They want to demonstrate that schools do not have to deteriorate as the Negro enrollment climbs.

Parents have a problem peculiar to Washington, which does not have home rule. Unlike other citizens, they do not have the leverage of the ballot to force city authorities to spend more on schools. They cannot vote a school board out of office, they can only petition. Members of the Board of Education are appointed by the judges of the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia. All requests for money by the School Superintendent must first be approved by the Board of Education, then by the District Commissioners, by the proper committees of Congress, by the Congress itself, and finally by the President.

For three years NI parents met with school officials to promote special programs in art, music, sciences, government, or languages, which would make their junior and senior high schools outstanding. Finally, in 1962, a special program, "American Democracy in Action," was inaugurated at Paul Junior High. The program is designed to instill an early interest in government and the democratic process.

An executive committee of residents oversees the program. They are assisted by an advisory council; each council member agrees to participate in at least one program for Paul students. The council has included four Associate Justices of the Supreme Court, three cabinet officers, five Senators, four Congressmen, heads of independent agencies and various other government officials.

Pupils make many field trips, attending Congressional and court sessions, legislative hearings, and meetings of the District Commissioners. They have interviewed the Governor of Maryland, visited campaign headquarters and political rallies in surrounding jurisdictions.

As school began in 1966, the D.C. Board of Education approved the position of Secondary School Coordinator for the three secondary schools in the NI area. Payment of the coordinator's salary will be shared by the public school system and the University of Maryland. The NI Education Committee considers this the first tangible step in a proposed "blue ribbon" school plan for the area drawn by the University of Maryland.

Structure

Since the first grants from the Meyer and Taconic Foundations, NI has received additional grants from these sources and from other foundations for a total of about $90,000. Benefit concerts and the annual art festival and house tours have brought in additional funds. The remainder of the income has come from dues and contributions of members. Currently, dues are $5 a year for family membership. NI's annual budget for several years has been around $25,000.

At peak strength, NI has had, in addition to the executive director, a community affairs specialist and an assistant, plus a secretary and a clerk. They operate from a two-room office centrally located in a small, new building in a commercial area.

A 20-man Board of Directors governs. Two are elected from each of the four neighborhoods in the area and the others are elected at large. There is an annual meeting each June, two meetings a year in each of the four neighborhoods, and special meetings are called on specific problems. The 1966 membership of NI was 1,800.

Mrs. Ware, for seven years executive director of Neighbors, Inc., until her resignation in the summer of 1966, believes any similar group should concentrate from the beginning on a broad community development program, rather than stabilization, unless it is necessary to stress the latter because of a panic situation.

She thinks NI was right in trying to build from the first an image of a group of solid homeowners, organized, and meriting serious consideration from the city and its officials. She also thinks that NI probably should have concentrated earlier on improvement of the schools, admitting at the same time that the forces were too great and the resources too small to keep a better racial balance in the schools. She feels the next few years will be critical and that the school situation will be the ultimate test of NI's success or failure.

Mrs. Ware believes it would be easier to start a Neighbors, Inc., today. There is a District fair housing regulation; open housing groups are now working in other sections of the District and the suburbs; churches are more active in the civil rights field (NI had little cooperation from area churches in the formative years); middle income Negroes have a slightly wider choice of housing now. And, with the added emphasis on civil rights, new federal legislation and court rulings, the community as a whole is more aware of discrimination and better armed to deal with it.

The Future

NI has reached a stage of development where members are asking serious questions about its future direction. Increasingly, these have been raised at meetings, in letters in the monthly newsletters, and whenever members discuss the group.

Basically, the question is whether NI should continue to focus most of its energies on neighborhood stabilization and improvement or whether it should move beyond this to concentrate on such larger issues as home rule, poverty programs, civil rights, and civil liberties. There are wide differences of opinion.

One group feels NI should not concern itself with the "numbers game," that the racial composition of the area is unimportant and the emphasis should be on problems facing the city and nation. Another faction believes NI can be effective only if it continues to concentrate on problems of the immediate environment. In between is a group which contends the primary emphasis should be on neighborhood development but that at the same time members should be able to work on metropolitan problems through various subcommittees. At the time of this report, board members and leaders of the four neighborhood components were being polled to learn what course they think NI should follow.

Whatever the decision of NI's future program, many members feel the controversy is an indication of vitality. It does transcend racial bounds, for each faction has white and Negro proponents.

This seems natural in a neighborhood where residents nervous around anyone not of their own color have long since fled and those who are left have lost any self-consciousness about race. Children of both races play together, white and Negro parents baby sit for each other and "party" together. It follows that they can also fight, in a good, impersonal, neighborly American way.

BALTIMORE NEIGHBORHOODS, INC.

Since its founding in the 17th century, Maryland has had a problem of identity, more so than most border states. A reasonable surveyor interested solely in geographic efficiency might well award part of the state to Pennsylvania and the rest to Virginia.

Throughout its history, Maryland has had no overwhelming sectional identity. As one of the original 13 colonies it was a mid-point, neither north nor south.

Maryland was founded as a haven for Roman Catholics, but since the Catholics of Ireland and England did not migrate in sufficient numbers, Maryland never quite became a truly Catholic state. Nevertheless, a succession of Catholics ruled as governors of Maryland in the 17th century, with one exception. During the Puritan ascendancy in England, a Protestant was named governor. This was diplomatic accommodation of a high order.

And it is this spirit of accommodation which runs like a zigzag stitch through the fabric of Maryland history. It produced a religious toleration act in 1649 and kept Maryland in the Union although thousands of her sons went off to join the Confederate forces.

The half-way point for the half-way state, as it were, is Baltimore. Here all the contrasts which exist within the state seem to have been deposited.

There are ancient white families of the hunt club-cotillion set and Negro families whose roots go back as far and as deep in Maryland history. This is a city, too, where, until a few years ago, the restrictive covenant closed some of the "best" residential areas to Jews, where Catholics were barred from some professional clubs and snubbed in some sets, where white Protestants thought it was hopeless to try for a seat on the city council. For Negroes, it was a city of rigid segregation.

Harry Bard, president of Baltimore Junior College, in an article in the Baltimore Afro-American summed up the city as the worst and the best. Perhaps, he wrote, Baltimore has more than its share of both. Detailing some of these elements, he continued:

Among the worst are "practices which bring colored people who commit crimes into a Criminal Courthouse where all the symbols are white; the judges, the bailiffs, the clerks . . .

"The lack of recreational facilities in areas like Greenmount Avenue is dangerous. De facto segregation in some of the Baltimore schools is a symbol of the old. And the lack of employment opportunities for out-of-school Baltimore colored youth is dynamite...

"And the worst includes what Francis Bierne, in his Amiable Baltimoreans, calls 'the four o'clock shadow,' with Jews, Catholics, and Protestants meeting on numerous civic boards... but not really getting to know each other intensely and seldom visiting each other at home. At best, they hardly break through a veneer.

"On the plus side are the open and frank dialogues by the NCCJ (National Conference of Christians and Jews), NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People), Urban League and other groups. Also on the plus side are the contributions of some Baltimore businessmen like the Voluntary Council on Equal Opportunity and that of some labor groups associated with AFL-CIO.

"On the plus side, too, is recent progress of the Police Department... the plans of the Baltimore Education Department and the serious thinking in the City and State Government halls, and the intense dedication of the mass media.

"Also on the plus side is the recognition that colored citizens do care about helping their own needy. Their personal contributions of over one million dollars for the Provident Hospital prove this... Responsible colored leadership in Baltimore is certainly a plus."

Housing

An understanding of the split personality of the city helps explain Baltimore's stance on racially segregated housing.

How else explain a Real Estate Board which opposed open occupancy in 1964 but the next year urged the President to support a broad open occupancy law for the nation and then in 1966 opposed such a law for the state? Changing leadership of the board is one explanation, but the board itself is split, or such an about-face would be impossible.

There is a division in the city government over housing. The mayor and city council president both backed a strong fair housing ordinance, but it failed this year on a city council vote.

In many ways, however, Baltimore is typical of other big cities with a large Negro population. The white population has been declining, moving to the suburbs, and the Negro population has been expanding. Between 1950 and 1960 the white population of Baltimore City dropped by 113,000 and the nonwhite increased by 102,000. The 1960 census for Baltimore, the nation's sixth largest city, showed a total population of 939,024, with 326,589, or 34.8 percent, nonwhite.

The Negro population of the city clusters around the central business district, spreading out northwest and northeast in 45 census tracts with a nonwhite population of 75 percent or more. In 1964, 77 percent of the city's Negroes lived there.

Negro family income lags behind that of white families. In 1966 median white family income in the Baltimore metropolitan area was $8,125 and $5,250 for Negro families. However, 12 percent of the Negro families had incomes of from $10-15,000 and 53 percent had incomes over $5,000.

This growth of the Negro population, and the rising income which made home ownership a possibility for many, has not been matched by new housing available to Negroes. Between 1940 and 1957, for example, only 6,000 new dwelling units were open to Negroes and most of these were in public housing developments. Inevitably, they had been moving to older areas formerly occupied by whites only.

Today, Negroes have fanned out to live in 95 percent of Baltimore's districts. In some of these they represent only a scattering of the total population. Nevertheless, considering that in 1940 almost the entire Negro population — 226,000 at that time — lived in two sections of the central city, the change has been dramatic. It has also been peaceful, for the most part, with only a very few reports of harassment.

The Beginning

Ten years ago, a section of Baltimore known as Ashburton was an entirely white community located about 15 minutes by car from the downtown center. Houses along the tree-lined streets are largely single family dwellings, with a sprinkling of semi-detached houses. Built 20 or 25 years earlier as a "restricted" area, it had received an influx of prosperous Jewish families in the post World War II years and had gradually become a section including families of varied religious and age groups. Houses ranged in price from $15,000 to $45,000.

In 1956 the first Negro, a high school principal, bought a home in Ashburton. Within the next year, more than a score of other Negroes, most of them professional people, moved into the neighborhood. The following year, 1958, another 40 or 50 moved in.

By this time, blockbusting agents and speculators had moved on the area. They were operating on the now familiar pattern, selling a home to a Negro family and then deliberately exploiting and exciting racial prejudice and fear of falling real estate values among other families on the block. When families did panic, the real estate operator might pick up a bargain and turn a neat profit by selling the house at an inflated price to a Negro desperately in need of housing.

Where white families on a block were slow to panic, some speculators bought homes and moved in low income families, or even several families, on a weekly rental basis. Others persuaded poor Negro families to buy, under a no-down-payment arrangement, houses they could not afford; naturally, they had no money left over for proper maintenance. Meanwhile, advertisements in the real estate sections of the newspapers offered houses in "Ashburton—colored" although the area was still 95 percent white.

"For Sale" signs were much in evidence and a new rumor sprang up every day. Sometimes a "Sold" sign went up on a house speculators had not yet sold, as a method of scaring neighbors into selling. Some brokers were refusing to show property to white buyers.

Then, in 1958, a white public relations man, Ellsworth E. Rosen, who had moved to Ashburton the year before with his wife and two children, decided he was not going to sit by while the speculators wrecked a neighborhood. He and Mrs. Rosen found kindred souls in a young lawyer and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. Melvin J. Sykes, who also lived in the area. The four arranged a meeting with some 20 neighbors to discuss their changing area and what they could do to foil the blockbusters. This was the beginning of the reorganized Ashburton Area Association, open to all races. Early in 1958 they mailed invitations to join to the 1,100 households in Ashburton and in short order there were 400 members.

The initial letter, asking for members and contributions, stated: "We welcome all good neighbors, regardless of race, creed or color. But we understand, as we trust everyone will, that experience shows that the key to keeping up the quality of this or any neighborhood is to attract a sufficient number of new white homeowner families."

Next, members of the fledgling organization made a house to house canvass and handed out a brochure telling of the association's aim of stabilizing the area. Later, a flyer containing the names of new white buyers in the area was distributed and residents who had put up a "For Sale" sign were contacted and asked not to discriminate against a prospective white buyer in favor of a Negro buyer. At the same time, residents were warned against dealing with unscrupulous speculators and told of the dollar loss this could entail. Letters were sent to the heads of major industries to ask them to recommend the Ashburton area to employees. A letter also was sent to the Real Estate Board of Greater Baltimore asking members to show homes in the area to prospective buyers.

Meanwhile, the founders of the organization explained its purposes to newspapers, on radio and television. At the same time, the Ashburton Area Association ran a series of newspaper ads calling attention to the attractions of the area.

Even more importantly, the group set up a series of block by block meetings, with charter members on hand to explain the purposes of the association.

Rosen, in an article in the Saturday Evening Post, explained how a typical meeting of about 20 men and women in the living room of a block leader's home progressed:

> "If you want to protect your home and your way of life," they were told, "a simple solution lies open to you. You don't have to join the Army and face death on foreign soil. You don't even have to risk bodily injury. All you have to do is to continue living in your own home."
>
> The speaker was a Negro. Intelligent, soft-spoken, articulate, but a Negro, and the only one in the group.
>
> "Don't think you can escape the problem simply by putting your house up for sale and running away," Otho P. Pinkett said. Pinkett lives in Ashburton and manages an 815-unit public housing project in another part of the city. "Times are changing faster than most of us realize. Even if you move far out in the suburbs, I can virtually guarantee that by the time you finish paying off your next mortgage — and it will be a lot higher than the one you have now — you'll face the same situation. There will be Negroes living near you.
>
> "As a matter of fact," he added with a smile, "if this area turns all Negro, I plan to move out to the suburbs with you."
>
> I think Otho Pinkett is right, and so apparently did some of my neighbors by the time that meeting was over. Two families who had indicated they intended to move said they would hold on for the time being . . .
>
> It is shock treatment, as a rule, when a Negro walks into a supposedly all-white meeting — and the shock, in turn, heightens the realization that Mr. Pinkett's sense of values, desires and plans for the community are no different from those of others in the room.

As the block meetings continued, and as residents were armed with facts and figures from studies in other cities which demonstrated that property values had not declined where owners refused to yield to pressures, the panic began to subside. In the first six months of the organization, 15 sales were made to white families and about twice that number to Negroes. Prices, which had dropped alarmingly where residents had succumbed to the rumors of the speculators, were slowly restored to their fair market worth.

The residents began to fight in another way. Working with other like-minded associations, they complained to the Bureau of Building Inspection about illegal "Sold by ....." signs. The city solicitor ruled that a zoning ordinance did bar advertising signs in a residential neighborhood and notices of violations went out. Residents had offered proof that often these "Sold by ....." signs were on houses for several months, while they still were being offered to customers. On one block alone, where 15 of 23 properties had been marked either sold or for sale, only six houses were marked for sale two weeks after the city took action.

Ashburton was not alone in fighting for its area. In nearby Windsor Hills, an older community with a wider variety of size and style among the 600 houses and apartment units, Negroes had begun moving in somewhat earlier. Two years or so after the first Negro family came, another 50 to 60 had followed. During this period, a dormant civic organization, the Windsor Hills Improvement Association, was revived to work for a racially stable neighborhood. From the first, members, Negroes as well as white, felt that under the speculative pressures which existed the association had to work to bring in new white families to the area. When they found that real estate agents were unwilling to recommend Windsor Hills to white buyers, the real estate committee of the association decided it needed a resident agent to promote sales and rentals. A housewife in Windsor Hills passed the real estate board exams and the neighborhood had its own agent. In her first three years, she sold 25 homes and rented 30 others to white families. Ashburton later followed the Windsor Hills example and backed a resident agent.

During the same period, Negroes were moving into other neighborhoods and several of these also set up their own associations.

As members of these groups became more engrossed, and more knowledgeable, in the problems and opportunities of interracial housing in established neighborhoods, they decided a greater cooperative effort was needed. They felt that the basic problems of attitude among real estate brokers, banks, mortgage lenders, and potential white buyers called for an educational job beyond the scope of the individual neighborhood groups.

The neighborhood organizations solicited the aid of the Citizens Planning and Housing Association, the Baltimore Urban League, and the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations. This larger body decided in turn that a successful program had to have the backing of business leaders.

The logical group to approach was the Greater Baltimore Committee. The GBC was made up of some 100 of the liveliest and most forceful businessmen and financiers in the city. They were then spending a tremendous amount of effort on an imaginative $127 million redevelopment project, Charles Center, in the downtown area. Some in the neighborhood groups felt the approach to the GBC was hopeless, that these hardheaded businessmen would have neither the time nor the inclination to help. Nevertheless, the GBC was asked for help. The civic groups argued that the downtown renewal project and the new Civic Center would be jeopardized if ringed by miles of ghetto neighborhoods. They pointed out this would be inevitable if efforts were not made to help residents move into every section of the metropolitan area. They stressed the need for the tax money of higher income families to support downtown rehabilitation and the important role attractive, stable neighborhoods could play in keeping these families in the city.

The GBC was asked to support the opening up of additional new and old housing to Negro citizens, to stimulate public awareness of practices that cause disorderly change and to enlist the cooperation of real estate interests in the preservation of the city.

The Committee met in September, 1958, to consider the call for support. To the surprise of the skeptics, a report was adopted that recognized the serious economic consequences of disorderly neighborhood change and directed its Urban Renewal Subcommittee to make a thorough study of the problem and recommend "what role, if any, the Greater Baltimore Committee should play in solving the problems of changing neighborhoods." Subsequently, the words "if any" were dropped from the charge and the membership recommended that a city-wide agency be formed in which the Committee would participate.

Once committed, the GBC moved fast. Within two months a conference of business and community leaders was called. Real estate representatives, lawyers, bankers, city planners, educators, members of neighborhood associations, and city government officials held panel discussions on blockbusting, new housing for Negroes, and improvement of older houses.

At the conclusion of the meeting, the conference chairman, James W. Rouse, mortgage banker and urban renewal expert, said:

"We find that the rapid conversion of neighborhoods from all white to all Negro occupancy presents Baltimore with one of its most serious economic crises in recent years. The flight of the medium and upper income families from the city limits and their replacement by persons of both races of the lowest income levels is a threat not only to our municipal solvency but to the economic stability of the entire metropolitan area. It is therefore recommended that there be formed a city-wide organization composed of representatives of civic and labor organizations, improvement associations, the Real Estate Board of Greater Baltimore, the Greater Baltimore Committee, the Association of Commerce, the homebuilders, and the city and state governments. During the preliminary stages and until the city-wide group is well established, the Greater Baltimore Committee will provide clerical and professional staff assistance."

BNI Formation

In March, 1959, this city-wide organization GBC recommended came into being when by-laws and articles of incorporation were approved for Baltimore Neighborhoods, Inc. (BNI). Original members included the Greater Baltimore Committee, the neighborhood associations which had started the movement, several civic and religious groups, and interested individuals.

The early work of BNI emphasized community education and the organization of additional neighborhood groups to promote the concept, and feasibility, of racially stabilized neighborhoods. A tangible note of success came in 1960 when BNI drafted and was instrumental in securing passage of an anti-blockbusting ordinance. This made it unlawful for any salesman or real estate firm to misrepresent facts concerning present or future occupancy, or the value of property.

In 1961 BNI took two steps which set it on the course followed today. Directors decided that a program of neighborhood stabilization could not in itself achieve BNI objectives and so a second goal was set: expansion of housing opportunities for Negroes throughout the metropolitan area. Secondly, BNI hired a full-time professional executive director, Edward L. Holmgren, a University of Chicago graduate in political science, who had worked with the Chicago Housing Authority, American Friends, and Urban League.

BNI also received a financial boost in setting up an expanded program when two foundations, Taconic and Field, each gave $11,500 in 1961 and again in the following year. The first issue of a BNI newsletter claimed it was "the only foundation-supported agency in the nation seeking a comprehensive solution to an urban dilemma — preventing the city from becoming an all-Negro ghetto while at the same time promoting equal housing opportunities for all people, regardless of race."

Since his appointment, Holmgren has had a staff aide, a secretary, and at other times an intern provided under another grant program, plus volunteer workers.

A measure of the acceptance of BNI's efforts in behalf of the entire community is the $10,000 grant from the city government both in 1965 and 1966. BNI's 1966 budget was $45,000, about one-fourth contributed by local business interests, another one-fourth by foundations, and the rest by the city, church, and civic groups and individuals.

BNI Activities

BNI operates in some ways as does the housing division of a city human relations commission. It is a catalyst, an educator, and mediator in any activity which touches on the vital issue of housing for all citizens.

From its inception, BNI has offered a variety of services to neighborhood stabilization groups. Staff members are available for consultation and they also have prepared a series of useful guidelines. One of these outlines suggestions for setting up neighborhood meetings, dealing with practical matters such as the size of the group convened, where it should be held, what should be stressed. Another more detailed guide includes factual answers for the most likely questions on such matters as property values and schools. Others tell how to handle brokers using pressure tactics, how to decide whether you can afford to buy a house, and what neighborhood services are available from the city.

BNI draws on the experience of other cities and various housing studies but interprets these in local terms. In the format for fair housing meetings in the home, for example, there is a suggested answer to the inevitable question about what happens to property values when a Negro family moves in.

Studies are cited which show that experience has proved that property values do not drop, unless white residents flood the market with more homes than the market can absorb. Then, the brochure continues:

"Since Baltimoreans are inclined to be skeptical as to whether developments in other communities have any bearing on their local scene, we will do well to examine some Baltimore facts and figures.

"In 1956 a study was made of four blocks of Longwood Street in the City. The sale prices to Negroes from 1953 to 1955 (when all but a few homes passed from white to Negro occupancy) was compared with the sale prices of the same houses when sold to whites between 1947 and 1953. Price data was obtained on 31 of the 40 homes in the 2500, 2600 and 2700 blocks of Longwood. In the 2500 block the average price increase was $2,700 including ground, in the 2600 block about $3,500 and in the 2700 block about $2,900. The range of prices to the Negro purchasers was $11,500 to $17,500.

"A later study of property values (1960), in which more than 22,800 residential sales in Baltimore were analyzed, concludes that 'property values do not invariably decline when Negroes are admitted to occupancy in previously restricted neighborhoods.' There was a tendency for homes under 50 years of age to increase in value when subject to open occupancy."

Directors of BNI appointed a Research Advisory Committee four years ago and this has provided other such facts.

BNI is interested in any movement in the metropolitan area which promises an expanded market for Negroes and often is consulted in surrounding jurisdictions. When a Baltimore Colt football player moved into a Baltimore County development a few "For Sale" signs went up. Thanks to intelligent dissuasion by a leading real estate broker and a series of neighborhood meetings conducted by BNI, most of the homeowners decided to stay.

A more serious situation developed four years ago when a Negro couple and their three young children moved into a suburb in adjacent Anne Arundel County. First, a pump was tampered with and the basement flooded even before the family moved in; the owner notified police. Then, in quick succession, a rock was hurled through a window the night the family moved in and the next night a steel tipped arrow was shot into the house, while later an oil-filled bottle was tossed on the front steps.

The husband, who had hoped to cope on his own, then called the president of the county chapter of the NAACP to ask how his family could obtain better police protection. As soon as they learned of the situation, the executive director of Baltimore Fellowship, Holmgren of BNI, and members of the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems joined the NAACP in consulting police and in taking turns visiting the persecuted family every evening. Meanwhile, clergy and others in the community were called on to help the family and to try to calm the neighborhood. Gradually, the community began to accept its new neighbors.

For the most part, panic has been minimal in the communities in both Baltimore and the surrounding counties where Negroes have moved for the first time. In only one instance was a Negro family forced to move out because of violence.

The first Negroes now have moved into more than a dozen Baltimore suburbs.

Real Estate Industry

One of BNI's primary objectives is a single real estate market where every potential homeowner is treated alike, and has access to any area he chooses and can afford. This calls for the cooperation of the real estate and housing industries.

After a year of negotiation, BNI and the Greater Baltimore Committee four years ago won an agreement from the Real Estate Board to make a concerted effort to get members to drop racial designations in classified real estate advertising. Following this, local newspapers, at the request of the Real Estate Board, stopped accepting such advertising sales. Incongruously, racial designations remained in use in rental advertisements.

At the same time, the Real Estate Board asked members to refrain from dropping listings on properties when the racial character of a neighborhood began to change but instead to "extend every effort to obtain a buyer regardless of race, creed, or national origin."

Following this action, William Wilson, past president of the Real Estate Board, wrote BNI's president: "The experience and aid of your Ed Holmgren and your organization have been invaluable to me in developing a better understanding of this most difficult and sensitive metropolitan problem . . ."

In 1963 the Board sent a letter to all newly licensed real estate brokers, soliciting membership. Probably to the surprise of some long time members, there were a few applications from Negroes. After a little low-key prodding from one or two members, the Board took in six Negro brokers at one time. Today, the Board's multiple listing bureau has a Negro on the Board of Directors.

Several members of the Real Estate Board have served as directors and on the Advisory Board of BNI. In 1964 the Board became an organizational member of BNI.

However, the same year, when a committee appointed by the City Council recommended legislative action to outlaw housing discrimination the Real Estate Board was opposed. The next year it moved in the other direction and BNI could note, "The Real Estate Board of Baltimore became the nation's first real estate board to request the expansion of the Presidential Executive Order #11063 to prohibit discrimination in the sale of most new housing." Specifically, the Board asked the President to extend an earlier order on open occupancy, which applied to federally insured mortgages, to all new housing financed with mortgages held by federally insured banks and savings and loan institutions.

But then early in 1966 a spokesman for the Board appeared at a state legislative hearing in Annapolis to oppose a pending open occupancy law. The Baltimore Sunday Sun commented editorially, "Last year's step forward has become a march to the rear."

Nevertheless, the Board amended its by-laws this year to require realtors to show houses to Negro buyers and renters when the original contract with an owner specifies open occupancy.

BNI offers a real estate referral service designed to encourage and assist white buyers to purchase homes in racially mixed neighborhoods and to help Negro families find homes outside the customary ghettos. BNI notes that more brokers will now handle such sales.

City Government

As 1966 closed, proponents of a fair housing ordinance for Baltimore had not succeeded, despite the backing of Mayor Theodore McKeldin and City Council President Thomas D'Alesandro III. In 1964 a nine-member Baltimore City Housing Advisory Commission was appointed. It found clear discrimination in the sale and rental of housing to Negroes and recommended an open occupancy law. Property owners, and not the real estate interests, bore the major blame for discrimination. The City Council passed a civil rights ordinance, but rejected the open housing section.

This year, another try was made. The City Council held a hearing on a fair housing proposal and 2,000 attended a hotly divided meeting. Lawrence Cardinal Shehan appeared to give a strong endorsement to the measure, which was of particular significance since an estimated 45 percent of Baltimore citizens are Roman Catholic. About one-third of those present booed the Cardinal.

The area Episcopal and Methodist bishops spoke in favor of the bill also, as did a rabbi, the president of the Maryland Council of Churches and the president of the Baltimore Jewish Council. James W. Rouse, chairman of the Greater Baltimore Committee, said that GBC, which previously opposed such legislation, now gave it strong backing on both economic and moral grounds.

Despite such endorsements, the Council killed the bill 13-8.

Housing Conference

Two years ago, BNI asked the President's Committee on Equal Opportunity in Housing to hold a meeting in Baltimore on stabilization of racially changing neighborhoods and the need for enlargement of housing opportunities for minorities. The Committee agreed and the third such meeting in the nation was held in Baltimore. BNI's board and staff did a major proportion of the program planning.

Over 600 representatives of industry, labor, banking, religions, civil rights groups, housing, and educators took part in four workshops at an all day session. As a result of the conference and the resulting publicity, a broad segment of the community was made more aware of the urgent need to improve housing opportunities for minorities. The consensus of the workshops was that residents of every section of the Baltimore metropolitan area would suffer if the trend toward the extension of the existing ghetto in the central city and the formation of new ghettos ringed by white suburbia were not halted.

A housing developer and former president of the Home Builders Association told the conference that an all inclusive federal fair housing law was the only practical solution to the growing economic problem of housing discrimination.

Plus and Minus

Where does Baltimore stand today? On the negative side, it still is not covered either by local or state fair housing legislation. The much talked of white backlash appeared in its most virulent form in the 1966 gubernatorial election. However, the candidate who campaigned on the single issue "your home is your castle — protect it" was defeated.

The 35 percent Negro population of Baltimore in 1960 is now about 42 percent and is expected to reach 47 percent in 1970. The Research Advisory Committee of BNI estimates that in the five years, 1966 through 1970, the Negro housing market in Baltimore will require an average of 4,000 additional units a year, or 20,000 units. Demands will stem from new Negro household formations and, to a lesser extent, from demolitions resulting from highway construction and renewal programs, and the hopeless deterioration of sub-standard housing.

As recently as 1962 there was practically no new housing available to Negroes but in the past few years some new middle income housing has been opened to them. This year an estimated 500 new private housing and apartment units will be available to Negro families.

Clearly, the demand will have to be met in large part by an extension of Negro housing in racially changing areas or by greater availability of housing beyond the city limits. Currently, only about one percent of the Negro population is moving to surrounding counties.

There has been a slight change in the "whites only" policy of major apartment owners but this is a problem of continuing concern to BNI.

The housing problem is very closely tied to public schools, which today have a 75 percent nonwhite enrollment. Two weeks after the Supreme Court ruled in the school desegregation cases in 1954 the Baltimore Board of School Commissioners declared the city would henceforth have a desegregated school system. Pupils were given the right to transfer to schools of their choice. However, the plan was better on paper than in practice and change was minimal. The city has a new school superintendent now who seems determined to find answers to the problems of de facto segregation and the quality of education offered in all schools.

On the neighborhood level, a good deal remains to be done. One all white community in the northern part of the city reacted to word of the first Negro purchase there by banding together to collect money to buy the house and then persuading the Negro family to sell. The community purchase was made in the face of BNI warnings that residents would be left open to a kind of blackmail by any opportunist who threatened to sell to Negroes in order to force the community to take a house off his hands. Recently, some change of attitude there was noted. One group of citizens began working to set up a stabilization program and neighborhood religious bodies, silent before, backed this move.

On the positive side, at least 10 associations are working to promote stable, interracial neighborhoods. Some have a scattering of Negro families while other neighborhoods are from 40 to 70 percent Negro.

Ashburton and Windsor Hills are now each one-third white. Another area, Forrest Park, which began changing racially about the same time, had no organization working for stabilization and is today almost entirely Negro. Windsor Hills has upgraded its zoning requirements and the Improvement Association has decided the community has reached the point where it is no longer necessary to put major emphasis on a program to attract white buyers. Instead, the emphasis is now on making Windsor Hills a model integrated community.

Advice

The office of Baltimore Neighborhoods, Inc., is located at One Charles Center, on the eleventh floor of the tall new building which is a focal point of the downtown renewal area. Nearby, in the same building, are the offices of the Greater Baltimore Committee, which extends the use of its conference room and other facilities to BNI. The location is appropriate for BNI, in the center of new Baltimore, next door to community leaders. The view through floor to ceiling windows is of two luxury apartments going up across the street and, in the distance, of neighborhoods both segregated and changing. The suburbs are just out of sight.

In his office here, BNI Director Holmgren was asked what observations and advice he could give other neighborhood groups and cities, based on the Baltimore experience.

First, he emphasized, central city neighborhood stabilization programs must be tied to a metropolitan program to achieve open housing. Without this effort beyond city boundaries, a stabilization program will in the long run be only a delaying action, because of the urgent need for decent Negro housing. Cities, counties, states, and the federal government must pass fair housing laws for ultimate success of the open occupancy concept.

The active support of community leaders is important. Business, government, real estate, labor, banking, and church groups must be persuaded of the need for positive steps to solve housing problems.

Neighborhood groups working to stabilize their communities, Holmgren added, must see that city services are maintained, zoning laws observed, and property maintained in conformance with city codes.

Every effort must be made to improve local schools, for the school situation, Holmgren is convinced, is the "single most tender spot in any community."

In most instances, neighborhood meetings on racial changes should focus on economics, rather than the morals of the situation. Have some hard facts to counter emotion and prejudice.

Asked whether the Baltimore stabilization groups might function more effectively if several smaller ones would join forces in order to finance a paid staff member, Holmgren said yes. He agreed that it is difficult for a voluntary group to sustain the original momentum and for busy homeowners to find the necessary time to coordinate and direct continuing programs.

Some civil rights militants criticize BNI for its middle class orientation, Holmgren said, and added, "They're right, we are geared to the middle classes; so is practically every fair housing group in the country." It was obvious Holmgren felt all such groups, BNI included, must broaden their programs to include measures for helping low income groups.

The Future

Communities which are presently all white will be much better prepared to accept the inevitable appearance of a Negro family if they begin preparations now, Holmgren emphasized. This message, counseling calm acceptance of change, is one of the most vital BNI has communicated to an increasing number of citizens, for, as Mayor McKeldin has commented:

"The principle of equal opportunity in housing will eventually succeed — the only question is how soon, and with how little panic and ill-will. The answer lies, more surely than anywhere else, with the wide range of private individuals and groups throughout our entire Baltimore urban area who care enough to work hard for equality of housing opportunity in their own neighborhoods."

CONCLUSIONS

Citizens working to make their neighborhood racially stable sooner or later have to consider three fundamental questions: Why are we trying to attract white families to our area? Doesn't this imply that they are somehow superior? Isn't this a gratuitous insult to Negro families?

White and Negro homeowners have to discuss these questions freely, if they are to work together. This is not always easy, for years of segregation have left each race distrustful and ignorant of the other.

Negroes in integrated neighborhoods know there is nothing particularly desirable about a white neighbor per se. They may even feel guilty about trying to get more white families into the area, when Negroes need these houses, too. However, they also know that white citizens still control the government, big business, the school boards. Because of this they know from experience that all Negro neighborhoods are apt to suffer from a dearth of money for schools, parks, city services.

Once the conversational barriers are down this can be discussed dispassionately and a clear understanding reached that no one believes there is anything especially superior about a white family or inferior about a Negro family. A neighborhood can be all white, all Negro, or any racial mixture in between and still be a desirable place to live.

The next step is to agree that this particular group likes its neighborhood, and that one of the chief reasons is the fact that it is "inclusive" rather than "exclusive." Once all agree that they prefer living in a diversified setting, where they and their children will know others of different races, creeds, and backgrounds, the question becomes one of keeping it that way.

This is one reason for making a special effort to attract new white families to the neighborhood. An unfortunate comment upon our society is that no special effort has to be made to attract Negro families to a central city neighborhood because their need for housing is so great.

After this delicate, but basic, issue is faced, white and Negro citizens can work together to make theirs an integrated neighborhood. Discussions then can center on method.

First, any group will have to concern itself with a fairly large area; a few city blocks cannot be stabilized. Also, as soon as financially feasible, a group will be better off if it can employ a coordinator or executive secretary to maintain momentum and direction.

Block meetings are important in the early stages of a changing neighborhood but there must be at least one person present who will be armed with facts about property values and speculators.

Very early, special efforts must be made to cope with school problems; parents can provide supplemental books and services, badger education boards for more money and better facilities.

As soon as possible the group must begin to promote a sense of community, emphasizing features which make the neighborhood worth saving and improving. Persons of outstanding stature should be involved in the work. Functions which add a note of prestige also are useful. Some form of newsletter to keep members informed and to counter rumors is essential.

Then other committees can be formed to see that zoning codes are enforced, sanitation laws observed, and city services maintained and improved where needed. This does not imply that interracial neighborhoods have any special reason to fear deterioration or code violations. All good neighborhood associations need such committees.

Eventually, all associations will want to become involved in the housing problems of the entire metropolitan area and to cooperate with other organizations in promoting a real estate market open to all on an equal basis.

Once the market has opened up, neighborhood associations may want to work on programs to encourage Negroes to move into new areas. Almost every metropolitan area has suburbs where white homeowners have indicated they would welcome Negro neighbors, but who have become discouraged because they could find none willing to move in. Perhaps a neighborhood association could sponsor a series of meetings between white suburbanites and Negro city dwellers to help each side understand why this is so.

The year 1966 unfortunately provided ample evidence that this nation is not yet firmly committed to fair and open housing despite the fact that every court decision and every piece of legislation dealing with race for the past 20 years has moved us step-by-step closer to a policy of racial justice. We stand now at a point of great decision that could have far-reaching results for many years to come.

NEIGHBORHOODS

WHERE HUMAN RELATIONS BEGIN

A STUDY OF RESIDENTIAL PATTERNS IN PHILADELPHIA, WASHINGTON, D.C. & BALTIMORE

Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Ga. • 1967

New 1966

MINIMUM WAGE LAW

With Explanation

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT
WITH 1966 AMENDMENTS

LABOR PROGRAM

THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, INC.

5 Forsyth Street, N.W.

ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30303

New 1966

MINIMUM WAGE LAW

With Explanation

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT WITH 1966 AMENDMENTS

SIGNED INTO LAW BY THE PRESIDENT
SEPTEMBER 23, 1966

PUBLIC LAW 89-601

Foreword

The Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 make a series of minimum wage law changes which begins on February 1, 1967, and does not end until February 1, 1971. The Amendments not only raise the minimum wage to a new high but also broadly increase the number of workers who are entitled to its benefits.

A total of 8 million workers are added to the previously covered 29.6 million to make a grand total of 37.6 million directly affected by the FLSA. The Amendments extend the FLSA to employees in four major areas which were never reached before—(1) schools, hospitals and nursing institutions; (2) laundries and drycleaners; (3) hotels, motels and restaurants; and (4) agriculture. Schools and hospitals were not viewed as commercial businesses; they are now specifically labeled as such, whether public or private. FLSA benefits are also extended to a great many more employees in retail trade and in the construction industry, to federal service contract employees and to certain federal employees.

The complicated Amendments bring many workers under the FLSA by reducing the dollar volume a business enterprise must have before it is covered; in some cases, there is no dollar volume requirement at all. The Amendments add other workers by eliminating exemptions of employers or workers.

The objective of this publication is to explain the practical effects of the changes made by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966. The Fair Labor Standards Act, with the 1966 amendments appearing in italics, is reproduced at ¶ 500. Historical notes show when a provision is new or has been amended.

An explanation of the new minimum wage rates begins at ¶ 110. Overtime pay is discussed starting at ¶ 210. Detailed explanations of the FLSA changes, presented on the basis of employer and worker groups, start at ¶ 310. An introductory discussion to acquaint newly covered employers with the FLSA starts at ¶ 440.

If more detailed coverage of the federal government's regulation of minimum wages and overtime pay is required, reference should be made to the FEDERAL WAGES-HOURS UNIT of the publishers' LABOR LAW REPORTS.

September, 1966

COMMERCE CLEARING HOUSE, INC.

© 1966, Commerce Clearing House, Inc.
All Rights Reserved
First Printing, September, 1966
Second Printing, September, 1966
Third Printing, November, 1966

Printed in the United States of America

Table of Contents

	Paragraph (¶)
Higher Wage Minimums	110
Overtime Pay Features	210
Employers and Employees Reached	310
Time Limit for Court Suits	430
Future Legislative Matters	435
Problems of Newly Covered Employers	440
Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966	450
Fair Labor Standards Act, as Amended	500
Topical Index	page 62

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT, AS AMENDED

Section		Paragraph (¶)
1	Short Title	501
2	Congressional Finding and Declaration of Policy	502
3	Definitions	510
4	Administrator	540
5	Special Industry Committees for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands [and American Samoa]	550
6	Minimum Wages	560
7	Maximum Hours	580
8	Wage Orders in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands [and American Samoa]	600
9	Attendance of Witnesses	610
10	Court Review	620
11	Investigations, Inspections, Records and Homework Regulations	630
12	Child Labor Provisions	640
13(a)	Minimum Wage and Overtime Pay Exemptions	650
13(b)	Overtime Pay Exemptions	680
14	Learners, Apprentices, Students and Handicapped Workers	720
15	Prohibited Acts; Prima Facie Evidence	730
16	Penalties; Civil and Criminal Liability; Waiver of Claims; Actions by Secretary; Limitation of Actions	740
17	Injunction Proceedings	750
18	Relation to Other Laws	760
19	Separability of Provisions	770

HIGHER WAGE MINIMUMS

Presently covered employees . . . ¶ 110
Newly covered employees . . . ¶ 120
Agricultural employees . . . ¶ 130
Contract services to federal government . . . ¶ 140
Federal employees . . . ¶ 150
Employees in Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands . . . ¶ 160
Tips . . . ¶ 170

Presently Covered Employees

¶ 110

Employees who have been covered by the minimum wage provisions of the FLSA prior to the 1966 Amendments are entitled to higher hourly minimum wages as follows:

$1.40 an hour for one year beginning February 1, 1967, and
$1.60 an hour beginning February 1, 1968.

Prior to these increases, the minimum rate for presently covered employees was $1.25 an hour.

The amendments establish two minimum wage schedules, one for presently covered employees and one for employees covered by the FLSA for the first time because of the amendments. The rates for newly covered employees start at a lower figure than those for presently covered employees, and the rates are escalated over a longer period of time in reaching the maximum fixed for presently covered employees (see ¶ 120).

Rates below the general standards fixed for presently and newly covered employees are permissible under the amendments for students and handicapped workers (see ¶ 395).

Law: Sec. 6(a)(1).

Newly Covered Employees

¶ 120

For employees (other than agricultural workers, certain federal employees and certain employees under federal contracts) who are brought under the FLSA's minimum wage provisions for the first time, a schedule of minimum wage rates is established as follows:

$1.00 an hour beginning February 1, 1967;
$1.15 an hour beginning February 1, 1968;
$1.30 an hour beginning February 1, 1969;
$1.45 an hour beginning February 1, 1970; and
$1.60 an hour beginning February 1, 1971.

Special minimum rates are specified for agricultural workers (see ¶ 130), federal employees (see ¶ 150) and certain employees under federal contracts (see ¶ 140).

Employees who are newly covered under the FLSA minimum wage requirements also acquire companion rights to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex. This is true whether they are brought within coverage because of employment by an enterprise or because of cancellation of an exemption formerly applicable to them.

Lower Dollar Enterprise Tests

It is possible for some newly covered employees who receive the lower rate to later become entitled to the higher rate for presently covered employees. On the other hand, presently covered employees entitled to the higher rate could shift to the lower rate for newly covered workers. The shifts could occur until February 1, 1971, when the minimum wage rates for presently covered employees and those for newly covered employees will become the same.

These shifts could occur with changes in an employer's annual dollar volume of sales. The amendments changed the dollar volume test for enterprise coverage by reducing from $1 million to $500,000 the annual gross sales needed for coverage. The lower wage rate for newly covered employees would apply under the $500,000 enterprise test whenever gross sales are less than $1 million, thus basing coverage solely upon the lower test established by the 1966 amendments. However, an employee would have to be regarded as a presently covered worker entitled to the higher minimum wage and overtime pay standards whenever his employer would meet the former $1 million test for enterprise coverage.

Law: Sec. 6(b).

Agricultural Employees

¶ 130

For the first time agricultural workers employed on farms are covered by the FLSA's minimum wage requirement. A special minimum wage rate schedule is established for agricultural employees as follows:

$1.00 an hour beginning February 1, 1967;

$1.15 an hour beginning February 1, 1968; and

$1.30 an hour beginning February 1, 1969.

Children under 16 working with their parents at piece-rate jobs on farms must be paid the same piece rates paid to employees over that age.

There are conditions under which agricultural employees are exempt from these minimum wage requirements. Employees who are not exempt are entitled not only to the minimum wage benefits but also to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex. All agricultural employees remain exempt from the FLSA's overtime pay provisions.

A detailed explanation of the new rules which apply to agricultural employees appears at ¶ 345.

Law: Secs. 6(a)(5), 13(a)(6).

Contract Services to Federal Government

¶ 140

An employer who provides services to the federal government under a contract or subcontract subject to the Service Contract Act of 1965 must pay his employees at least the minimum wage rates applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120). These rates apply unless the employees are already entitled to the higher rates prescribed for presently covered employees (see ¶ 110) or unless higher rates are specified in determinations under the Service Contract Act of 1965. Special rules apply to linen supply contracts, as explained at ¶ 340.

Law: Sec. 6(e).

Federal Employees

¶ 150

The following federal employees are now entitled to the minimum wage benefits (see ¶ 110) and overtime pay benefits (see ¶ 210) accorded presently covered employees under the 1966 Amendments:

(1) certain federal wage board employees whose compensation is required to be fixed and adjusted in accordance with prevailing wage rates,

(2) employees of naval facilities whose wages are established to conform with those of private establishments in the immediate vicinity, and

(3) federal employees in nonappropriated fund instrumentalities under the jurisdiction of the Armed Forces, such as, for example, post exchanges.

On the other hand, federal employees performing services during a workweek in a work place within the Canal Zone are entitled to the lower rates applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120).

All of these federal employees must receive equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

Law: Sec. 18(b).

Employees in Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands

¶ 160

The special minimum wage rates presently applicable to workers in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands under wage orders established through industry committees are increased under the 1966 Amendments by a percentage which is the equivalent of the percentage of increase on the mainland. For persons presently covered by an industry wage order, the wage rates are increased 12 percent effective 60 days after February 1, 1967, or 1 year from the effective date of the most recent wage order, whichever is later. Then 1 year later, a second increase is made of 16 percent of the rates applicable under the most recent wage order issued prior to February 1, 1967. These increases are reviewable by industry committees.

The Secretary of Labor will appoint a special industry committee to recommend a minimum wage rate for employees who are brought within the FLSA by the 1966 Amendments. The committee's recommendations are not to take effect before 60 days after February 1, 1967.

Law: Sec. 6(c).

Tips

¶ 170

Special rules apply to an employee who is engaged in an occupation in which he customarily and regularly receives more than $20 a month in tips. As to such an employee, an employer may credit up to 50 percent of the employee's minimum wage as coming from tips actually received by the employee.

For example, if the minimum wage of a tipped employee is $1.00 an hour, his employer can credit as much as $0.50 as being from tips. The employer would pay the remainder or $0.50 an hour to the tipped employee. The tips and payment from the employer, when combined, would at least equal the statutory minimum wage. However, the employee must actually have received not less than 50 percent of his minimum wage in tips.

If an employee is receiving less in tips than the amount credited by the employer, the employer is required to pay the balance so that the employee receives at least the minimum wage.

In the 1961 amendments to the FLSA, the Secretary of Labor had been directed to make a study of problems involving tips in relation to wages. The results of the study contributed toward the new rules applicable to tipped employees and helped bring about the extension of minimum wage coverage to employees of hotels, motels, restaurants and other businesses that employ tipped personnel.

Law: Secs. 3(m), 3(t).

OVERTIME PAY FEATURES

Presently covered employees . . .	¶ 210	Newly covered employees . . .	¶ 220
		Commission salesmen . . .	¶ 230

Presently Covered Employees

¶ 210

There is no change in the general overtime pay standard for presently covered employees. The premium rate of time and one half the regular rate is continued for hours worked in excess of 40 in any workweek. The federal employees discussed at ¶ 150 are entitled to overtime pay based on this standard.

An employee's regular rate is determined by dividing his total remuneration for employment (except exclusions permitted by the FLSA) in any workweek by the total number of hours actually worked by him in that workweek for which such compensation was paid.

An exception to the general rule that overtime pay is figured on the basis of the regular rate exists with respect to employees of certain petroleum distributors. Certain overtime hours worked by such employees may be compensated at one and one half times their minimum rates; other overtime hours command pay at one and one half times their regular rates (see ¶ 390).

Law: Sec. 7(a)(1).

Newly Covered Employees

¶ 220

Overtime pay standards are established for newly covered employees in three steps. Generally, overtime pay at the rate of time and one half the regular rate is required for workweek hours over:

44 hours a week beginning February 1, 1967;

42 hours a week beginning February 1, 1968; and

40 hours a week beginning February 1, 1969.

As is the case with presently covered employees, an exception from the regular rate basis for calculating overtime pay is created by the 1966 Amendments for employees of qualified petroleum distributors. Part of the employees' overtime pay may be computed on the basis of their FLSA minimum rates; other overtime hours must be paid for on the basis of their regular rates (see ¶ 390).

The Amendments also contain special overtime pay provisions for hospital employees. A hospital and an employee may agree that the employee's overtime pay will be calculated on the basis of a 14-day work period rather than the customary 7-day period. Overtime must be paid for hours worked in excess of 8 daily and in excess of 80 during the 14-day period.

Enterprise Coverage

Because of the reduction in the annual dollar volume test for coverage of enterprises from not less than $1 million to not less than $500,000 and the elimination of monetary tests for certain types of businesses (see ¶ 310), there is a possibility that an employee subject to the lower overtime pay standards for newly covered employees might shift to the higher standards for presently covered employees. It would also be possible for an employee to shift from the higher to the lower standards. These shifts could occur until February 1, 1969, when the two overtime pay schedules for newly covered employees and for presently covered employees will become the same.

The lower overtime pay and minimum wage requirements would apply any time when enterprise coverage is occasioned by the $500,000 test established by the 1966 amendments as distinguished from the $1 million test prior to the amendments. However, an employee would be regarded as a presently covered worker entitled to the higher overtime pay and minimum wage requirements whenever his employer meets the former $1 million test for enterprise coverage.

Changes in Exemptions

The 1966 amendments make many changes in exemptions. For example, they establish new overtime pay exemptions for seasonal industries (see ¶ 350). These exemptions replace former exemptions including, among other things, those for the area of production, seasonal activities, first processing and the handling of livestock and poultry. If a former 14-week overtime pay exemption, for example, is cancelled by these new seasonal exemptions, the employees affected would be governed by the overtime pay standards for newly covered workers during a 14-week period. However, these same employees would be governed by the overtime pay standards for presently covered employees during the remaining 38 weeks of the year when their former exemption did not apply, since the 1966 amendments make no change in their status with respect to this period.

Whenever an employee becomes entitled to FLSA overtime pay by reason of the cancellation of an overtime pay exemption, the overtime pay requirements established for newly covered workers apply.

Law: Secs. 7(a)(2), 7(j).

Commission Salesmen

¶ 230

A clarifying change has been made in the FLSA provisions which permit commissions paid to employees of retail or service establishments to qualify as overtime pay. The exemption applies to a salesman if two conditions are met:

(1) The salesman's regular rate of pay must be in excess of one and one half times the statutory minimum rate applicable to him.

(2) More than half of the salesman's compensation for a representative period (not less than one month) must represent commissions on goods or services.

The shortest period of time that can be used as the representative period under the second condition is one month. Aside from this specification, the facts in the particular case would govern the length of the period.

The 1966 Amendments provide that in determining the proportion of compensation representing commissions, all earnings resulting from the application of a bona fide commission rate shall be deemed commissions on goods or services without regard to whether the computed commissions exceed the draw or guarantee.

Prior to this amendment, the government, in enforcing this leeway, took the position that compensation could be considered commissions for purposes of overtime pay only when commissions exceeded draws. In the event of an advance that exceeded a draw, the advance had to be substituted for the draw in making the determination.

Law: Sec. 7(i).

EMPLOYERS AND EMPLOYEES REACHED

Dollar-test enterprises . . . ¶ 310
Retail or service establishments . . . ¶ 315
Hotels, motels and restaurants . . . ¶ 320
Amusement or recreational establishments . . . ¶ 325
Bowling establishments . . . ¶ 327
Schools, hospitals and nursing institutions . . . ¶ 330
Construction industry . . . ¶ 335
Laundries, linen suppliers and drycleaners . . . ¶ 340
Agricultural employees . . . ¶ 345
Seasonal exemptions . . . ¶ 350
Small newspapers . . . ¶ 355
Transportation companies . . . ¶ 360
Motion picture theaters . . . ¶ 365
Forestry and logging operations . . . ¶ 370
Automobile, aircraft and farm implement sales establishments . . . ¶ 375
Food service employees . . . ¶ 380
Gasoline service stations . . . ¶ 385
Petroleum distribution employees . . . ¶ 390
Students and handicapped workers . . . ¶ 395
Eniwetok and Kwajalein Atolls and Johnston Island . . . ¶ 400

Dollar-Test Enterprises

¶ 310

A business not specifically named in the FLSA enterprise coverage provisions is subject to the statute on an enterprise basis if:

(1) two of its employees are personally engaged in interstate commerce, produce goods for commerce, or handle goods which have already been produced by someone else for commerce; and

(2) yearly gross sales, exclusive of certain excise taxes, amount to $500,000 beginning February 1, 1967 ($250,000 beginning February 1, 1969).

Prior to the FLS Amendments, the dollar test was $1 million; the commerce test concerning employee activities remains unchanged.

Retailers and local transit operators are now tested for enterprise coverage under these provisions. Former specific enterprise tests for them are deleted by the amendments. The dollar test for both of them previously was $1 million, and, in addition, retailers had to purchase $250,000 worth of interstate goods yearly.

The only other dollar test for enterprises concerns gasoline service establishments. It has not been changed; it is discussed at ¶ 385.

Other Enterprises

There are other enterprise coverage provisions that have no dollar condition, only the two-employee commerce condition. They pertain to the construction industry (see ¶ 335); laundries and drycleaners (see ¶ 340); and schools, hospitals and nursing institutions (see ¶ 330).

Industries Affected for First Time

Any business or endeavor not coming within these specifically named categories is tested for enterprise coverage under the $500,000 standard (which later becomes $250,000). Industries that will be subject to this enterprise testing for the first time because they have lost former full wage exemptions include hotels, motels and restaurants (see ¶ 320); food service (see ¶ 380); automobile, aircraft and farm implement dealers (see ¶ 375); and agriculture (see ¶ 345). Enterprises in these industries now have an exemption only from overtime pay, not from minimum wages and equal pay for equal work regardless of sex (except, possibly, agriculture). Prior to the amendments, they were fully exempt.

Enterprise coverage extends the benefits of the FLSA to all of the employer's workers (unless otherwise exempt), regardless of whether they are individually performing interstate work; otherwise, coverage extends only to employees personally doing such work.

Wage Scales

Employees who get the benefits of the statute for the first time because they are employed by an enterprise subject to coverage under the amendments are entitled to the wages specified for newly covered employees (for minimum wages, see ¶ 120; for overtime pay, see ¶ 220). Even though an employee is individually engaged in interstate activities, these rates apply if he is brought within the terms of the statute because of the cancellation of an exemption.

Enterprise employees who would have been covered under the enterprise provisions as they existed prior to the amendments have the advantage of the rates specified for presently covered employees; the minimum rates appear at ¶ 110 and the overtime standard is discussed at ¶ 210. These rates also apply to employees who were individually covered prior to the amendments and who remain individually covered thereafter.

Law: Secs. 3(r), 3(s).

Retail or Service Establishments

¶ 315

All employees of a retail or service establishment, including those employees who are engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, are exempt from the FLSA if the establishment meets the requirements of the retail and service establishment exemption. In order to qualify as an exempt retail or service establishment, it is necessary:

(1) that 75 percent of the establishment's dollar volume of sales of goods or services, or of both, be not for resale and be recognized as retail sales or services in the particular industry,

(2) that the establishment make more than 50 percent of its sales of goods or services within the state in which it is located, and

(3)(a) if the particular establishment is part of a covered enterprise, that the establishment's annual sales volume be less than $250,000, or

(3)(b) if the particular establishment is not part of a covered enterprise, that the establishment's annual sales volume be less than $500,000.

The FLSA limits the size of an establishment that may be exempt. When a retail or service establishment is a segment of a covered enterprise, the establishment cannot claim the benefit of the exemption unless the volume of its business is below $250,000 a year. An establishment which is not part of a covered enterprise may be exempt until January 31, 1969, even if its annual business reaches or exceeds $250,000—just so long as it does not meet the $500,000 test for enterprise coverage which is effective until that time. On February 1, 1969, when the enterprise coverage test will be reduced from $500,000 to $250,000, the retail and service establishment exemption will no longer be available to any establishment having an annual sales volume between $250,000 and $500,000.

Businesses Excluded or Included

Expressly excluded from the scope of this exemption are establishments and employees engaged in laundering and dry cleaning. The same is true with regard to hospitals, old-age homes, nursing homes, mental institutions, schools for physically handicapped, mentally handicapped or gifted children, elementary and secondary schools (exclusive of teachers and academic administrative personnel), and institutions of higher education. Regardless of any business volume, each of these endeavors (including those that are public or nonprofit) is a covered enterprise if at least two employees are engaged in activities touching on commerce.

The establishments that come within the scope of the retail and service establishment exemption include restaurants, retail food service establishments, retail automobile dealers, and hotels and motels, even though the FLSA contains specific overtime pay exemptions for these types of establishments. An establishment cannot claim the retail or service establishment exemption unless it meets all the exemption requirements (a wholesale automobile dealer does not qualify for this exemption).

The fact that restaurants and other establishments may qualify for the general exemption for retail or service establishments is of considerable importance because, in addition to the overtime pay exemption provided for their industries, the minimum wage and equal pay provisions of the Act are inapplicable to establishments within the scope of the general exemption.

Similarly, an amusement or recreational establishment may be able to avail itself of the retail and service establishment exemption when it would otherwise be nonexempt for failure to meet the requirements of the amusement or recreational establishment exemption noted at ¶ 325.

Law: Secs. 3(s)(1), 13(a)(2).

Hotels, Motels and Restaurants

¶ 320

An unconditional exemption from the overtime pay provisions of the FLSA is provided for the employees of an establishment which is a hotel, motel or restaurant. For purposes of this overtime pay exemption, it makes no difference whether or not such establishment is a covered enterprise or part of such an enterprise.

The overtime pay exemption does not affect the application of the minimum wage and equal pay provisions to employees who are within FLSA coverage either because they are themselves engaged in interstate work or because the establishment which employs them is a covered enterprise. However, the overtime pay exemption is not the only exemption available for such an establishment.

If a hotel, motel or restaurant meets the requirements of the retail or service establishment exemption, the minimum wage and equal pay provisions of the FLSA are also inapplicable to the employees of the establishment. Unlike the overtime pay exemption, which is applicable to establishments of any size, the retail or service establishment exemption does not apply to an establishment whose annual dollar volume of business exceeds certain limits (see ¶ 315).

Enterprise Coverage

Heretofore, the employees of hotels, motels and restaurants had no FLSA benefits since they were expressly excluded from enterprise coverage and the few employees doing interstate work were exempt. As amended, the FLSA merely denies them the right to overtime pay but gives nonexempt employees minimum wage and equal pay protection by eliminating the former exclusion from enterprise coverage. Employees who are now covered must be paid the minimum wage rates applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120).

Tipped Employees

Special rules can be applied to a "tipped employee," that is, an employee engaged in an occupation in which he customarily and regularly receives more than $20 a month in tips. In paying the wages of a tipped employee, the employer may credit up to 50 percent of the applicable minimum wage as coming from tips, but he may do so only if the employee actually received the amount credited. The maximum tip allowance for a newly covered employee is 50 cents per hour while the $1.00 minimum wage rate remains in effect (see ¶ 170).

Other Exemption

A special overtime pay exemption is provided for the food service employees of retail or service establishments (see ¶ 380).

Law: Sec. 13(b)(8).

Amusement or Recreational Establishments

¶ 325

Certain amusement or recreational establishments are fully exempt from the minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay requirements of the FLSA, irrespective of whether or not they are covered enterprises or parts of such enterprises. In order to qualify for this full exemption, an amusement or recreational establishment must meet one of two exemption tests which require that its business be of a seasonal nature.

An amusement or recreational establishment is fully exempt (1) if it does not operate for more than seven months in a calendar year, or (2) if it has average receipts for any six months of the preceding calendar year which do not exceed one third of the average receipts for the other six months of that calendar year. An amusement or recreational establishment which fails to meet either one of these two tests may possibly come within the retail or service establishment exemption (see ¶ 315).

Wage Rates

An amusement or recreational establishment which does not qualify for exemption may or may not be part of a covered enterprise. In either case, employees who are themselves engaged in interstate work and who were not exempt prior to the 1966 amendments must be paid the minimum wage rates for presently covered employees (see ¶ 110). On the other hand, the minimum wage rates for newly covered employees (see ¶ 120) are applicable to employees newly entitled to FLSA benefits because of new coverage of the enterprise. The employees of a nonexempt amusement or recreational establishment are within coverage of the equal pay provisions of the FLSA, unless they come within the scope of some other minimum wage exemption. The overtime pay requirements for presently covered employees are discussed at ¶ 210, those for newly covered employees at ¶ 220.

Law: Sec. 13(a)(3).

Bowling Establishments

¶ 327

Employees of a bowling establishment are partially exempt from the overtime pay requirements of the FLSA. They need not be paid overtime compensation so long as they do not work more than 48 hours a week. Hours worked in excess of 48 a week must be compensated at time and one half the regular rate unless another exemption applies. The partial overtime pay exemption extends to a bowling establishment which is a covered enterprise or part of such enterprise. The duty to comply with the minimum wage and equal pay provisions of the FLSA remains unaffected.

If a bowling establishment meets the requirements of the retail or service establishment exemption, it is fully exempt from the minimum wage, overtime pay, and equal pay provisions. In case of enterprise coverage, only an establishment doing an annual business of less than $250,000 can invoke the retail or service establishment exemption (see ¶ 315).

Wage Rates

The minimum wage rates that are applicable to employees of bowling establishments not qualifying for the retail or service establishment exemption depend upon whether coverage results from the 1966 Amendments. Employees who are themselves engaged in interstate work and who were not exempt prior to the 1966 Amendments must be paid the minimum wage rates for presently covered employees (see ¶ 110). The minimum wage rates for newly covered employees (see ¶ 120) apply to employees now entitled to FLSA protection because of new coverage of the enterprise.

Law: Sec. 13(b)(19).

Schools, Hospitals and Nursing Institutions

¶ 330

Employees of schools, hospitals, and nursing institutions are brought under the FLSA for the first time. These employees are entitled to the minimum wages prescribed for newly covered employees (see ¶ 120) and, if not exempt, to the overtime pay benefits accorded newly covered employees (see ¶ 220). They are also entitled to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex. The extended coverage does not apply to employees of federal hospitals.

The minimum wage, overtime pay and equal pay provisions have been extended, on an enterprise basis, to employees of elementary and secondary schools, excluding teachers and academic administrative personnel; institutions of higher education; hospitals and nursing institutions; and schools for physically handicapped, mentally handicapped or gifted children. It makes no difference whether the schools, hospitals or institutions are public or private or operated for profit or operated not for profit. The dollar amount of the business is immaterial. The FLSA commerce requirements are satisfied by the employment of two workers who merely handle goods that have moved in or have been produced for interstate commerce.

Pertinent Exemptions

The amendments offer a partial exemption from the FLSA overtime pay requirements to institutions, other than hospitals, engaged in caring for the sick, the aged, the mentally ill, or defective who reside on the premises. The exemption is limited to 48 hours per week. A deviation from the overtime pay provisions permits hospitals to use a 14-day period in calculating overtime pay (see ¶ 220).

An exemption existing prior to the amendments which is of particular interest to newly covered schools, hospitals and nursing institutions completely exempts administrative, executive and professional employees from the wage provisions. On the other hand, the previously existing retail or service establishment exemption is made specifically unavailable to schools, hospitals and nursing institutions brought within coverage of the statute.

Law: Secs. 3(d), 3(r), 3(s)(4), 3(v), 3(w), 7(j), 13(a)(1), 13(a)(2), 13(b)(8).

Construction Industry

¶ 335

An enterprise engaged in the business of construction (or reconstruction) which satisfies the commerce requirements is subject to the FLSA regardless of the dollar volume of business done. Prior to the FLS Amendments, a construction business had to have a yearly gross of $350,000 before it was covered.

Employees whose duties personally involve commerce or the production of goods for commerce are entitled to the minimum wages applicable to presently covered employees, as listed at ¶ 110; and to overtime pay on the basis available for presently covered employees, as discussed at ¶ 210. This is true whether or not the business is brought within enterprise coverage by reason of the 1966 amendments.

The pay rates applicable to employees whose own duties do not involve commerce or the production of goods for commerce depend upon whether the business is a covered enterprise solely because of elimination of the dollar test. If it is covered for that reason alone, the minimum wage rates for newly covered employees at ¶ 120 and the overtime standards for newly covered employees at ¶ 220 apply. If the enterprise grosses $350,000 yearly, the rates shown at ¶ 110 and 210 for presently covered employees apply. All of the employees who are entitled to the FLSA minimum wage benefits also have the right to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

White Collar Exemption

It is possible that some of the employees may come within exemptions extending to minimum, overtime and equal pay, such as the exemption for administrative, executive and professional employees. There is no specific exemption for the construction industry, as such.

Law: Sec. 3(s)(3).

Laundries, Linen Suppliers and Drycleaners

¶ 340

Laundries and drycleaners are now subject to FLSA coverage on an enterprise basis. All that is necessary for such coverage is employment of two workers in connection with commerce; the mere handling of goods produced for interstate commerce is a sufficient link. The amount of business done by a laundry or drycleaner is of no consequence. An enterprise must adhere to the federal wage standards with respect to all of its employees (who are not otherwise exempt), whether or not the employee himself is personally doing work of an interstate nature. A covered enterprise is subject to the statutory directives as to minimum wages, equal pay for equal work, and overtime compensation.

Contractors and subcontractors who provide linen supply services to the United States are specifically subject to the minimum wage and equal pay provisions (see ¶ 140).

A complete wage exemption formerly available to laundries and drycleaners was canceled by the FLS Amendments. Under that exemption, a laundry or drycleaner was completely exempt from the federal wage standards, unless 25 percent of its business was for customers engaged in mining, manufacturing, transportation or communications. If this exemption was lost because of the amount of industrial work, coverage would not have attached on an enterprise basis unless gross yearly sales amounted to $1 million. If sales did not meet that figure, only employees individually engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce had the benefits of the law. Although there is no longer a specific exemption for laundries and drycleaners, advantage can still be taken of the full wage exemptions for driver-salesmen and for administrative, executive and professional employees.

Minimum and Overtime Wage Rates

Except for government work, the minimum and overtime rates specified for newly covered employees apply to employees brought within reach of the FLSA either because of new enterprise coverage or because of cancellation of the exemption. These minimum rates are listed at ¶ 120; the overtime rates appear at ¶ 220.

Again except for government work, employees who were covered by the FLSA prior to the amendments—either on an enterprise or on an individual employee basis—are entitled to be paid at the rates fixed for presently covered employees (see ¶ 110 for minimum wage rates and ¶ 210 for overtime pay). With respect to government work, if it accounts for more than 50 percent of gross yearly sales, the minimum rates for presently covered employees apply (see ¶ 110); otherwise the rates for newly covered employees are applicable (see ¶ 120).

Law: Secs. 3(s)(2), 6(e)(2), 13(a)(1).

Agricultural Employees

¶ 345

Agricultural employees are brought under the FLSA for the first time. While the newly covered agricultural employees are not entitled to overtime pay premiums, they are entitled to the special minimum wages shown at ¶ 130. Agricultural workers entitled to minimum wages must also receive equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

Congress intended that employees of only large farms be covered. To be covered, an employee must work for an employer who used more than 500 man-days of agricultural labor in any calendar quarter of the preceding year. A man-day is a day in which an employee performs any agricultural work for at least one hour.

An agricultural worker is not covered if he is employed as a hand harvest laborer, is paid on a piece rate basis, commutes daily from his permanent residence to the farm, and has been employed in agriculture less than 13 weeks during the preceding calendar year.

The parent, spouse, child and other members of an agricultural employer's immediate family are not covered by the FLSA. Neither are cowboys or Basques engaged in the range production of livestock. Sharecroppers and tenant farmers whose work is closely controlled are covered by the Act. Children under 17 years old can be employed on piece-rate jobs on the same farm as their parents. Children below the age of 16 cannot be employed in hazardous occupations, except by their parents on their parents' farm.

The 1966 amendments grant minimum wage and equal pay benefits to statutorily covered employees who are in the following related operations:

irrigation projects
country elevators cotton ginning
transportation of fruits and vegetables.

These rights are granted by partial cancellation of former complete exemptions, leaving only overtime pay exemptions in effect. A complete wage exemption formerly applied to livestock auction work by farm employees. That exemption has been reduced to a mere overtime pay exemption.

Enterprise Coverage

A farming enterprise doing a yearly business of $500,000 ($250,000 beginning February 1, 1969) and employing two workers whose activities have interstate aspects is subject to the FLSA on an enterprise basis. All of its employees, who are not otherwise exempt, have minimum wage and equal pay rights. This is true whether or not the employees are personally engaged in work falling in the interstate category.

Law: Secs. 3(e), 3(u), 13(a)(6), 13(b)(12)-13(b)(16), 13(c)(2).

Seasonal Exemptions

¶ 350

Newly phrased exemptions for seasonal industries are features of the FLS Amendments of 1966. One exemption pertains to seasonal industries generally; the other, to farm enterprises. Findings must be made by the Secretary of Labor that the required seasonal conditions exist before advantage can be taken of either of these exemptions. Both exemptions offer relief from the overtime pay standards during 14 weeks yearly. However, a total of only 20 weeks per year is allowed to an employer who qualifies under both. If prior official policy is continued, it will not be necessary for the exempt weeks to run consecutively.

The general exemption is available to industries found by the Secretary to be of a seasonal nature. Under it, statutory overtime need not be paid until after 10 hours daily or 50 hours weekly have been worked.

The farm exemption extends to 10 hours daily or 48 hours weekly. It is available to industries found by the Secretary:

(1) to be characterized by marked annually recurring seasonal peaks of operation at the places of first marketing or first processing of agricultural or horticultural commodities from farms; or

(2) to be of a seasonal nature and engaged in the handling, packing, storing, preparing, first processing, or canning of any perishable agricultural or horticultural commodities in their raw or natural state.

These exemptions replace former exemptions pertaining to seasonal industries, area of production, first processing, and handling of livestock and poultry. Some of the exemptions were 14-week overtime exemptions, some were year-round overtime exemptions, and one was a full exemption from minimum, overtime and equal pay.

Specific Wage Rates

Employees who are brought within the terms of the FLSA by reason of the cancellation or replacement of any of the former exemptions are entitled, for the most part, to minimum wages based on the rates applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120). The rates for presently covered employees, shown at ¶ 110, will apply to employees who were entitled to minimum wages prior to the amendments. It is possible that a few newly covered employees will qualify as agricultural employees; if so, the rates appearing at ¶ 130 apply.

Any employees entitled to minimum wages are also entitled to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

The overtime pay standards for newly covered employees appear at ¶ 220. The standard remains the same for employees who were previously covered (see ¶ 210).

Presumably, the lower rates apply only to the additional time an employee is brought within the terms of the FLSA. For example, if an employee's 14-week yearly overtime pay exemption is canceled by the amendments, and no new exemption applies, the lower overtime pay standards can be used for computing his overtime pay during 14 weeks; the unchanged previous standard applies to the other 38 weeks that he is not exempt. It would seem logical that the 14 weeks selected for pay based on the lower standard should correspond with the 14 weeks that previously would have been chosen for the exemption.

Law: Secs. 7(c), 7(d).

Small Newspapers

¶ 355

An employee of a small newspaper which meets certain requirements is exempt from the minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay provisions of the FLSA if he is employed in connection with its publication. The 1966 Amendments retain this exemption but modify it slightly.

In order to qualify for the exemption, a newspaper must be one that:

(1) is a weekly, semiweekly or daily newspaper,
(2) has a circulation of less than 4,000, and
(3) has a major part of its circulation in the county where published or counties contiguous to that county.

The 1966 Amendments relaxed the third requirement since formerly a newspaper had to be both printed and published in the county (or contiguous counties) where it had its major circulation. Hence, the place where the newspaper is printed is no longer relevant for purposes of the exemption.

Law: Sec. 13(a)(8).

Transportation Companies

¶ 360

Local transit systems and taxicab operators are affected considerably by the FLS Amendments. Both categories of employers are subject to wider coverage.

Local Transit Systems

Operators of street, suburban or interurban electric railways, or of local trolley or motorbus carriers are subject to wider FLSA coverage by reason of the 1966 amendments. Gross yearly sales of $500,000 (exclusive of excise taxes) bring them within enterprise coverage; formerly $1 million was the figure. They are covered whether they are publicly or privately owned and whether they are operated for profit or not for profit. The minimum wage and equal pay exemptions formerly available to operators who did not qualify as enterprises have been canceled. The former overtime pay exemption for all employees, regardless of the enterprise status of their employer, is restricted to an exemption for operating employees of railways or carriers subject to state or local regulation.

Covered employees of railways and carriers not meeting the enterprise conditions must be paid at least the minimum rates for newly covered employees (see ¶ 120) and the overtime rates for newly covered employees (see ¶ 220). A covered enterprise can pay the minimum rates appearing at ¶ 120 if its yearly business is less than $1 million, but it must pay the minimum rates listed at ¶ 110 for presently covered employees if the business exceeds that amount. The overtime pay standards for these enterprises are those applicable to newly covered employees, as shown at ¶ 220.

Taxicab Operators

Only the drivers employed by taxicab operators are now exempt from the FLSA, and only from the overtime pay requirements. Prior to the amendments, all of the employees of taxicab operators were fully exempt from the wage provisions. Now employees engaged in commerce or employed by a covered enterprise (see ¶ 310) are entitled to minimum wages and to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex, and those not employed in the capacity of drivers are entitled also to overtime pay. The minimum rates appearing at ¶ 120 apply; the pertinent overtime standards are discussed at ¶ 220.

With respect to the minimum wages of taxicab employees who receive tips, an employer may credit up to 50 percent of the minimum wage with tips actually received by the employee. For comment on the rules pertaining to tips, see ¶ 170.

Law: Secs. 3(d), 3(r), 13(b)(7), 13(b)(17).

Motion Picture Theaters

¶ 365

Employees of a motion picture theater are exempt from the minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay provisions of the FLSA, regardless of whether or not the theater is a covered enterprise or part of such an enterprise. This was also true under the FLSA prior to amendment, but the exemption was specific only insofar as an enterprise was concerned.

The exemption is wider now in that it extends to an "establishment" which is a motion picture theater. Formerly, the theater had to meet all of the tests of a "retail or service establishment."

Law: Sec. 13(a)(9).

Forestry and Logging Operations

¶ 370

There is an exemption from the minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay provisions of the FLSA for employees engaged in small-scale forestry and logging operations. The 1966 Amendments changed a pre-existing exemption to limit it to workers of employers who have not more than 8 persons in such operations. Prior to the 1966 Amendments, 12 such workers could be employed under the exemption.

No change was made in the kinds of operations that the employees may engage in. Their activities may include the planting and tending of trees, the surveying or felling of timber, and the preparing and transporting of logs to the mill or other transportation terminal.

The limit of 8 employees is applicable on a workweek basis so that the exemption is lost for any workweek in which more than 8 persons are employed in such operations. In any workweek in which more than 8 but not more than 12 workers are employed, their employer must pay them not less than the minimum wage rate for newly covered employees (see ¶ 120) and must also treat the employees as newly covered for overtime pay purposes (see ¶ 220). In a workweek in which the number of persons doing such work exceeds 12, all employees must be treated as presently covered employees for both minimum wage purposes (see ¶ 110) and overtime pay purposes (see ¶ 210). The equal pay provisions of the FLSA are fully applicable in any workweek in which the exemption is lost.

Law: Sec. 13(a)(13).

Automobile, Aircraft and Farm Implement Sales Establishments

¶ 375

Prior to the 1966 Amendments, the FLSA contained a minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay exemption for all employees of a retail or service establishment which was primarily engaged in the selling of automobiles, trucks or farm implements. The 1966 Amendments added aircraft dealers but changed the full exemption to a mere overtime pay exemption which is limited to certain categories of employees.

The overtime pay requirements of the FLSA are now inapplicable to a salesman, mechanic or partsman employed by an establishment which is primarily engaged in selling automobiles, trailers, trucks, farm implements or aircraft to the ultimate purchaser. The overtime pay exemption does not require that the establishment qualify as a retail or service establishment, and it makes no distinction between establishments which are or are not a part of a covered enterprise.

The designated employees are exempt from the overtime pay provisions even if they work in physically separate buildings or areas so long as they are employed in a department which is functionally operated as part of the dealership. Employees who do not belong to one of the specified categories—for example, office workers—are not within the scope of the new overtime pay exemption.

Wider Wage Coverage

These changes in exemptions have the general effect of:

(1) extending minimum wage and equal pay coverage to the employees within the scope of the new overtime pay exemption; and

(2) extending minimum wage, equal pay and overtime coverage to employees in the nonexempt categories who are covered by the FLSA either on an individual or on an enterprise basis.

The minimum wage rates for newly covered employees are set forth at ¶ 120, and the overtime pay provisions for newly covered employees are at ¶ 220. Included among the employees now exempted from overtime pay may be some who were previously covered because their employer did not qualify as a retail or service establishment. Such employees would be treated as presently covered employees for minimum wage purposes (see ¶ 110).

Still in effect and still available, if all statutory conditions are met, is the general exemption for retail and service establishments (see ¶ 315). This general exemption is available to an establishment which is not part of an enterprise and which does an annual business under $500,000 ($250,000 after February 1, 1969). It is also available to any establishment which is part of a covered enterprise and does an annual business under $250,000.

Law: Sec. 13(b)(10).

Food Service Employees

¶ 380

A food service employee of a retail or service establishment need not be paid premium pay for overtime hours even if the establishment is part of a covered enterprise. In order for this overtime pay exemption to be applicable, two requirements must be satisfied:

(1) the establishment must be a retail or service establishment within the meaning of the general exemption for retail or service establishments (see ¶ 315), and

(2) the employee must be employed primarily in connection with the preparation or offering of food or beverages for human consumption, either on the premises, or by such services as catering, banquet, box lunch, or curb or counter service, to the public, to employees, or to members or guests of clubs.

Prior to the 1966 Amendments, the FLSA fully exempted such employees from minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay coverage. The exemption has now been narrowed to an overtime pay exemption and the change has the effect of bringing such employees within coverage of the minimum wage and equal pay provisions if they are employed by a covered enterprise or if they individually do interstate work. These employees (if not otherwise exempt) must be paid the minimum wage rates applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120). Insofar as tipped employees are concerned, a portion of their wages can be credited as coming from tips (see ¶ 170).

An establishment may qualify for the general exemption given certain retail or service establishments. If an establishment meets all of the requirements of that general exemption (see ¶ 315), the food service employees would be exempt not only for overtime pay purposes but also for minimum wage and equal pay purposes.

Law: Sec. 13(b)(18).

Gasoline Service Stations

¶ 385

All of the employees of a gasoline service establishment, who are not otherwise exempt, are covered by the FLSA if the establishment has an annual gross volume of $250,000 or more (excluding excise taxes at the retail level if the taxes are separately stated). Covered employees are entitled to the minimum wages specified for presently covered employees (see ¶ 110). As to overtime pay premiums, however, these employees are treated as newly covered employees (see ¶ 220). This oddity results from the fact that these employees formerly were covered by the FLSA's minimum wage provisions but were specifically exempted from overtime pay premiums; this exemption was canceled by the 1966 Amendments.

All of the employees of an establishment doing less than $250,000 gross business yearly are exempt from the law if the establishment qualifies as a retail or service establishment (see ¶ 315).

Law: Sec. 3(s)(1).

Petroleum Distribution Employees

¶ 390

Only a partial exemption from the overtime pay premiums now exists for employees of certain businesses engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products. Prior to the FLS Amendments of 1966, these employees were entirely exempt from overtime pay premiums. Now, they must be paid one and one half times the applicable FLSA minimums for hours between 40 and 56 in a workweek. For hours worked in excess of 12 daily or 56 weekly, they must be paid one and one half times their regular rates.

The minimum rates specified at ¶ 110 for presently covered employees apply to employees who themselves are engaged in commerce. The minimums specified at ¶ 120 for newly covered employees apply to employees brought within enterprise coverage by reason of the 1966 amendments (see ¶ 310 for enterprise coverage).

A business qualifies for this partial exemption if it is an independently owned local bulk petroleum distributor, does less than $1 million business yearly, sells more than 75 percent within the state, and sells not more than 25 percent to customers who purchase for bulk resale.

Law: Sec. 7(b)(3).

Students and Handicapped Workers

¶ 395

New provisions permitting the employment of students and handicapped workers at below normal wage rates have been written into the FLSA by the 1966 Amendments.

Students

The Secretary of Labor can permit the employment in retail or service establishments of full-time students at not less than 85 percent of the minimum wage which would otherwise apply. Employment is limited to not more than 20 hours a week, except that during school vacations employment can be permitted on a part-time or full-time basis. The proportion of student hours in any single establishment cannot exceed certain norms.

The Secretary can also permit the employment of full-time students in agriculture on a part-time basis (not exceeding 20 hours a week) or on a part-time or a full-time basis during school vacations. The students' wage rate is not to be less than 85 percent of the applicable agricultural minimum rate.

The student provisions apply to all students regardless of age, but the student provisions do not affect the operation of child labor laws.

Handicapped Workers

New provisions regulate the employment of handicapped workers at wages below the statutory minimum, including their employment in agriculture.

Special certificates issued by the Secretary of Labor may authorize the employment of handicapped workers at wages that are lower than the applicable statutory minimum, but not less than 50 percent of that minimum. Such wages shall be commensurate with wages paid non-handicapped workers for essentially the same type, quality, and quantity of work.

In cases where handicapped workers are engaged in training or evaluation programs or where they are multihandicapped or so severely handicapped that they are unable to engage in competitive employment, the Secretary may issue certificates authorizing their employment at wages which are less than 50 percent of the statutory minimum and conform to the workers' productivity.

The Secretary is authorized to establish special rates of compensation for workers employed in federal "work activity centers," that is, centers for handicapped workers whose physical or mental impairment is so severe as to make their productive capacity inconsequential.

Law: Sec. 14.

Eniwetok and Kwajalein Atolls and Johnston Island

¶ 400

The FLSA has been extended to the workers on Johnston Island and on the Eniwetok and Kwajalein Atolls. Since these employees, unless otherwise exempt, are brought under the FLSA for the first time by the 1966 Amendments, they are subject to the lower minimum wage and overtime pay requirements, the ones applicable to newly covered employees (see ¶ 120 and 220). Any employee who is entitled to minimum wages also has a right to equal pay for equal work regardless of sex.

Law: Sec. 13(f).

TIME LIMIT FOR COURT SUITS

¶ 430

A court suit to collect unpaid minimum wages, unpaid overtime compensation or liquidated damages under the FLSA must normally be started within two years after the cause of action accrued. In the case of a wilful violation, however, the time limit is increased by a full year. Where a cause of action arises out of a wilful violation, the suit may be commenced within three years after the cause of action accrued.

The statute of limitations does not apply to government injunction suits, except where back pay orders are concerned. With respect to those orders, the period now will be two years in the absence of wilfulness, three years in the event of wilfulness. There is no time limit in contempt proceedings which may result in an order for back pay which has accrued since the issuance of an injunction.

Law: Sec. 601, FLS Amendments of 1966.

FUTURE LEGISLATIVE MATTERS

¶ 435

Congress has directed the Secretary of Labor to make a study of industry practices with respect to overtime payments for work in excess of 40 hours a week. Of particular interest to Congress is the extent to which overtime work retards the creation of new job opportunities. The Secretary is to submit his report, with recommendations, by July 1, 1967.

The Secretary is directed to make studies also of the wages of handicapped workers and of wage standards in the Canal Zone. He is to report to Congress by July 1, 1967 as to the handicapped workers; by July 1, 1968 as to the Canal Zone.

Specific legislation prohibiting age discrimination in employment is to be submitted to Congress by the Secretary on or before January 1, 1967.

Law: Secs. 603-606, FLS Amendments of 1966.

PROBLEMS OF NEWLY COVERED EMPLOYERS

What the FLSA requires . . . ¶ 440
Slight interstate dealings reached . . . ¶ 441
Small firms feel enterprise impact . . . ¶ 442
How the law is enforced . . . ¶ 443
Questions to be answered . . . ¶ 444

What the FLSA Requires

¶ 440

The FLSA reaches practically all enterprises and industries in the nation in which interstate activities take place. It requires the following for all workers engaged in such enterprises or activities who are not specifically exempt:

(1) Payment of a straight-time wage at not less than a specified minimum.

(2) Payment of an overtime wage of time and one half for hours worked in excess of designated weekly numbers.

(3) Payment of equal wages for equal work regardless of sex.

This law also regulates child labor on a national basis.

Slight Interstate Dealings Reached

¶ 441

The FLSA applies to employers who engage in interstate activities, even though only to a limited degree. All that is necessary is regularity of interstate operations.

Example—A daily newspaper with a circulation of 10,000, all of which was local except about ½ of 1% which was regularly out-of-state, came within range of the FLSA.

Small Firms Feel Enterprise Impact

¶ 442

Businesses stamped as enterprises by the law must satisfy the FLSA wage and child-labor standards with respect to all of their employees (unless exempt). It makes no difference that a particular employee has nothing to do with interstate commerce; he nevertheless is entitled to benefits offered by the law. Businesses not rated as enterprises are subject to the law only with respect to employees whose activities have interstate aspects.

A business need not be especially large to qualify as an enterprise. Construction contractors, laundries, dry cleaners, hospitals, schools, retirement homes and nursing facilities qualify merely by having at least two employees whose duties touch on interstate commerce. The mere handling of goods which have moved across state lines at some time in the past is sufficient to satisfy the commerce requirement. It is immaterial how small the business is.

Other firms having two such employees and which do at least $250,000 business yearly will qualify as enterprises after January 31, 1969. From February 1, 1967, until then, the requirement for enterprise coverage is $500,000 under the 1966 Amendments.

How the Law Is Enforced

¶ 443

The government has wide authority in enforcing the FLSA. To aid it in doing so, employers are required to keep records showing the name, occupation and sex of employees, the time they work, the pay they receive for straight-time and overtime, and any deductions from their pay.

The government constantly investigates business firms to uncover violations of the law. It investigates on its own, as well as pursuant to complaints. The government collects any back wages found owing to employees, either on a voluntary basis or through the courts. To insure against future violations, court injunctions are procured; an injunction is hard to get rid of once it attaches to an employer's business. Flagrant, wilful violations can be taken to criminal courts for remedy. Shipping bans can be slapped on goods produced in violation of the law. Short-changed employees can themselves sue for back pay, and possibly recover an equal amount in damages. The employer must pay their attorney's fees.

Compliance with the FLSA is no defense to violation of state, municipal or other federal laws imposing stricter labor standards than those contained in the FLSA.

Questions to Be Answered

¶ 444

An employer newly covered by the FLSA—perhaps because of the wider reach of the 1966 Amendments or a geographical expansion of business operations—is faced with many problems under the federal law. The big questions are:

Coverage.—Is coverage on an enterprise basis (meaning all employees are covered) or is coverage on an individual employee basis (meaning only employees connected with interstate activities are covered)? Are any of the employees exempt?

Wage scales.—Which of the two minimum-wage and overtime-pay scales set up by the 1966 Amendments apply? This depends upon whether coverage is by reason of the amendments. The two minimum-wage scales do not become one until February 1, 1971. The two overtime-pay scales dovetail on February 1, 1969.

Figuring the payroll.—How should the payroll be figured to satisfy the FLSA standards? Idle time and time spent by employees before and after regular working hours may or may not be compensable. Fringe benefits paid to employees may or may not qualify as wages creditable towards the statutory requirements. Deductions from wages may or may not reduce the payment required by law. Differentials in the pay of men and women may or may not violate the law.

Child labor.—Does the employment of children exceed the confines of the FLSA? Is the work they perform deemed hazardous? Are they working when they should be in school? Are they old enough to engage in their particular occupations?

Recordkeeping.—Are records needed by the government for investigation purposes being properly kept? The records may contain information sufficient for the employer's needs, but not enough to satisfy the government.

Avoiding violations.—Only by answering these questions correctly, and acting accordingly, can employers be sure of not running afoul of the FLSA.

Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966

[¶ 450]

To amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to extend its protection to additional employees, to raise the minimum wage, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966."

[¶ 455] [TITLES I TO V—AMENDMENTS OF THE FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT OF 1938, AS AMENDED]

Sec. 101 to Sec. 501. [The amendments made by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 are incorporated in place in the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, which is reproduced in full at ¶ 500.]

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

[¶ 460] STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS

Sec. 601. (a) Section 16(c) of such Act is amended by striking out "two-year statute" and by inserting in lieu thereof "statutes".

(b) Section 6(a) of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 (Public Law 49, Eightieth Congress) is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof the following: ", except that a cause of action arising out of a willful violation may be commenced within three years after the cause of action accrued".

[¶ 470] EFFECTIVE DATE

Sec. 602. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the amendments made by this Act shall take effect on February 1, 1967. On and after the date of the enactment of this Act the Secretary is authorized to promulgate necessary rules, regulations, or orders with regard to the amendments made by this Act.

[¶ 480] STUDY OF EXCESSIVE OVERTIME

Sec. 603. The Secretary of Labor is hereby instructed to commence immediately a complete study of present practices dealing with overtime payments for work in excess of forty hours per week and the extent to which such overtime work impedes the creation of new job opportunities in American industry. The Secretary is further instructed to report to the Congress by July 1, 1967, the findings of such survey with appropriate recommendations.

[¶ 485] CANAL ZONE EMPLOYEES AND PANAMA CANAL STUDY

Sec. 604. The Secretary of Labor, in cooperation with the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State, shall (1) undertake a study with respect to (A) wage rates payable to Federal employees in the Canal Zone engaged in employment of the kind described in paragraph (7) of section 202 of the Classification Act of 1949 (5 U. S. C. 1082(7)) and (B) the requirements of an effective and economical operation of the Panama Canal, and (2) report to the Congress not later than July 1, 1968, the results of his study together with such recommendations as he may deem appropriate.

[¶ 490] STUDY OF WAGES PAID HANDICAPPED CLIENTS IN SHELTERED WORKSHOPS

Sec. 605. The Secretary of Labor is hereby instructed to commence immediately a complete study of wage payments to handicapped clients of sheltered workshops and of the feasibility of raising existing wage standards in such workshops. The Secretary is further instructed to report to the Congress by July 1, 1967, the findings of such study with appropriate recommendations.

[¶ 495] PREVENTION OF DISCRIMINATION BECAUSE OF AGE

Sec. 606. The Secretary of Labor is hereby directed to submit to the Congress not later than January 1, 1967 his specific legislative recommendations for implementing the conclusions and recommendations contained in his report on age discrimination in employment made pursuant to section 715 of Public Law 88-352. Such legislative recommendations shall include, without limitation, provisions specifying appropriate enforcement procedures, a particular administering agency, and the standards, coverage, and exemptions, if any, to be included in the proposed enactment.

FAIR LABOR STANDARDS ACT, AS AMENDED

— The Federal Wage-Hour Law —

[¶ 500]

(Act of June 25, 1938, c. 676, 75th Cong., 3rd Sess., 52 Stat. 1060, as amended by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966).

[¶ 501] SHORT TITLE

Section 1. This Act may be cited as the "Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938."

[¶ 502] CONGRESSIONAL FINDING AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

Sec. 2. (a) The Congress hereby finds that the existence, in industries engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, of labor conditions detrimental to the maintenance of the minimum standard of living necessary for health, efficiency, and general well-being of workers (1) causes commerce and the channels and instrumentalities of commerce to be used to spread and perpetuate such labor conditions among the workers of the several States; (2) burdens commerce and the free flow of goods in commerce; (3) constitutes an unfair method of competition in commerce; (4) leads to labor disputes burdening and obstructing commerce and the free flow of goods in commerce; and (5) interferes with the orderly and fair marketing of goods in commerce.

[¶ 503] [Declaration of Policy]

(b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act, through the exercise by Congress of its power to regulate commerce among the several States and with foreign nations, to correct and as rapidly as practicable to eliminate the conditions above referred to in such industries without substantially curtailing employment or earning power.

[¶ 510] DEFINITIONS

Sec. 3. As used in this Act—

[¶ 511] [Person]

(a) "Person" means an individual, partnership, association, corporation, business trust, legal representative, or any organized group of persons.

[¶ 512] [Commerce]

(b) "Commerce" means trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or between any State and any place outside thereof.

[¶ 513] [State]

(c) "State" means any State of the United States or the District of Columbia or any Territory or possession of the United States.

[¶ 514] [Employer]

(d) "Employer" includes any person acting directly or indirectly in the interest of an employer in relation to an employee but shall not include the United States or any State or political subdivision of a State (except with respect to employees of a State, or a political subdivision thereof, employed (1) in a hospital, institution, or school referred to in the last sentence of subsection (r) of this section, or (2) in the operation of a railway or carrier referred to in such sentence), or any labor organization (other than when acting as an employer), or anyone acting in the capacity of officer or agent of such labor organization.

1966 Amendment.—In Sec. 3(d), the italicized material was added by Sec. 102(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 515] [Employee]

(e) "Employee" includes any individual employed by an employer, except that such term shall not, for the purposes of section 3(u) include—

(1) any individual employed by an employer engaged in agriculture if such individual is the parent, spouse, child, or other member of the employer's immediate family, or

(2) any individual who is employed by an employer engaged in agriculture if such individual (A) is employed as a hand harvest laborer and is paid on a piece rate basis in an operation which has been, and is customarily and generally recognized as having been, paid on a piece rate basis in the region of employment, (B) commutes daily from his permanent residence to the farm on which he is so employed, and (C) has been employed in agriculture less than thirteen weeks during the preceding calendar year.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(e) was amended by Sec. 103(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read "(e) 'Employee' includes any individual employed by an employer."

[¶ 516] [Agriculture]

(f) "Agriculture" includes farming in all its branches and among other things includes the cultivation and tillage of the soil, dairying, the production, cultivation, growing, and harvesting of any agricultural or horticultural commodities (including commodities defined as agricultural commodities in section 15(g) of the Agricultural Marketing Act, as amended), the raising of livestock, bees, fur-bearing animals, or poultry, and any practices (including any forestry or lumbering operations) performed by a farmer or on a farm as an incident to or in conjunction with such farming operations, including preparation for market, delivery to storage or to market or to carriers for transportation to market.

[¶ 517] [Employ]

(g) "Employ" includes to suffer or permit to work.

[¶ 518] [Industry]

(h) "Industry" means a trade, business, industry, or branch thereof, or group of industries, in which individuals are gainfully employed.

[¶ 519] [Goods]

(i) "Goods" means goods (including ships and marine equipment), wares, products, commodities, merchandise, or articles or subjects of commerce of any character, or any part or ingredient thereof, but does not include goods after their delivery into the actual physical possession of the ultimate consumer thereof other than a producer, manufacturer, or processor thereof.

[¶ 520] [Produced]

(j) "Produced" means produced, manufactured, mined, handled, or in any other manner worked on in any State; and for the purposes of this Act an employee shall be deemed to have been engaged in the production of goods if such employee was employed in producing, manufacturing, mining, handling, transporting, or in any other manner working on such goods, or in any closely related process or occupation directly essential to the production thereof, in any State.

[¶ 521] [Sale—Sell]

(k) "Sale" or "sell" includes any sale, exchange, contract to sell, consignment for sale, shipment for sale, or other disposition.

[¶ 522] [Oppressive Child Labor]

(l) "Oppressive child labor" means a condition of employment under which (1) any employee under the age of sixteen years is employed by an employer (other than a parent or a person standing in place of a parent employing his own child or a child in his custody under the age of sixteen years in an occupation other than manufacturing or mining or an occupation found by the Secretary of Labor to be particularly hazardous for the employment of children between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years or detrimental to their health or well-being) in any occupation, or (2) any employee between the ages of sixteen and eighteen years is employed by an employer in any occupation which the Secretary of Labor shall find and by order declare to be particularly hazardous for the employment of children between such ages or detrimental to their health or well-being; but oppressive child labor shall not be deemed to exist by virtue of the employment in any occupation of any person with respect to whom the employer shall have on file an unexpired certificate issued and held pursuant to regulations of the Secretary of Labor certifying that such person is above the oppressive child-labor age. The Secretary of Labor shall provide by regulation or by order that the employment of employees between the ages of fourteen and sixteen years in occupations other than manufacturing and mining shall not be deemed to constitute oppressive child labor if and to the extent that the Secretary of Labor determines that such employment is confined to periods which will not interfere with their schooling and to conditions which will not interfere with their health and well-being.

[¶ 523] [Wage]

(m) "Wage" paid to any employee includes the reasonable cost, as determined by the Secretary of Labor, to the employer of furnishing such employee with board, lodging, or other facilities, if such board, lodging, or other facilities are customarily furnished by such employer to his employees: Provided, That the cost of board, lodging, or other facilities shall not be included as a part of the wage paid to any employee to the extent it is excluded therefrom under the terms of a bona fide collective-bargaining agreement applicable to the particular employee: Provided further, That the Secretary is authorized to determine the fair value of such board, lodging, or other facilities for defined classes of employees and in defined areas, based on average cost to the employer or to groups of employers similarly situated, or average value to groups of employees, or other appropriate measures of fair value. Such evaluations, where applicable and pertinent, shall be used in lieu of actual measure of cost in determining the wage paid to any employee. In determining the wage of a tipped employee, the amount paid such employee by his employer shall be deemed to be increased on account of tips by an amount determined by the employer, but not by an amount in excess of 50 per centum of the applicable minimum wage rate, except that in the case of an employee who (either himself or acting through his representative) shows to the satisfaction of the Secretary that the actual amount of tips received by him was less than the amount determined by the employer as the amount by which the wage paid him was deemed to be increased under this sentence, the amount paid such employee by his employer shall be deemed to have been increased by such lesser amount.

1966 Amendment.—In Sec. 3(m), the last sentence, which appears in italics, was added by Sec. 101(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 524] [Resale]

(n) "Resale" shall not include the sale of goods to be used in residential or farm building construction, repair, or maintenance: Provided, That the sale is recognized as a bona fide retail sale in the industry.

1966 Amendment.—In Sec. 3(n), after the first word the phrase "except as used in subsection (s)(1)" was stricken by Sec. 215(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 525] [Hours Worked]

(o) Hours Worked.—In determining for the purposes of sections 6 and 7 the hours for which an employee is employed, there shall be excluded any time spent in changing clothes or washing at the beginning or end of each workday which was excluded from measured working time during the week involved by the express terms of or by custom or practice under a bona fide collective-bargaining agreement applicable to the particular employer.

[¶ 526] [American Vessel]

(p) "American vessel" includes any vessel which is documented or numbered under the laws of the United States.

[¶ 527] [Secretary]

(q) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Labor.

[¶ 528] [Enterprise]

(r) "Enterprise" means the related activities performed (either through unified operation or common control) by any person or persons for a common business purpose, and includes all such activities whether performed in one or more establishments or by one or more corporate or other organizational units including departments of an establishment operated through leasing arrangements, but shall not include the related activities performed for such enterprise by an independent contractor: Provided, That, within the meaning of this subsection, a retail or service establishment which is under independent ownership shall not be deemed to be so operated or controlled as to be other than a separate and distinct enterprise by reason of any arrangement, which includes, but is not necessarily limited to, an agreement, (1) that it will sell, or sell only, certain goods specified by a particular manufacturer, distributor, or advertiser, or (2) that it will join with other such establishments in the same industry for the purpose of collective purchasing, or (3) that it will have the exclusive right to sell the goods or use the brand name of a manufacturer, distributor, or advertiser within a specified area, or by reason of the fact that it occupies premises leased to it by a person who also leases premises to other retail or service establishments. For purposes of this subsection, the activities performed by any person or persons—

(1) in connection with the operation of a hospital, an institution primarily engaged in the care of the sick, the aged, the mentally ill or defective who reside on the premises of such institution, a school for mentally or physically handicapped or gifted children, an elementary or secondary school, or an institution of higher education (regardless of whether or not such hospital, institution, or school is public or private or operated for profit or not for profit), or

(2) in connection with the operation of a street, suburban or interurban electric railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier, if the rates and services of such railway or carrier are subject to regulation by a State or local agency (regardless of whether or not such railway or carrier is public or private or operated for profit or not for profit), shall be deemed to be activities performed for a business purpose.

1966 Amendment.—In Sec. 3(r), the italicized material at the end was added by Sec. 102(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 529] [Enterprise Engaged in Commerce or in the Production of Goods for Commerce]

(s) "Enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce" means an enterprise which has employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, including employees handling, selling, or otherwise working on goods that have been moved in or produced for commerce by any person, and which—

(1) during the period February 1, 1967, through January 31, 1969, is an enterprise whose annual gross volume of sales made or business done is not less than $500,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated) or is a gasoline service establishment whose annual gross volume of sales is not less than $250,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated), and beginning February 1, 1969, is an enterprise whose annual gross volume of sales made or business done is not less than $250,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated);

(2) is engaged in laundering, cleaning, or repairing clothing or fabrics;

(3) is engaged in the business of construction or reconstruction, or both; or

(4) is engaged in the operation of a hospital, an institution primarily engaged in the care of the sick, the aged, the mentally ill or defective who reside on the premises of such institution, a school for mentally or physically handicapped or gifted children, an elementary or secondary school, or an institution of higher education (regardless of whether or not such hospital, institution, or school is public or private or operated for profit or not for profit).

Any establishment which has as its only regular employees the owner thereof or the parent, spouse, child, or other member of the immediate family of such owner shall not be considered to be an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or a part of such an enterprise, and the sales of such establishment shall not be included for the purpose of determining the annual gross volume of sales of any enterprise for the purpose of this subsection.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(s) was amended by Sec. 102(c) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(s) 'Enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce' means any of the following in the activities of which employees are so engaged, including employees handling, selling, or otherwise working on goods that have been moved in or produced for commerce by any person:

"(1) any such enterprise which has one or more retail or service establishments if the annual gross volume of sales of such enterprise is not less than $1,000,000, exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated and if such enterprise purchases or receives goods for resale that move or have moved across State lines (not in deliveries from the reselling establishment) which amount in total annual volume to $250,000 or more;

"(2) any such enterprise which is engaged in the business of operating a street, suburban or interurban electric railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier if the annual gross volume of sales of such enterprise is not less than $1,000,000, exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated;

"(3) any establishment of any such enterprise, except establishments and enterprises referred to in other paragraphs of this subsection, which has employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce if the annual gross volume of sales of such enterprise is not less than $1,000,000;

"(4) any such enterprise which is engaged in the business of construction or reconstruction, or both, if the annual gross volume from the business of such enterprise is not less than $350,000;

"(5) any gasoline service establishment if the annual gross volume of sales of such establishment is not less than $250,000, exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated:

Provided, That an establishment shall not be considered to be an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or a part of an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, and the sales of such establishment shall not be included for the purpose of determining the annual gross volume of sales of any enterprise for the purpose of this subsection, if the only employees of such establishment are the owner thereof or persons standing in the relationship of parent, spouse, or child of such owner."

[¶ 530] [Tipped Employee]

(t) "Tipped employee" means any employee engaged in an occupation in which he customarily and regularly receives more than $20 a month in tips.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(t) was added by Sec. 101(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 531] [Man-Day]

(u) "Man-day" means any day during which an employee performs any agricultural labor for not less than one hour.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(u) was added by Sec. 103(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 532] [Elementary School]

(v) "Elementary school" means a day or residential school which provides elementary education, as determined under State law.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(v) was added by Sec. 102(d) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 533] [Secondary School]

(w) "Secondary school" means a day or residential school which provides secondary education, as determined under State law.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 3(w) was added by Sec. 102(d) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 540] ADMINISTRATOR

[¶ 541] [Appointment]

Sec. 4. (a) There is hereby created in the Department of Labor a Wage and Hour Division which shall be under the direction of an Administrator, to be known as the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division (in this Act referred to as the "Administrator"). The Administrator shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall receive compensation at the rate of $20,000 a year.

[¶ 542] [Administrative Assistants]

(b) The Secretary of Labor may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary to carry out his functions and duties under this Act and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1949, as amended. The Secretary may establish and utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. Attorneys appointed under this section may appear for and represent the Secretary in any litigation, but all such litigation shall be subject to the direction and control of the Attorney General. In the appointment, selection, classification, and promotion of officers and employees of the Secretary, no political test or qualification shall be permitted or given consideration, but all such appointments and promotions shall be given and made on the basis of merit and efficiency.

[¶ 543] [Principal Office]

(c) The principal office of the Secretary shall be in the District of Columbia, but he or his duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of his powers in any place.

[¶ 544] [Annual Report]

(d) The Secretary shall submit annually in January a report to the Congress covering his activities for the preceding year and including such information, data, and recommendations for further legislation in connection with the matters covered by this Act as he may find advisable. Such report shall contain an evaluation and appraisal by the Secretary of the minimum wages established by this Act, together with his recommendations to the Congress. In making such evaluation and appraisal, the Secretary shall take into consideration any changes which may have occurred in the cost of living and in productivity and the level of wages in manufacturing, the ability of employers to absorb wage increases, and such other factors as he may deem pertinent.

[¶ 545] [Investigation of Effects on Employment of Foreign Competition]

(e) Whenever the Secretary has reason to believe that in any industry under this Act the competition of foreign producers in United States markets or in markets abroad, or both, has resulted, or is likely to result, in increased unemployment in the United States, he shall undertake an investigation to gain full information with respect to the matter. If he determines such increased unemployment has in fact resulted, or is in fact likely to result, from such competition, he shall make a full and complete report of his findings and determinations to the President and to the Congress: Provided, That he may also include in such report information on the increased employment resulting from additional exports in any industry under this Act as he may determine to be pertinent to such report.

[¶ 550] SPECIAL INDUSTRY COMMITTEES FOR PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS [AND AMERICAN SAMOA*]

[¶ 551] [Recommendation of Subminimum Rates]

Sec. 5. (a) The Secretary of Labor shall as soon as practicable appoint a special industry committee to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to employees in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, or in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or employed in any enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or the Secretary may appoint separate industry committees to recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 to employees therein engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or employed in any enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, in particular industries. An industry committee appointed under this subsection shall be composed of residents of such island or islands where the employees with respect to whom such committee was appointed are employed and residents of the United States outside of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands. In determining the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid, and in determining classifications, such industry committees shall be subject to the provisions of section 8.

[¶ 552] [Appointment—Membership]

(b) An industry committee shall be appointed by the Secretary without regard to any other provisions of law regarding the appointment and compensation of employees of the United States. It shall include a number of disinterested persons representing the public, one of whom the Secretary shall designate as chairman, a like number of persons representing employees in the industry, and a like number representing employers in the industry. In the appointment of the persons representing each group, the Secretary shall give due regard to the geographical regions in which the industry is carried on.

* Section 5 also relates to American Samoa by reason of Section 6(a)(3) (¶ 563).

[¶ 553] [Quorum—Compensation]

(c) Two-thirds of the members of an industry committee shall constitute a quorum, and the decision of the committee shall require a vote of not less than a majority of all its members. Members of an industry committee shall receive as compensation for their services a reasonable per diem, which the Secretary shall by rules and regulations prescribe, for each day actually spent in the work of the committee, and shall in addition be reimbursed for their necessary traveling and other expenses. The Secretary shall furnish the committee with adequate legal, stenographic, clerical, and other assistance, and shall by rules and regulations prescribe the procedure to be followed by the committee.

[¶ 554] [Submission of Data—Witnesses]

(d) The Secretary shall submit to an industry committee from time to time such data as he may have available on the matters referred to it, and shall cause to be brought before it in connection with such matters any witnesses whom he deems material. An industry committee may summon other witnesses or call upon the Secretary to furnish additional information to aid in its deliberations.

[¶ 560] MINIMUM WAGES

[¶ 561] [Presently Covered Employees]

Sec. 6. (a) Every employer shall pay to each of his employees who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, wages at the following rates:

(1) not less than $1.40 an hour during the first year from the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 and not less than $1.60 an hour thereafter, except as otherwise provided in this section;

1966 Amendment. — Sec. 6(a)(1) was amended by Sec. 301(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(a) Every employer shall pay to each of his employees who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce wages at the following rates—

"(1) not less than $1.15 an hour during the first two years from the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, and not less than $1.25 an hour thereafter, except as otherwise provided in this section."

[¶ 562] [Homeworkers in Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands]

(2) if such employee is a homeworker in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, not less than the minimum piece rate prescribed by regulation or order; or, if no such minimum piece rate is in effect, any piece rate adopted by such employer which shall yield, to the proportion or class of employees prescribed by regulation or order, not less than the applicable minimum hourly wage rate. Such minimum piece rates or employer piece rates shall be commensurate with, and shall be paid in lieu of, the minimum hourly wage rate applicable under the provisions of this section. The Secretary of Labor, or his authorized representative, shall have power to make such regulations or orders as are necessary or appropriate to carry out any of the provisions of this paragraph, including the power without limiting the generality of the foregoing, to define any operation or occupation which is performed by such home work employees in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands; to establish minimum piece rates for any operation or occupation so defined; to prescribe the method and procedure for ascertaining and promulgating minimum piece rates; to prescribe standards for employer piece rates, including the proportion or class of employees who shall receive not less than the minimum hourly wage rate; to define the term "home worker"; and to prescribe the conditions under which employers, agents, contractors, and subcontractors shall cause goods to be produced by home workers;

[¶ 563] [Workers in American Samoa]

(3) if such employee is employed in American Samoa, in lieu of the rate or rates provided by this subsection or subsection (b), not less than the applicable rate established by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with recommendations of a special industry committee or committees which he shall appoint in the same manner and pursuant to the same provisions as are applicable to the special industry committees provided for Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands by this Act as amended from time to time;

[¶ 564] [Seamen on American Vessels]

(4) if such employee is employed as a seaman on an American vessel, not less than the rate which will provide to the employee, for the period covered by the wage payment, wages equal to compensation at the hourly rate prescribed by paragraph (1) of this subsection for all hours during such period when he was actually on duty (including periods aboard ship when the employee was on watch or was, at the direction of a superior officer, performing work or standing by, but not including off-duty periods which are provided pursuant to the employment agreement); or 1966 Amendment. — Sec. 6(a)(4) was added by Sec. 301(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Similar wording previously appeared in Sec. 6(b)(2).

[¶ 565] [Agricultural Employees]

(5) if such employee is employed in agriculture, not less than $1 an hour during the first year from the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, not less than $1.15 an hour during the second year from such date, and not less than $1.30 an hour thereafter.

1966 Amendment. — Sec. 6(a)(5) was added by Sec. 302 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 570] [Newly Covered Employees]

(b) Every employer shall pay to each of his employees (other than an employee to whom subsection (a)(5) applies) who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, and who in such workweek is brought within the purview of this section by the amendments made to this Act by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, wages at the following rates:

(1) not less than $1 an hour during the first year from the effective date of such amendments,

(2) not less than $1.15 an hour during the second year from such date,

(3) not less than $1.30 an hour during the third year from such date,

(4) not less than $1.45 an hour during the fourth year from such date, and

(5) not less than $1.60 an hour thereafter.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 6(b) was amended by Sec. 303 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(b) Every employer shall pay to each of his employees who in any workweek (i) is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, as defined in section 3(s)(1), (2), or (4) or by an establishment described in section 3(s)(3) or (5), and who, except for the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, would not be within the purview of this section, or (ii) is brought within the purview of this section by the amendments made to section 13(a) of this Act by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, wages at rates—

"(1) not less than $1 an hour during the first three years from the effective date of such amendments; not less than $1.15 an hour during the fourth year from such date; and not less than the rate effective under paragraph (1) of subsection (a) thereafter;

"(2) if such employee is employed as a seaman on an American vessel, not less than the rate which will provide to the employee, for the period covered by the wage payment, wages equal to compensation at the hourly rate prescribed by paragraph (1) of this subsection for all hours during such period when he was actually on duty (including periods aboard ship when the employee was on watch or was, at the direction of a superior officer, performing work or standing by, but not including off-duty periods which are provided pursuant to the employment agreement)."

[¶ 571] [Other Workers in Puerto Rico and Virgin Islands]

(c)(1) The rate or rates provided by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be superseded in the case of any employee in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands only for so long as and insofar as such employee is covered by a wage order heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee appointed pursuant to section 5.

(2) In the case of any such employee who is covered by such a wage order and to whom the rate or rates prescribed by subsection (a) would otherwise apply, the following rates shall apply:

(A) The rate or rates applicable under the most recent wage order issued by the Secretary prior to the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, increased by 12 per centum, unless such rate or rates are superseded by the rate or rates prescribed in a wage order issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under paragraph (C). Such rate or rates shall become effective sixty days after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 or one year from the effective date of the most recent wage order applicable to such employee theretofore issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee appointed under section 5, whichever is later.

(B) Beginning one year after the applicable effective date under paragraph (A), not less than the rate or rates prescribed by paragraph (A), increased by an amount equal to 16 per centum of the rate or rates applicable under the most recent wage order issued by the Secretary prior to the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, unless such rate or rates are superseded by the rate or rates prescribed in a wage order issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under paragraph (C).

(C) Any employer, or group of employers, employing a majority of the employees in an industry in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, may apply to the Secretary in writing for the appointment of a review committee to recommend the minimum rate or rates to be paid such employees in lieu of the rate or rates provided by paragraph (A) or (B). Any such application with respect to any rate or rates provided for under paragraph (A) shall be filed within sixty days following the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 and any such application with respect to any rate or rates provided for under paragraph (B) shall be filed not more than one hundred and twenty days and not less than sixty days prior to the effective date of the applicable rate or rates under paragraph (B). The Secretary shall promptly consider such application and may appoint a review committee if he has reasonable cause to believe, on the basis of financial and other information contained in the application, that compliance with any applicable rate or rates prescribed by paragraph (A) or (B) will substantially curtail employment in such industry. The Secretary's decision upon any such application shall be final. Any wage order issued pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under this paragraph shall take effect on the applicable effective date provided in paragraph (A) or (B).

(D) In the event a wage order has not been issued pursuant to the recommendation of a review committee prior to the applicable effective date under paragraph (A) or (B), the applicable percentage increase provided by any such paragraph shall take effect on the effective date prescribed therein, except with respect to the employees of an employer who filed an application under paragraph (C) and who files with the Secretary an undertaking with a surety or sureties satisfactory to the Secretary for payment to his employees of an amount sufficient to compensate such employees for the difference between the wages they actually receive and the wages to which they are entitled under this subsection. The Secretary shall be empowered to enforce such undertaking and any sums recovered by him shall be held in a special deposit account and shall be paid, on order of the Secretary, directly to the employee or employees affected. Any such sum not paid to an employee because of inability to do so within a period of three years shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

(3) In the case of any such employee to whom subsection (a)(5) or subsection (b) would otherwise apply, the Secretary shall within sixty days after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966 appoint a special industry committee in accordance with section 5 to recommend the highest minimum wage rate or rates in accordance with the standards prescribed by section 8, but not in excess of the applicable rate provided by subsection (a)(5) or subsection (b), to be applicable to such employee in lieu of the rate or rates prescribed by subsection (a)(5) or subsection (b), as the case may be. The rate or rates recommended by the special industry committee shall be effective with respect to such employee upon the effective date of the wage order issued pursuant to such recommendation but not before sixty days after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966.

(4) The provisions of section 5 and section 8, relating to special industry committees, shall be applicable to review committees appointed under this subsection. The appointment of a review committee shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any special industry committee required to be appointed pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) of section 8, except that no special industry committee shall hold any hearing within one year after a minimum wage rate or rates for such industry shall have been recommended to the Secretary by a review committee to be paid in lieu of the rate or rates provided for under paragraph (A) or (B). The minimum wage rate or rates prescribed by this subsection shall be in effect only for so long as and insofar as such minimum wage rate or rates have not been superseded by a wage order fixing a higher minimum wage rate or rates (but not in excess of the applicable rate prescribed in subsection (a) or subsection (b)) hereafter issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendation of a special industry committee.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 6(c) was amended by Sec. 304 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(c) The rate or rates provided by subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall be superseded in the case of any employee in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands only for so long as and insofar as such employee is covered by a wage order heretofore or hereafter issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee appointed pursuant to section 5: Provided, That (1) the following rates shall apply to any such employee to whom the rate or rates prescribed by subsection (a) would otherwise apply:

"(A) The rate or rates applicable under the most recent wage order issued by the Secretary prior to the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, increased by 15 per centum, unless such rate or rates are superseded by the rate or rates prescribed in a wage order issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under paragraph (C). Such rate or rates shall become effective sixty days after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961 or one year from the effective date of the most recent wage order applicable to such employee theretofore issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a special industry committee appointed under section 5, whichever is later.

"(B) Beginning two years after the applicable effective date under paragraph (A), not less than the rate or rates prescribed by paragraph (A), increased by an amount equal to 10 per centum of the rate or rates applicable under the most recent wage order issued by the Secretary prior to the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, unless such rate or rates are superseded by the rate or rates prescribed in a wage order issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under paragraph (C).

"(C) Any employer, or group of employers, employing a majority of the employees in an industry in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, may apply to the Secretary in writing for the appointment of a review committee to recommend the minimum rate or rates to be paid such employees in lieu of the rate or rates provided by paragraph (A) or (B). Any such application with respect to any rate or rates provided for under paragraph (A) shall be filed within sixty days following the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961 and any such application with respect to any rate or rates provided for under paragraph (B) shall be filed not more than one hundred and twenty days and not less than sixty days prior to the effective date of the applicable rate or rates under paragraph (B). The Secretary shall promptly consider such application and may appoint a review committee if he has reasonable cause to believe, on the basis of financial and other information contained in the application, that compliance with any applicable rate or rates prescribed by paragraph (A) or (B) will substantially curtail employment in such industry. The Secretary's decision upon any such application shall be final. Any wage order issued pursuant to the recommendations of a review committee appointed under this paragraph shall take effect on the applicable effective date provided in paragraph (A) or (B).

"(D) In the event a wage order has not been issued pursuant to the recommendation of a review committee prior to the applicable effective date under paragraph (A) or (B), the applicable percentage increase provided by any such paragraph shall take effect on the effective date prescribed therein, except with respect to the employees of an employer who filed an application under paragraph (C) and who files with the Secretary an undertaking with a surety or sureties satisfactory to the Secretary for payment to his employees of an amount sufficient to compensate such employees for the difference between the wages they actually receive and the wages to which they are entitled under this subsection. The Secretary shall be empowered to enforce such undertaking and any sums recovered by him shall be held in a special deposit account and shall be paid, on order of the Secretary, directly to the employee or employees affected. Any such sum not paid to an employee because of inability to do so within a period of three years shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts.

"(2) In the case of any such employee to whom subsection (b) would otherwise apply, the Secretary shall within sixty days after the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961 appoint a special industry committee in accordance with section 5 to recommend the highest minimum wage rate or rates in accordance with the standards prescribed by section 8, not in excess of the applicable rate provided by subsection (b), to be applicable to such employee in lieu of the rate or rates prescribed by subsection (b). The rate or rates recommended by the special industry committee shall be effective with respect to such employee upon the effective date of the wage order issued pursuant to such recommendation but not before sixty days after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961.

"(3) The provisions of section 5 and section 8, relating to special industry committees, shall be applicable to review committees appointed under this subsection. The appointment of a review committee shall be in addition to and not in lieu of any special industry committee required to be appointed pursuant to the provisions of subsection (a) of section 8, except that no special industry committee shall hold any hearing within one year after a minimum wage rate or rates for such industry shall have been recommended to the Secretary by a review committee to be paid in lieu of the rate or rates provided for under paragraph (A) or (B). The minimum wage rate or rates prescribed by this subsection shall be in effect only for so long as and insofar as such minimum wage rate or rates have not been superseded by a wage order fixing a higher minimum wage rate or rates (but not in excess of the applicable rate prescribed in subsection (a) or subsection (b)) hereafter issued by the Secretary pursuant to the recommendation of a special industry committee."

[¶ 572] [Equal Pay for Equal Work]

(d)(1) No employer having employees subject to any provisions of this section shall discriminate, within any establishment in which such employees are employed, between employees on the basis of sex by paying wages to employees in such establishment at a rate less than the rate at which he pays wages to employees of the opposite sex in such establishment for equal work on jobs the performance of which requires equal skill, effort, and responsibility, and which are performed under similar working conditions, except where such payment is made pursuant to (i) a seniority system; (ii) a merit system; (iii) a system which measures earnings by quantity or quality of production; or (iv) a differential based on any other factor other than sex: Provided, That an employer who is paying a wage rate differential in violation of this subsection shall not, in order to comply with the provisions of this subsection, reduce the wage rate of any employee.

(2) No labor organization, or its agents, representing employees of an employer having employees subject to any provisions of this section shall cause or attempt to cause such an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of paragraph (1) of this subsection.

(3) For purposes of administration and enforcement, any amounts owing to any employee which have been withheld in violation of this subsection shall be deemed to be unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation under this Act.

(4) As used in this subsection, the term "labor organization" means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

[¶ 573] [Contract Services to Federal Government]

(e)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 of this Act (except subsections (a)(1) and (f) thereof), every employer providing any contract services (other than linen supply services) under a contract with the United States or any subcontract thereunder shall pay to each of his employees whose rate of pay is not governed by the Service Contract Act of 1965 (41 U. S. C. 351-357) or to whom subsection (a)(1) of this section is not applicable, wages at rates not less than the rates provided for in subsection (b) of this section.

(2) Notwithstanding the provisions of section 13 of this Act (except subsections (a)(1) and (f) thereof) and the provisions of the Service Contract Act of 1965, every employer in an establishment providing linen supply services to the United States under a contract with the United States or any subcontract thereunder shall pay to each of his employees in such establishment wages at rates not less than those prescribed in subsection (b), except that if more than 50 per centum of the gross annual dollar volume of sales made or business done by such establishment is derived from providing such linen supply services under any such contracts or subcontracts, such employer shall pay to each of his employees in such establishment wages at rates not less than those prescribed in subsection (a)(1) of this section.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 6(e) was added by Sec. 305 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 580] MAXIMUM HOURS

[¶ 581] [Overtime Pay—Presently Covered Employees]

Sec. 7. (a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, no employer shall employ any of his employees who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, for a workweek longer than forty hours unless such employee receives compensation for his employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(a)(1) was amended by Sec. 401 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(a)(1) Except as otherwise provided in this section, no employer shall employ any of his employees who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce for a workweek longer than forty hours, unless such employee receives compensation for his employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed; and"

[¶ 582] [Overtime Pay—Newly Covered Employees]

(2) No employer shall employ any of his employees who in any workweek is engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, or is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, and who in such workweek is brought within the purview of this subsection by the amendments made to this Act by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966—

(A) for a workweek longer than forty-four hours during the first year from the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966,

(B) for a workweek longer than forty-two hours during the second year from such date, or

(C) for a workweek longer than forty hours after the expiration of the second year from such date, unless such employee receives compensation for his employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(a)(2) was amended by Sec. 401 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(2) No employer shall employ any of his employees who in any workweek (i) is employed in an enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce, as defined in section 3(s)(1) or (4), or by an establishment described in section 3(s)(3), and who, except for the enactment of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961, would not be within the purview of this subsection, or (ii) is brought within the purview of this subsection by the amendments made to section 13 of this Act by the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961—

"(A) for a workweek longer than forty-four hours during the third year from the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1961,

"(B) for a workweek longer than forty-two hours during the fourth year from such date,

"(C) for a workweek longer than forty hours after the expiration of the fourth year from such date, unless such employee receives compensation for his employment in excess of the hours above specified at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed."

[¶ 583] [Guaranteed Employment Exemptions]

(b) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in such subsection without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed therein if such employee is so employed—

(1) in pursuance of an agreement, made as a result of collective bargaining by representatives of employees certified as bona fide by the National Labor Relations Board, which provides that no employee shall be employed more than one thousand and forty hours during any period of twenty-six consecutive weeks; or

(2) in pursuance of an agreement, made as a result of collective bargaining by representatives of employees certified as bona fide by the National Labor Relations Board, which provides that during a specified period of fifty-two consecutive weeks the employee shall be employed not more than two thousand two hundred and forty hours and shall be guaranteed not less than one thousand eight hundred and forty hours (or not less than forty-six weeks at the normal number of hours worked per week, but not less than thirty hours per week) and not more than two thousand and eighty hours of employment for which he shall receive compensation for all hours guaranteed or worked at rates not less than those applicable under the agreement to the work performed and for all hours in excess of the guaranty which are also in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under subsection (a) or two thousand and eighty in such period at rates not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed; or

(3) by an independently owned and controlled local enterprise (including an enterprise with more than one bulk storage establishment) engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products if—

(A) the annual gross volume of sales of such enterprise is less than $1,000,000 exclusive of excise taxes,

(B) more than 75 per centum of such enterprise's annual dollar volume of sales is made within the State in which such enterprise is located, and

(C) not more than 25 per centum of the annual dollar volume of sales of such enterprise is to customers who are engaged in the bulk distribution of such products for resale, and such employee receives compensation for employment in excess of forty hours in any workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the minimum wage rate applicable to him under section 6, and if such employee receives compensation for employment in excess of twelve hours in any workday, or for employment in excess of fifty-six hours in any workweek, as the case may be, at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(b)(3) was added by Sec. 212(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Similar wording previously appeared in Sec. 13(b)(10), which read:

"(10) any employee of an independently owned and controlled local enterprise (including an enterprise with more than one bulk storage establishment) engaged in the wholesale or bulk distribution of petroleum products if (A) the annual gross volume of sales of such enterprise is not more than $1,000,000 exclusive of excise taxes, and (B) not more than 75 per centum of such enterprise's annual dollar volume of sales is made within the State in which such enterprise is located, and (C) not more than 25 per centum of the annual dollar volume of sales of such enterprise is to customers who are engaged in the bulk distribution of such products for resale; or".

[¶ 584] [Seasonal Industry Exemption]

(c) For a period or periods of not more than ten workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, or fourteen workweeks in the aggregate in the case of an employer who does not qualify for the exemption in subsection (d) of this section, any employer may employ any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in subsection (a) without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed in such subsection if such employee (1) is employed by such employer in an industry found by the Secretary to be of a seasonal nature, and (2) receives compensation for employment by such employer in excess of ten hours in any workday, or for employment by such employer in excess of fifty hours in any workweek, as the case may be, at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(c) was added by Sec. 204(c) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. A similar exemption previously appeared in Sec. 7(b)(3), which read:

"(3) for a period or periods of not more than fourteen workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year in any industry found by the Administrator to be of a seasonal nature."

[¶ 585] [Processing of Agricultural Products Exemption]

(d) For a period or periods of not more than ten workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, or fourteen workweeks in the aggregate in the case of an employer who does not qualify for the exemption in subsection (c) of this section, any employer may employ any employee for a workweek in excess of that specified in subsection (a) without paying the compensation for overtime employment prescribed in such subsection, if such employee—

(1) is employed by such employer in an enterprise which is in an industry found by the Secretary—

(A) to be characterized by marked annually recurring seasonal peaks of operation at the places of first marketing or first processing of agricultural or horticultural commodities from farms if such industry is engaged in the handling, packing, preparing, storing, first processing, or canning of any perishable agricultural or horticultural commodities in their raw or natural state, or

(B) to be of a seasonal nature and engaged in the handling, packing, storing, preparing, first processing, or canning of any perishable agricultural or horticultural commodities in their raw or natural state, and

(2) receives compensation for employment by such employer in excess of ten hours in any workday, or for employment in excess of forty-eight hours in any workweek, as the case may be, at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(d) was added by Sec. 204(c) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. A processing-of-agricultural-products exemption formerly appeared as Sec. 7(c) and read as follows:

"(c) In the case of an employer engaged in the first processing of milk, buttermilk, whey, skimmed milk, of cream into dairy products, or in the ginning and compressing of cotton, or in the processing of cottonseed, or in the processing of sugar beets, sugar-beet molasses, sugar cane, or maple sap, into sugar (but not refined sugar) or into sirup, the provisions of subsection (a) shall not apply to his employees in any place of employment where he is so engaged; and in the case of an employer engaged in the first processing of, or in canning or packing, perishable or seasonal fresh fruits or vegetables, or in the first processing, within the area of production (as defined by the Administrator), of any agricultural or horticultural commodity during seasonal operations, or in handling, slaughtering, or dressing poultry or livestock, the provisions of subsection (a), during a period or periods of not more than fourteen workweeks in the aggregate in any calendar year, shall not apply to his employees in any place of employment where he is so engaged."

[¶ 586] [Payments Excluded from "Regular Rate"]

(e) As used in this section the "regular rate" at which an employee is employed shall be deemed to include all remuneration for employment paid to, or on behalf of, the employee, but shall not be deemed to include—

(1) sums paid as gifts; payments in the nature of gifts made at Christmas time or on other special occasions, as a reward for service, the amounts of which are not measured by or dependent on hours worked, production, or efficiency;

(2) payments made for occasional periods when no work is performed due to vacation, holiday, illness, failure of the employer to provide sufficient work, or other similar cause; reasonable payments for traveling expenses, or other expenses, incurred by an employee in the furtherance of his employer's interests and properly reimbursable by the employer; and other similar payments to an employee which are not made as compensation for his hours of employment;

(3) sums paid in recognition of services performed during a given period if either, (a) both the fact that payment is to be made and the amount of the payment are determined at the sole discretion of the employer at or near the end of the period and not pursuant to any prior contract, agreement, or promise causing the employee to expect such payments regularly; or (b) the payments are made pursuant to a bona fide profit-sharing plan or trust or bona fide thrift or savings plan, meeting the requirements of the Secretary of Labor set forth in appropriate regulations which he shall issue, having due regard among other relevant factors, to the extent to which the amounts paid to the employee are determined without regard to hours of work, production, or efficiency; or (c) the payments are talent fees (as such talent fees are defined and delimited by regulations of the Secretary) paid to performers, including announcers, on radio and television programs;

(4) contributions irrevocably made by an employer to a trustee or third person pursuant to a bona fide plan for providing old-age, retirement, life, accident, or health insurance or similar benefits for employees;

(5) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for certain hours worked by the employee in any day or workweek because such hours are hours worked in excess of eight in a day or in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under subsection (a) or in excess of the employee's normal working hours or regular working hours, as the case may be;

(6) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid for work by the employee on Saturdays, Sundays, holidays, or regular days of rest, or on the sixth or seventh day of the workweek, where such premium rate is not less than one and one-half times the rate established in good faith for like work performed in nonovertime hours on other days; or

(7) extra compensation provided by a premium rate paid to the employee, in pursuance of an applicable employment contract or collective-bargaining agreement, for work outside of the hours established in good faith by the contract or agreement as the basic, normal, or regular workday (not exceeding eight hours) or workweek (not exceeding the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under subsection (a)), where such premium rate is not less than one and one-half times the rate established in good faith by the contract or agreement for like work performed during such workday or workweek.

[¶ 587] [Guaranteed Weekly Pay for Variable Hours]

(f) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under subsection (a) if such employee is employed pursuant to a bona fide individual contract, or pursuant to an agreement made as a result of collective bargaining by representatives of employees, if the duties of such employee necessitate irregular hours of work, and the contract or agreement (1) specifies a regular rate of pay of not less than the minimum hourly rate provided in subsection (a) or (b) of section 6 (whichever may be applicable) and compensation at not less than one and one-half times such rate for all hours worked in excess of such maximum workweek, and (2) provides a weekly guaranty of pay for not more than sixty hours based on the rates so specified.

[¶ 588] [Overtime Computed on Piece, Hourly or Basic Rates]

(g) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee for a workweek in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under such subsection if, pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at between the employer and the employee before performance of the work, the amount paid to the employee for the number of hours worked by him in such workweek in excess of the maximum workweek applicable to such employee under such subsection—

(1) in the case of an employee employed at piece rates, is computed at piece rates not less than one and one-half times the bona fide piece rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours; or

(2) in the case of an employee performing two or more kinds of work for which different hourly or piece rates have been established, is computed at rates not less than one and one-half times such bona fide rates applicable to the same work when performed during nonovertime hours; or

(3) is computed at a rate not less than one and one-half times the rate established shall be authorized by regulation by the Secretary as being in computing overtime compensation thereunder: Provided, That the rate so established shall be authorized by regulation by the Secretary of Labor as being substantially equivalent to the average hourly earnings of the employee, exclusive of overtime premiums, in the particular work over a representative period of time; and if (i) the employee's average hourly earnings for the workweek exclusive of payments described in paragraphs (1) through (7) of subsection (e) are not less than the minimum hourly rate required by applicable law, and (ii) extra overtime compensation is properly computed and paid on other forms of additional pay required to be included in computing the regular rate.

[¶ 589] [Credits Against Overtime Pay]

(h) Extra compensation paid as described in paragraphs (5), (6), and (7) of subsection (e) shall be creditable toward overtime compensation payable pursuant to this section.

[¶ 590] [Exemption for Retail and Service Establishments]

(i) No employer shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) by employing any employee of a retail or service establishment for a workweek in excess of the applicable workweek specified therein, if (1) the regular rate of pay of such employee is in excess of one and one-half times the minimum hourly rate applicable to him under section 6, and (2) more than half his compensation for a representative period (not less than one month) represents commissions on goods or services. In determining the proportion of compensation representing commissions, all earnings resulting from the application of a bona fide commission rate shall be deemed commissions on goods or services without regard to whether the computed commissions exceed the draw or guarantee.

1966 Amendment.—In Sec. 7(i) the last sentence was added by Sec. 402 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 591] [Hospital Employees]

(j) No employer engaged in the operation of a hospital shall be deemed to have violated subsection (a) if, pursuant to an agreement or understanding arrived at between the employer and the employee before performance of the work, a work period of fourteen consecutive days is accepted in lieu of the workweek of seven consecutive days for purposes of overtime computation and if, for his employment in excess of eight hours in any workday and in excess of eighty hours in such fourteen-day period, the employee receives compensation at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 7(j) was added by Sec. 403 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 600] WAGE ORDERS IN PUERTO RICO AND THE VIRGIN ISLANDS [AND AMERICAN SAMOA*]

[¶ 601] [Convening of Industry Committee]

Sec. 8. (a) The policy of this Act with respect to industries or enterprises in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce is to reach as rapidly as is economically feasible without substantially curtailing employment the objective of a minimum wage prescribed in paragraph (1) of section 6(a) in each such industry. The Secretary shall from time to time convene an industry committee or committees, appointed pursuant to section 5, and any such industry committee shall from time to time recommend the minimum rate or rates of wages to be paid under section 6 by employers in Puerto Rico or the Virgin Islands, or in Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands, engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or in any enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce in any such industry or classification therein. Minimum rates of wages established in accordance with this section which are not equal to the minimum wage rate prescribed in paragraph (1) of section 6(a) shall be reviewed by such a committee once during each biennial period, beginning with the biennial period commencing July 1, 1958, except that the Secretary, in his discretion, may order an additional review during any such biennial period.

[¶ 602] [Investigation of Conditions in Industry]

(b) Upon the convening of any such industry committee, the Secretary shall refer to it the question of the minimum wage rate or rates to be fixed for such industry. The industry committee shall investigate conditions in the industry and the committee, or any authorized subcommittee thereof, shall after due notice hear such witnesses and receive such evidence as may be necessary or appropriate to enable the committee to perform its duties and functions under this Act. The committee shall recommend to the Secretary the highest minimum wage rates for the industry which it determines, having due regard to economic and competitive conditions, will not substantially curtail employment in the industry, and will not give any industry in Puerto Rico or in the Virgin Islands a competitive advantage over any industry in the United States outside of Puerto Rico and the Virgin Islands.

* Section 8 relates to American Samoa by reason of Section 6(a)(3) added in 1956. See ¶ 563.

[¶ 603] [Recommendations by Industry Committee]

(c) The industry committee shall recommend such reasonable classifications within any industry as it determines to be necessary for the purpose of fixing for each classification within such industry the highest minimum wage rate (not in excess of that prescribed in paragraph (1) of section 6(a)) which (1) will not substantially curtail employment in such classification and (2) will not give a competitive advantage to any group in the industry, and shall recommend for each classification in the industry the highest minimum wage rate which the committee determines will not substantially curtail employment in such classification. In determining whether such classifications should be made in any industry, in making such classifications, and in determining the minimum wage rates for such classifications, no classifications shall be made, and no minimum wage rate shall be fixed, solely on a regional basis, but the industry committee shall consider among other relevant factors the following:

(1) competitive conditions as affected by transportation, living, and production costs;

(2) the wages established for work of like or comparable character by collective labor agreements negotiated between employers and employees by representatives of their own choosing; and

(3) the wages paid for work of like or comparable character by employers who voluntarily maintain minimum wage standards in the industry.

No classification shall be made under this section on the basis of age or sex.

[¶ 604] [Recommendations Effective After Publication]

(d) The industry committee shall file with the Secretary a report containing its findings of fact and recommendations with respect to the matters referred to it. Upon the filing of such report, the Secretary shall publish such recommendations in the Federal Register and shall provide by order that the recommendations contained in such report shall take effect upon the expiration of 15 days after the date of such publication.

[¶ 605] [Contents of Orders—Effective Date]

(e) Orders issued under this section shall define the industries and classifications therein to which they are to apply, and shall contain such terms and conditions as the Secretary finds necessary to carry out the purposes of such orders, to prevent the circumvention or evasion thereof, and to safeguard the minimum wage rates established therein.

[¶ 606] [Notice of Hearing—Publication]

(f) Due notice of any hearing provided for in this section shall be given by publication in the Federal Register and by such other means as the Secretary deems reasonably calculated to give general notice to interested persons.

[¶ 610] ATTENDANCE OF WITNESSES

Sec. 9. For the purpose of any hearing or investigation provided for in this Act, the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 26, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., 1934 edition, title 15, secs. 49 and 50), are hereby made applicable to the jurisdiction, powers, and duties of the Secretary of Labor and the industry committees.

[¶ 620] COURT REVIEW

[¶ 621] [Wage Orders for Puerto Rico, Virgin Islands and American Samoa]

Sec. 10. (a) Any person aggrieved by an order of the Secretary issued under section 8 may obtain a review of such order in the United States Court of Appeals for any circuit wherein such person resides or has his principal place of business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court, within 60 days after the entry of such order a written petition praying that the order of the Secretary be modified or set aside in whole or in part. A copy of such petition shall forthwith be transmitted by the clerk of the court to the Secretary, and thereupon the Secretary shall file in the court the record of the industry committee upon which the order complained of was entered, as provided in section 2112 of title 28, United States Code. Upon the filing of such petition such court shall have exclusive jurisdiction to affirm, modify, or set aside such order in whole or in part, so far as it is applicable to the petitioner. The review by the court shall be limited to questions of law, and findings of fact by such industry committee when supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive. No objection to the order of the Secretary shall be considered by the court unless such objection shall have been urged before such industry committee or unless there were reasonable grounds for failure so to do. If application is made to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence, and it is shown to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence may materially affect the result of the proceeding and that there were reasonable grounds for failure to adduce such evidence in the proceedings before such industry committee, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before an industry committee and to be adduced upon the hearing in such manner and upon such terms and conditions as to the court may seem proper. Such industry committee may modify the initial findings by reason of the additional evidence so taken, and shall file with the court such modified or new findings which if supported by substantial evidence shall be conclusive, and shall also file its recommendation, if any, for the modification or setting aside of the original order. The judgment and decree of the court shall be final, subject to review by the Supreme Court of the United States upon certiorari or certification as provided in section 1254 of title 28 of the United States Code.

[¶ 622] [Stay of Order by Filing Bond]

(b) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (a) shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Secretary's order. The court shall not grant any stay of the order unless the person complaining of such order shall file in court an undertaking with a surety or sureties satisfactory to the court for the payment to the employees affected by the order, in the event such order is affirmed, of the amount by which the compensation such employees are entitled to receive under the order exceeds the compensation they actually receive while such stay is in effect.

[¶ 630] INVESTIGATIONS, INSPECTIONS, RECORDS AND HOMEWORK REGULATIONS

[¶ 631] [Investigations and Inspections]

Sec. 11. (a) The Secretary of Labor or his designated representatives may investigate and gather data regarding the wages, hours, and other conditions and practices of employment in any industry subject to this Act, and may enter and inspect such places and such records (and make such transcriptions thereof), question such employees, and investigate such facts, conditions, practices, or matters as he may deem necessary or appropriate to determine whether any person has violated any provision of this Act, or which may aid in the enforcement of the provisions of this Act. Except as provided in section 12 and in subsection (b) of this section, the Secretary shall utilize the bureaus and divisions of the Department of Labor for all the investigations and inspections necessary under this section. Except as provided in section 12, the Secretary shall bring all actions under section 17 to restrain violations of this Act.

[¶ 632] [Utilization of State Agencies]

(b) With the consent and cooperation of State agencies charged with the administration of State labor laws, the Secretary of Labor may, for the purpose of carrying out his functions and duties under this Act, utilize the services of State and local agencies and their employees and, notwithstanding any other provision of law, may reimburse such State and local agencies and their employees for services rendered for such purposes.

[¶ 633] [Employer Record-Keeping Requirements]

(c) Every employer subject to any provision of this Act or of any order issued under this Act shall make, keep, and preserve such records of the persons employed by him and of the wages, hours, and other conditions and practices of employment maintained by him, and shall preserve such records for such periods of time, and shall make such reports therefrom to the Secretary as he shall prescribe by regulation or order as necessary or appropriate for the enforcement of the provisions of this Act or the regulations or orders thereunder.

[¶ 634] [Homework Regulations]

(d) The Secretary is authorized to make such regulations and orders regulating, restricting, or prohibiting industrial homework as are necessary or appropriate to prevent the circumvention or evasion of and to safeguard the minimum wage rate prescribed in this Act, and all existing regulations or orders of the Secretary relating to industrial homework are hereby continued in full force and effect.

[¶ 640] CHILD LABOR PROVISIONS

[¶ 641] ["Hot Goods" Ban—Innocent Purchasers]

Sec. 12. (a) No producer, manufacturer, or dealer shall ship or deliver for shipment in commerce any goods produced in an establishment situated in the United States in or about which within thirty days prior to the removal of such goods therefrom any oppressive child labor has been employed: Provided, That any such shipment or delivery for shipment of such goods by a purchaser who acquired them in good faith in reliance on written assurance from the producer, manufacturer, or dealer that the goods were produced in compliance with the requirements of this section, and who acquired such goods for value without notice of any such violation, shall not be deemed prohibited by this subsection: And provided further, That a prosecution and conviction of defendant for the shipment or delivery for shipment of any goods under the conditions herein prohibited shall be a bar to any further prosecution against the same defendant for shipments or deliveries for shipment of any such goods before the beginning of said prosecution.

[¶ 642] [Investigations—Actions]

(b) The Secretary of Labor, or any of his authorized representatives, shall make all investigations and inspections under section 11(a) with respect to the employment of minors, and, subject to the direction and control of the Attorney General, shall bring all actions under section 17 to enjoin any act or practice which is unlawful by reason of the existence of oppressive child labor, and shall administer all other provisions of this Act relating to oppressive child labor.

[¶ 643] [Direct Prohibition of Child Labor]

(c) No employer shall employ any oppressive child labor in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce or in any enterprise engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce.

[¶ 649] EXEMPTIONS

[¶ 650] [Minimum-Wage, Equal-Pay and Overtime-Pay Exemptions]

Sec. 13. (a) The provisions of sections 6 and 7 shall not apply with respect to—

[¶ 651] [Executive, Administrative, Professional Employees]

(1) any employee employed in a bona fide executive, administrative, or professional capacity (including any employee employed in the capacity of academic administrative personnel or teacher in elementary or secondary schools) or in the capacity of outside salesman (as such terms are defined and delimited from time to time by regulations of the Secretary, subject to the provisions of the Administrative Procedure Act, except that an employee of a retail or service establishment shall not be excluded from the definition of employee employed in a bona fide executive or administrative capacity because of the number of hours in his workweek which he devotes to activities not directly or closely related to the performance of executive or administrative activities, if less than 40 per centum of his hours worked in the workweek are devoted to such activities); or 1966 Amendment. — Sec. 13(a)(1) was amended by Sec. 214 of the FLS Amendments of 1966 to add "(including any employee employed in the capacity of academic administrative personnel or teacher in elementary or secondary schools)".

[¶ 652] [Retail or Service Establishments]

(2) any employee employed by any retail or service establishment (except an establishment or employee engaged in laundering, cleaning, or repairing clothing or fabrics or an establishment engaged in the operation of a hospital, institution, or school described in section 3(s)(4)), if more than 50 per centum of such establishment's annual dollar volume of sales of goods or services is made within the State in which the establishment is located, and such establishment is not in an enterprise described in section 3(s) or such establishment has an annual dollar volume of sales which is less than $250,000 (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated). A "retail or service establishment" shall mean an establishment 75 per centum of whose annual dollar volume of sales of goods or services (or of both) is not for resale and is recognized as retail sales or services in the particular industry; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(2) was amended by Sec. 201(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment it read as follows:

"(2) any employee employed by any retail or service establishment, more than 50 per centum of which establishment's annual dollar volume of sales of goods or services is made within the State in which the establishment is located, if such establishment—

"(i) is not in an enterprise described in section 3(s), or

"(ii) is in such an enterprise and is a hotel, motel, restaurant, motion picture theater; or is an amusement or recreational establishment that operates on a seasonal basis, or

"(iii) is in such an enterprise and is a hospital, or an institution which is primarily engaged in the care of the sick, the aged, the mentally ill or defective, residing on the premises of such institution, or a school for physically or mentally handicapped or gifted children, or

"(iv) is in such an enterprise and has an annual dollar volume of sales (exclusive of excise taxes at the retail level which are separately stated) which is less than $250,000.

"A 'retail or service establishment' shall mean an establishment 75 per centum of whose annual dollar volume of sales of goods or services (or of both) is not for resale and is recognized as retail sales or services in the particular industry; or"

[¶ 653] [Amusement or Recreational Establishment]

(3) any employee employed by an establishment which is an amusement or recreational establishment, if (A) it does not operate for more than seven months in any calendar year, or (B) during the preceding calendar year, its average receipts for any six months of such year were not more than 33⅓ per centum of its average receipts for the other six months of such year; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(3) was added by Sec. 201(b)(2) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. A similar exemption previously appeared in Sec. 13(a)(2)(ii).

[¶ 654] [Manufacturing Retailers]

(4) any employee employed by an establishment which qualifies as an exempt retail establishment under clause (2) of this subsection and is recognized as a retail establishment in the particular industry notwithstanding that such establishment makes or processes at the retail establishment the goods that it sells: Provided, That more than 85 per centum of such establishment's annual dollar volume of sales of goods so made or processed is made within the State in which the establishment is located; or

[¶ 655] [Fishing and Seafood]

(5) any employee employed in the catching, taking, propagating, harvesting, cultivating, or farming of any kind of fish, shellfish, crustacea, sponges, seaweeds, or other aquatic forms of animal and vegetable life, or in the first processing, canning or packing such marine products at sea as an incident to, or in conjunction with, such fishing operations, including the going to and returning from work and loading and unloading when performed by any such employee; or

[¶ 656] [Agricultural Employees]

(6) any employee employed in agriculture (A) if such employee is employed by an employer who did not, during any calendar quarter during the preceding calendar year, use more than five hundred man-days of agricultural labor, (B) if such employee is the parent, spouse, child, or other member of his employer's immediate family, (C) if such employee (i) is employed as a hand harvest laborer and is paid on a piece rate basis in an operation which has been, and is customarily and generally recognized as having been, paid on a piece rate basis in the region of employment, (ii) commutes daily from his permanent residence to the farm on which he is so employed, and (iii) has been employed in agriculture less than thirteen weeks during the preceding calendar year, (D) if such employee (other than an employee described in clause (C) of this subsection) (i) is sixteen years of age or under and is employed as a hand harvest laborer, is paid on a piece rate basis in an operation which has been, and is customarily and generally recognized as having been, paid on a piece rate basis in the region of employment, (ii) is employed on the same farm as his parent or person standing in the place of his parent, and (iii) is paid at the same piece rate as employees over age sixteen are paid on the same farm, or (E) if such employee is principally engaged in the range production of livestock; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(6) was amended by Sec. 203(a) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment it read as follows:

(6) any employee employed in agriculture or in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways, not owned or operated for profit, or operated on a share-crop basis, and which are used exclusively for supply and storing of water for agricultural purposes; or

[¶ 657] [Learners, Apprentices, Students, and Handicapped Workers]

(7) any employee to the extent that such employee is exempted by regulation, order, or certificate of the Secretary issued under section 14; or 1966 Amendment. — Sec. 13(a)(7) was amended by Sec. 215(c) of the FLS Amendments of 1966 by adding the words "or certificate".

[¶ 658] [Local Newspapers]

(8) any employee employed in connection with the publication of any weekly, semiweekly, or daily newspaper with a circulation of less than four thousand the major part of which circulation is within the county where published or counties contiguous thereto; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(8) was amended by Sec. 205 of the FLS Amendments of 1966 by inserting "where published" in lieu of "where printed and published."

[¶ 659] [Motion Picture Theater Employees]

(9) any employee employed by an establishment which is a motion picture theater; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(9) was added by Sec. 207 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. A similar exemption previously appeared in Sec. 13(a)(2)(ii).

[¶ 660] [Switchboard Operators]

(10) any switchboard operator employed by an independently owned public telephone company which has not more than seven hundred and fifty stations; or

[¶ 661] [Telegraph Message Service]

(11) any employee or proprietor in a retail or service establishment which qualifies as an exempt retail or service establishment under clause (2) of this subsection with respect to whom the provisions of sections 6 and 7 would not otherwise apply, engaged in handling telegraphic messages for the public under an agency or contract arrangement with a telegraph company where the telegraph message revenue of such agency does not exceed $500 a month; or

[¶ 662] [Seamen on Non-American Vessels]

(12) any employee employed as a seaman on a vessel other than an American vessel; or

[¶ 663] [Forestry and Logging Operations]

(13) any employee employed in planting or tending trees, cruising, surveying, or felling timber, or in preparing or transporting logs or other forestry products to the mill, processing plant, railroad, or other transportation terminal, if the number of employees employed by his employer in such forestry or lumbering operations does not exceed eight; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(a)(13) was amended by Sec. 208 of the FLS Amendments of 1966 by inserting "eight" in lieu of "twelve".

[¶ 664] [Shade-grown Tobacco]

(14) any agricultural employee employed in the growing and harvesting of shade-grown tobacco who is engaged in the processing (including, but not limited to, drying, curing, fermenting, bulking, rebulking, sorting, grading, aging, and baling) of such tobacco, prior to the stemming process, for use as cigar wrapper tobacco.

[¶ 680] [Overtime-Pay Exemptions]

(b) The provisions of section 7 shall not apply with respect to—

[¶ 681] [Motor Carriers]

(1) any employee with respect to whom the Secretary of Transportation has power to establish qualifications and maximum hours of service pursuant to the provisions of section 204 of the Motor Carrier Act, 1935; or

[¶ 682] [Railroads, Express Companies, Pipeline and Water Carriers]

(2) any employee of an employer subject to the provisions of part I of the Interstate Commerce Act; or

[¶ 683] [Air Carriers]

(3) any employee of a carrier by air subject to the provisions of title II of the Railway Labor Act; or

[¶ 684] [Seafood Processing]

(4) any employee employed in the canning, processing, marketing, freezing, curing, storing, packing for shipment, or distributing of any kind of fish, shellfish, or other aquatic forms of animal or vegetable life, or any byproduct thereof; or

[¶ 685] [Buyers of Poultry and Dairy Products]

(5) any individual employed as an outside buyer of poultry, eggs, cream, or milk, in their raw or natural state; or

[¶ 686] [Seamen]

(6) any employee employed as a seaman; or

[¶ 687] [Local Transportation]

(7) any driver, operator, or conductor employed by an employer engaged in the business of operating a street, suburban or interurban electric railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier, if the rates and services of such railway or carrier are subject to regulation by a State or local agency; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(7) was amended by Sec. 206(c) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(7) any employee of a street, suburban, or interurban electric railway, or local trolley or motorbus carrier; or"

[¶ 688] [Hotel, Motel, Restaurant or Nursing Home]

(8) any employee employed by an establishment which is a hotel, motel, or restaurant; or any employee who (A) is employed by an establishment which is an institution (other than a hospital) primarily engaged in the care of the sick, the aged, or the mentally ill or defective who reside on the premises, and (B) receives compensation for employment in excess of forty-eight hours in any workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(8) was added by Sec. 201(b)(1) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. A similar exemption previously appeared in Sec. 13(a)(2)(ii).

[¶ 689] [Radio and Television Employees]

(9) any employee employed as an announcer, news editor, or chief engineer by a radio or television station the major studio of which is located (A) in a city or town of one hundred thousand population or less, according to the latest available decennial census figures as compiled by the Bureau of the Census, except where such city or town is part of a standard metropolitan statistical area, as defined and designated by the Bureau of the Budget, which has a total population in excess of one hundred thousand, or (B) in a city or town of twenty-five thousand population or less, which is part of such an area but is at least 40 airline miles from the principal city in such area; or

[¶ 690] [Automobile, Aircraft, and Farm Implement Sales]

(10) any salesman, partsman, or mechanic primarily engaged in selling or servicing automobiles, trailers, trucks, farm implements, or aircraft if employed by a nonmanufacturing establishment primarily engaged in the business of selling such vehicles to ultimate purchasers; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(10), which is similar to the wording that formerly appeared in Sec. 13(a)(19), was added by Sec. 209(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 691] [Local Truck Deliveries]

(11) any employee employed as a driver or driver's helper making local deliveries, who is compensated for such employment on the basis of trip rates, or other delivery payment plan, if the Secretary shall find that such plan has the general purpose and effect of reducing hours worked by such employees to, or below, the maximum workweek applicable to them under section 7(a); or

[¶ 692] [Agriculture—Irrigation Projects]

(12) any employee employed in agriculture or in connection with the operation or maintenance of ditches, canals, reservoirs, or waterways, not owned or operated for profit, or operated on a sharecrop basis, and which are used exclusively for supply and storing of water for agricultural purposes; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(12), which formerly appeared as Sec. 13(a)(6), was added by Sec. 203(c)(B) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 693] [Livestock Auction Operations]

(13) any employee with respect to his employment in agriculture by a farmer, notwithstanding other employment of such employee in connection with livestock auction operations in which such farmer is engaged as an adjunct to the raising of livestock, either on his own account or in conjunction with other farmers, if such employee (A) is primarily employed during his workweek in agriculture by such farmer, and (B) is paid for his employment in connection with such livestock auction operations at a wage rate not less than that prescribed by section 6(a)(1); or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(13), which formerly appeared as Sec. 13(a)(16), was added by Sec. 203(c)(B) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 694] [Country Elevator Employees]

(14) any employee employed within the area of production (as defined by the Secretary) by an establishment commonly recognized as a country elevator, including such an establishment which sells products and services used in the operation of a farm, if no more than five employees are employed in the establishment in such operations; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(14), which formerly appeared as Sec. 13(a)(17), was added by Sec. 204(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 695] [Cotton Ginning and Sugar Processing Employees]

(15) any employee engaged in ginning of cotton for market, in any place of employment located in a county where cotton is grown in commercial quantities, or in the processing of sugar beets, sugar-beet molasses, sugarcane, or maple sap, into sugar (other than refined sugar) or syrup; or

1966 Amendment. — Sec. 13(b)(15) was added by Sec. 204(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Similar wording previously appeared in Secs. 7(c) and 13(a)(18).

[¶ 696] [Fruit and Vegetable Transportation Employees]

(16) any employee engaged (A) in the transportation and preparation for transportation of fruits or vegetables, whether or not performed by the farmer, from the farm to a place of first processing or first marketing within the same State, or (B) in transportation, whether or not performed by the farmer, between the farm and any point within the same State of persons employed or to be employed in the harvesting of fruits or vegetables; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(16), which formerly appeared as Sec. 13(a)(22), was added by Sec. 204(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 697] [Taxicab Drivers]

(17) any driver employed by an employer engaged in the business of operating taxicabs; or 1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(17), which has wording similar to that contained in former Sec. 13(a)(12), was added by Sec. 206(b)(2) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 698] [Food Service Employees]

(18) any employee of a retail or service establishment who is employed primarily in connection with the preparation or offering of food or beverages for human consumption, either on the premises, or by such services as catering, banquet, box lunch, or curb or counter service, to the public, to employees, or to members or guests of members of clubs; or

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(18), which formerly appeared as Sec. 13(a)(20), was added by Sec. 210(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 699] [Bowling Establishments]

(19) any employee of a bowling establishment if such employee receives compensation for employment in excess of forty-eight hours in any workweek at a rate not less than one and one-half times the regular rate at which he is employed.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(b)(19) was added by Sec. 210(b) of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 710] [Child-Labor Exemptions]

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the provisions of section 12 relating to child labor shall not apply with respect to any employee employed in agriculture outside of school hours for the school district where such employee is living while he is so employed.

(2) The provisions of section 12 relating to child labor shall apply to an employee below the age of sixteen employed in agriculture in an occupation that the Secretary of Labor finds and declares to be particularly hazardous for the employment of children below the age of sixteen, except where such employee is employed by his parent or by a person standing in the place of his parent on a farm owned or operated by such parent or person.

(3) The provisions of section 12 relating to child labor shall not apply to any child employed as an actor or performer in motion pictures or theatrical productions, or in radio or television productions.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(c) was amended to read as above by Sec. 203(d) of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment, it read as follows:

"(c) The provisions of section 12 relating to child labor shall not apply with respect to any employee employed in agriculture outside of school hours for the school district where such employee is living while he is so employed, or to any child employed as an actor or performer in motion pictures or theatrical productions, or in radio or television productions."

[¶ 711] [Newsboys and Wreath Production—Minimum Wage, Overtime Pay and Child-Labor Exemptions]

(d) The provisions of sections 6, 7, and 12 shall not apply with respect to any employee engaged in the delivery of newspaper to the consumer or to any homeworker engaged in the making of wreaths composed principally of natural holly, pine, cedar, or other evergreens (including the harvesting of the evergreens or other forest products used in making such wreaths).

[¶ 712] [Overtime-Pay Exemption for American Samoa]

(e) The provisions of section 7 shall not apply with respect to employees for whom the Secretary of Labor is authorized to establish minimum wage rates as provided in section 6(a)(3), except with respect to employees for whom such rates are in effect; and with respect to such employees the Secretary may make rules and regulations providing reasonable limitations and allowing reasonable variations, tolerances, and exemptions to and from any or all of the provisions of section 7 if he shall find, after a public hearing on the matter, and taking into account the factors set forth in section 6(a)(3), that economic conditions warrant such action.

[¶ 713] [Exemption for Certain Overseas Employment]

(f) The provisions of sections 6, 7, 11, and 12 shall not apply with respect to any employee whose services during the workweek are performed in a workplace within a foreign country or within territory under the jurisdiction of the United States other than the following: a State of the United States; the District of Columbia; Puerto Rico; the Virgin Islands; outer Continental Shelf lands defined in the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (ch. 345, 67 Stat. 462); American Samoa; Guam; Wake Island; Eniwetok Atoll; Kwajalein Atoll; Johnston Island; and the Canal Zone.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 13(f) was amended by Sec. 213 of the FLS Amendments of 1966 by adding the words "Eniwetok Atoll; Kwajalein Atoll; Johnston Island."

[¶ 720] LEARNERS, APPRENTICES, STUDENTS, AND HANDICAPPED WORKERS

[¶ 721] Authority of Secretary of Labor

Sec. 14. (a) The Secretary of Labor, to the extent necessary in order to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment, shall by regulations or by orders provide for the employment of learners, of apprentices, and of messengers employed primarily in delivering letters and messages, under special certificates issued pursuant to regulations of the Secretary, at such wages lower than the minimum wage applicable under section 6 and subject to such limitations as to time, number, proportion, and length of service as the Secretary shall prescribe.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 14(a) was amended to read as above by Sec. 501 of the FLS Amendments of 1966. Prior to amendment it read:

"The Secretary of Labor, to the extent necessary in order to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment, shall by regulations or by orders provide for (1) the employment of learners, of apprentices, of messengers employed primarily in delivering letters and messages and of full-time students outside of their school hours in any retail or service establishment: Provided, That such employment is not of the type ordinarily given to a full-time employee, under special certificates issued pursuant to regulations of the Secretary, at such wages lower than the minimum wage applicable under section 6 and subject to such limitations as to time, number, proportion, and length of service as the Secretary shall prescribe, and (2) the employment of individuals whose earning capacity is impaired by age or physical or mental deficiency or injury, under special certificates issued by the Secretary, at such wages lower than the minimum wage applicable under section 6 and for such period as shall be fixed in such certificates."

[¶ 722] [Students in Retail or Service Establishments]

(b) The Secretary, to the extent necessary in order to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment, shall by regulation or order provide for the employment of full-time students, regardless of age but in compliance with applicable child labor laws, on a part-time basis in retail or service establishments (not to exceed twenty hours in any workweek) or on a part-time or a full-time basis in such establishments during school vacations, under special certificates issued pursuant to regulations of the Secretary, at a wage rate not less than 85 per centum of the minimum wage applicable under section 6, except that the proportion of student hours of employment to total hours of employment of all employees in any establishment may not exceed (1) such proportion for the corresponding month of the twelve-month period preceding May 1, 1961, (2) in the case of a retail or service establishment whose employees (other than employees engaged in commerce or in the production of goods for commerce) are covered by this Act for the first time on or after the effective date of the Fair Labor Standards Amendments of 1966, such proportion for the corresponding month of the twelve-month period immediately prior to such date, or (3) in the case of a retail or service establishment coming into existence after May 1, 1961, or a retail or service establishment for which records of student hours worked are not available, a proportion of student hours of employment to total hours of employment of all employees based on the practice during the twelve-month period preceding May 1, 1961, in (A) similar establishments of the same employer in the same general metropolitan area in which the new establishment is located, (B) similar establishments of the same employer in the same or nearby counties if the new establishment is not in a metropolitan area, or (C) other establishments of the same general character operating in the community or the nearest comparable community. Before the Secretary may issue a certificate under this subsection he must find that such employment will not create a substantial probability of reducing the full-time employment opportunities of persons other than those employed under this subsection.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 14(b) was added by Sec. 501 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 723] [Students in Agriculture]

(c) The Secretary, to the extent necessary in order to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment, shall by certificate or order provide for the employment of full-time students, regardless of age but in compliance with applicable child labor laws, on a part-time basis in agriculture (not to exceed twenty hours in any workweek) or on a part-time or a full-time basis in agriculture during school vacations, at a wage rate not less than 85 per centum of the minimum wage applicable under section 6. Before the Secretary may issue a certificate or order under this subsection he must find that such employment will not create a substantial probability of reducing the full-time employment opportunities of persons other than those employed under this subsection.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 14(c) was added by Sec. 501 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 724] [Handicapped Workers]

(d)(1) Except as otherwise provided in paragraphs (2) and (3) of this subsection, the Secretary of Labor, to the extent necessary in order to prevent curtailment of opportunities for employment, shall by regulation or order provide for the employment under special certificates of individuals (including individuals employed in agriculture) whose earning or productive capacity is impaired by age or physical or mental deficiency or injury, at wages which are lower than the minimum wage applicable under section 6 of this Act but not less than 50 per centum of such wage and which are commensurate with those paid nonhandicapped workers in industry in the vicinity for essentially the same type, quality, and quantity of work.

(2) The Secretary, pursuant to such regulations as he shall prescribe and upon certification of the State agency administering or supervising the administration of vocational rehabilitation services, may issue special certificates for the employment of—

(A) handicapped workers engaged in work which is incidental to training or evaluation programs, and

(B) multihandicapped individuals and other individuals whose earning capacity is so severely impaired that they are unable to engage in competitive employment, at wages which are less than those required by this subsection and which are related to the worker's productivity.

(3)(A) The Secretary may by regulation or order provide for the employment of handicapped clients in work activities centers under special certificates at wages which are less than the minimums applicable under section 6 of this Act or prescribed by paragraph (1) of this subsection and which constitute equitable compensation for such clients in work activities centers.

(B) For purposes of this section, the term "work activities centers" shall mean centers planned and designed exclusively to provide therapeutic activities for handicapped clients whose physical or mental impairment is so severe as to make their productive capacity inconsequential.

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 14(d) was added by Sec. 501 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 730] PROHIBITED ACTS; PRIMA FACIE EVIDENCE

[¶ 731] [Unlawful Activities]

Sec. 15. (a) After the expiration of one hundred and twenty days from the date of enactment of this [original] Act, it shall be unlawful for any person—

(1) to transport, offer for transportation, ship, deliver, or sell in commerce, or to ship, deliver, or sell with knowledge that shipment or delivery or sale thereof in commerce is intended, any goods in the production of which any employee was employed in violation of section 6 or section 7, or in violation of any regulation or order of the Secretary issued under section 14; except that no provision of this Act shall impose any liability upon any common carrier for the transportation in commerce in the regular course of its business of any goods not produced by such common carrier, and no provision of this Act shall excuse any common carrier from its obligation to accept any goods for transportation; and except that any such transportation, offer, shipment, delivery, or sale of such goods by a purchaser who acquired them in good faith in reliance on written assurance from the producer that the goods were produced in compliance with the requirements of the Act, and who acquired such goods for value without notice of any such violation, shall not be deemed unlawful;

(2) to violate any of the provisions of section 6 or section 7, or any of the provisions of any regulation or order by the Secretary issued under section 14;

(3) to discharge or in any other manner discriminate against any employee because such employee has filed any complaint or instituted or caused to be instituted any proceeding under or related to this Act, or has testified or is about to testify in any such proceeding, or has served or is about to serve on an industry committee;

(4) to violate any of the provisions of section 12;

(5) to violate any of the provisions of section 11(c) or any regulation or order made or continued in effect under the provisions of section 11(d), or to make any statement, report, or record filed or kept pursuant to the provisions of such section or of any regulation or order thereunder, knowing such statement, report, or record to be false in a material respect.

[¶ 732] [Employment as Prima Facie Evidence]

(b) For the purposes of subsection (a)(1) proof that any employee was employed in any place of employment where goods shipped or sold in commerce were produced, within ninety days prior to the removal of the goods from such place of employment shall be prima facie evidence that such employee was engaged in the production of such goods.

[¶ 740] PENALTIES; CIVIL AND CRIMINAL LIABILITY; WAIVER OF CLAIMS; ACTIONS BY SECRETARY; LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

[¶ 741] [Criminal Actions]

Sec. 16. (a) Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of section 15 shall upon conviction thereof be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000, or to imprisonment for not more than six months, or both. No person shall be imprisoned under this subsection except for an offense committed after the conviction of such person for a prior offense under this subsection.

[¶ 742] [Wage Suits by Employees]

(b) Any employer who violates the provisions of section 6 or section 7 of this Act shall be liable to the employee or employees affected in the amount of their unpaid minimum wages, or their unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be, and in an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. Action to recover such liability may be maintained in any court of competent jurisdiction by any one or more employees for and in behalf of himself or themselves and other employees similarly situated. No employee shall be a party plaintiff to any such action unless he gives his consent in writing to become such a party and such consent is filed in the court in which such action is brought. The court in such action shall, in addition to any judgment awarded to the plaintiff or plaintiffs, allow a reasonable attorney's fee to be paid by the defendant, and costs of the action. The right provided by this subsection to bring an action by or on behalf of any employee, and the right of any employee to become a party plaintiff to any such action, shall terminate upon the filing of a complaint by the Secretary of Labor in an action under section 17 in which restraint is sought of any further delay in the payment of unpaid minimum wages, or the amount of unpaid overtime compensation, as the case may be, owing to such employee under section 6 or section 7 of this Act by an employer liable therefor under the provisions of this subsection.

[¶ 743] [Wage Collections by Government]

(c) The Secretary is authorized to supervise the payment of the unpaid minimum wages or the unpaid overtime compensation owing to any employee or employees under section 6 or section 7 of this Act, and the agreement of any employee to accept such payment shall upon payment in full constitute a waiver by such employee of any right he may have under subsection (b) of this section to such unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. When a written request is filed by any employee with the Secretary claiming unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation under section 6 or section 7 of this Act, the Secretary may bring an action in any court of competent jurisdiction to recover the amount of such claim: Provided, That this authority to sue shall not be used by the Secretary in any case involving an issue of law which has not been settled finally by the courts, and in any such case no court shall have jurisdiction over such action or proceeding initiated or brought by the Secretary if it does involve any issue of law not so finally settled. The consent of any employee to the bringing of any such action by the Secretary, unless such action is dismissed without prejudice on motion of the Secretary, shall constitute a waiver by such employee of any right of action he may have under subsection (b) of this section for such unpaid minimum wages or unpaid overtime compensation and an additional equal amount as liquidated damages. Any sums thus recovered by the Secretary on behalf of an employee pursuant to this subsection shall be held in a special deposit account and shall be paid, on order of the Secretary, directly to the employee or employees affected. Any such sums not paid to an employee because of inability to do so within a period of three years shall be covered into the Treasury of the United States as miscellaneous receipts. In determining when an action is commenced by the Secretary under this subsection for the purposes of the statutes of limitations provided in section 6(a) of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, it shall be considered to be commenced in the case of any individual claimant on the date when the complaint is filed if he is specifically named as a party plaintiff in the complaint, or if his name did not so appear, on the subsequent date on which his name is added as a party plaintiff in such action.

1966 Amendment. — Sec. 16(c) was amended by Sec. 601(a) to insert the word "statutes" in lieu of "two-year statute".

[¶ 744] [Relief from Liability for Employers in American Samoa and Other Overseas Areas]

(d) In any action or proceeding commenced prior to, on, or after the date of enactment of this subsection [ch. 1035, 70 Stat. 1118, effective August 8, 1956], no employer shall be subject to any liability or punishment under this Act or the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947 on account of his failure to comply with any provision or provisions of such Acts (1) with respect to work heretofore or hereafter performed in a workplace to which the exemption in section 13(f) is applicable, (2) with respect to work performed in Guam, the Canal Zone, or Wake Island before the effective date of this amendment of subsection (d), or (3) with respect to work performed in a possession named in section 6(a)(3) at any time prior to the establishment by the Secretary, as provided therein, of a minimum wage rate applicable to such work.

[¶ 750] INJUNCTION PROCEEDINGS

Sec. 17. The district courts, together with the United States District Court for the District of the Canal Zone, the District Court of the Virgin Islands, and the District Court of Guam shall have jurisdiction, for cause shown, to restrain violations of section 15, including in the case of violations of section 15(a)(2) the restraint of any withholding of payment of minimum wages or overtime compensation found by the court to be due to employees under this Act (except sums which employees are barred from recovering, at the time of the commencement of the action to restrain the violations, by virtue of the provisions of section 6 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947).

[¶ 760] RELATION TO OTHER LAWS

[¶ 761] [Compliance with Stricter Laws]

Sec. 18. (a) No provision of this Act or of any order thereunder shall excuse noncompliance with any Federal or State law or municipal ordinance establishing a minimum wage higher than the minimum wage established under this Act or a maximum workweek lower than the maximum workweek established under this Act, and no provision of this Act relating to the employment of child labor shall justify noncompliance with any Federal or State law or municipal ordinance establishing a higher standard than the standard established under this Act. No provision of this Act shall justify any employer in reducing a wage paid by him which is in excess of the applicable minimum wage under this Act, or justify any employer in increasing hours of employment maintained by him which are shorter than the maximum hours applicable under this Act.

[¶ 762] [Federal Employees]

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act (other than section 13(f)) or any other law, any employee—

(1) described in paragraph (7) of section 202 of the Classification Act of 1949 (5 U. S. C. 1082(7)) whose compensation is required to be fixed and adjusted from time to time as nearly as is consistent with the public interest in accordance with prevailing rates, and any Federal employee in the Canal Zone engaged in employment of the kind described in such paragraph (7), or

(2) described in section 7474 of title 10, United States Code, whose rates of wages are established to conform, as nearly as is consistent with the public interest, with those of private establishments in the immediate vicinity, or shall have his basic compensation fixed or adjusted at a wage rate which is not less than the appropriate wage rate provided for in section 6(a)(1) of this Act (except that the wage rate provided for in section 6(b) shall apply to any employee who performed services during the workweek in a work place within the Canal Zone), and shall have his overtime compensation set at an hourly rate not less than the overtime rate provided for in section 7(a)(1) of this Act.

(3) employed in a nonappropriated fund instrumentality under the jurisdiction of the Armed Forces,

1966 Amendment.—Sec. 18(b) was added by Sec. 306 of the FLS Amendments of 1966.

[¶ 770] SEPARABILITY OF PROVISIONS

Sec. 19. If any provision of this Act or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

TOPICAL INDEX

References are to paragraph (¶) numbers

Age discrimination prevention...435, 495

Agricultural employees
. minimum wages...130, 345, 565, 656
. overtime pay...130, 656, 692
. piece rates...130, 350
. seasonal employment...350
. students...395, 723

Agriculture, defined...516

American Samoa
. industry committees, special...550
. minimum wages...563
. overtime pay exemption...712

American vessels
. defined...526
. seamen, minimum wages...564

Amusement establishments...325, 653

Automobile sales establishments...375, 690

Basic rates, overtime computation... 588

Books and records
. inspections...631
. recordkeeping requirements...633

Bowling establishments...327, 699

Canal Zone...435, 485

Child labor
. exemptions...710, 711
. "hot goods" ban...641
. investigations...642
. oppressive, defined...522
. piece rates...130, 345
. prohibition, direct...643
. purchasers of goods, innocent...641

Commerce, defined...512

Commission salesmen
. commissions
. . proportion of compensation, determination...230, 590

Construction industry...335, 529

Contract services to federal government, minimum wages...140, 573

Court actions
. time limit for suits...430, 460, 743
. wage orders, review...620

Definitions—see word or term

Dollar-test enterprises...310, 529

Drycleaning establishments...340, 529, 652

Effective date...470

Elementary school, defined...532

Employ, defined...517

Employee
. defined...515
. tipped, defined...530

Employer, defined...514

Employment practices
. investigations and inspections...631

Eniwetok Atoll...400, 713

Enterprise, defined...310, 528

Enterprise engaged in commerce or in production of goods for commerce, defined...529

Equal pay for equal work, wage differentials...572

Exemptions
. child labor...710, 711
. minimum wage
. . students...395, 722, 723
. minimum wage, equal pay and overtime pay
. . administrative employees...651
. . agricultural employees...656
. . amusement establishments...325, 653
. . apprentices...657
. . bowling establishments...327, 699
. . executive employees...651
. . fishing industries...655
. . forestry operations...370, 663
. . handicapped workers...657
. . learners...657
. . livestock production...345, 656
. . logging operations...370, 663
. . manufacturing retailers...654
. . messengers...657
. . motion picture theater employees ...365, 659
. . newspapers, local...355, 658
. . professional employees...651
. . recreational establishments...325, 653
. . retail or service establishments ...315, 652
. . retailers, manufacturing...654
. . seafood industries...655
. . seamen on non-American vessels ...662
. . shade-grown tobacco industry... 664
. . switchboard operators...660
. . telegraph message services...661
. . tobacco industry, shade-grown... 664
. minimum wage, overtime pay and child labor
. . newsboys...711
. . wreath production by homemakers...711

Exemptions—continued
. newsboys...711
. overseas employment...713
. overtime pay
. . agricultural employees...692
. . agricultural products processing ...585
. . air carriers...683
. . aircraft sales establishments... 375, 690
. . American Samoa...712
. . automobile sales establishments 375, 690
. . cotton-ginning employees...345, 695
. . country elevator employees...345, 694
. . dairy products buyers...685
. . express companies...682
. . farm implement sales establishments...375, 690
. . fish and seafood processing...684
. . food service employees...380, 698
. . fruit-and-vegetable transportation employees...345, 696
. . guaranteed employment...583
. . hospitals...330, 591
. . hotel employees...320, 688
. . irrigation projects...345, 692
. . livestock-auction operations...345, 693
. . local-transit employees...360, 687
. . local-truck-delivery employees... 691
. . motel employees...320, 688
. . motor carriers...681
. . nursing homes...330, 688
. . pipeline companies...682
. . poultry buyers...685
. . radio employees...689
. . railroads...682
. . restaurant employees...320, 688
. . seafood processing...684
. . seamen...686
. . seasonal...350, 584
. . sugar processing...345, 695
. . taxicab drivers...360, 697
. . television employees...689
. . water carriers...682
. regular rate
. . payments excluded...586
. retail or service establishments
. . compensation, determination... 230, 590
. . minimum wage and overtime pay ...315, 652
. wreath production by homeworkers ...711

Fair Labor Standards Act
. basic requirements...440
. enforcement authority...443
. interstate dealings as criterion for coverage...441
. 1966 amendments, text...450
. small firms, impact...442
. wage-hour law, amended text...500

Federal employees...150, 762

Food service employees...380, 698

Forestry operations...370, 663

Gasoline service stations...385, 529

Goods, defined...519

Guaranteed weekly pay—see Maximum hours

Handicapped workers...490, 657

Homeworkers
. minimum wages...562
. regulations and orders governing, authority...634
. wreath production...711

Hospitals...220, 330, 514, 528, 529, 591

Hotel employees...320, 688

Hourly rates, overtime basis...588

Hours worked, defined...525

Industry committees, special...160, 550, 571, 600

Industry, defined...518

Injunctions...750

Inspections
. books and records...631
. implementation...631
. minors, employment...642
. state agencies, utilization...632

Institutions...330, 514, 528, 529

Investigations
. child labor...642
. employment practices...631
. foreign competition, effects on employment...545
. implementation...631
. maximum hours...631
. minimum wages...631
. minors, employment...642
. state agencies, utilization...632

Johnston Island...400, 713

Kwajalein Atoll...400, 713

Laundries...340, 529, 652

Linen suppliers...340, 573

Livestock production...345, 656

Logging crews...370, 663

Man-day, defined...531

Maximum hours
. guaranteed weekly pay for variable hours...587
. investigations and inspections...631
. overtime pay—see Overtime pay
. retail or service establishments... 590

Minimum wage and overtime pay exemptions—see Exemptions

Minimum wages
. agricultural employees...130, 345, 565, 656
. collections by government...743
. contract services to federal government...140, 573
. employees' suits...742
. equal pay for equal work...572
. federal employees...150, 762
. homeworkers...562
. . wreath production, exemption...711
. investigations and inspections...631
. newly covered employees...120, 570
. presently covered employees...110, 561
. seamen on American vessels...564

Motel employees...320, 688

Motion picture theater employees...365, 659

Newly covered employees
. minimum wages...120, 570
. overtime pay...220, 582

Newly covered employers, problems...440, 444

Nursing homes...330, 688

Oppressive child labor, defined...522

Overtime pay
. basic-rate computation...588
. collections by government...743
. credits against...589
. employees' suits...742
. excessive, study and report by Secretary of Labor...435, 480
. exemptions—see Exemptions
. hourly basis...588
. newly covered employees...220, 582
. piece-rate basis...588
. presently covered employees...210, 581

Penalties...740

Person, defined...511

Petroleum distribution employees...220, 390, 583

Piece rates, overtime basis...588

Presently covered employees
. minimum wages...110, 561
. overtime pay...210, 581

Prima facie evidence, employment as...732

Produced, defined...520

Prohibited acts...731, 740, 744

Puerto Rico
. industry committees, special...550

Records—see Books and records

Recreational establishments...325, 653

Regular rate, defined...586

Regulations and orders, authority
. apprentices...721
. handicapped workers...721
. homeworkers...634
. learners...721

Resale, defined...524

Restaurant employees...320, 688

Retail or service establishments...230 315, 395, 590, 652, 722

Sale, defined...521

Schools, coverage...330, 514, 528, 529

Seamen on American vessels, minimum wages...564

Secondary school, defined...533

Secretary, defined...527

Sell, defined...521

Separability of provisions...770

Service establishments—see Retail or service establishments

Sex discrimination—see Equal pay for equal work

State, defined...513

Stricter laws, compliance...761

Students, employment
. agriculture...395, 723
. retail or service establishments...395, 722

Sugar processing...345, 695

Tipped employee
. defined...530
. wage, determination...170, 523

Tips—see Tipped employee

Transportation companies...360, 528, 687

Unlawful activities
. liability...740, 744
. prohibited acts...731

Virgin Islands
. industry committees, special...550

Wage, defined...523

THE PRICE WE PAY

FOR DISCRIMINATION

In the Economy of Communities

In Employment

In Legal Costs

In Education

In Culture, Entertainment and Sports

In Tourism and Conventions

On a National Scale

In Foreign Relations

THE PRICE WE PAY

Prepared by Barbara Patterson and other staff members of the Southern Regional Council and the Anti-Defamation League

June 1964

Contents

INTRODUCTION iii

IN THE ECONOMY OF COMMUNITIES 1

Failure to Attract Industry and Investment
Consumer Market
Police and Jail Costs
Other Resources Depleted
Elections

IN EMPLOYMENT 16

IN LEGAL COSTS 19

IN EDUCATION 22

Loss of, and Inability to Attract,
Faculty
Students
Research Funds
Capital Investment
School Closings and Boycotts
Tuition Grants
Duplication of Resources

IN CULTURE, ENTERTAINMENT, AND SPORTS 31

IN TOURISM AND CONVENTIONS 35

ON A NATIONAL SCALE 38

Housing
Federal Troops
Gross National Product

IN FOREIGN RELATIONS 42

The Price We Pay...
Introduction

This publication samples the costs—chiefly money—incurred by the South's resistance to equal opportunity. Nearly all the documentation has come from the press, largely the southern press. Some other printed sources have been used.

If all expenditures and loss could be added up, the sum would be shocking. The shock is even greater if, in reading each item, one keeps in mind the many and drastic needs in the South for wise use of its public monies and resources to improve society and the lot of its individuals.

Not all of the waste here documented has a price tag. Can the people of Mississippi, for example, afford the cost to the human spirit that comes from being cut off from a culture's highest artistic achievement? Is there enough money in the world to cover the cost to the American nation in international good will lost by unacceptable race relations?

There are probably those who would try to use the figures here to blame not themselves for being so easily parted from their money, but to blame those Americans who, by demanding Constitutional rights for all, have in a sense necessitated the expenditures.

Any such rationale founders on elementary arithmetic: the estimated cost of implementing the Civil Rights Act of 1964 for five years—$100 million—would be only .6 per cent of the Gross National Product increase—$17 billion—which could be realized for one year with full and free use of our human resources. There were southern Congressmen who reported with indignation that the 1963 March on Washington cost the District of Columbia government an estimated $805,000 — $1,022,300. Can this cost be called a responsibility of the marchers? A fair judgment will see it as a cost forced on the national government by reactionary elements of the South and by a dilatory Congress.

And so with the other wastes of money and resources documented here—they come from discrimination, not its victims.

Will southern states, which can least afford it, which so need to develop the potential of their people to the highest degrees of human dignity, continue in the ways documented here to waste the substance of their people?

The Price We Pay...

In the Economy of Communities

In Failure to Attract Industry and Investment

WALL STREET JOURNAL
May 15, 1963

. . . In recent years, its failure to attract any significant amount of new industry and its reliance on the limping steel industry—U. S. Steel Corp.'s Tennessee Coal & Iron division is the area's biggest employer—have combined to slow Birmingham's economy. In 1957, the metropolitan area had its highest employment, 246,000. Today, the total is estimated at 228,000.

Some Birmingham citizens say that in recent years large numbers of their best educated young men and women have been deserting the city to find opportunity elsewhere. It hasn't all been due to the lack of economic opportunity, says one young citizen. "We lost ourselves a generation; they just don't want to put up with all this racial strife."

DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES
(Greenville, Miss.)
January 30, 1964

Humans, resources, technology, management and education are the five major areas necessary for development if Mississippi is to make economic progress, C. E. Kirk told the noon Lions Club [of Greenville, Miss.] at its weekly meeting Wednesday.

Kirk, who is plant manager for the Ludlow Manufacturing Co., in Indianola, spoke as a guest of the local Lions Club on the subject, "Blueprint for Mississippi's Economic Progress."

Kirk is also a representative for the Mississippi Economic Council and brought along charts and statistics which were gathered largely through the council. . . .

"Where we are losing out," he said, "is in the new, highly skilled industries like the chemicals, electronics and pharmaceutical companies."

"The problem is many of our working age people (20-40) are leaving and those who stay don't have enough education to attract the newer breed of industries into the state," Kirk said.

As a result, Mississippi's per capita income doubled from 1939 to 1945, but it stayed the same in relation to the nation's average.†

SURVEY OF CURRENT BUSINESS
August 1962
U. S. Department of Commerce

[†Mississippi has the lowest per capita income of all 50 states: $1,229. The national average is $2,263.]

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
January 27, 1963

. . . A report circulated by S. D. Wolfe, temporary chairman of the Lafayette County Rural Development Committee, says Oxford [Miss.] has lost two new industries because of the crisis.

NEW YORK TIMES
April 15, 1963

. . . However while the state's over-all business advance continued, economists in other Southeastern states remained convinced that Mississippi would suffer in later years because of the racial outbreaks.

They cited Little Rock, Ark. as evidence, noting that the industry stopped locating there for two years after the racial troubles in 1957.

A leading economist said he expected the number of new industries in Mississippi "to start declining by the middle of 1963, and to continue shrinking for a long time to come until and unless, the state shows that it is willing to rejoin the Union."

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS
September 6, 1963

Downtown demonstrations last spring by Negroes seeking a change to integrated facilities in restaurants had an adverse effect in attracting new industry, Chamber of Commerce officials told the Greensboro Human Relations Committee yesterday.

BUSINESS WEEK
September 28, 1963

. . . Industrial development people admit that the turmoil is frightening away prospective new industry. Sidney M. Smyer, a prominent real estate man who has been active in business groups talking with Negroes, says: "This situation is going to have definite effects on locating further business here [Birmingham]. People aren't going to come where there is trouble —it's hard enough to get them when you have a favorable climate." W. Cooper Green, executive vice-president of Alabama Power Co., sums it up: "Violence hurts—labor violence, criminal violence, racial violence. You have to live it down."

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
May 24, 1963

Birmingham (AP)—. . . At a Chamber of Commerce meeting, Chairman Caldwell Marks of an industry-hunting committee disclosed receipt of insulting letters from prospective industries and cancellation of plans for firms to locate here.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
Washington Correspondent
James Free
February 2, 1964

Washington—Gov. George Wallace's war against "the central government" could be far more costly to the people of Alabama if the federal government ever decides to fight back. . . .

Moreover, the Defense Department is now cutting down on the number of military and naval bases and installations over the country. And, when all other considerations are close to even, defense advisers may decide that it would be wise to close an installation in a state that persists in fighting the federal government rather than a similar installation in another state that is more cooperative.

Representative Kenneth Roberts got some figures together recently showing that in the fiscal year that ended last June 30, the Defense Department alone spent in Alabama more than $700 million in payrolls, upkeep, contracts, and the like.

THE FINANCIAL TIMES (London) September 23, 1963

. . . The severe economic damage caused by racial unrest has forced the city's business community into action. . . . Birmingham is endowed with a rich supply of raw materials and with ample resources of labor. But the flow of new industries into the area was halted by the onset of racial violence. . . . As one businessman puts it: "We have become the world's headquarters for racial violence, and nothing worse could happen to a city."

NEW YORK TIMES June 30, 1963

City Council [New York] President Paul R. Screvane proposed yesterday that the city refuse to invest any of its $3,400,000,000 pension funds in the securities of companies practicing racial discrimination. . . .

Because the amount that may be invested in any one corporation's bonds is small, the pension funds own bonds in dozens of different corporations, which are scattered all over the country.

NEW YORK TIMES December 18, 1963

The United Presbyterian Church urged its agencies yesterday to use their financial influence upon businesses with which they deal to eliminate racial discrimination. . . .

The statement [of the Church] urged the agency boards to "analyze investment opportunities and financial policies that would directly witness to the concern of the United Presbyterian Church for an integrated society."

If church funds are invested in concerns that discriminate, efforts should be made to have those practices changed, the statement suggested.

ST. LOUIS POST DISPATCH June 20, 1963

An investigation of the racial policies of corporations, in which the overseas mission board of the United Church of Christ has invested funds was ordered by board directors at a meeting yesterday. . . .

The board has investment holdings of about $18,000,000.

And Then, on the Other Hand . . .

CHATTANOOGA TIMES September 29, 1963

Huntsville, Ala. (AP)—. . . For Huntsville—and the nation—the space age began with the arrival of about 200 former German missilemen and their families, led by Wernher von Braun. . . .

With their arrival, Huntsville began turning its back on the South of magnolias and old lace.

At the end of World War II, Huntsville was known chiefly as the largest cotton market east of Memphis. It had 3,500 homes and 12 small industries including three big cotton mills.

Two of the cotton mills are now closed and Huntsville today has over 25,000 homes and about 40 industries. The median family income is $6,600—highest in Alabama. . . .

Like most of the businessmen interviewed in Huntsville, Cummings [Milton Cummings, native businessman and president of Brown Engineering Company, Inc.] is irritated over the image of Alabama as an area of racial strife. It has hurt his effort to recruit scientists and engineers.

"We have found," he said, "a number of engineers who simply don't want to expose their children to this race thing." . . .

Mrs. Patrick W. Richardson . . . mother of two small boys and the wife of one of Huntsville's leading attorneys, says:

"I guess you could say Huntsville was a hungry town. I can remember the Huntsville Times carrying a story on page one in 1938 saying where the breadlines would form for that day—1938 was when the depression was supposed to be over." . . .

"We like Huntsville," she said. "We've always lived here, but we wanted something better. If Huntsville stagnated, we would have stagnated and I guess my husband's law practice would have been a matter of writing two or three wills a week. We wanted something more than that."

The Price We Pay...

In the Consumer Market

NORFOLK VIRGINIAN-PILOT
(by the Herald Tribune News Service)
September 26, 1963

. . . William Capitman, president of the Center for Research in Marketing, Inc., at Peekskill, N. Y., said Negro purchasing behavior represents both the greatest danger and the greatest potential in the American marketplace. He said Negroes, with an annual income of $20 billion, have a sales potential as great as the entire population of Canada. . . .

At the moment, Capitman said, 30 to 40 per cent of the Negro population is engaged in unorganized economic boycotts, refusing to buy from producers or sellers considered to be unfriendly to Negroes.

Eighty-nine per cent of 1,164 Negroes interviewed in the third survey told the Negro interviewers they would take part in any boycott called by their leaders. Capitman called this one of the most significant phenomena in marketing history. . . .

In Birmingham . . .

TIME
June 7, 1963

. . . In Birmingham, retailers have averaged a $750,000 weekly loss, some because Negro trade boycotted stores, some because whites did not venture downtown for fear of possible violence.

WASHINGTON POST
June 5, 1963

(AP)—Federal Reserve Board figures show that retail sales in Birmingham dropped sharply in May—a time of sit-ins, mass demonstrations and occasional violence in that racially troubled city.

For the week which ended May 25, retail sales were off 11 per cent compared to the corresponding week of 1962. For the preceding three weeks the figures were also minus: 17, 19 and 14 per cent.

BUSINESS WEEK
September 28, 1963

. . . Long-suffering downtown merchants have watched their sales run some 20% under last year's, and lag behind those of most other Southern cities.

"People put off shopping trips," says one store owner. "It goes deeper than just downtown Birmingham. It affects every phase of business, social and civic life in this community."

Adds another merchant: "A solution must be found immediately or Birmingham will be killed as a prosperous city."

WALL STREET JOURNAL
May 16, 1963

. . . A restaurant owner comments: "We're hurt and hurt bad because our business community refused to exercise leadership when it could have saved the situation."

The restaurant owner says his business has fallen 25% since the latest outbreak of racial strife began April 3.

WASHINGTON POST
May 16, 1963

(AP)—. . . An executive of a big department store said . . . "It is difficult to appraise the business conditions. . . . But business is off drastically since last week. We don't know specifically whether to attribute this to the boycotting or to the general atmosphere of the city."

And Elsewhere . . .

THE STATE
(Columbia, S. C.)
July 21, 1963

Charleston—The basic story of this city now isn't on the street where Negroes demonstrate. . . .

It involves the dollars and cents that pump the life blood into the heart of Charleston through its long business artery, King Street.

"Since this started in early June, business along the street is off anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent depending on whom you talk to," one prominent retail merchant confided.

"Some of them are literally worried sick," the News and Courier [Charleston newspaper] said at one point in an editorial July 18.

NEW YORK TIMES
March 2, 1964

Canton, Miss.—. . . The Negroes opened a boycott against 19 white merchants last January that now threatens some of them with financial ruin. The objectives are "more courteous treatment" for Negro customers, and . . . pressure by the white merchants on county officials to accept Negro voter applicants.

HOUSTON POST
November 10, 1963

Prairie View—. . . The boycott of the game [Prairie View A & M College versus Bishop College of Dallas] and other homecoming activities had been called by leaders of Students for Equality, Liberty and Freedom in support of their efforts to desegregate nearby Hempstead. . .

A businessman in the community of Prairie View waved his hand in his empty store and said:

"There was no business. You can see the effect this has had on us."

NEW YORK TIMES
September 2, 1960

Jacksonville—. . . Newsboys sold only half as many papers as usual in the downtown shopping area. Parking lots, ordinarily overflowing, were checkered with vacancies. Clerks and elevator operators reported that customers who normally crowd the stores in the week before school opens were staying home. . . .

Last night was the first since Saturday to be undisturbed by home-made fire bombs, shootings or beatings. . .

The Governor blamed the people and elected officials of Jacksonville for the breakdown of law and order.

ATLANTA JOURNAL
June 6, 1963

All of Georgia's larger counties showed gains in retail and other taxable sales during the first quarter of 1963 except Dougherty, where racial demonstrations and Negro boycotts have hit the county seat, Albany.

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE
July 7, 1963

Jackson, Miss.—. . . To what extent downtown business was hurt by the five weeks of picketing, boycotts and marches and sit-ins has been carefully concealed by spokesmen for Capitol Street, the main business section. . . .

But the chain stores, which were the targets of pickets and sit-ins, one trade association spokesman admitted, found business off as much as 40 to 60 per cent during the peak of the demonstrations.

BALTIMORE AFRO-AMERICAN
March 7, 1964

Jackson, Miss.—. . . The two white-owned food markets in colored neighborhoods, which refused to hire colored employees and to cease selling products of companies that also discriminate, have already gone out of business.

And Then, on the Other Hand . . .

WASHINGTON POST
September 14, 1963

Baltimore (AP)—An owner of Gwynn Oak Amusement Park—scene of mass racial demonstrations and arrests earlier this summer—has called the park's new policy of racial integration an economic success.

He said the park has more reservations for next season than it had in the late summer of any other year.

WALL STREET JOURNAL
July 15, 1963

Atlanta—. . . Among those restaurants, hotels, theatres and other places of public accommodation in the South that have begun serving or hiring Negroes, only a few report suffering any lasting consequences. A sizable number, in fact, declare that business has been better than ever. . . .

Mr. Henry Rather [Dallas hotel man] says a recent check of the city's 35 largest hostelries failed to turn up a single instance of lost business because of desegregation.

The Price We Pay...

In Police and Jail Costs

This section and a later chapter, Legal Costs, document public outlays which in part result from demonstrations and other actions instigated by Negroes. Often, Negroes are blamed for the waste involved. The true cause is the denial of rights. Any community, any state, which wants to end this waste need only take the necessary steps to provide equal protection and rights for all citizens.

In Mississippi . . .

ATLANTA JOURNAL
April 16, 1964

(UPI)—When a few minor hitches are cleared away the Mississippi Legislature will soon adopt a new law empowering the governor to send patrol forces into any community where he deems there is an emergency.

The legislation . . . will cost $4 million the first two years, add 200 men to the patrol force and provide them with a police academy.

In Savannah . . .

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
February 11, 1964

Savannah has been rebuffed in its efforts to collect from the state $18,000 which it spent for quarters and food for state troopers during racial disorders.

In Albany . . .

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
March 3, 1964

Albany—Mayor Jimmy Davis estimated Monday the 2-months stay of a group of pacifists cost Albany taxpayers about $5,000 in jail expenses.

In Memphis . . .

MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL APPEAL
September 18, 1963

Protests and demonstrations by Negroes against staggered hours at five Negro schools have cost the Memphis Police Department more than $9,000 in overtime pay since September 4.

In Greensboro . . .

RALEIGH NEWS AND OBSERVER
May 21, 1963

. . . Clarence Smith, purchasing agent for Guilford County, estimated taxpayers were supporting the jailed Negro demonstrators at a minimum of $1,200 a day "just for food."

In Danville . . .

RICHMOND NEWS LEADER
September 9, 1963

Danville (AP)—The cost of policing civil rights demonstrations in this Southside city which has been the scene of sporadic racial unrest since May 31 has been placed at more than $60,000.

Danville Mayor Julian R. Stinson announced over the weekend that overtime pay for policemen and other deputized law enforcement officers in June, July and August came to $48,199.

He said other expenses incurred included approximately $6,515 for such items as night sticks, tear gas, office supplies and court costs.

In Cambridge . . .

BALTIMORE SUN
June 24, 1963

Cambridge (AP)—Thirty-seven days of militia law here has cost Maryland at least $176,000. That's only the estimate of keeping National Guard troops billetted here.

The other costs—State Police expenditures and the economic toll to the community—have not been accounted for, and may be unaccountable.

The bill for the first 25 days of militia rule, from June 14 to July 8, was nearly $100,000. According to the comptroller, pay for the Guard totaled $83,199.83, the food bill was about $14,700 and the cost for gasoline was $1,858.89.

Also in Cambridge . . .

WASHINGTON POST
March 9, 1964

. . . for the subsequent nine months, July 1963 through March 1964

. . . Keeping the Guard in Cambridge for nearly nine months has cost the taxpayers close to $70,000 and hasn't solved anything; it has cut Guard enlistments; it has led to legislators being besieged with complaints about the financial pinch felt by families of Guardsmen who had had to be away from their jobs.

In Williamston, N. C. . . .

GREENBORO DAILY NEWS
August 9, 1963

. . . The Martin County Commissioners in a brief meeting approved a bill of $1,095 for extra police protection during July.

Extra law enforcement officers were necessary recently to prevent violence as a result of nightly demonstrations by Negroes.

In Jackson . . .

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
October 31, 1963

He [Mayor Allen Thompson] said the city spent an extra $138,429.75 in overtime and equipment combatting the demonstrations from late May through August.

In Charleston . . .

CHARLESTON NEWS AND COURIER
October 17, 1963

Costs of locking up racial demonstrators during July and August jabbed three Charleston County budgets out of kilter, according to a report issued this week by County Manager E. D. Martin.

The Prison Farm Barracks, County Jail and Prison Farm all had to spend more than half of their six-months allotted fund in three months' time because of the demonstrations.

In High Point . . .

GREENSBORO DAILY NEWS
August 30, 1963

High Point—. . . City Hall is showing some concern over the mounting costs of Negro demonstrations here.

A $9,000,000 budget, closely trimmed in order to keep the same tax rate of $1.20 per $100 valuation, cannot stand too much additional and unbudgeted expense, it was pointed out by city officials.

Protest activities have cost $7,132.52 in overtime pay for policemen alone. Also to be considered is the wear and tear on the Police Department.

Statewide in North Carolina . . .

RALEIGH NEWS AND OBSERVER
August 17, 1963

The State Highway Patrol has spent more than 11,000 man-hours dealing with racial demonstrations so far this year. The extra activity has cut sharply into traffic law enforcement.

Figures compiled Friday by patrol headquarters show traffic violations charged during the first six months of 1963 were down 18,558 compared with the same six-months' period last year.

Statewide in Mississippi . . .

DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES
(Greenville, Miss.)
March 27, 1963

Jackson (UPI)—. . . Public Safety Commissioner T. B. Birdsong told United Press International Tuesday the morale of highway patrolmen, most of whom were on duty at the scene of the riot [at the University of Mississippi], was hurt by the crisis. . . .

He pointed out that the state's highway death toll "rose very sharply" after the September 30 riot which marked the entry of Negro James Meredith to the university.

Since then, there have been 327 traffic deaths in Mississippi, compared to 252 during the same period a year earlier.

And in Birmingham . . . the state paid . . .

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
June 20, 1963

Montgomery—. . . State Budget Officer J. V. Jordan said a tabulation three weeks ago showed that "upwards of $90,000" had been spent up to that time in keeping hundreds of state troopers in Birmingham to keep a watch on racial disorders there.

Jordan said a later tabulation . . . would boost that figure by a substantial amount.

State Conservation Director Claude D. Kelley said it cost his department $25,000 to send about 100 conservation officers, deputized as state troopers, to Birmingham.

ABC officials reported they had been forced to spend an extra $17,350 for sending specially-deputized liquor enforcement agents to Birmingham.

State fiscal officials said the total expense could run well over $200,000.

the city paid . . .

NEW YORK TIMES
July 22, 1963

. . . The cost of the five weeks of demonstrations was considerable. It is estimated that overtime pay to policemen, repair of damage to police vehicles and the feeding of more than 1,500 prisoners will total about $50,000.

Whatever the cost, most Birmingham citizens hope it is the final payment.

the county paid . . .

NEW YORK TIMES
July 22, 1963

The county [Jefferson] may have spent as much as $10,000 more.

and the people paid . . .

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
May 14, 1963

. . . Losses from fires during the weekend rioting were placed at $41,775 by Deputy Fire Marshal William E. Berry. And vandalism will boost the destruction toll much higher.

ATLANTA JOURNAL
May 26, 1963

Governor Wallace is pushing through an emergency appropriation of $250,000 to cover expenses of troopers.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
May 15, 1963

. . . Governor Wallace called for a doubling of the cost of drivers' licenses in Alabama to finance an Alabama Highway Patrol to cope with racial disturbances.

In Jackson, Mississippi . . .

WASHINGTON POST
February 27, 1964

Jackson has been steadily strengthening its police force in recent months and has laid in an added supply of gas masks, shotguns and helmets. The city also recently purchased a $15,000 tank-like vehicle designed especially for riot control.

BALTIMORE AFRO-AMERICAN
March 7, 1964

. . . Mayor Allen Thompson has asked state lawmakers for $1,000,000 with which to build a compound for "agitators and others who do not go along with the Mississippi way of life."

THE MISSISSIPPIAN
(University of Mississippi)
April 10, 1964

Jackson—The Mississippi House has unanimously passed two more bills to help local officials deal with racial problems. The bills would allow counties and cities to send prisoners to Parchman [state prison] if their jails become overcrowded. The cities or counties would bear the entire expense and furnish guards. The measures would prevent jail overcrowding resulting from mass arrests of demonstrators.

The Price We Pay...

In Other Resources Depleted

NEW YORK TIMES
March 19, 1964

Jackson—. . . Mississippi's Sovereignty Commission has been the clearing house for $260,000 in contributions to a lobby in Washington opposing the civil rights bill.

According to Erle Johnston, director of the commission, that much money has gone through his hands in the last nine months to the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, Inc. . . .

In Washington, meanwhile, John C. Satterfield, secretary of the Coordinating Committee, said the group had spent $200,000 to $250,000 since its incorporation there last July. . . .

Financing was worked out at a meeting here last summer. Allotments were established for the Southern states, and the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission was designated to channel contributions to the Washington office.

The Sovereignty Commission was created by the Legislature in 1956. It was given authority to accept contributions from private or out-of-state sources.

To help prime the pump for the Coordinating Committee in the beginning, the Sovereignty Commission contributed $10,000 from its $250,000 biennial state appropriation.

It also agreed to pay the bill for the services of Mr. Satterfield as the committee's legal adviser. . . . He charges $25 an hour, up to $2,000 a month.

MIAMI HERALD
January 29, 1964

Washington—. . . According to figures filed with the clerk of the House of Representatives the commission [Mississippi Sovereignty Commission] gave Synon's committee [John J. Synon, director of the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms, salaried at $519.23 a week] $20,000 in the quarter-year ending September 30, 1963 and $100,000 in the quarter ending December 31.

ST. PETERSBURG TIMES
Editorial, February 8, 1964

. . . Most of Mississippi's financial support for the anti-civil rights group . . . has been from "private contributions" to the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. . . . This is what the director of the commission says. But even he admits that $20,000 of the state's grant to the Washington lobby was drawn from tax funds.

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE
February 9, 1964

Jackson—. . . While the State Sovereignty Commission has invested only $20,000 so far in CCFAF [Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms] it has sunk over $160,000 of state funds since June 1960 in the White Citizens Council's television and radio series.

Oddly, the Citizens Council does not submit any statement or invoice as a matter of record in order to receive its $2,000 payment from the state.

The state auditor's office said last week that all other invoices made by the state must have a statement showing what was received in return.

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
April 3, 1964

(AP)—The Mississippi Senate gave unanimous passage Thursday to a bill appropriating $50,000 to finance further efforts to defeat the Civil Rights Bill pending before Congress.

The measure . . . was in the form of a deficit appropriation to the State Sovereignty Commission. . . .

Committee sources said the money was earmarked for the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms in Washington.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
March 3, 1964

A drive to enlist the support of various Alabama organizations in fighting the civil rights bill now pending in the Senate was launched here Monday by the State Sovereignty Commission.

Howell [Eli Howell, executive director of the Commission] said the nationwide campaign would be directed by the Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms. . . . The Sovereignty Commission had earlier appropriated $10,000 to this group.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
April 23, 1964

The State [Alabama] Sovereignty Commission has issued a $15,000 check to the Coordinating Committee for Freedom Fund.

WASHINGTON POST
April 19, 1964

. . . Official state commissions in Florida and Alabama also have contributed a total of $13,000 to the CCFAF [Coordinating Committee for Fundamental American Freedoms]. The Plaquemines Parish (La.) Council, headed by political boss Leander Perez, who built a stockade in the swamps for arrested racial demonstrators, has appropriated $5,000 in taxpayers' money to the CCFAF.

ST. PETERSBURG TIMES
April 2, 1964

Tallahassee—. . . Prentice [George Prentice, executive director of the Florida Commission on Constitutional Government] could be in Lincoln, Neb., headquarters for a new national ultra-conservative organization of which he was recently made executive director. He flew to Nebraska to take the job with the private organization using Florida state funds. Taxi, hotel and food expenses were also paid for with Florida state funds.

ARKANSAS GAZETTE
Editorial, February 8, 1964

. . . The sense of impatience that other states must feel for states such as Mississippi, which is, at once, the most abjectly mendicant of all the 50 states and the most aggressively unyielding in its segregationist sentiments. . . .

Why—it could be asked—should other states help pay [via federal tax dollars] for services that Mississippi says it is unable to afford on its own when Mississippi can afford to kick away $120,000 on lobbying and propaganda against a single piece of federal legislation within a single six month period?

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
Bob Ingram column, March 1, 1964

. . . It was once reported here that the expenses incurred by the National Guard crew which flies the C-47 on the Wallace tours was paid by the federal government. No state official bothered to correct me, they apparently preferred that I remain ignorantly incorrect. Just discovered is the fact that the expenses of the Guardsmen are paid by you, the taxpayers of Alabama. An allocation was approved a couple of days back for $1,356.48 from the General Fund for the active duty pay earned by the three-member crew on the midwest tour, plus some expenses.

RALEIGH NEWS AND OBSERVER
March 30, 1964

. . . Wallace [Alabama Governor George C. Wallace] blew into Washington during the week to meet with some Maryland supporters. He is running in the Maryland Democratic Primary.

He arrived in the Alabama plane surrounded by no less than eight aides. Among his outriders were three bodyguards, two press assistants, and assorted other advisers—all on the Alabama state payroll.

KENTUCKY LABOR NEWS
May 2, 1964

. . . The political ad [in the Louisville Courier-Journal] was signed by one BILL JONES as secretary of Wallace's Indiana committee. Jones, it turns out, is neither a Hoosier nor a union member. An Alabama state employee, Jones is simply the governor's press secretary! About 18 other state employees complete the pack traveling at Wallace's heels. A $250,000 state-owned plane, with a state-paid pilot and co-pilot, carries this happy crowd from soap box to whistle stop in Indiana.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
March 6, 1964

The State Sovereignty Commission adopted as its first objective Thursday a massive campaign aimed at defeat of the civil rights bill pending in Congress.

As one gesture, the Commission agreed to pick up the check, not to exceed $1,000, for airplane gasoline for the Montgomery Junior Chamber of Commerce.

The Jaycees, who have distributed thousands of copies of the civil rights bill in Alabama and other states, also have arranged for the use of an airplane, the Commission was told, for conferences in other parts of the country to spread opposition to the bill.

from tabulation by William C. Havard, Chairman Department of Government Louisiana State University

The Louisiana Legislature held five "Extraordinary Sessions" during 1960 and 1961 to deal with legislation designed to maintain segregation. Appropriations for these extra sessions amounted to $934,000.

THE ATLANTA INQUIRER Eliza Paschall column, March 7, 1964

. . . One cost that is seldom counted is the time which trained responsible leaders must take from their professional duties to "work on desegregation." Every time the Steering Committee of the Summit Leadership Conference meets there are businessmen, physicians, ministers, and professors who are not doing what businessmen, physicians, ministers, and professors are supposed to be doing. The same is true of the Atlanta Coordinating Committee.

If these same people were all free to work on the problems that come with twentieth century growth, instead of working on the problem of making the color of your skin no more important than the color of your hair, we might at least catch up with, even get one step ahead of automation, expressways, art centers, and school curricula.

DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES* (Greenville, Miss.) March 4, 1964

City Council yesterday voted five to one to borrow $40,000 for the construction of a Negro community center on Hernando Street and $10,000 for remodeling of the present community center on Robertshaw.

He [Park Commissioner] said the Negro facility is needed since there is at present nowhere for Negroes to attend Park Commission activities.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS May 14, 1963

Emergency expenses resulting from the racial demonstrations of the last several weeks will cause a curtailment of some county services, the County Commission [Jefferson County, Alabama] said Monday.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS September 15, 1963

. . . The extra costs, including overtime pay for police and other personnel used during the demonstrations last spring totaled $45-46,000, money that might have gone into additional city equipment or services, Boutwell [Mayor Albert Boutwell of Birmingham] said.

THE REPORTER* February 27, 1964

Greenville, South Carolina, is having its problems. Faced with a suit to integrate its municipal swimming pool, the city council voted last October to convert it into a "marineland." "Integrated pools operate at a loss," Alderman W. I. Bouton . . . explained in proposing the switch. The economy-minded council apparently had no alternative but to import six sea lions from California. Since then, however, it's been just one thing after another. . . . The trouble began as soon as the sea lions were flown in by jet from Santa Barbara. They not only needed a series of vitamin and antibiotic inoculations on arrival but fifty pounds of fish a day as well.

Yet the "animal groceries" budget had already been exceeded by $378 at that point and the $1,500 ration allowance that was provided "obviously left no margin," one alderman found, "for feeding camels and yaks." (There was no question that camels and yaks deserved treatment equal to sea lions) . . . it was discovered that the pool had sprung a leak. . . . The costs, however, turned out to be manageable, and for several days the local papers carried dolorous pictures of the woebegone seals dryly sitting it out on the shower-room benches while the pool was drained and the repairs were made. In mid-January a $1,200 concrete island with five spiral decks was lowered into the pool, and there is talk of a stainless-steel slide to come. But this gives no assurance yet that the sea lions will learn to be as happy as kids, black or white, in a swimming pool. At the end of January, one sea lion was found dead of unknown causes at the side of the pool, and another died at the veterinarian's.

BATON ROUGE STATE TIMES
June 1, 1964

The Joint Legislative Committee on Segregation will continue its work for another four years. . . .

A budget of $12,000 has been set aside for the committee.

Sen. Gravolet [E. W. Gravolet of Pointe-A-La-Hache], who has served as vice chairman of the committee . . . said the committee had been in service 10 years and usually had an appropriation of about $7,000 to $12,000 annually.

It had no attorneys, he said, and members had drafted major segregation legislation through the years.

The Price We Pay...

In Elections

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
reprinting editorial from Brewton (Ala.) Standard
January 25, 1964

. . . With the ratification of the anti-poll tax amendment by South Dakota the poll tax, as pertains to federal elections in this state, has just about two years to go before it becomes obsolete. Between now and that time, we hope that our legislators in Montgomery will eliminate the poll tax from state law. Otherwise, it will cost the state a tremendous amount of money for holding separate elections when federal and state candidates are placed on the same ballot.

The Price We Pay...

In Employment

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
Jim Montgomery column
August 29, 1963

Racial discrimination in employment was singled out Wednesday as one of a complex set of forces which, together, are costing the American people more than $30 billion a year in personal income, most of it in the Southeast.

Ironically, it was not in Washington or at a civil rights forum that this estimate of economic loss was cited. . . .

An Atlanta economist presented the calculation in a rather more academic setting in Minneapolis. . . .

Dr. Joseph Airov, associate professor of economics at Emory University, was referring to the regional differences in per capita income in which the Southeast ranks hindmost among the eight major regions of the United States.

Statement of Under Secretary of Labor John F. Henning, before Senate Subcommittee on Employment and Manpower
July 24, 1963

The unemployment rate for nonwhites as a whole is today over twice as high as for whites—in May, 10.3 per cent compared with 5.0 per cent. Among married men with family responsibilities, the difference is even wider, 8 per cent compared with 3 per cent.

NEW YORK TIMES
July 10, 1963

New Orleans—Several witnesses at a civil rights hearing here testified today that industry in the South was penalizing itself when it discriminated against Negroes.

Because of this discrimination, they said, the brighter and better-educated young Negroes migrate to the North and never return. This often leaves unfilled jobs for which they could qualify and discourages establishment of new industry for lack of skilled workers, they added.

About 750 of the brighter Negro boys of New Orleans go to school at St. Augustine's. Father Messina [Rev. Joseph Messina, counselor at the school] said 60 per cent of the school's graduates go North to complete their education and only 10 per cent of them return. These are largely in the educational field. . . .

Mr. Kerns [J. Harvey Kerns, executive director of the Urban League of Greater New Orleans] charged that although the Southern Bell Telephone Company had been advertising in New Orleans for months for telephone operators and other specialized workers, it had turned down all Negro applicants. . . .

Representatives of the Boeing Company and of Kaiser Aluminum, both of which have national policies of equal opportunity in employment, said they had found difficulty finding skilled Negro help here.

NEITHER BLACK NOR WHITE
Wilma Dykeman and James Stokely
Rinehart & Company, Inc.
1957, p. 124, quoting Nashville Tennessean of April, 1957

One of the most shocking and challenging problems to the state of Tennessee is the continuing and costly loss of its young people.

In a survey conducted by a reporter for this newspaper, it was found that the state is losing an estimated 20,000 young persons a year, wasting an estimated $200 million invested in them because of inability to provide jobs for them.

NEW ORLEANS STATES-ITEM
April 6, 1964

Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Anthony J. Celebrezze said in New Orleans today Louisiana's refusal to accept federal manpower retraining aid may have caused 25 per cent of the jobs in the Michoud rocket plant to go to out-of-staters.

Celebrezze, in the city to address a labor convention, declared that all other states are receiving the aid.

The HEW secretary said he understood that 50 per cent of the 10,000 employees at the Saturn rocket plant were imported from other states and he guessed that half of these could have been drawn from local surplus labor if the proper training was available.

Federal officials told Louisiana last year the state was losing $1,088,000 by refusal to sign an agreement for funds under the Federal Manpower Development and Training Act.

Celebrezze, at a press conference in the Royal Orleans Hotel, said Louisiana never has given a reason for its failure to participate, but he said he had a hunch it had to do with integration.

The funds, under the act, would not be available to segregated facilities.

A Study of the Economic Loss to New Orleans Caused by Migration of College-Educated Negroes, by T. Earl Sullenger, Ph.D.

. . . In brief, we conclude that the City of New Orleans is sustaining an annual economic loss of over 4-8 Million Dollars as the result of the migration of its college-educated Negroes.

WASHINGTON POST
June 5, 1963

Richmond (AP)—The Federal Government has under consideration a vocational education program for school-less Prince Edward [Virginia] County Negro children and is awaiting results of a survey to determine what other programs might be needed. . . .

The survey, being conducted by a Michigan State University research team under a $75,000 Federal grant, will provide basic information . . . to determine what other educational programs might be needed in the County.

Prince Edward closed its public schools in 1959 to avoid court-ordered desegregation. Since then white children have attended private, segregated schools. About 500 of the County's 1,600 Negro school-age children have been attending classes outside the County but the remainder have had no formal education in the past four school years.

WASHINGTON POST
Marquis Childs column,
May 28, 1963

[Commissioner of Education Francis Keppel] . . . wanted the committee [the House Subcommittee on Education] to approve $5 million for the next fiscal year for grants to the states to carry out, under state approval, programs in reading and writing for those who cannot read or write English or have less than an eighth grade education. . . .

Of the white population 25 years and older 6.7 per cent have completed less than five years of school. The percentage for the Negro population is 23.5. This is one measure of separate but unequal as it has prevailed in many parts of the country.

In Mississippi and Georgia nearly 40 per cent of the Negro population has had less than five years of school. For Texas, the figure is 23.6. In Missouri, it is 17.2. Illinois is 13.8 and New York 11.8.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
February 20, 1964
(Reprinting an article which appeared in the Milwaukee JOURNAL

In Georgia the median income to support each individual white person is $2,470, each Negro $927. White unemployment is 3.7 per cent, Negro 6 per cent. Weltner [Representative Charles L. Weltner, D. Ga.] estimated that if even the employed Negroes in Georgia earned at the white median rate they would add a half billion dollars a year to the state economy—instead of loading it with relief costs.

BUSINESS WEEK
September 28, 1963

Such an atmosphere is a serious problem for companies that need to hire executives and highly trained workers. Rust Engineering Co., for example, employs some 400 people, mostly graduate engineers, in Birmingham. George M. Rust, executive vice-president, says flatly that his company can't attract the trained engineers it needs. He pins the blame directly on the racial troubles.

"Periodically we run help-wanted ads in newspapers around the country," Rust explains. "We generally get 10 to 15 responses to each ad. About the time of the demonstrations last May we ran 10 ads from which we got just two answers." He goes on: "One highly skilled man we needed badly put us off because he wanted to see how the racial situation developed. Finally he decided not to come."

from a statement on the "Economic Costs of Racial Discrimination" presented to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, September 1962, by the Council of Economic Advisers

. . . The elimination of discrimination [in employment] would have an impact on the distribution of income among whites. Wage and salary incomes of whites in the lower paid occupations (with higher proportions of non-whites) would tend to rise while the opposite would be true in the higher income occupations. Thus the low income white population would also benefit and a more equal income distribution among whites would result.

The Price We Pay...
In Legal Costs

WASHINGTON POST
Editorial, May 6, 1964

"... no State can directly dictate or casually promote a distinction in the treatment of persons solely on the basis of their color." The principle is now so explicit a fixture of constitutional law that it must astonish laymen to see Virginia's Attorney General waste the taxpayers' money contesting the point. Judge Bryan enunciated it again in Alexandria, ordering the state to discontinue its practice of segregating the voting and property tax records by citizens' race.

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD
September 21, 1963

Savannah, Ga. (UPI)—About 250 Negroes awaiting trial in connection with recent sit-in demonstrations here asked for separate jury trials Wednesday. . . .

Solicitor General Andrew J. Ryan, Jr., estimated that, if the Negroes went ahead with their plan, it would take a year and a half to complete the 250 trials. According to Georgia law, any person accused of either a misdemeanor or a felony has the right to demand a jury trial.

Section 59-120
GEORGIA CODE

... The first grand jury impaneled at the fall term of the superior courts of the several counties shall fix the compensation of jurors and court bailiffs for the next succeeding year, such compensations not to exceed $3 per diem. . . .

390 weekdays (in 18 months) X $12 per day ($1 per juror per day minimum) = $4,680

CHARLOTTE OBSERVER
August 24, 1963

Greensboro (AP)—Solicitor L. Herbin, Jr., said Friday that if all 183 defendants charged with obstructing a street here without a permit June 6 pleaded not guilty he would plan a single trial for them in Superior Court Monday.

A single trial, he estimated would save Guilford County and the state more than $25,000. He based the figure on an estimated cost of $30 a minute for court operation. . . .

"If we were to try these cases individually, it would take about half a year. . . ."

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
May 15, 1964

Perry [Ga.]—A fight between white persons and Negroes at a drinking fountain outside the Superior Courtroom in the Houston County courthouse Thursday brought about a mistrial in a case. . . .

Investigators and witnesses said the fight developed when a Negro drank from the white drinking fountain. . . .

As soon as order was restored, Judge Howell Bell declared a mistrial and released the jury.

NORFOLK JOURNAL AND GUIDE
November 30, 1963

Thus the long legal battle against school integration, the costs of which haven't yet been fully determined, and the continuing Prince Edward County court battle, all costly to the State, are draining off tax dollars which could and should be used for education and public works construction.

RICHMOND NEWS LEADER
October 29, 1963

The Powhatan county school board has been ordered [by Federal District Judge John D. Butzner, Jr.] to pay $2,100 in fees to the two Negro attorneys who successfully opposed the county's segregated school policy.

A Report of the Arkansas Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, September 1963

The Little Rock School District, for example, had desegregation litigation from 1956 through 1962 resulting in at least 23 reported decisions by courts of record. During that period, legal fees paid by the district totaled $95,796.37, of which an estimated 75 percent is attributable to the legal position of the school board in opposition to desegregation.

Remarks of Senator Paul H. Douglas in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD
April 3, 1964, p. 6613

A single trial in a district court—with normal attendant motions, discovery procedures, and so forth—with one appeal to the circuit court and an application for certiorari to the Supreme Court, costs from $15,000 to $18,000. I refer to a letter from Gordon Tiffany, staff director, Commission on Civil Rights, dated January 29, 1960 and published at 106 Congressional Record 3663-3364.

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
February 9, 1964

. . . During the past several years, the city of Jackson has been subjected to various court actions, in addition to pursuing a steady course of prosecuting racial demonstrators and others charged with public breach of city ordinances.

This activity has grown to such proportions that it overshadows most of the city's ordinary run of business, has caused the expenditure of a formidable [amount] of money.

NEW YORK TIMES
April 7, 1964

Washington (AP)—The Supreme Court rejected today a request by L. B. Sullivan, a city commissioner of Montgomery, Ala., for apportionment of costs in the case in which the court overturned a $500,000 libel judgment he won against the New York Times. . . .

Mr. Sullivan, in a motion filed with the Supreme Court, asked for "apportionment of printing costs and fees," that is, a division of the costs between him and the Times.

The Court routinely assesses such amounts against the loser, and a brief court order today rejected Mr. Sullivan's motion without comment.

The Office of the Supreme Court estimated the costs at about $13,000.

NEW YORK TIMES
April 23, 1964

(UPI)—A Federal judge ordered all public facilities in Gadsden, Ala., permanently desegregated today . . .

District Judge H. H. Grooms issued the ruling on an omnibus integration suit filed by Gadsden Negroes . . .

The defendants also were ordered to pay all court costs.

The Price We Pay...

In Education

In Loss of and Inability to Attract Faculty, Students, and Research

WALL STREET JOURNAL
September 19, 1963

Birmingham—. . . "The racial situation has kept some people from joining our faculty, even though we offered them a greater opportunity than anyone else," says Dr. S. Richardson Hill, dean of the University of Alabama Medical Center here. "One doctor had already decided this was the best place for him. But after he talked it over with his family he decided against it." . . .

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
August 16, 1963

Oxford (AP)—The University of Mississippi—which ends its most difficult year Sunday with graduation of James H. Meredith—is losing more than 20 per cent of its faculty. . . .

An Associated Press survey shows that 54 faculty members listed in the 1962-63 university catalog will not return for the fall term which begins next month. . . .

He [university chancellor Dr. J. D. Williams] said the normal turnover among his teachers in past years has been 10 per cent. . . .

Before Meredith enrolled . . . most of the faculty turnover had been instructors and assistant professors—the two lowest grades.

But now there are 11 faculty members with rank of full professor and 17 associate professors leaving. . . .

Among those are two department chairmen, Dr. Samuel F. Clark of chemistry and Dr. William H. Willis of classics. . . .

Dr. Clark in an interview, said:

"My decision to leave Ole Miss, an institution for which I have felt and still feel a deep affection, stemmed from the serious loss of academic freedom to faculty and students of the university and to the breakdown of moral and professional responsibility on the part of the university's administrative officers."

Both Dr. Clark and Dr. Willis have been department heads since 1947. . . .

The entire three-man philosophy department is leaving. Seven of the 12 full-time chemistry teachers will not return.

The art department loses three of its five professors; classics two of four; physics three of seven; mathematics four of 10.

from testimony by Undersecretary of Commerce, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. July 23, 1963

. . . In Little Rock, although racial unrest was sparked by school desegregation, protests over segregated public accommodations further inflamed the environment. Under these conditions, recruitment of technical people became extremely difficult. According to the provost for medical affairs of the University of Arkansas . . . "the Medical Center has had its faculty recruitment program brought to a virtual standstill. So many of the persons we approach and invite to join the faculty are diverted by the events that have been taking place in the community."

BUSINESS WEEK* February 29, 1964

. . . Said Dr. Willis Tate, president of Southern Methodist University in Dallas: "One of the first questions asked by a talented professor who is invited to teach at a Southern University is: 'Is your university fully integrated?' This question today has become very important to an educator, more so than it has ever been. It has become part of his moral code, the fiber of his integrity."

NEW YORK TIMES June 9, 1963

Oxford, Miss.—Although two Negro students were registered quietly at the University of Mississippi this week, the aftermath of last fall's rioting still plagues the school.

The number of new students who applied by June 1 for the fall term totals 884, 30 per cent below last year's total of 1,264, according to the figures compiled by the registrar's office.

The biggest decrease has been in the number of out-of-state students.

NASHVILLE TENNESSEAN September 27, 1963

Oxford, Miss. (AP)—Four dormitories at the university of Mississippi are being closed for lack of students, university authorities announced yesterday.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION Ralph McGill column, August 27, 1963

The crisis is, Dr. Willard [Dr. Willam R. Willard, vice president of the Medical Center, University of Kentucky] finds, clearly delineated. There is a sharp decline in the number and quality of applicants to medical schools. Dr. Willard names no institutions. But the schools described in Group One, where research and experiments are conducted, are, the report says, "not handicapped by sponsorship which restricts admission of students by race, creed or color as in some Group Two schools." The marginal schools, and those most burdened, are, therefore, in the South. . . .

In 1960-61 the ten schools in Group One averaged $11.3 million [in expenditures] per school. Group Two averaged $1.7 million. Federal grants for research naturally—and properly—went largely to the Group One institutions.

BUSINESS WEEK* February 29, 1964

A Houston jury in a state civil court last week O.K.'d a move by the trustees of Rice University to break away from two stipulations of the institution's founder [not to charge tuition and not to admit Negroes]. . . .

In Rice's case, more than 88% of the school's $5.9 millions worth of research contracts are government supported. . . . Whether or not Congress adopts a strong civil rights law, it is clear that federal agencies are under pressure to put their money, where possible, in integrated colleges. . . .

In the light of such statistics, Rice trustees could see no future for their university, regardless of its recognized scientific stature in Texas, unless a court would allow them to bypass the two conditions of the University's charter. . . .

Particularly, they [the trustees] said, continued exclusion of Negroes would cripple Rice's ability to attract a top-grade faculty as well as carry forward its research effort.

The Price We Pay...

In Capital Investment

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
February 27, 1964

Millsaps College reaffirmed its segregation policy in a statement in the current edition of the Methodist Advocate. . . .

"This is evidenced by the fact that the board has determined privately to finance the building of badly needed additional dormitory space on the campus," said the statement, "rather than by the acceptance of a one-million dollar loan from the housing and home finance agency."

WASHINGTON POST
September 18, 1963

Annapolis (AP)—Gov. Tawes said today Cambridge must settle its racial problems if it is to have any chance as a site for a proposed Eastern Shore branch of the University of Maryland.

"With the continuance of conditions that exist in Cambridge, I would have no great desire to agree to establishment of a (university) branch there," he told a news conference. "It would be unwise." . . .

He noted that the bill authorizing $100,000 for planning a university branch or branches does not become effective until next June.

BATON ROUGE STATE TIMES
June 12, 1963

Jackson, Miss. (AP)—The State Building Commission is studying a recommendation by the State College Board that $3 million in state bonds be issued to finance dormitory construction at six institutions of higher learning.

The recommendation made by the board falls under a new program designed to circumvent racial discrimination rulings imposed by federal agencies.

In the past the state has borrowed federal money to finance such construction.

NEW YORK TIMES
June 9, 1963

The university's [of Mississippi] plight has been underscored in another area. In recent years, the university has financed new dormitory building costing $8,000,000 with funds from the Federal Housing and Home Finance Agency.

When President John Kennedy last November signed an Executive Order forbidding discrimination in Federally assisted housing, the Mississippi Legislature ordered an end to future agreements between the agency and the university.

University officials say they will now have to seek state bond issues for dormitory construction. Because the lending rates will not be as favorable as the Federal rate has been, an increase in room rent is expected.

ROANOKE TIMES
June 19, 1963

Richmond (AP)—The Virginia Public School Authority accepted Tuesday a long interest bid of 2.9346 per cent for its initial issue of $15 million in bonds to aid local school construction. . . .

Dave Ellenwood, a Moody's Investors Service representative serving as authority adviser, said the low bid was "not quite as favorable as hoped for" but still "a very fair value."

Ellenwood said recent news of racial disturbances "from the southern part of the country had tended to upset some buyers in the market for southern bonds."

NEW YORK TIMES
June 20, 1963

. . . Several municipal bond dealers, particularly those in the secondary market, have said that they are "not going out of our way to stock bonds issued by communities that are in the headlines."

The Price We Pay...

Through School Closing and Boycotts

ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
April 14, 1963

. . . New president of the statewide organization of civic and professional leadership is Jack Reed, merchant of Tupelo who during the midst of Negro James Meredith-Ole Miss desegregation crisis said Mississippi would suffer economic catastrophe if schools were closed in the face of desegregation efforts. . . .

ATLANTA DAILY WORLD
February 19, 1964

The House Tuesday authorized Laurens County [Georgia] to sell its controversial Brewton School, near Dublin, which white residents refused to use because it was too close to a small Negro neighborhood.

Since its erection at a cost of $300,000 in 1957 the complex of buildings has been wrecked by vandals and despoiled by weather.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
February 4, 1963

. . . Tuskegee High School was closed last Friday on orders from the State Board of Education, of which Governor George Wallace is ex-officio chairman.

School authorities in Tuskegee said it was costing about $450 a month for each pupil to keep Tuskegee High School open; compared with a statewide average of less than $300 a pupil per year.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
February 11, 1964

Montgomery—. . . Speaking at a press conference, the governor [George C. Wallace] said his office will offer "all it can to help" enroll white Macon County students in schools of surrounding counties.

"The governor's office will spend whatever money we have to help," he said, adding that money will come from the mansion fund and other funds.

Wallace asked financial aid to the private Macon Academy at Tuskegee from the people of Alabama. The school was opened after Tuskegee High was desegregated last fall.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
February 23, 1964

(AP) . . . Some 432 pupils walked out of high school at Tuskegee, Notasulga and Shorter, refusing to attend class with Negroes. That will leave a big dent in the county's school budget because the state's money is allocated according to the student population.

. . . in September, the county [Macon] will receive something like $75,000 less than it did this school year. Actually, the cutback will be somewhat greater when the loss in transportation money is figured. . . .

The loss of the state funds won't necessarily mean the Macon County Board must close any schools. It could cut out some of the services countywide instead.

Or it could make up the difference from local sources of revenue. But in a small rural county like Macon, that's difficult.

ARKANSAS GAZETTE
Editorial, February 7, 1964

If Macon County chooses to take the private school route, it would probably be too much to hope that the county officialdom would call on Little Rock for some expert testimony on the miserable, costly experience that would lie ahead.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
February 5, 1964

Tuskegee (AP)—Three barns were burned on the farm of Macon County School board member Don Mercer Davis Tuesday night, and authorities said it was a case of obvious arson. . . .

The burnings follow cross burnings at the homes of three of the school board Sunday night.

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
February 6, 1964

Tuskegee (AP)—The water filter plant at nearby Notasulga burned Wednesday night and Mayor James Rhea said it has caused an acute water shortage. He asked that all schools in the town be closed.

Among the schools to be closed is the high school where federal court has ordered six Negro students admitted.

No cause of the fire was determined, but Rhea said, "it looks suspicious."

ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
April 19, 1964

Notasulga, Ala. (AP)—Fire destroyed the recently desegregated Macon County High School early Saturday and investigators said there were indications that it may have been started by an arsonist. . . .

There was no immediate estimate of the damage.*

*[According to the Alabama Educational Directory, 1962-63, there are 10 school plants in Macon County. According to the Annual Report, 1962, of the Alabama Department of Education, the total assessed valuation of school warrants for Macon County properties was $12,956,890. If the Macon County High School plant alone (without consideration of interior equipment such as books and laboratory supplies) were estimated at one-tenth of the total value of the county's plants, and this would seem a low estimate since four of the ten schools are elementary schools, then its assessed valuation could be well over $1,250,000].

The Price We Pay...

Through Tuition Grants

Several southern states have attempted through various schemes to avoid or mitigate desegregation of schools by providing grants from state funds to students for tuition at private schools. To illustrate, Virginia in 1959 legislated to provide such scholarships of up to $250 (elementary school child) and $275 (high school child) per student.

Following are some of the results of this and similar state actions in Louisiana, South Carolina, and Alabama, as well as some estimates of the costs in the four states most seriously affected.

In Virginia . . .

WASHINGTON POST
November 13, 1963

Roanoke (AP)—Roanoke School Superintendent E. W. Rushton attacked the tuition grant program last night in some of the strongest terms yet from an educator.

The cost rise is "alarming" . . . said Rushton. . . .

He said money has been laid out for the grants year after year while spending has been cut for teachers' salaries, school plant maintenance and operation. . . .

For every child who gets a grant, the city loses more money—an average of $100 in the State support allocated on the basis of children in average daily attendance. . . .

School board Business Manager A. F. Fisher estimated today that the total cost of the program to date thus exceeds $225,000, or about the cost of a new eight-room elementary school. . . .

Virginia taxpayers spent $2,252,995 for 9489 grants in 1962-63.

ROANOKE TIMES
Editorial, January 22, 1964

. . . For the biennium of 1964-66, the sum of $1,200,000 is set aside for paying the state's share of grants . . .

In South Carolina . . .

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
March 22, 1964

In South Carolina the legislature included a provision in this year's general appropriations bill for $250,000 that will finance private education for pupils in Charleston who are dissatisfied with integrated schools.

CHARLESTON NEWS AND COURIER
January 11, 1964

Columbia (AP)—. . . But if federal court orders on integration of schools begin ranging more widely than just in the Charleston area, $250,000 would be only a drop in the bucket.

In Louisiana . . .
the bill of . . .

PAR ANALYSIS
No. 113, October, 1963
Public Affairs Research
Council of Louisiana, Inc.

In the current school term, 10,136 children have been approved to receive grants that will total $3.6 million.

consists of . . .

The $360 grant paid by the state to a child attending a private school is considerably more than the average amount of state money spent on each child attending public elementary and secondary schools in fiscal 1962-63.

and is paid by . . .

In the second extra session of 1961, the legislature transferred $2.5 million from the public welfare fund to a new fund, the education expense grant fund, in order to carry out the grant-in-aid program. It further provided that $200,000 per month was to be paid into the new fund out of the first money collected from the state's sales tax. . . . The 1962 legislature then transferred $4 million out of the fund to assist in meeting the state's deficit. . . . The $200,000 sales tax dedication was continued; however, in the 1963 fiscal session of the legislature this sum was raised to $300,000 per month by Act 27.

In Alabama . . .

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
February 5,1964

The State Board of Education Tuesday authorized financial aid to parents of Tuskegee High School students to enable them to attend private segregated schools. . . .

State School Superintendent Auston Meadows said . . . it would be sometime before he could determine how much money would go to the parents for each child. The law specifies that the amount cannot exceed what was previously spent in providing a public education for the student.†

ANNUAL REPORT
1962 Alabama State Board of Education

†CURRENT EXPENSES PER PUPIL IN A.D.A. (AVERAGE DAILY ATTENDANCE)	COUNTIES WHITE	COUNTIES NEGRO
	$198.68	$177.76

The Price We Pay...

In Duplication of Resources

MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER
February 19, 1964

(AP)—For almost 20 years, Alabama has provided out-of-state aid for college students seeking instruction not available to them in this state.

Many Negroes have taken advantage of the program to get specialized instruction when they were barred from Alabama's white colleges and universities.

Under the program started in 1945, Alabama pays the difference in tuition plus transportation and up to $110 a month for living expenses.

WALL STREET JOURNAL
September 3, 1963

Fort Rucker, Ala.—When school bells ring this morning, some 1,200 white and Negro children will file into a spanking new $1,038,000 school house built on the base here by Uncle Sam this summer for the sake of integration.

Meanwhile, a few hundred yards away from the camp gates, a segregated public school, also costing $1 million and financed with Federal funds, will remain two-thirds empty. Most of its white students have been transferred to the Army school, in company with a handful of Negro military dependents that previously attended a local all-colored school. At most, it's estimated only 30 Negro pupils at Fort Rucker will be enrolled in the new integrated school on post.

Report of the Arkansas Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, September, 1963

The varied costs of maintaining segregated schools are large and growing larger; the heaviest burden rests on Negro children, but the drain on the monetary resources of the entire community is increasingly severe. . . .

Handicapped by lower income and a higher educational load than the rest of the United States, Arkansas, in common with the rest of the South, has gained little in relation to national education standards. In 1961, Arkansas spent $57.48 per capita on its public schools, $3.29 below Mississippi, and last in the Nation.

ATLANTA JOURNAL
July 9, 1963

Atlanta School Board Member Mrs. Ray Mitchell has accused the city of "spending millions of dollars unnecessarily to keep schools segregated when segregation, by law, may be past history at any time." . . .

". . . Empty seats" at predominantly white schools could help further to relieve crowded conditions in Negro schools, she continued.

Mrs. Mitchell also argued unsuccessfully against a board plan to build an entirely new school to lighten the load at crowded Howard High. She said she could "not go along" with an expenditure of about $2 million on a new building when existing space in other schools is already available.

While on the Other Hand . . .

CHARLESTON (W. VA.) GAZETTE
April 18, 1964

. . . West Virginia has made a good beginning in school desegregation. . . .

Segregation simply costs too much—both in taxes and in the psycological damage it does primarily to Negroes, but also to whites who are forced to grow up learning to fear or hate human beings they don't even know.

Report of the Arkansas Advisory Committee to the United States Commission on Civil Rights, September, 1963

The cost of interdistrict transportation of Negro children to servicing schools clearly exceeds what the cost of educating such children in desegrated resident districts would be. . . . State-wide per pupil cost averages from $149 to $225 per year. In a segregated district in western Arkansas, $4,500 is spent annually for sending 14 Negro high school students to another district, a per pupil average of $321. In one district, 15 students in both elementary and secondary schools had been sent to another district at an annual cost of $6,000, or $400 per pupil. This latter district has desegregated, and it is a source of some public pride that the savings are being put into a public school music department that the district long lacked.

WASHINGTON POST
November 25, 1963

. . . Applauding the School Board's decision [to close the all-Negro high school] County Board Chairman Thomas W. Richards said yesterday:

"The Board is pleased that, for the first time, all Negro senior high school children in Arlington will have an equal educational opportunity and that this will be accomplished at a great savings to the taxpayer."

LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL
September 22, 1963

Paris, Ky.—. . . For six months before the high school [Bourbon County] integrated in 1961, a biracial committee prepared an acceptable climate of public opinion. . . .

Not the least effective argument was the hard fact that maintaining two systems was a needless waste, costing $33,000 a year.

The Price We Pay...

In Culture, Entertainment and Sports

Art . . .

NEW YORK TIMES
August 22, 1962

The Museum of Modern Art has barred its circulating exhibitions of paintings, sculpture and photographs from display before segregated groups.

One fourth of the exhibitions . . . visit the South.

This rule, which applies also to rentals from the museum's extensive library of motion pictures, was instituted recently in the hope that other museums would follow suit.

Opera and Theater . . .

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
Bruce Galphin column,
May 16, 1964

A few years ago, when soprano Leontyne Price was first creating such a sensation at the Metropolitan Opera in New York, one of the Met executives was asked when Atlantans could see and hear her.

"When she can ride in an unsegregated taxi from the airport, and stay in an unsegregated hotel and eat in an unsegregated restaurant," he replied. . . . [Miss Price sang with the Metropolitan during its 1964 season in Atlanta.]

How much Americans have cheated themselves in the past by denying themselves the Leontyne Prices. How much poorer we have been for cutting off the potential contributions of so many millions of people. How sad and curious it will seem to those who read the history of our days that we even set up elaborate barriers of custom and law to deny ourselves these gifts.

NEW YORK TIMES
August 22, 1962

. . . The museum is the third major cultural organization to act against segregation. Last year the Metropolitan Opera decided that it would no longer play before segregated audiences during its spring tours and this year the Actors Equity Association ruled that its members should not be required to perform in segregated theaters.

Night Clubs . . .

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
June 11, 1963

New York (AP)—The American Guild of Variety Artists voted in convention Monday for an immediate national boycott of entertainment centers that racially segregate either customers or employees. . . .

The resolution continued:

"AGVA will advocate the non-appearance of AGVA members in any hotels, clubs or place of entertainment where such a policy of segregation exists."

Baseball . . .

ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
October 20, 1963

. . . The Boston Red Sox and the Pittsburgh Pirates have been asked by the Florida National Association for the Advancement of Colored People to reconsider plans to locate baseball farm clubs at Ocala and Palatka. The NAACP said both cities lack integrated facilities.

Football . . .

HOUSTON POST
August 20, 1963

Four Negro stars of the Oakland Raiders [professional football] say they won't play Friday night in Mobile, Ala. against the New York Jets if seating in the stadium is segregated.

Prizefight . . .

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE
February 25, 1964

Both Loew's State and the Saenger theaters announced Monday that they are cancelling the telecast of the Sonny Liston-Cassius Clay heavyweight fight Tuesday night.

Earlier Monday, Liston said he would not stand for piping a telecast of his title defense, in Miami Beach, into any theater that had racially segregated seating.

Playright . . .

ATLANTA JOURNAL
April 4, 1963

Irish playwright Brendan Behan has cancelled a scheduled visit here Friday for a performance of one of his plays because of a news item he said he read in New York about police mistreatment of Negro comedian Dick Gregory in Mississippi.

Frank Wittow, director of the Academy Theater here, said . . . he [Behan] refused to come South.

"We were looking forward to seeing and working with Behan," Mr. Wittow said. "Unfortunately, we are all identified with the crude actions in Mississippi. This is a case of everybody suffering."

Literary Festival . . .

MEMPHIS COMMERCIAL APPEAL
April 9, 1964

Many months ago, the Southern Literary Festival, an association of 27 colleges and universities from South Carolina to Texas, made contracts with Prof. Walter Allen of Vassar College, Prof. John Gassner of Yale University, and Stephen Spender, English poet, to speak for festival sessions at Mississippi State College for Women at Columbus, April 23-25.

Three weeks before the festival date, all three wrote to Dr. George T. Buckley, president of the association, cancelling their contracts, all for the same reason, that Mississippi State College for Women does not admit Negroes."

State Parks . . .

CHARLESTON NEWS AND COURIER
April 23, 1964

Annual maintenance costs for Edisto Beach State Park, padlocked for eight years to avoid racial integration, constitute "a waste of money," the chairman of the State Forestry Commission said last night. . . .

Edisto Beach Park will be the only one of 26 state parks to remain closed next month. The other 25 are re-opening on a restricted racially integrated basis under terms of a new state parks act passed last week by the General Assembly. . . .

However, its mothball status is costing taxpayers $6,525 a year to pay a caretaker-superintendent and to paint and repair park cabins that will never be occupied. . . .

A state estimate is that it would require an outlay of $35,000 to get the park back into sufficiently good shape to reopen for visitors.

Auditorium . . .

SOUTHERN SCHOOL NEWS
September, 1962

A proposed large bond issue failed in Atlanta, and Mayor Ivan Allen, Jr., said the segregation issue was one of the reasons for the failure. A bond issue for new schools was barely defeated, but bonds for a cultural center lost by a big margin. Allen said the segregation issue had been "falsely injected" into the cultural center debate.

Music . . .

REDBOOK
"Little Rock—Five Years Later"
Gerald Walker
November, 1962

. . . When Duke Ellington was to appear there [Little Rock, Ark., city auditorium] last year, seating was announced to be on a segregated basis, whereupon the band leader cancelled his booking.

TIME
March 20, 1964

. . . Conductors George Szell, Leonard Bernstein and Erich Leinsdorf all announced that they would not appear before segregated audiences, and they were joined by such performers as Rise Stevens, Leon Fleisher, Jaime Laredo and Julius Katchen. Artur Rubenstein declared that such a stand is "a right and natural step."

Segregation remains the general rule for concert audiences in Mississippi and Alabama; elsewhere it is accomplished more discreetly. . . . Sol Hurok, with his huge stable of artists, has had a similar policy [refusal to appear before segregated audiences] for a decade. At week's end the new musical boycott of the Deep South was endorsed by Vladimir Horowitz.

Blackout in Mississippi . . .

DELTA DEMOCRAT-TIMES
(Greenville, Miss.)
January 29, 1964

Jackson (UPI)—[James] Webb, administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration, was to have given the principal address at a banquet honoring members of the Mississippi Legislature.

But a few hours before the event, Webb sent word he did not endorse segregation, and would not appear.

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
January 23, 1964

Television's Cartwright family of the "Bonanza" series exhibited a solid front Tuesday when Lorne Green and Michael Landon joined their co-star Dan Blocker in cancelling a scheduled appearance in Jackson because they refused to appear before a segregated audience.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS
January 26, 1964

Jackson (AP)—Jazz trumpeter Al Hirt and his band failed to play Saturday night after he was asked by an integration group not to appear at the segregated coliseum.

COMMONWEALTH
(Greenwood, Miss.)
February 20, 1964

Jackson, Miss. (AP)—Another performer has passed up an appearance here following a protest by a civil rights group.

Concert pianist Gary Graffman will not appear for a Community Concert series at the Jackson Auditorium on February 27 because of segregated arrangements.

NEW YORK TIMES
April 10, 1964

A campaign to desegregate concerts in the South received significant backing yesterday when a major concert management organization indicated that it would no longer offer its artists to perform in Jackson, Miss., at least until racial tensions there are eased. . . .

Kurt Weinhold, president of Columbia Artists Management, Inc., said . . . he had not suggested any replacement for Birgit Nilsson, the soprano, who last week called off a concert on the advice of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

The Price We Pay...

In Tourism and Conventions

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE
September 8, 1962

New Orleans' loss of conventions is hurting business much more in the French Quarter than are District Attorney Jim Garrison's vice raids, a veteran Bourbon Street night club operator believes.

Hyp Guinle, owner of the Famous Door Lounge, said Friday that state laws requiring segregation in hotels are costing night spots the convention trade which is their lifeblood. . . .

"Seymour Weiss tells me he's had five cancellations from conventions this year because he couldn't take one or two colored delegates," said Guinle.

PROVIDENCE (R. I.) JOURNAL
May 24, 1963

Bluefield, W. Va. (AP)—The West Virginia Chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People claimed a victory yesterday when Negro hotels turned away Negroes and forced an American Legion convention out of Bluefield. . . .

The NAACP has been "working hard to get Negroes not to cooperate with the segregated housing plans of the Legion convention," he [Rev. C. Anderson Davis, president of the W. Va. NAACP] said.

The controversy began last month when the West Virginian Hotel, to be convention headquarters, said it would not accept reservations from Negro legionnaires.

NEW YORK TIMES
August 22, 1963

Detroit (UPI)—The American Federation of Teachers has turned down a suggestion that its convention in 1963 be held at Bal Harbour, Fla.

Some of the delegates expressed concern over possible racial segregation.

ATLANTA JOURNAL
May 24, 1963

Miami Beach (AP) . . . Miami Beach has been named the site of the American Legion's September 6-12 national convention, shifted from New Orleans because of racial problems.

National Commander James Powers . . . said not enough integrated lodgings could be found in New Orleans.

An estimated 50,000 persons will attend the sessions.

Tabulations by Larry Mansfield, Manager, City of Miami Convention Bureau, June, 1963

Assuming that the Miami Beach meeting draws 35,000 delegates for a four-day stay and each one spends $30.00 per day (a national average delegate's expenditure), this will amount to . . . $4,200,000.

From testimony of Undersecretary of Commerce, Franklin D. Roosevelt, Jr. before the Senate Committee on Commerce, July 23, 1963

The business community generally has begun to recognize that the Negro's rising disposable income represents a large and growing portion of the nation's buying power. However, this is far less true in the area of public accommodations.

The table [based on a study published several years ago by the Wharton School of the University of Pennsylvania] shows . . . that Negroes in both the North and South spend much less than whites of the same income class on "Automobile operations" (40 to 60 per cent). This statistic certainly suggests that Negroes are doing considerably less traveling by automobile than white people in the same income group. Since Negroes spent close to the same amount, on the average, for the purchase of automobiles as did whites on the same income level, I believe the absence of suitable facilities along our important North-South highway routes must be the discouraging factor.

WALL STREET JOURNAL* June 26, 1963

Tourist travel through Birmingham to points in the South and Southwest "is off at least 25%, maybe more," says Bancroft Timmons, director of the Alabama Automobile Association. "We're getting requests for routings around Birmingham every day. People coming from New York to the Southwest are driving 100 miles out of their way through Arkansas to miss Alabama."

NEW ORLEANS TIMES-PICAYUNE September 16, 1963

Toronto (AP)—Canadians should boycott the southern United States as a holiday area in protest of racial segregation, Alan Borovoy, executive secretary of the Ontario Labor Committee for Human Rights, said Sunday.

ATLANTA JOURNAL April 27, 1964

Pittsburgh—The Methodist Church's General Conference was told Sunday that the body would meet in Dallas, Tex., in 1968. Atlanta had been a major contender for the meeting until it was eliminated several weeks ago because of segregation in several restaurants and lunch counters as well as inadequate auditorium facilities. . . .

Had Atlanta been selected, the conference would have brought some 14,000 persons to the city for a two-week period.

NEW YORK TIMES June 14, 1964

St. Augustine—. . . The city of 15,000 persons derives 80 per cent of its income from tourists. The old Spanish fort, a national monument, is a good indicator of the tourist trade. The National Park Service said the number of visitors to the fort declined almost 45 per cent during the first 10 days of June, compared to the same period last year.

While on the Other Hand . . .

WALL STREET JOURNAL
July 15, 1963

. . . In Dallas, integration of hotels and restaurants has "opened up an entirely new area of convention prospects," according to Ray Bennison, convention manager of the Chamber of Commerce. "This year we've probably added $8 million to $10 million of future bookings because we're integrated," Mr. Bennison says.

DALLAS MORNING NEWS
February 12, 1964

Hank Brown, state president of Texas AFL-CIO told the state executive board Tuesday that unions recently caused the integration of the last segregated hotel in Brownsville.

Brown said that while examining Brownsville as a possible site for the union's convention August 10-21, he discovered that a hotel near the convention center was segregated.

When civic leaders faced the prospect of losing $250,000 in convention trade, he said, "the situation was straightened out." Executive board members voted Monday to hold the convention in Brownsville.

WINSTON-SALEM (N. C.)
JOURNAL, Editorial
February 24, 1964

. . . A week or so ago, the National Lutheran Council decided to meet in Charlotte after the New York Times reported that eight hotels and motels in that city had been desegregated. Earlier, the council members had discounted Charlotte as a meeting site. The executive director of the council said that "we would prefer (as a matter of principle) not to be in a place where the hotel space was segregated." Thus Charlotte gets a convention that will bring 70 people there for three days.

Last Friday, the North Carolina Association of Broadcasters said that it had cancelled plans to hold its June convention at a motor hotel in Wrightsville Beach because the management refused to provide accommodations for representatives of a member radio station owned by Negroes. Instead, the association will meet at a New Bern hotel.

There will surely be other such instances as more and more organizations desegregate their membership and as the consciences of Americans become increasingly aroused to the need for racial justice. And in time the realities of business may overcome the fears of those who still feel that discrimination pays off.

The Price We Pay...

On a National Scale

For Segregated Housing

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
July 1, 1963

Washington . . . He [Emerson P. Schmidt, chief economist for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce] noted that while there has been no absolute drop in the volume of federally-financed house construction since the anti-discrimination order was issued in November, there has been a drop in the proportion it represents of all new house construction.

THE MORTGAGE BANKER
February, 1964

Not only is the impulse to new home ownership an inevitable expression of the middle class Negro's aspirations and accomplishments, its realization would have a salutary effect on the economy at large.

Recently the Housing and Home Finance agency prepared a series of estimates of the extent to which new construction would be augmented if non-white families were permitted and inclined to participate in the housing market in a manner identical to that of the white families. The calculation for 17 metropolitan areas in the United States indicated that potential demand accumulated among non-white families with incomes between $7,000 and $10,000 a year amounted to 45,000 units, and that demand in all 212 metropolitan areas may be as high as 200,000 units.

This figure represents approximately one-eighth of the total annual volume of new construction and one-sixth of the annual number of new one-family units. Were the backlog to be made up during the remaining portion of the decade of the 1960's, the demand for new construction would be increased by 2 to 3 per cent a year. This could be a welcome addition during a period in which net household formation is expected to taper off.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
Eugene Patterson column,
December 14, 1963

. . . If backward attitudes prevail, Atlanta can become a predominantly Negro city by 1975.

And since the existing housing squeeze will increasingly drive well-off Negroes as well as whites to homes outside the city limits, in order to make way for city slums to house the poorest Negroes and whites, then the city's tax base will erode and progress will wither.

Then city business will falter, and with it job opportunities, so that the poverty of the city's poor will begin to feed on itself and perpetuate the cycle of decay.

What the city faces, therefore, is not a racial debate but an economic crisis. Poor whites, trapped in city slums, will be hurt along with poor Negroes. And the well-off whites, along with the well-off Negroes who withdraw into suburbs will find the source of their prosperity—a strong central city—evaporating.

The Price We Pay...

For Federal Troops in Racial Disorders

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
October 3, 1963

Washington (AP)—The call-up of the Alabama National Guard in that state's public school integration crisis last month has cost at least $422,000 so far, the Army said Wednesday.

This figure covers pay and allowances from September 10 to 30.

It does not include operations costs.

NASHVILLE BANNER
March 29, 1963

Washington—The Defense Department estimates it has spent at least $4,100,000 maintaining troops at Oxford, Miss., to protect James Meredith. . . .

Defense Secretary Robert McNamara supplied the figure to a House Appropriations subcommittee, for the period ending January 31, at the request of three Southern members. . . .

McNamara pointed out that Defense Department figures were in addition to the cost incurred by the Justice Department.

JACKSON DAILY NEWS
April 5, 1963

Washington (AP)—. . . The Justice Department has told Congress its expenses to enforce court orders permitting Negro James H. Meredith to attend the University of Mississippi will run about $559,000 through June 30.

KNOXVILLE NEWS-SENTINEL
January 30, 1963

. . . Federal costs in the operation has exceeded $4,500,000 and it is costing an additional $4,500 a day for the 300 troops still stationed at Oxford, Miss. . . .

ARKANSAS GAZETTE
February 20, 1963

Washington (AP)—The damage that heavy military aircraft inflicted last fall on the University of Mississippi airport will be repaired by the government, two Mississippi House members said today. . . .

"The damage to the runway alone is estimated to be in excess of $200,000. Additional extensive repairs must be made to restore other airport property to its original condition."

WASHINGTON POST
September 11, 1963

For the fourth time in recent years†, the National Guard of a Southern state was called into Federal service during a desegregation dispute yesterday . . .

. . . The 320 Alabama Guardsmen mobilized by Governor George C.

Wallace early yesterday to bar Negro children from entering school in three Alabama cities, withdrew on Department of the Army orders after President Kennedy federalized the entire 17,000-man Alabama Guard. They returned to their armories.

They [Guardsmen] will draw an average of $13.50 a day in Army pay while mustered into Federal service even though not actually on duty —at a cost to the U. S. Government of about $320,000 a day.

† [Little Rock—1957; Ole Miss—1962; Tuscaloosa—1963; and Birmingham, Tuskegee and Huntsville—September, 1963].

NEW YORK TIMES
May 13, 1964

Washington—The Controller General of the United States has turned down a University of Mississippi claim for $104,545 in damages that followed the admission of James H. Meredith. . .

The university argued that the Federal troops were its tenants. Therefore, it said, the Army should pay the fair rental value of the property it occupied and restore the premises to their original condition.

Controller General Ames Campbell, in refusing the claim altogether, noted that the troops hardly had been invited by the university.

The Price We Pay...

In Gross National Product

From a statement on the "Economic Costs of Racial Discrimination in Employment," presented to the Joint Economic Committee of Congress, by the Council of Economic Advisers September, 1962

. . . If non-whites had the same labor force participation and employment rates as the whites and if they were distributed geographically and occupationally (and thus in terms of wage and salary income) as whites with the same educational attainments—if, in other words, non-whites were able to make the same contribution to production, given their present educational attainment, GNP could be increased by about 1.8 per cent. . . .

Furthermore, the 1.8 per cent estimate relates only to wage and salary income and does not attempt the difficult measurement of the change in the labor component of entrepreneurial income. Gains will occur in the labor productivity of the self-employed adding further to the 1.8 per cent increase in GNP.

The above considerations suggest that the gain in Gross National Product might well be as much as 2.5 per cent (about $13 billion at today's level of GNP). . . .

. . . The shift to full utilization of the present capabilities of the nonwhite population (and the resultant GNP increase of about 2.5 per cent) would assist significantly in meeting our economic growth objectives in the coming years. . . .

If non-whites had the same educational levels as whites, and if the economy fully utilized their education, GNP today might be perhaps 3.2 per cent higher (inclusive of the 2.5 per cent estimate reported above). This amounts to about $17 billion at today's levels of GNP.

Speech by Senator Hubert H. Humphrey (D. Minn.) in Pittsburgh March 7, 1964

. . . This [$13 to $17 billion dollars a year cited above in GNP] is more than one-fourth of the money we spend for national defense. It is three times as much as we spend on our space program.

And this loss in income, of course, does not take into account what we pay in higher crime rates, poor health, urban decay, mounting welfare costs and the countless other costs that grow out of discrimination.

When all of these are added, the cost of discrimination becomes astronomical.

BIRMINGHAM NEWS Editorial, September 22, 1963

. . . Where there are many Negroes and if Negro income levels are substantially lower than whites—and they are—then the states or the region with so large a number of Negroes suffer by not having all its people able to buy goods or services matching the national level. The more Negroes can buy, the more jobs will be created.

HOUSTON POST February 23, 1964

American society robs itself when it refuses equal job and educational opportunities to people because of their race, creed or religion.

That's the feeling of Hobart Taylor, Jr., of Washington, D. C., the executive vice-chairman of the President's Committee on Equal Employment Opportunity.

. . . Taylor prefers to approach the issue of desegregation on economic grounds.

The Gross National Product of the United States, for example, would be increased . . . if job discrimination were ended, he said. The Gross National Product now stands at $600 billion.

"Our economic system needs to be arranged so that everyone strives to his fullest," he said "If he doesn't, the country is that much poorer."

The economic evil about discrimination, he said, is that it makes many feel they cannot rise above a certain level, so they tend to give less than their best.

Taylor said one of the most harmful fallacies in the nation is that there are only a certain number of jobs available for the work force.

The truth is, he says, that as more people are given the opportunity to produce, the more wealth and jobs there are created.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION (from New York Times Co. dispatch), July 1, 1963

Washington—The Chief economist for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce fears that "unresolved race relations issues" may hurt some kinds of businesses particularly, and business generally in certain sections of the country. . . .

Entire areas of the country where there is widespread public unrest might also see some temporary drop in business, Schmidt [Dr. Emerson P. Schmidt] indicated.

The Price We Pay...

In Foreign Relations

Letter from W. M. Chase, General Sales Manager, Chase Machinery Company ATLANTA CONSTITUTION "Pulse of the Public" column May 20, 1963

Buffalo, N. Y.—I have just returned from a selling trip through the greater and lesser Antilles where for years we have been selling machinery and equipment to these off-shore areas in the Caribbean and the Atlantic.

Both the whites and the blacks now refuse to buy anything American from us even though, personally, I have made many friends for the past many years.

Russia, Japan, Canada and England have their salesmen in these prosperous islands and invariably they talk about how the whites treat the colored people in the United States.

Last year the U. S. Department of Commerce reported exports to these same islands amounted to $180 million but the steamship companies so far this year are noticing that shipments are few.

NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE June 20, 1963

Washington—Twenty-two ambassadors from African nations got together here yesterday to tell the world what it already knew—that Africa thinks even less of Senator Allen J. Ellender than he thinks of it.

A Louisiana Democrat and ardent segregationist, Senator Ellender likes to go around telling anybody who will listen that Negroes are incapable of self-government. He said it again on television Sunday.

The statement brought the usual reaction. On Monday, Secretary of State Dean Rusk, speaking for an Administration that is up to its neck in racial problems, said the Senator did not speak for the government or for a majority of Americans.

The Africans had heard this before, and were not impressed. They gathered in the Liberian Embassy and issued a communique that said, in part:

"The language used by the Senator was needlessly offensive to our countries with which the United States government has friendly relations . . .

"It is difficult to ignore Sen. Ellender's remarks or to dismiss them as the fully privileged announcement of a private citizen in view of his position as a senior member of Congress and of the Senate Appropriations Committee . . .

"It is a grave disservice to the cause of world peace and understanding for a person occupying a prominent place in the public life of a great nation to provoke a return of the archaic debates on whether ethnic differences can be held to justly a claim of superiority by one race over another. That theory has been proved baseless and its revival is likely to be a source of incalculable mischief."

Last December, while on a taxpayer-financed junket to Africa, Senator Ellender also said Negroes were unable to rule themselves. The remarks received wide publicity all over the continent and caused the State Department considerable embarrassment.

One result was that four countries on the Senator's itinerary refused permission for him to visit.

In March, Senator Ellender held a press conference here in which he said he had no apologies for his views. He called Africans "thinskinned" and appeared still nettled that he had been refused travel rights in four of the nations. He added.

"The Negro in Africa is no different from the Negro in America. The minute you say whites are a little ahead of the Negro it's like shaking a red handkerchief before a fighting bull."

The official policy of the United States, of course, has been to support independence for new African states. It is aiding these countries to the tune of $500 million a year.

WASHINGTON POST
August 26, 1963

When Negro and white demonstrators for equal rights converge on Washington this week, an American dilemma will be unveiled in dramatic terms. The vast majority of white Americans (78 per cent) feel that unsolved racial problems here at home cannot be defended in the court of world opinion.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
Ralph McGill column,
May 23, 1963

Air mail brought cuttings from newspapers in the new African countries showing treatment of the Birmingham riots and bombings within four days after the first brutalities. These mailings—to our State Department, to members of many delegations in the United Nations, and to individuals—have continued. They include photographs.

The result of the madness at Birmingham, and the following statements by Governor Wallace, Bull Conner, and others in political leadership in Alabama and Mississippi, have quite literally paralyzed the foreign relations of this country's representatives in Africa and seriously damaged them elsewhere. . . .

One paper mocks us asking if there is any real difference between the late Adolf Hitler's racist attitudes and those of America's extremists? Again, we are vulnerable.

ATLANTA CONSTITUTION
May 28, 1963

Washington (UPI)—Secretary of State Dean Rusk Monday called on Americans to solve racial problems which he said are causing "deep injury" to U. S. foreign policy abroad.

Rusk said that because of remaining U. S. racial barriers, U. S. diplomats must conduct American foreign policy like someone running in a foot race "with one of our legs in a cast." . . .

Rusk said the United States "is now confronted with one of the gravest issues that we have had since 1865 . . . and this issue deeply affects the conduct of our foreign relations."

ATLANTA JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
Ralph McGill column,
June 9, 1963

A Baptist missionary in Nigeria mailed in three cuttings from papers in that country. . . . One was an editorial from "The Times" of Lagos, perhaps the most influential publication in that country.

At the bottom of this cutting the missionary had written, "As a Christian this one was to me, the most tragic article of all. Why, why, don't our people at home know what they are doing to us . . .?"

From address by then Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, Carl T. Rowan, before the Catholic Interracial Council of Washington, D. C., June 24, 1961, reprinted in INTERRACIAL REVIEW October, 1961

. . . Of the nearly 100 diplomatic missions now accredited to Washington, more than half have representatives of Asian or African background. So incidents of discrimination at airports and restaurants and other public places have become a matter of real concern on the part not only of Secretary of State Rusk but of normally intelligent Americans who are concerned about the kind of world in which their children are going to live.

Letter from Mrs. Betty Hakem in ATLANTA CONSTITUTION "Pulse of the Public" column November 1, 1963

Atlanta—It happened on Oct. 27, when my husband and I along with another Hindu couple from India went to a downtown restaurant to have our lunch. As soon as we went in we heard the most welcoming words from our American hostess, "Sorry, we cannot serve you." . . .

ATLANTA JOURNAL
(From North American Newspaper Alliance dispatch)
July 25, 1963

Paris—Racial tensions in the United States are beginning to produce international repercussions of an unprecedented kind, especially in Western Europe.

As seen from here, the United States for the first time since World War II faces an internal crisis sufficiently serious to deflect its energies from its international responsibilities. . . .

. . . They [Europeans] do not discount the possibilities of the domestic crisis having a sharply debilitating effect on U. S. foreign policy. The comparison increasingly made here is with the Soviet Union's running agricultural crisis and the restrictive influence it undoubtedly has exerted over the years on Russian initiative abroad.

WASHINGTON POST
May 25, 1963

Paris—France's new television program, "Seven Days of the World," opened tonight with a 10-minute sequence on the racial conflict in Birmingham, Alabama, which was a model of expert impartial reporting.

If the South...

. . . Per capita incomes in the South did increase from 47 to 64 percent of the non-South's during 1929-48 and have fluctuated at around 68 percent in more recent years. If there is any ground for discouragement, it lies in the fact that the South's per capita income made relatively little further gain on the rest of the nation during 1948-54 and that more recently the intensification of race conflict has raised a serious threat to still further regional economic progress. . . .

If the South could at last take such a fresh, honest, and hard-headed look at the race problem, the gains which would accrue to the region would extend far beyond matters of race. For race has so shackled the Southern mind that it has been incapable of accepting social responsibility for the general welfare or of organizing common efforts for common benefit in other important directions as well.

William H. Nicholls, Southern Tradition & Regional Progress, Chapel Hill, 1960

75¢ per copy
Quantity discount on request

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 Forsyth Street, N.W.
Atlanta, Georgia

ANTI-DEFAMATION LEAGUE OF B'NAI B'RITH
315 Lexington Avenue
New York, New York

Southern Leaders Impeach Judge Lynch

☆

High Lights from Report of Commission on
The Study of Lynching

☆

PUBLISHED BY
COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
703 Standard Building
ATLANTA, GA.

1. Two of the twenty-one persons lynched in 1930 were certainly innocent, and eleven others possibly so.

2. Less than one-fourth of those lynched since 1890 were accused of assaults upon women, the "usual crime" commonly supposed to be the chief occasion of lynchings.

3. In crimes that incite to mob violence, the culprits are often defective half-wits, whom society, for its own protection, should previously have apprehended and confined. Yet in most Southern communities there is little or no provision for such protection.

4. The claim that lynchings are necessary because courts do not convict was found to be fallacious.

5. In most lynchings the mob leaders might be identified without difficulty, yet because of connivance or fear grand juries rarely indict and courts very rarely convict.

6. Lack of education and low economic status seem to be directly related both to mob violence and to the crimes which provoke it.

7. No community is immune from the danger of lynchings and good citizens everywhere should be on guard against it.

The above are among the significant facts revealed in an exhaustive investigation recently made by the Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching and given to the public in a 500-page volume entitled "The Tragedy of Lynching."

* * *

That the conclusions of this Commission merit careful consideration is evidenced by the character and standing of the men composing it—George Fort Milton, president and editor of the Chattanooga News; Julian Harris, news director of the Atlanta Constitution; Dr. W. J. McGlothlin, late president of Furman University and of the Southern Baptist Convention; Dr. W. P. King, editor Nashville Christian Advocate; Dr. John Hope, president of Atlanta University; Dr. Charles S. Johnson, department of social science, Fisk University; Dr. R. R. Moton, principal of Tuskegee Institute; Dr. Howard W. Odum, of the University of North Carolina; Alex Spence, attorney, of Dallas, Texas; Dr. Benjamin F. Hubert, president of Georgia State College for Negroes; and Dr. Monroe Work, head of research department of Tuskegee Institute. Dr. W. C. Jackson, dean of North Carolina College for Women and former chairman of the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, and Dr. Will W. Alexander, executive director of that Commission, served as ex-officio members.

* * *

When the lynching record, which for years had been steadily declining, rose from ten in 1929 to twenty-one in 1930, the Commission on Interracial Cooperation, an association of a hundred Southern men and women for the promotion of understanding and justice between the races, decided that a thorough-going survey of the whole lynching situation should be made, including complete case studies of all the lynchings of 1930. It was the Commission's hope that thus it might be possible to define more clearly the causes of lynchings and to discover more effective means for their prevention.

In order that the results of this study might command the fullest confidence, the Commission asked eleven well known Southern leaders to sponsor and direct the study and give its findings to the public. These men accepted the responsibility cheerfully, though with a deep sense of its seriousness. Thus was created the Southern Commission on the Study of Lynching.

This Commission immediately formulated plans for thorough case studies of the 1930 lynchings, and also for a careful analysis of the lynching record over a period of several decades. The study was directed and carried out by Dr. Arthur Raper, with the help of other trained investigators. The report just given to the public is the result of more than a year's work on the part of the Commission and its staff.

* * *

In regard to the offenses for which lynchings occurred in 1930, the Commission's statement says: "Two of the victims are known to have been innocent. They were not even accused of crime. One was lynched solely because he had offended political opponents, and another to prevent his appearance as a witness in a serious court case against a white man. In five other cases it was not clear that the mobs got the guilty persons, and in six more there was doubt as to the truth of the charges against the men lynched." In only eight of the twenty-one cases did there seem to be no doubt whatever as to the guilt or identity of the mobs' victims. In some cases the Commission found reason to suspect that the victims had been deliberately "framed" for purposes of concealment or revenge.

The popular opinion that most lynchings are for the punishment of crimes against women was found to be wide of the fact. Of 3,693 persons lynched during the forty-one years ending with 1929 only twenty-three per cent were accused of actual or attempted crimes against women, while 77 per cent were lynched for other offenses. Those who apologize for lynching as a necessary defense of womanhood, the Commission declares, "in reality doubly betray the Southern woman, first in making her danger greater by exaggerating her helplessness, and second by undermining the authority of police and courts, which are her legitimate protectors."

The claim that courts do not convict, often advanced as another excuse for lynching, is equally fallacious, the Commission says, for its investigations show that, in eighteen months ending July 1, 1931, sixty-eight Negroes were executed by law in the Southern states and 470 were given life sentences.

* * *

As a result of careful investigations on the ground, the Commission asserts that in most lynching cases there would be no difficulty in identifying mob leaders and members, if observers had the will and courage to do it. Generally the mob members made little or no effort to conceal their identity; yet officers and others present in their midst usually testified that they recognized none of them. This attitude, the report declares, can be attributed only to "connivance or stupidity." This type of local sympathy or intimidation, the Commission says, was largely responsible for the fact that indictments were returned in only six lynching cases in 1930, and that only four of the 49 men indicted were convicted. The Negro's political impotence was pointed out as an important factor in the indifference of officers toward the resistance and prosecution of mobs.

* * *

The Commission sees a probable close connection between illiteracy and crime, having found that not one of the twenty-one mob victims of 1930 had as much as a high school education, that only one had gone beyond the fifth grade, and that eleven were totally or practically illiterate. This, according to the Commission, suggests the need of better educational facilities to raise the level of public security. Most of those also whom its investigators identified as probable participants in mobs were poorly educated, propertyless, and irresponsible, often unemployed and sometimes with court records. Some, to be sure, were found to be members of the churches, and a very few had some prominence in the community.

It is pointed out that officers from other counties, as well as stockade guards and other petty local officials, in some cases only complicated the situation and at times directly or indirectly abetted the mob. The presence of curious onlookers often had the same effect, the report continues. In some instances boys were conspicuous in the crowds, and sometimes women and children. In three cases the National Guard, though on the scene, were wholly ineffective.

* * *

Eleven of the 1930 lynchings took place in counties which had had none in thirty years. This fact the Commission interprets as indicating that no community is immune from mob violence, and that good citizens everywhere should be constantly on watch for threatening situations. Many of 1930's lynchings, the Commission declares, could easily have been prevented in this way. It is pointed out that, in the decade ending with 1929, four hundred and forty-eight attempts at lynching were frustrated by the prompt action of officers and citizens.

The fact was discovered that lynching, while decreasing rapidly during the last three decades, is becoming more exclusively a Southern practice, with 97 per cent of all the country's lynchings occuring in the South in recent years, as against 82 per cent in earlier decades. It was found that it is also becoming increasingly a racial phenomenon. In number of mob victims since 1889 Georgia, Mississippi, Texas and Louisiana lead with 465, 464, 364, and 349 lynchings respectively. But figured on the basis of Negro population, the percentage of lynchings was greatest in Florida, with Oklahoma, Arkansas, and Texas following in order.

The Commission cites illustrations of what it terms "legal lynchings"—hasty trials and foredoomed convictions under mob pressure so great as to preclude the possibility of deliberate and impartial procedure. In some cases, it was stated, officials actually bargained with mobs and "bought off" the leaders with promises of speedy conviction and execution—promises sometimes carried out to the bitter end, even in the face of reasonable doubt as to the guilt of the accused.

* * *

Against this dark picture the Commission points out certain encouraging high lights. One is the steady decrease in the lynching toll to one-tenth of its former proportions. The tide reached its crest in 1892 with 255 victims, and has steadily receded to an average of seventeen per year for the past six years. Another is the fact that the great religious bodies, the newspapers, and many influential individuals and groups are united in condemnation of the lynching habit and in the effort to suppress it.

Additional copies of this pamphlet may be had postpaid at fifteen cents per dozen, or eighty cents per hundred. An 80-page report, "Lynchings and What They Mean," will be sent on receipt of twenty-five cents, or the full 500 page report for $2.50, plus postage. Order of

COMMISSION ON INTERRACIAL COOPERATION
703 Standard Bldg.,
Atlanta, Ga.

Peace Imps

I AM AFRAID

BY

ILL.·.RAYMOND C. ELLIS 33°, ACTIVE PAST GRAND MASTER, NEW YORK
11 PARK PLACE NEW YORK 7, N.Y.

•

(Appeared in the January 1963, issue of the NEW AGE, the official publication of the SUPREME COUNCIL 33°, A.·.A.·.S.·.R.·. Southern Jurisdiction, U.S.A.)

If we were to see this country from a great height, about twenty-five years before the opening of the American Revolution, we would find a thin line of settlements running along the Atlantic seaboard beginning about at Augusta, Me., where Fort Weston stood, all the way down the coast and into Georgia. About 3,000,000 people lived in these colonies. There were only four cities—Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Charleston. Charleston was the center of literature, of music, and of culture. New York City did not extend beyond City Hall and had a population at the time of the American Revolution of about 25,000. The people were small tradesmen, farmers and fishermen. They lived in widely distributed towns and villages with their trim and well built houses. They had come to these shores for quite definite reasons and have given us a heritage of three fundamental principles upon which to base our lives.

First, these people believed in God and served God. All along the coast are the beautiful architectural gems dedicated to God, that were built with the money, the faith, the love, and the heart's blood of people who realized they could not exist without an awareness of a Heavenly Father who was a very present help in time of trouble and who would never leave them nor forsake them.

Second, they believed in work. There was no social security or unemployment insurance when the Pilgrims landed in Plymouth. They had to work to live, and they toiled through the long hours of the day from dawn until dark.

Third, they believed in and loved liberty. As one advanced through the settlements along the seacoast and beyond tidewater, there one would find in the long, narrow, trough-like valleys of the Alleghanies, running from north to south, a disheveled fringe of settlements. The people were mainly of Scotch-Irish origin, who had passed through the towns of the tidewater settlements and carved out homes in a virgin wilderness.

When a settler entered one of these narrow valleys he first felled the great trees of the virgin forest, built his low-browed log hut, and sowed his grain among the stumps of the fallen monarchs. There, with his family, usually miles from his nearest neighbor, he lived a life of appalling loneliness. He had no one to depend on but himself. He raised his own food, hunted his own meat, made his own clothes, and worked from dawn to dark just to keep himself and family alive. On all sides rose the dark and mysterious forest like a palisade. It was an area of perpetual twilight, danger and mystery. No one knew how far it extended. When he left the sunlight of his clearing he entered a sort of noon day gloaming. The sunlight seldom penetrated through the foliage of the great trees, the branches of which interlaced and shrouded the ground in a grey half light. There was little undergrowth in the virgin forest and a man would often ride horseback at break-neck speed among and between trees six and eight feet in diameter. Looking down from above, the forest stretched out, league upon endless league to the westward, nobody knew how far. It was a leafy maze rolling over hill and valley in billows of interminable green. In glimpses only was this wild primeval world revealed, with its dark green mountains flecked with morning mist and the more distant summits pencilled against the horizon in dreamy blue.

On every side lurked danger in its most horrible form. No one knew when the uncertain peace with the Indian tribes would be broken. Without the slightest warning the raids would start, cabins go up in flames, women and children butchered without discrimination or carried away in captivity. It is only by reading the detail of blood as set down in the untutored words of those who saw and felt it can we have even a faint understanding of the terror which haunted their lives—the mortal fear of women and children, waking and sleeping, in the solitude and loneliness of their wilderness homes. Theodore Roosevelt in his "Winning of the West" stated that it was impossible for anyone to live any length of time on the frontier without having lost close relations in the never-ending Indian Wars.

After the defeat of Braddock outside of where Pittsburgh now stands the frontier was aflame. The sufferings of the people fleeing to the forts at Bedford and Carlyle is indescribable. Washington saw it and was a part of it. He was so overcome that he wrote in a letter to his brother Lawrence the following words: "The supplicating tears of the women and moving petitions of the men melt me into such deadly sorrow that I solemnly declare, if I know my own mind, I could offer myself a willing sacrifice to the butchering enemy, provided that would contribute to the people's ease."

Why, we ask, would any people undergo such suffering and hardships. The answer is because of a consuming passion for liberty. They loved it and were willing to pay its price in blood and toil and sweat and tears. It should be remembered that they were but a generation or two away from the stake, the rack and the torture chamber. They could understand what liberty meant and were willing to pay its price—and they knew that part of that price was eternal vigilance.

We should never forget that in their veins ran the blood of men who wrung the Magna Carta from Prince John at Runnymede. In their veins ran the blood of men who fought with Oliver Cromwell in England for civil liberty. In their veins ran the blood of men who stood behind John Knox in Scotland. In their veins ran the blood of men who rallied behind Martin Luther when he nailed his ninety-five theses to the door of the church at Wittenberg. In their veins ran the blood of men who had fled to this country from France at the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. In their veins ran the blood of men who under William of Orange and Maurice threw off the Spanish yoke in Holland.

With such a background, they knew the value as well as the price that people must pay for liberty. As these people gradually moved westward, they marked their love of liberty in the very names of the towns and villages they founded—Liberty, Freedom, Independence, Freedom Crossing, Liberty Corners. When we look back across the years and realize what these people felt and did, there is no American who cannot say with a deep sense of pride, "Yea, I have a goodly heritage."

Today the world is in a state of change and flux. It is quite evident that civilization is balanced on the thin knife-edge of possible destruction. We, too, live in perilous times and our nation and the world is in grave danger. Of that, there can be no question. But, grave as the dangers may be that threaten us from without, they are minor compared to those that threaten us from within:—Apathy! Indifference! Complacency! These are the great American crimes. I do not underestimate the dangers from without, but I am convinced that no power from without can beat us. But we can beat ourselves.

I am much more afraid of the Americans than I am of the Russians.

I am afraid of Americans who have become victims of apathy, indifference and complacency.

I am afraid of Americans who have become indifferent to the decay of national ideals—who have become so accustomed to every form of political chicanery, graft and corruption that these are accepted with little protest as a normal part of our life.

I am afraid of Americans who are apathetic to the tender loving care with which, so it seems, the red, the pink, the traitor and other subversive elements are treated by our courts, from the Supreme Court down.

I am afraid of Americans who have become so hardened to all types of crime, including murder, that the chief offense is no longer the criminal act itself but in having been found out.

I am afraid of Americans who are indifferent to the use of the ballot—who don't vote on Election Day on the theory that one vote more or less won't count. Yet by one vote Edward Everett was elected Governor of Massachusetts. By the late returns from a few districts in Coney Island, New York State went Democratic and Grover Cleveland became President of the United States. In this room today there are many who can recall the election eve when Charles Evans Hughes went to bed thinking—with everyone else—that he had been elected President of the United States. Then, in the small hours of the morning, the late returns rolled in from Humboldt County in northern California. California went Democratic and Woodrow Wilson was President of the United States.

I am afraid of Americans, who ought and who do know better, who give lip service to the fight against inflation and then, for financial profit, do all they can to promote it.

I am afraid of Americans, who also know better, who succumb to the siren call of policies of fiscal idiocy and sell the economic future of their children down the river.

I am afraid of Americans who are unconcerned that better than four out of every ten boys called up for military service are unfit mentally, morally or physically to serve in the Armed Forces of the United States.

I am afraid of Americans who put first things last and last things first, who underpay their ministers and teachers, who, if we were to have a recession, would first economize by cutting their contributions to churches, hospitals and schools, and later economize by reducing their liquor and luxury bills.

I am afraid of Americans who have given way to the corrosive force of luxury, and who have put their trust in material things. No one on this earth owns anything. We do not own our house, our bank account, or the stocks and bonds registered in our name. We are only stewards of the things we seem to possess. We cannot take them with us.

No nation in history has survived if it has turned its back on the moral and spiritual values responsible for whatever of greatness to which it may have attained. We would do well to remember this basic historical fact, as well as that the price of liberty is eternal vigilance, and that we will be the "land of the free" only as long as we are the "home of the brave."

"My lines have fallen in pleasant places." No people ever had their lines fall in more pleasant places. No people ever had a more goodly heritage than the American people. We would do well to return to the ancient landmarks of our heritage that are important, the things that are permanent and the things that are real, before it is too late. Time is short and time is always running out. The reverence of God, the dignity of work, and the priceless heritage of freedom.

No people need be concerned if God is their King; if work is a part of the warp and woof of their personalities and characters; if deep down within the hearts of all there is a consuming passion for liberty, freedom of thought, and independence—and a willingness to pay the price therefor.

This is our heritage, founded upon a rock which no storm or wind can shake, and which no American should ever forget.

COLORADO STATE UNIVERSITY RESEARCH FOUNDATION
Colorado State University
Fort Collins, Colorado

Peace Groups

13 February 1963

Dear Friends:

In August 1962, Colorado State University and the Peace Research Institute co-sponsored a week long Student Peace Research Workshop with junior and senior undergraduates, graduate students, and young faculty members present. The first two days of the Workshop were devoted to an attempt to clarify the basic issues involved in peace research with a faculty of recognized scholars -- who were themselves already concerned with peace research -- making the presentations. This included a summary of on-going peace research in the United States and Canada and a consideration of the domestic and international issues which seemed most pressing and amenable to research. By the end of the second day the students had offered some twenty different areas of potential research, which after culling and selection were reduced to six. On the basis of their own interests and abilities the students chose one of these areas and work groups were formed, the goal of the group being the clarification and definition of a clearly defined outline for a research project. From this point the work groups were responsible for their own schedules, with faculty members circulating among the various groups on the basis of need or request. However, the real work of conceiving, defining, planning, and preparing the research outline was left to the work group. The groups were as follows:

Applicability of Socio-Psychological Concepts to International Relations,
Socio-Political Factors in the Transition to a Disarmed Economy,
Effect of Other Political Events on Disarmament Negotiations,
Live Crisis Analysis,
Measurement of Differential Effects of Attitude Change Techniques, Ideology of the Peace Movement.

The final sessions of the week were devoted to the presentation and evaluation of the research outlines developed by these six work groups.

Since this Workshop there have been expressions of interest from several quarters, but there has been no way to gage and evaluate exactly the degree and direction of this interest. The attached questionnaire is an attempt to gain some measure of the interest and involvement in peace activities and peace research on the part of both students and faculty members throughout the nation. Peace research we define as that research, fundamental or applied, in the social sciences, humanities, arts, biological and physical sciences which is directed toward and/or has relevance either directly or indirectly to the problems of preventing violent international conflict and creating the conditions for a stable world wherein undesirable conflict is resolved by means other than war.

Your assistance in completing the attached questionnaire will be most helpful in our considerations for future action. Please try to return the completed questionnaire to the address above not later than [redacted] APR 1 1963

Thanking you for your assistance in this matter, I am

Sincerely yours,

Maurice L. Albertson

Maurice L. Albertson
Director, Research Foundation
and
Chairman, Ad Hoc Committee for Rocky Mountain-Great Plains
Peace Research Conference

Your Name _____ Mailing Address _____

City and State _____

College or University _____

Major or Department _____ Class or Position _____

1. What are you personally now doing in the area of peace research or peace activity?

2. What activities are faculty members, student groups, or the institution itself engaged in as peace research or peace activity?
   Current activity:

   Recent past: (within past 2 years)

3. Tentatively assuming that a Student Peace Research Workshop were to be held for one week during late summer 1963 (with junior and senior undergraduates, graduate students, and young faculty members) would you personally be interested in participating?

   Are other students you know interested in such a workshop? Who?

4. What is the basis of your interest in such a workshop?

5. What suggestions do you have for program content, method, agenda, mechanics, for such a peace research workshop?

6. What do you propose for advance reading and preparation prior to participation in such a workshop?

This questionnaire is intended to be an expression of the degree of interest and activity, not a commitment or application form. It should be completed and returned to the address below, not later than 1 April.

Dr. Maurice L. Albertson, Director
Research Foundation
Colorado State University
Fort Collins, Colorado

*If more space is needed, use reverse side of this sheet.

Peace Corps

United Nations
The Modern
Trojan Horse

The United Nations has proved incapable of either promoting or keeping the peace. Since it has broken with the original charter and started interfering in the internal affairs of its members and many of the small and weaker states, it has become a positive menace.

The United Nations now acts on a double standard, one for the weak, on whom it can work its will with mercenary troops, and a very different one for the strong, before whom it bows in deep humility.

Hon. Katherine St. George

Unless the U.N. is completely reorganized without the Communist nations in it, we should get out of it.

Herbert Hoover

The U.N. has become a trap. Let's go it alone.

the late Robert Taft

Lord Beaverbrook, noted British publisher, said:

Here in New York City, you Americans have the biggest fifth column in the world—the United Nations.

The United Nations will survive in history as the chief monument to western blindness to Soviet political warfare.

In the United Nations we see at work the Soviet facility for taking over an organisation from within.

Mme. Suzanne Labin
Intelligence Digest
February 1963

POPULATION OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS *

AFRICA

EUROPE

work the Soviet facility for taking over an organisation from within.

Mme. Suzanne Labin
Intelligence Digest
February 1963

POPULATION OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS *

AFRICA

Algeria	10,197,000
Burundi	2,500,000
Cameroon	4,000,000
Chad	2,581,000
Central African Republic	1,193,000
Congo (Brazzaville)	794,577
Congo (Leopoldville)	13,821,000
Dahomey	2,003,000
Ethiopia	21,800,000
Gabon	420,709
Ghana	4,911.000
Guinea	2,726,000
Ivory Coast	3,200,000
Liberia	1,250,000
Libya	1,153,000
Malagasy Republic	5,486,713
Mali	4,307,000
Mauritania	727,000
Morocco	11,598,000
Niger	2,803,000
Nigeria	34,296,000
Ruanda	26,338
Senegal	2,597,000
Sierra Leone	2,260,000
Somali Republic	1,900,000
So. Africa	14,929,000
Sudan	11,615,000
Tanganyika	128,742
Togo	1,642,000
Tunisia	3,965,000
Uganda	8,500
Upper Volta	4,004,000

NORTH AMERICA

Canada	17,814,000
United States	187,000,000
Mexico	34,625,000

AUSTRALIA	10,281,000
NEW ZEALAND	2,327,000

EUROPE

Albania	1,556,000
Austria	7,049,000
Belgium	9,104,000
Bulgaria	7,798,000
Byelorussian S.S.R.-3.1% of U.S.S.R. population
Czechoslavakia	13,649,000
Denmark	4,547,000
Finland	4,457,000
France	45,355,000
Greece	8,258,000
Hungary	10,002,000
Ireland	2,834,000
Italy	49,052,000
Luxembourg	324,000
Netherlands	11,480,000
Norway	3,583,000
Poland	29,480,000
Portugal	9,124,000
Rumania	18,256,000
Spain	30,128,000
Sweden	7,471,000
Ukrainian S.S.R.	41,893,000
United Kingdom	52,675,000
Yugoslavia	18,655,000

CENTRAL AMERICA & WEST INDIES

Costa Rica	1,173,000
Cuba	6,743,000
Dominican Republic	2,994,000
El Salvador	2,613,000
Guatemala	3,759,000
Haiti	3,505,000
Honduras	1,950,000
Jamaica	125,526
Nicaragua	1,450,000
Panama	1,053,000
Trinidad-Tobago	5,600,000

= Captive Nation

ASIA

Afghanistan	13,000,000
Burma	20,662,000
Cambodia	4,845,000
Ceylon	9,612,000
China (Nationalist)	10,611,000
Cyprus	563,000
India	408,050,000
Indonesia	92,600,000
Iran	20,633,000
Iraq	6,952,000
Israel	2,114,000
Japan	93,600,000
Jordan	1,636,000
Laos	1,760,000
Lebanon	1,250,000
Malaya	6,698,000
Nepal	9,044,000
Outer Mongolia	909,600
Pakistan	86,823,000
Philippines	27,473,000
Saudi Arabia	6,036,000
Syria	4,539,000
Thailand	22,718,000
Turkey	27,802,000
U.S.S.R.	218,000,000
United Arab Republic	29,400,000
Yemen	4,500,000

SOUTH AMERICA

Argentina	20,956,000
Bolivia	3,462,000
Brazil	65,743,000
Chili	7,627,000
Colombia	14,132,000
Ecuador	4,298,000
Paraguay	1,760,000
Peru	10,827,000
Uruguay	2,800,000
Venezuela	6,709,000

ICELAND	172,000

* Regardless of population, each of the above nations has one vote. The United States vote represents 187,000,000 people. The Uganda vote represents 8,500 people. Of the 110 member states of the General Assembly, 50% have a combined population of less than the population of the United States. Russia controls 10 votes.

The United States finances over a third of the U. N. costs. In addition, our Foreign Aid program to some 70 countries around the world provides them with money to pay their dues. Thus, directly or indirectly, the United States is paying practically the entire cost of the United Nations.

RUSSIAN ARMS BANNER

UNITED NATIONS FLAG

The Strange Origin Of The UN Flag

The striking similarity between the UN flag and the Soviet Arms Banner reflects the constant pattern of Soviet (Communist) influence which has characterized this international organization since its founding days. The Soviet Arms Banner, highest emblem in Communist heraldry, may be found on the cover of the Constitution of the U.S.S.R. Its strong resemblance to the UN flag adds confirmation to the convictions of many critics who regard the UN as a device to capture the United States by destruction of our Constitution, our economic and political life, and to subject our citizens to domination by the Masters of the Kremlin through centralized World Government.

. . . . . .

The UN flag to many people, resembles the pattern of a spider web, both in effect and in intent.

. . . . . .

It was World War II which gave the Soviet plan its impetus. During this period a massive infiltration of sensitive agencies of the Government took place. Pro-Communists and personnel of subversive and revolutionary tendencies were able to establish themselves in strategic 'slots'.. . . . . to shift the center of gravity in the process of United States foreign policy from a national to an international orientation via the supranational United Nations Organization

. . . . . .

The documentation is a long and dreary record of a large group who "used each other's names for reference on applications for Federal employment. They hired each other. They promoted each other. They raised each other's salaries. They transferred each other from bureau to bureau, from department to department, from congressional committee to congressional committee. They assigned each other to international missions. They vouched for each other's loyalty and protected each other when exposure threatened.

. . . . . .

"The UN has attracted Communist and pro-Communist Americans. It has also attracted well-meaning but naive persons whose concern for 'humanitarian' things has diverted them from reality...."

. . . . . .

This interlocking web of internationalism was not stopped by the temporary imprisonment of Alger Hiss or Tony Marzani. Agencies of more responsible appearance, such as the National Education Association and its subservient arm, the P-TA, has continuously propagandized for the United Nations. Every P-TA chapter is supposed to have an active UN Chairman and Committee.

Is the UN flag, with its "web of subversion" superimposed on the nations of the world, symbolic of the paralysis with which we have been infected?--a paralysis which permits the omission in school textbooks of information detrimental to the United Nations and to World Government? Shall we continue to allow our children, the potential leaders of our country a few years hence, to be led blindfold into renouncing allegiance to our beloved America in favor of a Communist-dominated world government?

This propagandizing of our nation's youth in favor of internationalism and to the detriment of patriotism and love of country, appears to be effectively paralyzing the American will to resist.

P. O. Box 231, Fullerton, California.
Educational News Service
September, 1968

THE UNI

EXCERPTS FROM A CONGRESSIONAL REPRI
BY CONGRESSMA

"THE U. N. IS ATHEISTIC."

Our Declaration of Independence concludes with these words:

> And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of divine providence, we mutually pledge to each other our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor.

This is a full and complete acknowledgment of divine guidance. Nowhere in the United Nations Charter or any of its subsidiaries do you find any reference to a Supreme Being. The Bible says:

> Unless the Lord build an house, they labor in vain who build it.

There is, indeed, no evidence of the Lord's work in the United Nations.

"U. N. PERSONNEL"

Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look at the present management of the United Nations. Russia had been demanding a troika to supplant the U.N. Secretariat after the death of Hammarskjold. The failure of Russia to secure this troika was hailed as a great victory for the West, but was it? U Thant of Burma, a self-styled Marxist, was chosen and he agreed to invite a limited number of U.N. under secretaries "to act as my principal advisers on important questions." So far he has indicated two: Georgy P. Arkadov, a Communist from the Soviet Union, and Ralph Bunche of the United States. This was a Communist victory in that Russia now has its troika: one an avowed Marxist, the second a dedicated Communist, and the third with a pro-Communist bias. A résumé of Dr. Bunche's record, prepared by Archibald B. Roosevelt, son of Theodore Roosevelt, includes this paragraph:

> Dr. Bunche was part of the editorial apparatus of an openly Communist magazine, Science and Society, for over 4 years. He contributed to this publication and added his name and prestige as a professor of Howard University even after the Communists in their publication, The Communist, openly stated that Science and Society magazine had as its function "to help Marxward moving students and intellectuals to come

. . . . . to shift the center of gravity in the process of United States foreign policy from a national to an international orientation via the supranational United Nations Organization

. . . . . .

The documentation is a long and dreary record of a large group who "used each other's names for reference on applications for Federal employment. They hired each other. They promoted each other. They raised each other's salaries. They transferred each other from bureau to bureau, from department to department, from congressional we continue to allow our children, the potential leaders of our country a few years hence, to be led blindfold into renouncing allegiance to our beloved America in favor of a Communist-dominated world government?

This propagandizing of our nation's youth in favor of internationalism and to the detriment of patriotism and love of country, appears to be effectively paralyzing the American will to resist.

P. O. Box 231, Fullerton, California.
Educational News Service
September, 1958

third with a pro-Communist bias. A résumé of Dr. Bunche's record, prepared by Archibald B. Roosevelt, son of Theodore Roosevelt, includes this paragraph:

Dr. Bunche was part of the editorial apparatus of an openly Communist magazine, Science and Society, for over 4 years. He contributed to this publication and added his name and prestige as a professor of Howard University even after the Communists in their publication, The Communist, openly stated that Science and Society magazine had as its function "to help Marxward moving students and intellectuals to come passed

Russia rather tray th
the ha get a dia fo
guese

Furt
ask is yent from agains

A POWER SHIFT FROM THE UNITED STATES TO THE UNITED NATIONS THROUGH DISARMAMENT

(Hon. James B. Utt, Cong.Record April 11, 1962.)

. . . . . the State Department issued its publication 7277, entitled "Freedom From War, the U.S. Program for General and Complete Disarmament in a Peaceful World." This little 19-page booklet of disaster, defeat, and surrender, proposes:

The elimination from national arsenals of all armaments, including all weapons of mass destruction and the means for their delivery, other than those required for a United Nations peace force and for maintaining internal order.

As states relinquish their arms, the United Nations shall be progressively strengthened.

Stage I: An International Disarmament Organization (IDO) shall be established within the framework of the United Nations * * * Strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles in specified categories and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be reduced to agreed levels * * * The reduction shall be accomplished * * * by transfers to depots supervised by the IDO.

Production of agreed categories of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be discontinued or limited.

Testing of agreed categories of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be limited or halted.

Stage II: Further reductions in the stocks of strategic nuclear weapons delivery vehicles and agreed types of weapons designed to counter such vehicles shall be carried out.

During stage II, states shall develop further the peacekeeping processes of the United Nations, to the end that the United Nations can effectively in stage III deter or suppress any threat or use of force in violation of the purposes and principles of the United Nations * * * The U.N. Peace Force shall be established and progressively strengthened.

Stage III: In stage III, progressive controlled disarmament * * * would proceed to a point where no state would have the military power to challenge the progressively strengthened U.N. Peace Force.

States would retain only those forces, non-nuclear armaments, and establishments required for the purpose of maintaining internal order; they would also support and provide agreed manpower for a U.N. Peace Force.

The U.N. Peace Force, equipped with agreed types and quantities of armaments, would be fully functioning.

The manufacture of armaments would be prohibited except for those of agreed types and quantities to be used by the U.N. Peace Force and those required to maintain internal order.

The U.N. Question

CONGRESSIONAL RECORD

Monday, January 15, 1962

Mrs. ST. GEORGE. Mr. Speaker, the following editorial appeared in the Wall Street Journal of January 11. This editorial expresses the thoughts and anxieties of many of our people and many of our constituents concerning the future usefulness of the United Nations.

The editorial follows:

THE U.N. QUESTION

It's just about impossible these days to avoid running into "the U.N. question." In conversations and in periodicals of all political hues the same questions are being raised: Is the United Nations worth keeping? More particularly, can the United States continue to support the U.N. as an instrument of policy?

This widespread concern, although belated, is healthy. For the questions are the right ones, and they are important ones for the United States. . . . . .

Now the United States obviously doesn't have to apologize to anyone for its own anticolonial origins and traditions. But the thinking in the U.N.'s dominant factions on this issue is upside down. Russia, the only significant colonial power today, is not regarded by the Afro-Asians as a colonial power. As for the rest, anything goes in the name of anticolonialism. And this includes the use of force by the U.N. itself in the name of anticolonialism.

That is the case of the Congo, in which the United States is so deeply involved through the U.N. The U.N. force was used not as a buffer, not to prevent civil war and keep peace, but as an active antagonist to drive out the presumed vestiges of colonialism. In the expert opinion of Harvard Professor of Government Stanley Hoffmann, writing in the New Republic, this was a reversal of the peaceful policies the late Dag Hammarskjold tried to apply.

Unquestionably it is a precedent, and an awesome one for the United States to contemplate. If the United States goes along with this anticolonialism theory, as it has in the Congo, into what more morasses may not the United States be dragged? As Mr. Hoffmann puts it, "The U.N. is simply not equipped to cope with a world in which too many hunting grounds are left open; another aggression justified by anticolonialism might, this time, provoke extensive bloodshed."

And that, we think, suggests the nub of the U.N. question. The United States is thoroughly enmeshed in an institution it cannot control and which is a potential danger both to peace and to American interests. Professor Hoffmann states it even more strongly: "There is a serious risk involved in entrusting the pursuit of important national interests to a mechanism the next twists and turns of which one cannot predict."

At least this much ought to be clear: The United States had best be extremely wary of the U.N. And the Congress and the people had best face the questions honestly, and at last without sentimentality. Our security may depend on realistic answers.

WILL LACK OF FUNDS KILL OFF THE U.N.?

Richard N. Gardner, a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State, said on March 12 that 48 U. N. members have paid nothing on their bills for the Congo operation, 25 have ignored assessments for the Middle East. Payments in arrears total more than 121 million dollars. The U. S. has been paying 48 per cent of the U. N.'s Congo and Middle East expenses.

Major debtors include the Soviet Union, which owes the U. N. nearly 50 million dollars, other Communist nations which owe 20 million, and France, 14 million.

U. S. NEWS & WORLD REPORT, March 25, 1963

The Tablet

Anti-Religious

The UN has repeatedly sanctioned Red aggression and religious persecution in its crudest forms. It condoned Stalin's seizure of Catholic Lithuania and Czechoslovakia, together with Latvia and Estonia. The UN never censored Tito's persecution of Cardinal Stepinac or Hungary's persecution of Cardinal Mindszenty. The UN welcomed Chinese Communist representatives at the same time that Red China was liquidating Catholic and Protestant missionaries and killing American boys in Korea.

The UN has persistently excluded God from its activities and undertakings. Although from the very beginning the UN could afford plenty of space and money for one of the largest bars in the world with tax-free liquor (Scotch at $2 per bottle), it could find no space for a prayer-room until the Fall of 1951. Unlike every session of Congress and all American legislative bodies, no UN Security Council or General Assembly is permitted to begin with a prayer. Aug. 23, 1953

SPIES

J. Edgar Hoover, Director of Federal Bureau of Investigation confirmed the charge frequently that the United Nations provide protective "front" for Soviet s to operate freely in the United under the cloak of "diplomatic In May, 1960, the Senate Intern curity Sub-committee issued a r prepared by J. Edgar Hoover ent "Expose of Soviet Espionage".

"Attention is called to the f that many of the incidents and previously cited involved Sovie ployes of the United Nations. are guests of the United States are supposedly dedicated in the of international peace. But, t are, in fact, carefully selecte envoys of the international Com conspiracy, trained in trickery deceit and dedicated to the con of fully exploiting the freedom the countries they seek to dest It is too much to expect that t would not subvert the United Na

(Excerpts from The Independent American Tax Fax No. 26.)

MORE AND MORE T

Seven members of the 21-membe sliding scale assessment to eas veloped nations. AS PROJECTS G MEMBERS OF THE U. N. WOULD PICK AND THE POORER MEMBERS WOULD GE

NARCOTICS

Harry J. Anslinger, the dedicated U. S. Narcotics Commissioner who's sitting in N. Y. this week as a member of the UN's International Narcotics Conference, told me he has long been disturbed by the knowledge that large amounts of junk are smuggled "legally" into the U. S. in the diplomatic pouches of some UN personnel (especially from behind the Curtain) as well as by certain envoys to Washington. Nothing can be done about it, even if the money remains behind for subversive purposes

★ Los Angeles Herald & Express Feb. 23, 1961 Lee Mort

THE UNITED NATIONS' RECORD

NAL REPRINT ENTITLED "NONE IS SO BLIND AS HE WHO WILL NOT SEE," ONGRESSMAN JAMES B. UTT, JAN. 15, 1963.

closer to Marxism-Leninism; to bring Communist thought into academic circles."

In a Senate probe by the Internal Security Subcommittee it was brought out that Dr. Bunche had repeatedly pressured persons in charge of U.N. employment to hire a notorious Communist agent, in spite of the fact that here was a derogatory report against the individual by a security agency of the Government.

It is my considered opinion that Dr. Bunche must be considered a security risk for our country in any position which he may hold.

This "troika" arrangement, engineered by the Communists, is frightening and devastating when you consider the United States of America has no foreign policy of its own except the United Nations.

Alger Hiss recommended the first 500 employees for the United Nations.

"U. N. PROMISES VS. THE RECORD"

We were sold the U.N. on a promise of peace, but we failed to realize that this peace was to be on Communist terms; in fact, it was to be a total victory for the international Communist conspiracy. Our faith in this hope was so firm that we were lulled into a state of false security while the Communist world gobbled up 13 or 14 countries. bringing 800 million people under their domination. Russia has used the veto power nearly a hundred times. The United Nations has been completely unable to bring any degree of peace, and Russia itself has created 13 or 14 military conflicts between the East and the West.

The United Nations has not as yet passed a resolution of censorship against Russia for its Hungarian blood bath but rather stood idly by and helped to betray the Hungarian freedom fighters into the hands of Russia. It could not even get a censorship resolution against India for its military invasion of Portuguese enclaves.

Further, Mr. Speaker, what may I ask is the United Nations doing to prevent President Sukarno, of Indonesia, from carrying out his military attack against the island possession of Holland which lie more than a thousand miles away from Indonesia?

The power, the honor, and the prestige of America have fallen from their high point in 1945 to an absolute zero today.

The action in Katanga is nothing short of lunacy. Not a voice was raised in the United Nations when Syria withdrew from the United Arab Republic, but that same organization sent troops into the Congo to prevent self-determination of a civilized and Christian province which did not want to be a part of a Communist-controlled Congo.

Our defeat in the abortive Cuban invasion can be laid on the doorstep of the United Nations, as the United Nations treaty prohibits us from engaging in any military operations without the consent of the United Nations Security Council in which Russia holds the veto power.

THE MILITARY

Now let us look at the record. According to Trygve Lie, longtime Secretary General of the United Nations, he stated flatly that there was a secret agreement between Alger Hiss and Molotov to the effect that the head of the United Nations military staff should always be a Communist. That agreement has never been broken, and we have had a succession of Communists filling that post, the present one being Mr. Arkadov. As a first consequence of this treasonous agreement, this country lost its first military engagement in Korea at a cost to this country of more than $20 billion and 145,000 American casualties, to say nothing of the honor and prestige of this Nation.

This was the first war in which we engaged, not as the United States military force, but as a United Nations force, although we contributed 90 percent of the men and the money. How convenient this was to the Communists to have one of their own men as head of the United Nations military staff, who reviewed all orders going from the Pentagon to General MacArthur and gave them to our enemy before General MacArthur received them.

UNITED NATIONS CHARTER	vs.	UNITED STATES CONSTITUTION
1. Provides for vast expansion of government power.		1. Provides for limitation of powers of government.
2. Centralization of power.		2. Provides for separation of powers.
3. UN officials appointed.		3. Provides for elected officials.
4. Omits mention of property rights.		4. Protects property rights.
5. Omits mention of trial by jury.		5. Protects right of trial by jury.
6. Admits known enemies into our councils.		6. Provides for our common defense.
7. Was written in part by Alger Hiss, Harry Dexter White and Vyacheslav Molotov.		7. Was written by American patriots.

Claims by War Victims Present A New Congo Problem for U.N.

When the United Nations eventually starts to break camp after its costly stay in the Congo, one of the last units to leave will be a small group known simply as the "Claims Office." As the military operation subsides, activity in the Claims Office is quickening to a degree that officials find alarming.

Only in the past few weeks has the scope of the problem been recognized at United Nations headquarters. Officials were expecting a few hundred claims against the organization, but that has proved to be wishful thinking.

"The number of claims is probably close to 2,000 now," C. A. Stavropoulos, the United Nations legal counsel in New York, said recently. "We are still engaged in sorting out the claims received. But when the Leopoldville office gave me their last tally they still had 800 claims unopened."

This dispatch appears in The National Observer by special arrangement with the Daily Telegraph of London.

The information from Leopoldville created a minor panic. Suddenly, the Congo had produced another knotty problem and its political, legal, and financial ramifications were as yet unknown. It will be a month or two before even the dimensions of the problem are known. Settling

For the claimants it is a strange and possibly frustrating exercise in litigation, a curiously one-way affair. The United Nations, of course, cannot be sued in the normal way. It enjoys immunity in national courts and the individual is denied recourse to the World Court, where only states may take cases.

But the World Court has already ruled that the United Nations is, in the legal sense, "an international person." In a decision in 1949 the Court declared: "It (the United Nations) is a subject of international law and capable of possessing international rights and duties and . . . it has the capacity to maintain its rights by bringing international claims."

An Accident of War?

In addition, the legal aspects are more complicated. Is the United Nations, for example, answerable in the case of the two Belgian women killed by Indian troops when they tried to return to their homes in Jadotville? The United Nations argument is that the car in which they were traveling failed to stop after being ordered to do so. Was it an accident of war or unwarranted violence?

Mr. Stavropoulos has sent extra lawyers and investigators to the Congo to tackle the task of studying the claims. They are already at work examining damaged property in Elisabethville and other Katangese towns. In assessing the damage they also have to determine the precise circumstances.

passed a resolution of censorship against Russia for its Hungarian blood bath but rather stood idly by and helped to betray the Hungarian freedom fighters into the hands of Russia. It could not even get a censorship resolution against India for its military invasion of Portuguese enclaves.

Further, Mr. Speaker, what may I ask is the United Nations doing to prevent President Sukarno, of Indonesia, from carrying out his military attack against the island possession of Holland

This was the first war in which we engaged, not as the United States military force, but as a United Nations force, although we contributed 90 percent of the men and the money. How convenient this was to the Communists to have one of their own men as head of the United Nations military staff, who reviewed all orders going from the Pentagon to General MacArthur and gave them to our enemy before General MacArthur received them.

York, said recently. "We are still engaged in sorting out the claims received. But when the Leopoldville office gave me their last tally they still had 800 claims unopened."

The information from Leopoldville created a minor panic. Suddenly, the Congo had produced another knotty problem and its political, legal, and financial ramifications were as yet unknown. It will be a month or two before even the dimensions of the problem are known. Settling may take years.

Three Types of Claims

Most, but not all, of the claims have been lodged by residents of Katanga province, chiefly Belgian but some by British, Italian, or Greek nationals. They fall into three categories; Death and personal injury; property damage; or breach of contract involving supplies or services.

in Jadotville? The United Nations argument is that the car in which they were traveling failed to stop after being ordered to do so. Was it an accident of war or unwarranted violence?

Mr. Stavropoulos has sent extra lawyers and investigators to the Congo to tackle the task of studying the claims. They are already at work examining damaged property in Elisabethville and other Katangese towns. In assessing the damage they also have to determine the precise circumstances.

In a row of houses otherwise undamaged, one may have been shattered by mortar or machine-gun fire. The obvious explanation is that it housed a sniper. The next step is to discover if the owner and the sniper were the same person.

* * * * two pertinent questions unanswered: Are the claimants to be given any rights of appeal? How will the United Nations raise the money to pay the "reparations" bill?

THE NATIONAL OBSERVER 3/18/63

SPIES IN THE UNITED NATIONS

ector of the stigation, has requently made
s provides a Soviet spies
e United States
plomatic status"
e Internal Se-
ssued a report over entitled age".
to the fact
nts and causes
ed Soviet em-tions. They d States and
d in the cause
But, they selected onal Communist trickery and the concept freedoms of to destroy.
t that they nited Nations."
pendent
6.)

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd of Connecticut reacted strongly in a Senate speech to the repeated instances of Soviet espionage conducted through its U.N. representatives. On the record, 18 Soviet U. N. representatives and U.N. employes have been discovered spying against the United States—four in one recent month. Dodd is convinced that for every Soviet national caught in a demonstrable act of espionage there are two or three who are thus far undetected. He concludes that every Soviet U. N. representative or employe must be considered a potential spy.

To add indignity to injury, U. N. Secretary General U. Thant has asked the General Assembly for funds to maintain a school (already started by him in Moscow) for training 22 Russians each year for jobs at U. N. headquarters. The sum involved for two years is $201,200, of which the United States would pay $64,424, while the Soviet Union would pay only $35,139.
(Reference: "Exclusive" by Fulton Lewis, Jr.)

WHY STAY IN THE U. N. ?

IN 17 YEARS THE UNITED NATIONS HAS FAILED IN ITS HIGH OBJECTIVE. It has promoted worldwide Communist expansion—there have been scattered wars and constant threats of annihilation—alien agents have had diplomatic immunity while conducting espionage—we are being forced into world government in accordance with Communist plans—we are being forced to change customs, violate precedents, betray tradition and repeal our own Declaration of Independence to satisfy the whims of alien U. N. delegates—we are submitting to atheistic concepts without recognition of Divine wisdom.

WRITE to Rep. Thomas Morgan, Chairman, House Foreign Affairs Committee, and ask that hearings be scheduled immediately on identical Bills to get us out of the United Nations; namely, H.R. 427 by Rep. James B. Utt, and H. R. 263 by Rep. Bruce Alger.

D MORE TAXES—AND NOW, A U. N. TAX??

21-member nation U. N. Finance Committee proposed a t to ease the burden of peace keeping for under-de-
OJECTS GET COSTLIER, UNDER THE PLAN, THE RICHER
ULD PICK UP AN INCREASINGLY LARGE SHARE OF THE COSTS, WOULD GET MORE AND MORE RELIEF (L.A.Times,March 1963.)

ated U. S.
tting in the UN's ence, told d by the f junk are
S. in the personnel in) as well
ton. Noth-
the money purposes

Lee Mortimer.

Assistant Secretaries-General for Security Council Affairs

1946-49 -- Arkady S. Sobelov, USSR.
1950-53 -- Konstantine Zinchenke, USSR.
1954-57 -- Ily Tchernyshev, USSR.
1957-60 -- A. Dobrynin, USSR.
1960-62 -- George P. Arkadev, USSR.
1962 -- Eugeny D. Kiselev, USSR.

BELGIAN MINER PLEADS
FOR MERCY

JADOTVILLE, KATANGA: — His arms raised in surrender, with blood streaming from his mouth and beneath his eye, Belgian miner Albert Verbrugghe pleads for mercy and no more shooting Jan. 3, 1963, as United Nations Indian troops approach him. Verbrugghe's wife, Madeleine, and Aline van den Eyke, a friend of the family, were slain Jan. 3, 1963, while fleeing Jadotville by auto. In Leopoldville Jan. 6, 1963, U. N. Undersecretary Dr. Ralph Bunche gave U.N. forces the "green light" to continue military operations against Katanga President Moise Tshombe. Dr. Bunche pinpointed the three military objectives of Kolwezi, Sakania and Dilolo, all mining centers in the secessionist Katanga Province. (UPI photo PLA1362543)

INNOCENT VICTIMS OF U. N. "PEACE-KEEPING" TROOPS IN KATANGA.

THE NETWORK OF PATRIOTIC LETTER WRITERS
P. O. Box 2003D
Pasadena, California.

6¢ each-100 for $5.00.

Peace Corps

United Nations
The Modern
Trojan Horse

The United Nations has proved incapable of either promoting or keeping the peace. Since it has broken with the original charter and started interfering in the internal affairs of its members and many of the small and weaker states, it has become a positive menace.

The United Nations now acts on a double standard, one for the weak, on whom it can work its will with mercenary troops, and a very different one for the strong, before whom it bows in deep humility.

Hon. Katherine St. George

Unless the U.N. is completely reorganized without the Communist nations in it, we should get out of it.

Herbert Hoover

The U.N. has become a trap. Let's go it alone.

the late Robert Taft

Lord Beaverbrook, noted British publisher, said:

Here in New York City, you Americans have the biggest fifth column in the world—the United Nations.

The United Nations will survive in history as the chief monument to western blindness to Soviet political warfare.

In the United Nations we see at work the Soviet facility for taking over an organisation from within.

Mme. Suzanne Labin
Intelligence Digest
February 1963

POPULATION OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS *

AFRICA

EUROPE

an organisation from within.

Mme. Suzanne Labin
Intelligence Digest
February 1963

POPULATION OF MEMBERS OF THE UNITED NATIONS *

AFRICA

Algeria	10,197,000
Burundi	2,500,000
Cameroon	4,000,000
Chad	2,581,000
Central African Republic	1,193,000
Congo (Brazzaville)	794,577
Congo (Leopoldville)	13,821,000
Dahomey	2,003,000
Ethiopia	21,800,000
Gabon	420,709
Ghana	4,911.000
Guinea	2,726,000
Ivory Coast	3,200,000
Liberia	1,250,000
Libya	1,153,000
Malagasy Republic	5,486,713
Mali	4,307,000
Mauritania	727,000
Morocco	11,598,000
Niger	2,803,000
Nigeria	34,296,000
Ruanda	26,338
Senegal	2,597,000
Sierra Leone	2,260,000
Somali Republic	1,900,000
So. Africa	14,929,000
Sudan	11,615,000
Tanganyika	128,742
Togo	1,642,000
Tunisia	3,965,000
Uganda	8,500
Upper Volta	4,004,000

NORTH AMERICA

Canada	17,814,000
United States	187,000,000
Mexico	34,625,000

AUSTRALIA	10,281,000
NEW ZEALAND	2,327,000

EUROPE

Albania	1,556,000
Austria	7,049,000
Belgium	9,104,000
Bulgaria	7,798,000
Byelorussian S.S.R.	3.1% of U.S.S.R. population
Czechoslavakia	13,649,000
Denmark	4,547,000
Finland	4,457,000
France	45,355,000
Greece	8,258,000
Hungary	10,002,000
Ireland	2,834,000
Italy	49,052,000
Luxembourg	324,000
Netherlands	11,480,000
Norway	3,583,000
Poland	29,480,000
Portugal	9,124,000
Rumania	18,256,000
Spain	30,128,000
Sweden	7,471,000
Ukrainian S.S.R.	41,893,000
United Kingdom	52,675,000
Yugoslavia	18,655,000

CENTRAL AMERICA & WEST INDIES

Costa Rica	1,173,000
Cuba	6,743,000
Dominican Republic	2,994,000
El Salvador	2,613,000
Guatemala	3,759,000
Haiti	3,505,000
Honduras	1,950,000
Jamaica	125,526
Nicaragua	1,450,000
Panama	1,053,000
Trinidad-Tobago	5,600,000

= Captive Nation

ASIA

Afghanistan	13,000,000
Burma	20,662,000
Cambodia	4,845,000
Ceylon	9,612,000
China (Nationalist)	10,611,000
Cyprus	563,000
India	408,050,000
Indonesia	92,600,000
Iran	20,633,000
Iraq	6,952,000
Israel	2,114,000
Japan	93,600,000
Jordan	1,636,000
Laos	1,760,000
Lebanon	1,250,000
Malaya	6,698,000
Nepal	9,044,000
Outer Mongolia	909,600
Pakistan	86,823,000
Philippines	27,473,000
Saudi Arabia	6,036,000
Syria	4,539,000
Thailand	22,718,000
Turkey	27,802,000
U.S.S.R.	218,000,000
United Arab Republic	29,400,000
Yemen	4,500,000

SOUTH AMERICA

Argentina	20,956,000
Bolivia	3,462,000
Brazil	65,743,000
Chili	7,627,000
Colombia	14,132,000
Ecuador	4,298,000
Paraguay	1,760,000
Peru	10,827,000
Uruguay	2,800,000
Venezuela	6,709,000

ICELAND	172,000

* Regardless of population, each of the above nations has one vote. The United States vote represents 187,000,000 people. The Uganda vote represents 8,500 people. Of the 110 member states of the General Assembly, 50% have a combined population of less than the population of the United States. Russia controls 10 votes.

The United States finances over a third of the U. N. costs. In addition, our Foreign Aid program to some 70 countries around the world provides them with money to pay their dues. Thus, directly or indirectly, the United States is paying practically the entire cost of the United Nations.

Peace Corps.

THE RICHMOND NEWS LEADER
RICHMOND, VIRGINIA
March 7, 1963

The Water Moccasin Bites

Venom spreads slowly. The Federal Government should not be surprised at the public's uneasy reaction to the Army's war games at Savannah now being conducted under the code name of Water Moccasin III. The Administration's openly cynical manipulation of the Cuban crisis was but a small prick; the truly frightening effect now is a massive loss of confidence in our national leaders. In the past week, thousands of Americans have been half-convinced of a treacherous betrayal of the citizens of Georgia.

In a strangely unreported story, many Southern Congressmen have been swamped with outraged inquiries about Exercise Water Moccasin III. About 10 days ago it began, with telegrams and letters from as far away as San Francisco and Seattle. Were UN psychological warfare specialists and anti-guerrilla troops really whetting their weapons on American guinea pigs?

The facts, it has finally developed: are these: U. S. Army graduates of the Ft. Bragg Special Warfare School are finishing their training with a grand maneuver in an eight-county area near Ft. Stewart, Georgia. The official version is that the civilians in the area are being asked to lease land rights to the Army and to participate in the realism by hiding guerrillas in their homes, organizing escape routes, and transporting them past ambush. Senators Russell, Stennis, and Thurmond, all of the Armed Services Committee, have been satisfied that the maneuvers are routine.

But that having been said, it must also be admitted that the alarming hypothesis of the concerned citizens had much to recommend it. As reports spread like the flu bug, there were many distortions; but even the barest picture was justly alarming:

1) Georgia's geography. Next to Florida, Georgia is the closest State to Cuba on the Atlantic coast. Now, UN Secretary General U Thant has proposed neutralist control posts in the Caribbean and in the U. S. to guard Cuba against American invasion. We have already proved in the Congo that we will sacrifice our own interests to maintain the fiction of UN peacemaking; was a secret deal for a base in Georgia to be the solution of the Cuban impasse? The stories of Afro-Asian personnel in Cuban training schools, and the announcement that "Soviet" troops were leaving Cuba were simultaneous with the projected arrival of student guerrillas in Georgia. Who was the U. S. training, anyway? Wild thoughts, these; not wild to those who had seen troops dig up lawns in Oxford, Mississippi.

2) The mishandling of the announcement. The Defense Department allotted only a fortnight or so to explain this complex maneuver to the public. "Foreigners May Observe War Maneuvers in March," said a matter-of-fact announcement in the Savannah Evening Press of February 13. A couple of days later it was "foreign Allied nations" participating as students. Were these the UN troops? The first Army news release said 3,000 men; later it was 1,000, then 600; similar maneuvers in June are reported to involve 7,000. Secretary McNamara denied that African troops would participate; the latest official dispatch lists 16 NATO, CENTO, and SEATO nations, including Liberia. It also lists the unreassuring presence of officers from Indonesia.

When Army representatives moved into the area, they did little to quiet the growing storm. Farmers were accosted with vague permits granting "the Government the right to enter as often as desired" during the maneuver period. The signer also agreed that "the Government shall have the right to patrol and police the lands." Some residents have sworn out affidavits that they were threatened into signing; some who stood fast and did not sign have erected "No Trespassing" signs in five languages.

3) The past history of "war games." When civilians, as well as their property, are "voluntarily" commandeered as grist for the training mill, not all goes according to the announced plan. Out of the files come newspaper accounts of similar maneuvers in which troops decided to play for keeps when local public officials did not choose to go along with the "mock" war. Culver City, California, 1951; Des Moines, Iowa, 1956; Lampasas, Texas, 1958; Danville, Virginia, 1959. Exercise Long Horn, Operation Bilko and such dramatic code names cannot mask the indignities suffered by sheriffs and mayors "dragged off kicking, to a stockade for uncooperative citizens" (said United Press), or the smirking Marine sergeant who shut down radio, TV, waterworks, powerplant, and telephone company "without telling the generals, feeling they wouldn't have let us go ahead" (said Associated Press). Sometimes the city fathers submitted by design; but the kicking was not always part of the scenario.

Just why American civilians should be taught how to surrender their cities is not explained. The Savannah operation will use the local radio stations to encourage civilians to take sides in the maneuvers, so as "to make Water Moccasin III a realistic copy of present-day Communist wars of liberation." Thus the point of the training seems twofold: to defeat the enemy and to capture the population psychologically. No wonder eyebrows are raised: Here is the Special Warfare School's Counterinsurgency Department at work training foreign nationals — and they are trying out their new techniques on Americans. If the Americans don't respond properly, perhaps more effective techniques can be devised.

Well, yesterday and today the students have been paratrooping into the Georgia swamps and infiltrating the coast; the "betrayal" feared by the jittery natives is no more than another blunder by military strategists who think of civilians as a tolerable nuisance. The truly frightening thing is that various deceptions of the Kennedy Administration have made such a disturbing betrayal hypothesis perfectly reasonable. Cuba, the Congo, the roughshod Polaris policy, the Common Market, the suicidal test ban treaty, have all been decided with international interests paramount. The Administration has forfeited the people's trust, and that poison seeps down through the body politic.

The Richmond News Leader

The Big Denial

March 18, 1963

U.S. Army press agents are now trying to cover the trail of Exercise Water Moccasin with fertile invention. At the last moment, all civilian participation in the gigantic guerrilla training maneuvers near Savannah has been called off: No radio appeals to the civilians, no hiding guerrillas in private homes, no direct psychological warfare against citizen guinea pigs. The Army says that complaints to Georgia Congressmen were so loud that everything had to be cut back to a strict military basis.

But the Army's feelings are hurt because of the public uproar. The inept blunders of its public relations were plausibly interpreted by many people as some kind of international wheeling and dealing by the Kennedy Administration. Now the Army is attempting to shift the blame with the Big Denial.

The Big Denial is standard operating procedure from the Commander-in-Chief on down. The technique is to deny all charges vociferously, including a few ridiculous charges that you invent yourself. Thus it makes all criticism look irresponsible, based on nefarious rumor.

"The brunt of the criticism seemed to center on the fact that the aggressor force in the exercise was named the Republic of Georgia," the Savannah Morning News reported from Fort Stewart last week. If the Army really were so stupid as to name the aggressors "Georgians," then they brought the ill-will on themselves. Actually, the name of the aggressor-force was one of the best kept secrets of Water Moccasin, for none of the news accounts or official Army press releases which we saw suggests that any name had been picked at all.

The Big Denial says that no one has been forced to sign entry permits. The Big Denial says that 2,500, not 25,000 acres is involved. The Big Denial says that no paratroopers will be dropped. The Big Denial says that the foreign officers are representing their own countries rather than the United Nations. The Big Denial has found local citizens who are willing to say that the trouble has been instigated by outside areas. Thus the Big Denial mingles the ludicrous with the serious, the trivial with the important, the legal distinction with the self-contradiction.

Troops have to be trained and it seems that those in Water Moccasin are now able to be trained without using the civilian population in dubious experiments. The misunderstandings denied by the Army almost all resulted from conflicts in the Army's own releases (we have them in our files). We may assume also that the Georgia Congressmen listened more carefully to their constituents than to outsiders.

Another Water Moccasin exercise begins in Georgia on June 5 involving 7,000 men, approximately ten times the current exercise. On July 21, Operation Swift Strike III will launch 100,000 men over 6 million acres (about 9,400 square miles) of North and South Carolina and Georgia, "the biggest peacetime maneuver in U.S. Army history." The public can place little stock in these rumors, however; they are merely U.S. Army announcements, and they have scarcely had time to be denied.

THE NETWORK OF PATRIOTIC LETTER WRITERS, P. O. BOX 2003D, PASADENA, CALIFORNIA.
(2¢ each — 100 for $1.75)

Peace Groups

PEACE RESEARCH NEWSLETTER

for the
Rocky Mountain-Great Plains Region

March 1963

* * * \

6. Many academic people were brought face to face with the serious and difficult realities of developing and maintaining a reasonable international program of arms control and disarmament with adequate and effective inspection.

Speakers and topics on the program included Victor Karpov (First Secretary, Soviet Embassy) "Soviet Stand on Disarmament," Robert Matteson (U.S. ACDA) "Disarmament and the Geneva Conference," Walter Reuther (UAW) "Arms Control and the Challenge of Peace," Kenneth Boulding (University of Michigan) "University, Society, and Arms Control," and addresses by William C. Foster (Director, U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency) and Hubert Humphrey (U.S. Senate, Minnesota).

Technical sessions included panel discussions of "Unilateral vs. Multilateral Measures," "Physical Inspection," "Sanctions and Enforcement," "Research Tools in Arms Control Studies," "Weapons Testing," "Inhibiting Escalation," "Peaceful Settlement of Disputes," "Bargaining and the Negotiation Process," "Non-Physical Inspection," "Impact of Domestic Politics on Arms Control Policy," and others.

It was evident from the program itself that the emphasis of the Symposium was primarily on problems of arms control and disarmament. There was a valiant effort to bring in a broader spectrum of peace research, but with most of the research in the United States being done on hardware-type problems there are relatively few individuals who can capably discuss the broader aspects of peace research.

Although one can criticize any conference, and make suggestions for improvements, this Symposium was relatively free of significant faults. It brought together academicians, military personnel, and persons interested in arms control and disarmament. In addition industrial groups were heavily represented. There seemed to be a two-fold reason for an interest on the part of industry, in addition to their general concern for the welfare of the nation and the world: 1) If there is a significant degree of disarmament, then some major industries must look elsewhere for business, and 2) Some industries feel that there is definitely a trend in the direction of arms control and disarmament, which in the long run means funds will become available for study and development programs associated with arms control and disarmament.

Because much of the Symposium was devoted to reporting of research completed or now underway, it will no doubt act as a stimulant to many individuals and groups who are involved in research. Therefore, the Symposium has probably made a major contribution to the general field of peace research -- even though this influence may be indirect. There was a general consensus that similar conferences should be held in the future.

"Planning for Peace Keeping" was the topic of the fourth Strategy for Peace Conference held January 17-20, 1963, at Airlie House, Warrenton, Virginia. C. Maxwell Stanley, Mrs. Albert Lasker, and the late Tom Slick have been the prime movers behind these meetings which have been aimed at developing a "strategy for peace" -- on the basic premise that there must be a strategy if we are to have peace and that individuals from business, industry, government, educational and research institutions as well as private citizens can do much to create an understanding of the need for and actually help to develop this strategy for peace.

While this conference was much smaller, both in numbers of subjects covered and individuals in attendance (110) than the Arms Control Symposium, it is particularly significant because it shows what can be done by private citizens who are concerned enough to call together individuals concerned with the problems of peace.

The program of the Strategy for Peace Conference consisted of:

1. A memorial service for Tom Slick, who was killed in an airplane accident last fall. It was primarily through Tom's dedication that the Conference has continued to be held from year to year.

2. "Planning for Peace Keeping," a discussion with panelists Edward A. Conway, S.J. (Creighton University), James E. Dougherty (University of Pennsylvania), John Loosbrock (Editor, Air Force Magazine), Charles Osgood (University of Illinois), John B. Phelps (Institute of Defense Analysis), and Louis B. Sohn (Harvard University).

3. The Conference broke into five discussion groups:
   a. The 'N th' Country Problem
   b. Nuclear Sharing -- NATO
   c. Outer Space
   d. Role of the U.N. in an Armed and Disarmed World
   e. Independent U.S. Initiatives

Because the Strategy for Peace Conference was organized for exhaustive study of a single subject, it was possible to deal with subjects in considerable depth. In contrast, the Ann Arbor Symposium was a series of papers presented formally or in panel sessions with much less opportunity for discussion.

The Strategy for Peace Conferences will no doubt continue, with Maxwell Stanley serving as prime mover and coordinator. Copies of the proceedings of past conferences and additional information can be obtained from C. Maxwell Stanley, Stanley Engineering Company, Muscatine, Iowa.

Maurice Albertson

* * *

Impressions at the International Arms Control Symposium

The title, International Arms Control Symposium, was well selected as the greater percentage of all rigorous effort was directed toward the general problems and technical specificities of reliably and safely controlling the huge, and further increasing, armaments now in existence.

Inspirational speeches directed toward peaceful solutions of problems were made by Walter Reuther, Harold Taylor, and the Honorable Hubert Humphrey, but only two papers among those heard by this writer were primarily directed toward the development of a basic Peace Science. Wayman Crow and Anatol Rapoport each presented simulation studies which could well serve as a nucleus for Peace Science development, but many of the other reported efforts were firmly ensconced in the status quo.

It is of special interest that the greater percentage of research grants, and especially the instances of comparatively large grants, being let by the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency appear to be going to industries and agencies which are receiving even larger amounts of government money in the form of defense contracts. One cannot help but wonder whether there is a true conflict of interest present with the resolution of that conflict being one which favors first emphasis on continuing large levels of armament but with safer controls over the armament being the objective. Such controls are both physical (hardware) and psychological and administrative (command control) but a high and increasing level of armaments is assumed as a given in the research attempted. It was also learned that the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency is frequently concerned about maintaining secrecy as to research findings and this secrecy is, in and of itself, inimical to the free exchange necessary for the development of a new and complex science.

Apparently war and preparation for war continues to be news, but in spite of repeated, extensive, well prepared copy released by the Bendix Corporation to the wire services the actual newspaper coverage was minimal and disappointing. The pattern of news reporting was such that the University of Michigan Student Paper reported all major proceedings with care, the Detroit papers gave a minimum of coverage even to Walter Reuther's address and the Chicago papers hardly gave any indication that the proceedings were occuring. The five installment report of the symposium by the St. Louis Post Dispatch is one of the few significant exceptions to this pattern, although for example, Walter Reuther's proposals were startling enough and controversial enough to have made good copy for all types of papers nation wide.

Judging from the sample of studies available in Michigan one must conclude that the greatest effort is currently in the arms control area without sufficient counterbalance in the Peace Science Area. As has been pointed out by Dr. Van Atta, formerly of the Department of Defense and Hughes Aircraft, arms control outside of a program for disarmament is merely a more sophisticated approach to armament.

It must be kept in the forefront of thought that no matter how sophisticated we may become in the technically reliable control of our own armaments, there is no guarantee that the proliferation of thermonuclear arms to other nations such as France, Communist China, and Cuba -- almost, will not lead to eventual accident or to a disastrous top-level decision.

Robert Fadeley

"The role of the universities, both in the smaller problem of bargaining for arms control and disarmament agreement and in the larger problem of establishing a stable peace, is likely to be central and crucial. The university is the only agency in society which is committed to the future rather than to the past, which is committed to mankind as a whole rather than to any segment of it, and which is committed to the truth rather than to a particular version of it. The University as an institution frequently falls short of these ideals, but it can never deny them without ceasing to be a university. Furthermore, the problem which faces mankind in the movement towards stable peace is above all things an intellectual task. It is a task in understanding the social system, the dynamics of which must carry us to stable peace, and is a task also of establishing a system of information collection and processing by which images of the world social system can be tested for reality."

Kenneth Boulding speaking at the International Arms Control Symposium,
December 18, 1962

"There is nothing to be gained in the continuance of a policy of nuclear deterrence, for this or any country. That is literally a dead end. The task of men of good will here and everywhere else is to invent, to imagine, to study, and to act for the development of new kinds of answers to problems we have not yet solved. We who are in the universities, as scholars, teachers, students, have a particular responsibility in these matters, and we have no excuse for not taking it. We can propose the establishment of world universities where missile bases now stand, and the use of science and technology for housing, feeding, and maintaining the world's people in health and security, the union of national states in new international communities, the exchange of poems, songs, and ideas instead of missiles. There are new ways of doing these things which we already know about and can even start doing them before anyone asks us to. When men and women refuse to rest content with things as they are, when they talk, think and act continually and intensively to achieve ideal ends, they deflect the course of history. I suggest that we all have a little deflecting to do."

Harold Taylor speaking at the International Arms Control Symposium,
December 18, 1962

* *

A meeting of the Regional Ad Hoc Committee for the Rocky Mountain-Great Plains Peace Research Conference was held February 27. The Committee decided to proceed with preliminary plans for a 1963 Student Peace Research Workshop to be held during the third week of August provided there is sufficient student interest in such a Workshop and that sufficient funding for support of the Workshop can be obtained. In other business, the Committee felt that a 1963 Peace Research Conference should be centered around some specific issue and held in the fall of 1963 and that the Peace Research Newsletter should be continued. Consideration was also given to possible program of public fund raising for peace research, patterned on the approach of the Canadian Peace Research Institute.

* * *

The Canadian Peace Research Institute has raised more than $300,000 from more than 25,000 Canadians and is now working on three major peace research projects:

1. A comprehensive survey of Canadian attitudes on foreign policy, defense, and disarmament, the first of a series of attitude studies aimed at obtaining exact data on the formation and change of national attitudes on problems of peace and war.

2. A preliminary study of the origin of national and city policy forces in Canada, Britain, France, the Soviet Union and China, to determine what might be learned from the experience of force formation at national and city levels and applied to the formation of an international police force today.

3. The establishment of a peace research literature file, involving the examination of scientific and scholarly periodicals in all fields of social science for material related to several hundred subject categories of peace research.

* * *

A content analysis of editorials in selected American newspapers has been made at the Stanford Studies in International Conflict and Integration for the period October 15 to November 10, 1962. The study was designed to test the hypothesis that during a period of national crisis the perception of increased external threat contributes to a decrease in expressed internal dissention and an increase in expressed support and approval of the national decision maker's policies. The results strongly support the hypothesis. From October 15 until the President announced the quarantine on October 22, the index of approval was generally low and showed a gradual drop, reaching a nadir immediately prior to the declaration of the blockade. After the 22nd, approval of President Kennedy's action rose sharply, reaching an apex about October 28th, shortly after Khrushchev agreed to remove the offensive missiles from Cuba. From that time on, the index of approval showed a gradual decline, although by November 10 it was still significantly higher than it had been before the crisis started.

* * *

The Hiroshima Institute of Peace Science has been established in Japan as "a research organization to reach integrated results through close cooperation from various sciences and thoughts related to the peace problem. The world peace problem must not be merely studied in abstract ideology but take into consideration the realistic aspects of human life, such as customs, systems, organizations, and regimes."

The 1963 United Nations General Assemply is to consider a resolution which invites all Member States to set up research establishments "responsible for studying ways and means of resolving conflicts and of preventing conflicts in the future," and requests non-governmental organizations to conduct scientific research on conflict resolution.

* *

Enclosed with this edition of the Newsletter is a questionnaire by which we hope to gain some measure of student interest and activity in the area of peace research. Several national student organizations are aiding in the distribution of the questionnaire and on the basis of replies,decisions regarding a possible 1963 Student Peace Research Workshop will be made. All those receiving copies of the questionnaire are urged to return them on or before April 1.

PEACE RESEARCH NEWSLETTER
for the
Rocky Mountain-Great Plains Region

An occasional publication of the Rocky Mountain-Great Plains Peace Research Conference, Dr. M. L. Albertson, Chairman, Regional Ad Hoc Committee. Address all correspondence to: Newsletter, Research Foundation, Colorado State University, Fort Collins, Colorado.

Copies of the Report of the Student Peace Research Workshop are now being mailed. Additional copies of the Report are available at $1.00 per copy.

* * *

Preparation of the Proceedings of the Second Annual Rocky Mountain-Great Plains Peace Research Conference has been delayed. However, completion is expected within the month. Copies of the Proceedings can still be ordered at $1.00 per copy.

Peace Groups

PREP NEWSLETTER

PEACE RESEARCH AND EDUCATION PROJECT

NUMBER 1 MAY, 1963

Since February 1, the Peace Research and Education Project ("PREP") has been attempting to stimulate interest on American campuses in peace research and peace education. This NEWSLETTER is intended to service the needs of those who are interested in engaging in such work. We want to provide students with suggestions for peace research problem areas, to suggest syllabi and bibliographies which can be used in establishing peace seminars and courses, to relay news about developments on various campuses....

The effectiveness of the NEWSLETTER depends, in large part, on its readers --we hope you will be sending us reports about peace courses or seminars that may exist on your campus, about on-going research in which you are involved or have heard about, copies of papers, bibliographies, etc. which you'd like to see distributed, and above all your thoughts about problems and issues which concern you.....

There is little doubt that substantial and growing interest exists in our universities in the kind of research and curriculum innovation which PREP exists to promote. One measure of this interest has been the gratifying response which PREP itself has received. We have received orders for hundreds of copies of our background paper, "Peace,PPower and the University" and our basic program outline, "Toward an Effective Campus Peace Program." More significantly -- there have been a number of student initiated campus projects which we believe are quite exciting:

* at the UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN, graduate students and undergraduates organized by the PREP staff have instituted a weekly seminar series. Utilizing the Liberal Papers, and Legal and Political Problems of World Order (S. Mendlovitz, ed.) as basic texts, the seminars represent a basic introduction to problems of disarmament, international conflict, tension reduction, and peace action. About 15-20 students are presently participating in these seminars...Dick Schmuck, Mark Chesler and Dick Flacks of the PREP staff, along with other graduate students, will be teaching a course in the Department of Psychology next Spring on the Psychology of international relations.

* at the UNIVERSITY OF ILLINOIS, Rennie Davis reports that "We now have some sixty faculty members who belong to a Seminar on Arms Control and Disarmament Research, about 30 of these attend regular meetings. Meetings of the seminar are designed to deliniate 'problem areas' in international relations. Procedurally a professor presents a paper outling a research problem or problems in his discipline. The members criticize, suggest, blow steam, etc. in order to help the professor avoid pitfalls before he actually begins the project." The general purpose of this faculty seminar is to "generate on the campus a strong nucleaus of ACD research-oriented members of the staff who will intensify existing ACD research and will initiate new ACD research projects that reflect their various professional capabilities."

Also at ILLINOIS, Rennie reports, "Students administer a speakers' bureau drawing entirely from members of the faculty disarmament seminar which contacts housing groups and arranges for speeches on peace. Approximately 30-35 students attend regular weekly seminar meetings on peace and war. The course, unofficial and outside the curriculum, is coordinated by Dallas Smythe, professor in communications research. Four disciplines focus on the general subject matter: economics (led by Fred Gottheil); political science (Lloyd Jensen); psychology (Charles Osgood and Sheldon Feldman); physics and biochemistry (Cam Satterthwaithe and Aron Kupperman). We're in the process of finishing a fairly detailed course outline and reading list."

* From HARPUR COLLEGE, Dave Russell reports that the Peace Seminar is ranging in attendance between 12 and 16, and is heavily focussed on technical problems of arms control and disarmament, using such books as the Daedalus volume on Disarmament. Mulford Sibley and Charles Walker of the AFSC have visited the campus and participated in the seminar, as do a number of invited faculty and local ministers. Dave suggests that for extra-curricular seminars, reading must be kept to a minimum, and the focus of the seminar ought to be on debate, and discussion of one "hefty" article a week, with listings of supplementary readings provided. Dave has done a detailed study of the campus Civil Defense program for the Harpur College Colonial News, and is presently involved in a study of student attitudes toward war as a senior project. He also reports that the establishment of the peace seminar, stimulated a number of kids to start a peace action group.

* At SWARTHMORE, the Students for a Democratic Society has established an extra-curricular peace seminar dealing with economic and technical aspects of disarmament and arms control and the Berlin and Cuban Crises. About half a dozen students are participating in the seminar which intends to establish itself as a permanent institution next year...SDS Vice-President Paul Booth, who is chairman of the Swarthmore chapter, is presently working on a study of the "peace candidates" who ran for Congress in 1962.

* At BOWDOIN COLLEGE, the Bowdoin Political Issues Club runs a weekly seminar on American Society which focuses on problems of the economy, power, political action, participatory democracy, and the Cold War. Dr. Richard Hathaway, leader of the seminar, has prepared an excellent basic bibliography on the War/Peace question.

Other extra-curricular seminars exist at CORNELL, BOSTON UNIVERSITY, and WISCONSIN.

* From the INSTITUTE OF INTERNATIONAL STUDIES at the UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA (BERKELEY) Kathleen Archibald writes that a War/Peace Research Seminar has been underway for several months. "There are about thirty faculty members on the Berkeley campus who are participating in this seminar, which is directed toward the development of a systematic research program. We have the names of a number of graduate students who are interested in research in this area, and we hope to draw them into our activities in the near future."

* * *

STUDENT PEACE RESEARCH: Students in many places have undertaken research projects on various key problems of war and peace. In addition to the Booth and Russell studies mentioned above, some other student projects include:

* a study of the history, sociological and psychological effects of the selective service system, by Todd Gitlin and other members of TOCSIN at Harvard.

* an analysis of potential political strategies for the peace movement, by Tom Hayden and Dick Flacks of Students for a Democratic Society and PREP.

* student responses to the Cuban crisis, an attitude survey by Mark Chesler and Dick Schmuck of PREP. (see abstract below)

* the March, 1963 issue of the Council for Correspondence Newsletter contains four interesting studies of public attitudes toward war. Three of the four studies involved students as volunteer interviewers, data analysts, etc. One study by Andre Modigliani is a fascinating opinion survey which Modigliani did for a senior thesis at Harvard. Address of the Newsletter: Emerson Hall 324, Harvard University, Cambridge 38, Mass.

* available from PREP advisor, Professor Maurice Albertson, is a detailed report of the Student Peace Research Workshop held last summer at Camp Colorado. The report contains detailed proposals for research on such topics as: Applicability of Socio-Psychological Concepts to International Relations; Live Crisis Analysis; Effect of other Political Events on Disarmament Negotiations; Socio-political Factors in the Transition to a Disarmed Economy; Measurement of Attitudes toward War/Peace Issues and International Affairs; Ideology of the Peace Movement. Copies of the Report are available for $1.00 from the Peace Research Newsletter, Research Foundation, Colorado State University, Fort Collins, Colorado.

FELLOWSHIP PROGRAM OF THE CENTER FOR RESEARCH ON CONFLICT RESOLUTION
University of Michigan

"The Center for Research on Conflict Resolution is dedicated to the proposition that the establishment of stable peace, however difficult, is possible, and that tolerable changes can be made in the international system which will abolish large-scale, organized violence. The achievement of this end, however, requires the accomplishment of a major intellectual task. We believe that many young people in these days are anxious to dedicate themselves to this task. It is a task, however, which requires high skill and training, especially in the various disciplines of the social sciences. It requires a strong motivation towards the practical end, but with the recognition that motivation is not enough--that a professional competence in the various disciplines must be acquired before an effective contribution can be made. The Center defines this task as peace research.

The fellowship Program, therefore, is intended to support young men and women seeking a Ph.D Degree in one of the social sciences who are eager to obtain more training than is customary in cognate subjects relevant to peace research."

Pre-doctoral fellows would be appointed from students planning to attain a doctorate and accepted for graduate work by the departments of Economics, Political Science, Psychology, Sociology, and the Doctoral Program in Social Psychology. By accepting a fellowship they would be agreeing to do four things: (1) work for a Ph.D. degree in one of the five programs above; (2) take two courses in basic theory required of all fellows; (3) take nine hours of work in advanced courses in a department other than that which the doctorate is expected; (4)Participate in an interdisciplinary practicum.

THIS SUMMER.....a number of interesting and important events will take place, including:

* June 14-17: Convention of the STUDENTS FOR A DEMOCRATIC SOCIETY, to include debate and discussion on peace issues, and campus programming on peace for the coming year. Write SDS, 112 E. 19th St., N.Y. 3, N.Y. for details.
* WORLD COLLEGE PILOT PROJECT, led by Harold Taylor at the Friends World College campus at Glen Head, Long Island. Twenty countries, roughly the ones represented at the Geneva disarmament negotiations, have been invited to send students and to sponsor the college, with an international faculty and a curriculum to be composed of research projects by the students on issues of world affairs and the effort to develop a peaceful world order.
* Several national student organizations have aided Professor Maurice Albertson in distributing a questionnaire on student peace research activities--on the basis of replies, decisions will be made regarding a second SUMMER STUDENT PEACE RESEARCH WORKSHOP. If you are interested in such a Summer Workshop write to Prof. Albertson immediately (Research Foundation Colorado State University, Fort Collins, Colorado.)

PUBLICATIONS...a growing focus of research is the economics of the arms race and disarmament. An important contribution in this field is a brand-new pamphlet edited by Seymour Melman, called A Strategy for American Security --An Alternative to the Military Budget. Copies are available for 50¢ from Lee Offset Inc. (Dept ST) 48 E. 21st. St., New York 10, N.Y.....a new publication focussed on the politics of peace is the Peace Politics Newsletter, issued by Massachusetts PAX. Copies may be ordered from PREP.

WHAT CAN STUDENTS CONTRIBUTE TO PEACE RESEARCH?

A Symposium

PREP asked a number of outstanding peace researchers to provide suggestions for the kinds of problems which students ought to be concerned with in their intellectual activity. What follows are the answers we received:

Harold Taylor writes: "I believe that one of the crucial topics for student peace research lies in the field of the test-ban treaty and the steps from the ban on testing to the first phases of disarmament. I think that some good thinking would be helpful on the subject of cultural exchanges and student peace research by collaboration with foreign students in this country and by getting in touch with students abroad who are interested in the issues. This would be in the direction of developing some initiatives on the part of the American student body and the development of new cultural policies. I think it might be interesting to see what cooperative research might be worked out with American and foreign students."

Arthur Waskow: "Assume two dimensions of opinion: a) the dimensions familiar from domestic affairs and known as the "conservative-liberal-radical" opinion spectrum, i.e. the debate over which societal elements should receive more of the rewards of society, which group should be responsible for most of the decision-making related to social and economic change--the public through government or the individual through private enterprise and so on. b) the dimension questioning the old assumptions of 'American impotence in the world and confronting the issue of whether the advent of H-bombs has changed that power of Americans to shape the world the way they want to.' This spectrum of opinion includes those who speak mostly of victory; those who talk most about 'stability'--who believe that nuclear weapons are too dangerous to be used to win victories but are not sufficiently dangerous to warrant their being completely eliminated; and those people who are primarily concerned with 'peace'--those who are critical of American policy because they feel that it does not fear nuclear weapons enough to work whole-heartedly for peace."

These two opinion dimensions cut across each other. What Waskow is interested in finding out is what segments of the American population fit into which categories, for example, Norman Thomas has a radical view of American society and talks about peace and therefore would be a radical peace advocate. There are also conservative "victory" advocates, liberal stabilitarians, and also radical "victory" advocates and conservative peace advocates. Population segments could be analyzed to determine where they tend to fit in terms of the two dimensions. Groups which could be analyzed would include-- Irish policemen, Jewish businessmen, white unskilled workers, Negro professionals; college undergraduates and graduates from different economic, religious, ethnic backgrounds, middle class housewives living in suburbs vs. lower class housewives living in urban slums; etc. Such analyses would be of unlimited value to peace organizations and peace activists in their program formulation both for their own group and for the efforts being made to reach out beyond the actual members. Waskow would be most interested in seeing the results of any research that does develop along these lines.

A seoncd broad area in which students can do peace research is in the area of "historical analogues." This would involve taking historical examples of disarmament, arms control, etc.--e.g. the disarming of the French duchies, the 1817 Great Lakes disarmament agreement, the Whisky Rebellion in the United States--and carefully analyzing them from various viewpoints and disciplines, e.g. doing economic, historical, political, social and military analyses. There are myriad examples in world history which could be studied profitably by students.

(A. Waskow's views were transmitted to us by Carol McEldowney, Research Assistant at the Peace Research Institute).

J. David Singer: Dr. Singer listed the following problems as especially appropriate for student term papers in political science:

--The process by which tax-exempt status is given to pressure groups--the more conservative the group, the easier to get exemptions?
--Comparison of executive agency news releases and newspaper accounts--Are newspapers transmission belts for government propaganda?
--Mutual perceptions of political decision-makers.
--Race relations and military policy--correlation between views on race relations and views on militarism.
--How long does it take for technological innovation to affect the public mind?
--Correlation between editorials and public opinion.
--Reference figures and reference groups--whose opinions are respected in a community?
--Correlation between defense expenses in a community and foreign policy attitudes in a community. Proximity to defense bases in a community and foreign policy attitudes.
--What procedures are used, and how valid and reliable are they, for calculating military risks of particular policies?
--Is a nation more conciliatory in bargaining when it is superior, equal or inferior in military power?
--Political stability and involvement in war--comparison of stable and unstable political systems.
--Geographical distance between countries and probability of war.
--Cultural distance between countries and probability of war.
--Ethnic homogeneity and propensity for war.

(From an interview with Dr. Singer by Barry Bluestone

Kenneth Boulding: Prof. Boulding suggested topics in a wide range of disciplines, stressing the importance of the humanities and the effect of literature, for instance, on society's development. Specifically, he made these suggestions:

Literature: The Impact of Literature on Subsequent History (e.g. Shakespeare's part in the peaceful transition to the rule of James I.); How Literature Produces Images Important to War and Peace; The Literary Environment of (for example) the Peace of Westphalia--did literature influence the bringing about of the subsequent peace?

History: Investigations of Treaties and Settlements; Disarmament of the Great Lakes; Historical Study of Peace; The History of Personal Disarmament, the Establishment of Law.

Anthropology: Institutions for the Preservation of Peace among Primitive People; The importance of Cermeony in Peace Keeping (e.g. the Peace-pipe, Burying the Hatcher.); The ways in which different pooples have handled conflict.

Economics: Study of the War Ind stry; The Economics of Disarmament.

Sociology: The Sociology of Conflict.

Biology: Biological competition and Conflict; Cooperative behavior among animals (survival value of a species has not always depended on its aggressiveness and selfishness, but also on its ability to form cooperative groups.)

Anatol Rapoport: Professor Rapoport did not suggest specific topics, but outlined what he considered the three basic types of "Peace Research."

1. Historical studies of Conflict Resolution (they are not necessarily applicable to the present, but often help to clarify the problems.)
2. Psychological Research, e.g. Research in bargaining and debate (this may not be relevant to the conduct of nations, but it also clarifies issues.)
3. Research into the effects and influences of current "Peace Action," its successes and failures.

(from interviews with Prof. Boulding and Prof. Rapoport by Roy Neuberger)

A BASIC BIBLIOGRAPHY AND TWO INFORMAL SEMINARS

Basic Books on the War/Peace Question

By Dr. Richard Hathaway (Bowdoin College)

KEY BOOKS: * (basic, brief, and pungent treatments; splendid introductions into their topics)

*Brown, Real, et al. A World Without War. Washington Square Press; 1961 $.45
*Etzioni, Amitai. The Hard Way to Peace. Collier; 1962 $.95
*Neal, Fred Warner. U.S. Foreign Policy and the Soviet Union. Center for the Study of Democratic Institutions; 1961 $.35
*Osgood, Charles. An Alternative to War or Surrender. Illini Books: 1962; $1.45
*The Worried Man's Guide to World Peace. A Peace Resarch Institute Project. Anchor 1963.

OTHER IMPORTANT BOOKS: (Somewhat more elaborate treatments)

Boulding, Kenneth. Conflict and Defense. Harper; 1962 $7 (hard) (paperbound now available)
Brennan, Donald (ed.) Arms Control, Disarmament and National Security. Braziller; 1961. $6
Fromm, Erich. May Man Prevail? Doubleday Anchor; 1961; $.95
Hadley, Arthur T. The Nation's Safety and Arms Control. Viking; 1961. $10.
Melman, Seymour (ed.) Disarmament, Its Politics and Economics. distributed to Daedalus subscribers; 1962
----------The Peace Race. Ballantine; 1961 $.50
Merton, Thomas (intro.) Breakthrough to Peace. New Directions Press; 1962; $1.95
Roosevelt, James (ed.) The Liberal Papers. Doubleday; 1962; $1.25
Wadsworth, James J. The Price of Peace. Praeger; 1962; $3.95
Waskow, Arthur I. The Limits of Defense. Doubleday; 1962 $2.95
The Nature of Conflict. Unesco. International Sociological Association. 1957

* * *

An Informal Peace Seminar Offered at Harpur College

Readings: 1. Committee on Armed Services Hearings, Arms Control and Disarmament.
2. Daedalus, Journal of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.
3. Millis, Walter, World Without War.
4. Waskow, Arthur, Unintended War.

Schedule: I. The Problem: Unintended War, World Without war, and Brennan art. in Daedalus.
II. United States Nuclear Policy: In Daedalus -- Kahn, Teller, Kissinger; Arms Control and Disarmament
III. Arms Control and Disarmament: In Daedalus: Bowie, Frye, Schelling, Fromm, Weisner.
IV. Problems of Various Programs: In Daedalus: Boulding, Barnett, Feld, Sohn, Humphrey
V. World Order and International Control: Larson in Daedalus.
VI. Any areas of concern that the seminar members desire to further disuuss or new areas for consideration.
Evaluation. Conclusions and Criticisms

If you have not yet read PREP's first two publications, "Peace, Power and the University" by Al Haber and Dick Flacks, and "Toward an Effective Campus Peace Program" these are available free, or in quantity for a nominal cost from the PREP office (715 Arch St., Ann Arbor, Michigan.) PREP also has available an annotated bibliography of war/peace books prepared by Todd Gitlin.

INFORMAL PEACE SEMINAR AT THE UNIVERSITY OF MICHIGAN

Bibliography: Mendlovitz, Saul (ed.) Legal and Political Problems of World Order Roosevelt, James (ed.) The Liberal Papers.

Suggested Outline -- With Recommended Reading

I. Statement of the Problem: Stable Peace as a Social System by Kenneth Boulding
II. Psychological and Sociological Aspects of the Cold War: The Nature of Man, Ethnocentrism, Nationalism: Mendlovitz pp. 202-224; Riesman and Maccoby in Liberal Papers
III. History of U.S.-U.S.S.R. Relations (Post World War II)
  A. Policies within and between East and West blocs: Warburg in Lib. Pap.
  B. History of Disarmament Negotiations: Mend. pp. 649-723
IV. The Strategies of Arms Control, Deterrence, Disarmament: Mend. pp. 22-56, 500-517, 557-575; Waskow in Lib. Pap.
V. Politico-Economic Problems of Disarmament: Benoit in Lib. Pap; Mend. pp. 739-852; New University Thought, Peace Issue, Spring 1962, pp. 79-92
VI. The Developing Nations: The Peace Race by Seymour Melman
VII. Peace Proposals East and West: Osgood and Hughes in Lib. Pap.; Mend. pp. 575-617, 631-646
VIII. The United Nations: Wright in Lib. Pap. Mend. pp. 238-351
IX. The Role of the Citizen: "Peace, Power and the University," by Al Haber and Dick Flacks; New University Thought, Peace Issue, Spring 1962, pp. 98-119.

Two Organizations interested in developing peace courses on college campuses are:
* The Fund for Education Concerning World Peace Through World Law (11 West 42 St. New York 36, N.Y.) The Fund distributes syllabi for a course on World Peace Khrough World Law.
* The Universities Committee Organization, initiated by Prof. Otto Feinstein (Monteith College, Wayne State University, Detroit, Mich.) is attempting to get faculty at many campuses to establish peace courses and speakers bureaus.

COURSES WITHIN THE CURRICULUM

PSYCHOLOGY:

"Teaching a course in the Psychology of International Relations." Joseph de Rivera, American Psychologist, 1962, 17, 695-699 ABSTRACT

The author describes three ways in which psychologists, acting in their roles as psychologists, can help improve international relations. The first way involves suggesting policy proposals, the second the conduct of relevant research, and the third the teaching of psychology courses in international relations.

Rigourous methodology and experimental concern are two useful scientific imports the psychologist can bring to this field. Further, many areas of current psychological research are already relevant to conflict control and resolution processes. Some course materials that the author suggests include: The Journal of Social Issues, 1961, 17; M. Sherif, et al., Intergroup cooperation and conflict; Charles Osgood, "Reciprocal Initiative," in The Liberal Papers. Several texts in internatinal relations and foreign policy are also suggested.

Finally, the author notes that students are more highly motivated and learn better if they are encouraged to undertake orginal research in connection with the course. Several examples of relevant and fascinating research are presented.

SOCIOLOGY:

National Cultures and World Society taught by Prof. Robert Angell of the Sociology Department of the University of Michigan and Director of the Center for Research on Conflict Resolution.

This course uses sociological concepts to analyze the relations among modern nations. The main problem is seen to be the development of enough consensus on a minimum set of values to make something like a world rule of law possible. After an introductory consideration of nationalism and of Soviet Communism, various current concepts and theories of international relations are examined and compared with a more sociological theory. The remainder of the course is devoted to specific processes and programs that have potential for increasing value consensus. The students read Preventing World War III by Wright, Evan and Deutsch(ed.), How the Soviet System Works by Bauer, Inkeles and Kluckhohn, Indian Students on an American Campus by Lambert and Bressler, much of Deutsch's Nationalism and Social Communication, and of Znaniecki's Modern Nationalities, and some thirty articles or chapters of books in addition.

POLITICAL SCIENCE:

Proseminar in Theoretical Approaches to International Relations taught by Prof. Inis Claude, Jr. of the Department of Political Science at the University of Michigan.

Schedule of Topics for Discussion:
I. Introduction
II. Concept of the Sovereign State
III. Nationalism and National Self-Determination
IV. Concept of Power
V. The Realism-Idealism Debate
VI. Domestic Systems and International Behavior of States
VII. Imperialism-Colonialism
VIII. Nature of the Multistate system
IX. Causes of War
X. The Balance of Power System
XI. Concept of Collective Security
XII. Concept of World Government
XIII. Community-building; Supranationality
IX. Conclusion

Books recommended for purchase:

Claude, Inis L., Jr., Power and International Relations, New York: Random House, 1962

Fox, W.T.R., ed., Theoretical Aspects of International Relations, Notre Dame, Indiana: Univ. of Notre Dame Press, 1959.

Hoffmann, Stanley, ed., Contemporary Theory in International Relations, Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1960.

Peace Research and Education Project
715 Arch Street, Ann Arbor, Michigan
(313-662-2043)

Staff: Richard Schmuck, Richard Flacks, Mark Chesler, Thomas Hayden, Jill Hamberg, Roy Neuberger, Barry Bluestone, Betsy Nusbaum.

Cooperating organizations:

The Fund for Education Concerning World Peace Through World Law
Students for a Democratic Society
Peace Research Institute
Center for Research on Conflict Resolution

SOME THOUGHTS ON THE CURRENT SCENE

by Dick Flacks

What follows is a series of notes, thoughts and proposals for people to ponder, talk about and argue with. They are, for the most part, offered tentatively and without being worked out in any detail. A paper which Tom Hayden and I have been working on will deal with many of the following points in a more substantial way, and will be available in several weeks.

It seems clear, at this point, that the Administration genuinely desires a test-ban treat--in part, to maintain present U.S. nuclear superiority, in part, to limit the proliferation of nuclear weapons, and, in part, to further reduce tensions with the Soviets. The major barrier to an agreement now is the U.S. Senate--the propaganda barrage of the military and congressional hawks seems likely to prevent any further reduction of U.S. inspection requirements. Meanwhile, the Russians, undoubtedly are ambivalent about where their own interests lie with respect to a test-ban; moreover they are unlikely to immediately concede when they know that we know that our inspection demands are unnecessary.

The Russians, I am sure, do not understand that a test-ban treaty would be a major historical event. The necessity for Senate ratification of the treaty would require that the Administration literally stake its political life on proving the desirability of negotiation, accommodation and arms control. We would then have, for the first time in fifteen years, a wide-ranging national debate on Cold War policy.

Present Administration moderation toward the Soviets is a symptom of a significant shift in policy. Policy-makers are increasingly of the belief that the arms race as such has ceased to pay off--that it constitutes a major barrier to effective foreign policy, and its burdens may outweigh its benefits domestically. Some kind of detente and arms agreement with the Soviets is necessary, in the Administration's view, in order to cope with the following porblems:

1) The problem of revolution in Latin America and Asia. This is the major foreign policy preoccupation of the Administration, and the lesson of Vietnam and Cuba for the Administration has been that counter-insurgency war cannot be effectively waged so long as the danger of escalation to nuclear war is great. A detente with the Soviets might free us, especially in Latin America, to prevent, forestall, or suppress revolution.
2) The problem of economic competition within the Western Alliance--the American economy falters in comparison with the European economy--in large part because we are over-committed to military research and production while the Europeans act as if the Cold War did not exist.

The shape of foreign policy and domestic politics from now on is going to be defined by the stagnation of the American economy. The Administration, after two years, has begun to see that this stagnation is profound and not peripheral. But it has apparently decided to hold on to the classic American view that the solution to our domestic fifficulties lies in overseas expansion, and trade. Thus, the danger of imminent nuclear war, may be but a prelude to ever-increasing U.S. involvement in "limited" wars throughout the underdeveloped world--wars fought to preserve and inhance American economic interests wherever they are seriously threatened.

The emerging debate over foreign policy is between corporate reaction--committed to hard anti-Soviet policies and the concept of victory over "communism"--and corporate liberalism--committed to a somewhat less ideological view of the Soviet Union, but equally committed to the preservation and growth of the American corporate system.

It is, however, already apparent that corporate liberalism, despite the greater "rationality" of its policies, is intellectually incapable and political unable to cope with the foreign and domestic problems it now has begun to perceive. The Alliance for Progress is a silly-even pathetic--response to the chaos of Latin America. The tax cut and other Presidential domestic programs will have little effect on poverty, unemployment or the rate of growth. And South Vietnam, where the rebels now control 90% of the country, suggests that counter-insurgency techniques, no matter how "sophisticated"(read "brutal"), will not prevent the overthrow of regimes of corruption and tyranny.

The fundamental debate of the coming years ought, then to be between establishe liberalism and a new radicalism. The defining characteristic of the latter positio will be the demand that immediate attention and full energy and resources be devoted to the problems of this society--that poverty be abolished, full employment established and racial equality guaranteed; this, in contrast to official liberalism's commitment to "aggressive tokenism" and the "long, twilight struggle" to preserve American power.

Such an opposition movement would be a "peace movement"--even if advocacy of foreign policy alternatives were not a major feature of its program. For the creation of powerful demand for major reform in domestic economic and social life would require a fundamental reordering of priorities for our society--major internal reform is incompatible with the "long, twilight struggle"; major internal conflict would disrupt the national consensus which would be necessary for effective prosecution of that struggle.

What is needed now? The requirements of the moment are perhaps somewhat contradictory. In my opinion, these include:

1. Intensified efforts both locally and nationally to build popular support for reduced tension, disarmament agreements, and alternative foreign policies. In particular, we should support and participate in the educational and lobbying projects of groups now attempting to demonstrate support for the test-ban, such as Women's Strike for Peace. Perhaps the outstanding action project for campus groups would be a continuing effort to speak to a wide range of community and student groups about various issues. This has been one of the major efforts of Tocsin, at Harvard; a variant of this is now being tried by Voice, at Michigan--which is sending speakers into fraternities and dormitories to lead discussions about the draft--as a way of focussing attention on the way the cold war affects individual lives. The best place to reach people is in the context of their own groups and organizations; the purpose of such activity is not so much to build a peace movement through recruitment, but to develop a constituency of support for particular policies.

2. Organization for peace politics: In most college towns or district, it ought to be possible to develop strong ties between the local peace people and local political organizations. Where, for example, the Democratic Party is a minority party--there ought to be opportunities for peace concerned students and faculty to actively and effectively influence the choice of candidates and the policies of the local Party. In other districts, a caucus of peace people within the Party can raise issues for debate, frame resolutions, run candidates in primaries. Peace people who are not tied into a political party directly, can influence parties and candidates and congressmen by forming non-partisan citizens groups whose function is to endorse candiates, lobby for specific proposals, etc. Note that the citizens group plays less of an educational role within the community and more of a lobbying function. An effective local peace politics effort requires peace education--to develop a constituency, a non-partisan group--to exert pressure, and, ideally, a caucus of conerned people within one or both of the parties to directly influence the party organization. Peace politics is likely to be meaningful mainly in districts which contain a high proportion of middle class intellectuals or professional people--for it is here where the peace movement is likely to have a base, and where foreign policy is a salient issue. The function of peace politics wherever possible, is to elect to Congress men who are democratically responsive on foreign policy, and to create within the district a body of politically effective people who are independent of established liberalism--and conscious of the need for radical reform. In most areas, the main focus of such an effort may not be foreign policy, but rather, the more immediate and pressing problems of race, employment poverty, etc. Thus, "peace politics" becomes one of several kinds of possible "insurgent politics" that seem to be developing in many parts of the country.

3. There is an immediate need for serious research, analysis and writing pointed toward: first, the development of alternative programs for dealing with our problems, and second, the development of strategy for the new politics of reform. Examples of the first would be programs for eradicating poverty, and technological unemployment, focussed on particular locales and conditions and relating these problems to defense production. Examples of the second, might include--what particular congressional districts are potentially open for effective peace politics, what is the demographic, sociological and political structure of one's district, what political issues are of central importance in the district and what kinds of organization, argument and appeal might be effective in building constituencies around particular issues.

* * *

STUDENT ATTITUDES AND REACTION TO THE CUBAN CRISIS AND PUBLIC DISSENT

by Richard Schmuck and Mark Chesler

President Kennedy's national address on October 22, 1962, highlighted an increasing public concern with a buildup of Soviet armaments in Cuba. In that speech, the President announced a naval quaratine of Cuba, and subsequently, called up approximately 14,000 Air Force reservists preparatory to further U.S. action.

Public dissent from the administration's policy occurred in the form of demonstrations in Washington, at the UN, and on several college campuses. One such demonstartion occurred at the University of Michigan. The University of Michigan demonstrators were met with a crowd of anti-demonstrators who supported the administration's position. The anti-demonstration group attempted to prevent the original protestors from standing and marching by throwing eggs, taunting, and finally blocking the marchers.

During such a national crisis, and one augmented by such diverse and passionate local activity, individual political beliefs and attitudes are heightened. The threat of destruction, increased reference group activity, the need to "stand up and be counted," are all reasons for the activation of attitudinal structures and dramatize the particular utility of psycho-social research in crisis periods. Research was undertaken on the "great middle," that portion of the Michigan student community who did not overtly participate in either the demonstrations or the anti-demonstration.

The research design included the administration of a series of attitude scales, and an open ended and structured opinionnaire on attitudes toward public policy in the Cuban crisis, and the behavior of the various demonstrations. Further, social and family background data was collected on the sample of student respondents (N=69).

The results indicate a considerable degree of consensus among this "great middle," with over seventy percent of the respondents agreeing that "we should make sure the missiles are out (of Cuba) but not invade." In response to an open ended question: "When President Kennedy announced the U.S. decision to establish the Cuban quarantine, I felt..."; 56% of the sample volunteered the information that they felt "scared," "worried," fearful of war." These individual characteristically favored more lenient or minimal sanctions toward Cuba. The group that was not scared, or at least did not voluteer such information, generally favored harsher U.S. sanctions.

The "scared" population attributed a lesser role to public opinion in policy formation than did the "non-scared." Scared individuals may see themselves as helpless in the face of a war, see no major role for an effective public and no way in which they can affect a disagreeable and dangerous course of events. Therefore, they may withdraw from piblic involvement with such issues. On the other hand, the non-scared and approving persons may view public opinion as playing a more powerful role because their own favored policies are being accepted and acted upon.

In response to another open-ended question, 63% of the sample felt that the demonstrators who protested the official U.S. policy were justified; the demonstrators were seen as exercising their rights by these persons. The respondents did not necessarily agree with the protest, but felt it was justified. The group that felt the demonstrations were not justified did so on the basis that such protests were absurd, ineffective, misinformed or disloyal. Students who stressed freedom of speech as a fact in evaluating this particular issue tended to take a more liberal position in evaluating the place of dissent in national emergencies in general.

The data also indicate a cluster of attitudes among students favoring harsher sanctions toward Cuba. Generally, these students scored higher on scales measuring militarism and conservatism; and these scales are associated with higher scores and scales of ethnocentrism, patriotism, dogmatism, and low scores on intellectualism. Not surprisingly, Republican students scored higher on conservativism and favored harsher policies toward Cuba. Along with these characteristics, more conservative and dogmatic students came from homes where: the father supervised several other workers, the father was at least a college graduate, and the mother did not work.

Additional interviewing focussing on the family background and attitudinal correlates of reactions to national crisis are planned. The hypotheses and findings generated in this study will be further tested in the future.

Many important implications of this research lies in the information collected about dissent, and student reactions to dissent in national emergencies. It appears that current behavior does not accurately reflect the traditions of legitimate debate which are the foundations of a viable democratic society. It is questioned whether it is possible to maintian dissent when the media of mass information are manipulated and directed in support of national policy. Further research is planned on discovering the criteria for public evaluation of national policy and the channels for legitimate public protest and dissent from policy.

Place Drops.

Arizona Group Pushing Revision Of Laws Governing Mental Health

MENTAL HEALTH ALERT

Nowhere does the Constitution of the United States state that the liberties we cherish are reserved only for those whom Mental Health Laws or social customs determine to be "mentally healthy," or that these rights are to be withheld from any specific group based on racial, religious, or psychiatric criteria.

On every hand we see the fight for the rights of racial and religious minority groups being publicized, while at the same time the destruction of the rights of, and legal discrimination against citizens whom only one person "believes" to be "mentally ill," goes unnoticed.

This legal destruction of rights via Mental Health Laws includes committed patients being fingerprinted, recorded in government files, deprived of the right to vote or hold office, and denied the right to dispose of their own property, as though they were common criminals tried and convicted of crimes against society. All this is done under the pretense that it is for the "patient's own good."

It is no wonder that private citizens and psychiatrists opposed to the Mental Health movement are deeply concerned about these laws and the source from which they spring. Dr. Thomas Szasz, Professor of Psychiatry at New York Upstate University at Syracuse, and Diplomate, American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology, writing in the American Journal of Psychiatry for October, 1962, points out that Mental Health "defendants can be denied the right of trial on the mere suspicion of 'mental illness.' "

In considering the PSYCHIATRIC SUBVERSION OF CONSTITUTIONAL RIGHTS, he calls attention to the fact that there are "values inherent in the right to go to jail instead of being subjected to unwanted psychiatric 'treatment', for in jail a person is let alone, while in a mental hospital he may not be. A prisoner will be released after completion of sentence, and possibly before, but a mental patient may be required to undergo a change in his 'inner personality', a change that may be induced by measures far more brutal and intrusive than anything permitted in a jail, before 'psychiatric authorities' will let him go. Besides, commitment, unlike sentence, may be for an indefinite period -- up to life.

This is a discriminatory form of tyranny against which the Constitution specifically protects us. deprive individuals of their freedom, and of their Constitutionally guaranteed right to a public hearing such as is accorded the most hardened criminal or treasonous Communist working to overthrow our government.

These laws have come about through pressures exerted upon state legislatures by certain psychiatrists, mental hospital superintendents, certain social workers, and by the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and certain quasi-official conferences of state and national officials where propaganda passes as fact. Combined with pressures exerted by citizens brainwashed by a barrage of propaganda into forming influential do-gooder movements for effectively implementing the program, this force is strong enough to push through un-American laws.

It would appear that Lenin's admonition, "Get control of the Public Health Agencies; they are the keystone to the arch of the Socialized State", is deliberately being implemented.

This technique of exerting pressures "from above" and "from below" by both official and public opinion, generated by propaganda in the guise of meeting "needs", is common Communist procedure, and its use is clearly delineated in Czechoslovakian Jan Kozak's blueprint for the takeover of any representative form of government.

At the national level, we hear about President Kennedy's "bold, new program" for "retarded" children, but as is always the case, the proposed bills apply to every citizen and are not at all to alleviate the plight of the genuinely retarded child.

The program is not "new"; it has been part of the Communist plan for conquest of the United States and the remnants of the free world since the first days of revolutionary radicalism.

"Bold", yes, because it sponsors outright usurpation of state's rights and of the individual freedom of the entire citizenry. Senator Lister Hill's Bills 755 and 756 call for immense sums from the taxpayers to finance "mental health centers" in practically every city and town, and to provide for research under the catch-all phrases "for related purposes" which includes "relating to human development whether biological, medical, social, or behavioral, which may assist in finding the causes and means of prevention of mental retardation."

The "facilities" are to be "specifically designed for the diagnosis, treatment, education, training and custodian care." Keeping "by a majority of those present" in the Senate during the start of the Easter vacation when only eight Senators were in the chambers. He squeaked through by a vote of four to three.

Mike Mansfield, Hubert Humphrey, Pat McNamara and George Smathers approved; Carl Curtis, J. J. Williams and George Aiken voted against the appointment.

Mrs. Maurine Neuberger, presiding, did not vote. Is it any wonder that psychiatrists and laymen who oppose this program are deeply concerned about the source of these laws, and the way in which they will be enforced?

One cult of psychiatrists have expressed their views about the need for Mental Health as a means for forcing our country into World Government.

Dr. Brock Chisolm, founder of the movement and the World Health Organization, was brought to the United States by ALGER HISS to sell his ideas to Washington officials. His peregrinations and pronouncements are constantly noted in the Communist press. The west coast Communist PEOPLE'S WORLD for March 30, '63, for example, reported on his recent speech, "Children in Our Uncertain World", in which he again decried children being "held down by limiting loyalties" such as "standards of patriotism". Chisholm has always deplored both patriotism and moral standards based on Christianity.

(See: Nesta Webster's THE FRENCH REVOLUTION, also her SECRET SOCIETIES AND SUBVERSIVE MOVEMENTS.)

Chisholm is currently a member of the study panel on "Technical Problems of Arms Control" of the Institute for International Order, recently exposed by Edith Kermit Roosevelt as doing "research" into ways of ferreting out "pockets of resistance" to the takeover of our country by the World Government.

These "experts," including Jerome Weisner, President Kennedy's top scientific advisor, are studying ways to "recruit and train competent secret agents" who will develop the informer system necessary to extort information from "key people" by means of "depth interviews, polygraphs, drugs, hypnosis" and "other psychological techniques." This "international control system" will include Russia and Red China, both of whose work in brainwashing and mind control could be adapted by our "experts." At the Sixth Pugwash ant incompetent to stand trial in virtually every case in which the issue was raised by an important person, whether judge, defense counsel, or prosecutor?" It is interesting to note that this article was in print before the case of General Edwin Walker ever came into being.

No one denies that at the local level, there may well be the need to care for the small group of children who are actually retarded. But will patriotism and adherence to Christian moral standards be the symptoms on which diagnosis is made and "treatment" prescribed?

Professor Richard Hofstadter of Columbia University has stated that "15 per cent of the over-principled population should be encapsulated."

And George Bernard Shaw, in the British Labor Monthly of October, 1921, explained: "In a fully Socialized state, opposition to the ruling clique must from force of circumstances take the form of underground conspiracy, working secretly until it is strong enough for an open test of strength. (as in Hungary? — Ed.) Against this danger the ruling clique must protect itself with a gigantic spy service.

Russia's gigantic spy service and perpetual liquidations of suspected oppositionists are no accidental features. They are inherent in full Socialism."

It would appear that the contemporary Internationalists are talreadv taking precautionary measures to protect their police state elite.

On the other hand, the intended victims would be traitors to their own children and their country and freedom if they failed to realize what such a future holds, despite reassurances from sociometrists, mental health spokesmen and the International Order experts.

A former Bolshevik Commissar of Justice named Steinberg, in the New York Times of Feb. 23, '30, describes the actual situation. "On the one side, we have intoxication with POWER and a realization that anything done by him who wields power will go unpunished; and on the other, fear, depression, silent hatred and sycophancy — the rise of two classes, masters and slaves. In turn the relations among the suspects bebome themesleves perverted. In the struggle to win the favor of the authorities treachery assumes appalling dimensions. All become slaves with respect to the government and wolves with respect to each other." Plain common sense can interpret this warning.

Out Of The Mail Bag

Amarillo, Texas
4602 Olsen

DEAR EDITOR:

As we understand it: Some reflections on foreign policy. . .our own State Dept. refused permission to top ranking American military men to speak of "victory over our enemies "or even to refer to the existence of a "cold, limited or general war."

One of the greatest institutions we have is "private property"; private property is what the cold war IS ALL ABOUT. Since the Punta del Este Conference in Uraguay two years ago, the U.S. has been on a course that undermines private property in Latin America. We have spent many millions in bolstering the Marxist-Socialist government in Bolivia.

Khrushchev once said; "The U. S. would adopt the principles of communism bit by bit until it found that it had become a communist state."

In his COMMUNIST MANIFESTO Karl Marx wrote: "The theory of the communists is the ABOLITION OF PRIVATE PROPERTY."

DICTATORS REQUIRE CONTROLLED NEWS; not only does the Soviet Government CONTROL the newspapers; it also CONTROLS the radio stations, magazines, and books and uses them to pour out the image they wish the poor Russian slave people to see. Literature, drama, painting, music, movies and even science must all follow the official Party line and help to create this desired image to the underlings.

Is this what IS HAPPENING RIGHT NOW in the United States? Think!

Managed news is the technique which has been employed by every TOTALITARIAN form of government in the HISTORY OF MANKIND.

It is now in use in every communist (dictator) country in the world. We want to trust and respect our government but when it fails to trust and respect the people of America, it is time for the people to alert themselves. Certainly one of the greatest BULWARKS OF A REPUBLIC IS A FREE PRESS. (Our people, having known freedom of SPEECH, ASSEMBLY, PRESS, RELIGION DO NOT want regimentation, (Slavery).

Russian acceptance of a small number of control stations and on-site inspections has raised the hopes for an agreement on a test ban. ACTUALLY SUCH A BAN would be virtually UNPOLICED.

It would ENDANGER OUR SECURITY and HELP THE SOVIET UNION in its plan to CONQUER the whole world.

Political resolutions adopted by WASHINGTON'S era, he warned the American people AGAINST THE insidious wiles of FOREIGN influence, the jealousy of A FREE PEOPLE ought to be CONSTANTLY AWAKE, since history and EXPERIENCE PROVE that foreign INFLUENCE is one of the most BANEFUL FOES of Republican Government. Yet this is THE OFFICIAL policy of our government planners TODAY. Our State Dept. has long pushed the IDEA of a strong UN and a military so great that no single nation could resist. The Soviets will accept this ONLY WHEN THE SOVIETS CONTROL THE UN. So please GET THE UNITED STATES OUT OF THE UN.

Respectfully,
Mrs. B. E. Walker

P. S. By all means keep the Connally Amendment.

Mrs. Straiton Hard
120 Lafayette Drive, N.E.
Atlanta. Georgia

May 17, 1963

Mr. William R. Kintner,
Deputy Director
Foreign Policy Research Ins.
University of Pennsylvania
Philadelphia. Pennsylvania

Dear Mr. Kintner:

I have for acknowledgment your letter of April 22, 1963, with its many intemperate references to a protest I addressed to Senator Thomas Dodd on May 28, 1962, in regard to his ill-advised sponsorship into the May 10, 1962, Congressional Record of two scurrilous articles attacking the John Birch Society, one of the articles having been written by you and the other by one Harvey Schechter (of the Anti-Defamation League).

Before commenting on the inaccuracies with which your letter is saturated, may I point out that for one with your academic pretensions, it is a letter which is singularly lacking in scholarship. I refer, of course, to the fact that you completely disregarded the rules of debate when you substituted an attack upon me personally for your failure to furnish documented refutation of a single one of the statements made in my letter to Senator Dodd. Perhaps, however, I should not be surprised at such behavior, inasmuch as it seems to be a common practice now in some circles to ambush the messenger when the message carried cannot be gainsaid.

And now I would like to discuss the inaccurate statements made in your letter:

You say (1) "Mr. Dan Smoot was not at the Asilomar Conference and his distorted reporting on the Nuclear Age," was distributed at a "Strategy" Seminar conducted in Atlanta, Georgia in June, 1961, by the Institute for American Strategy under the auspices of the Fulton County Medical Association. Considering the fact that your colleague, Mr. Frank R. Barnett, (CFR), was one of the principal speakers at this "Strategy" Seminar. I am not surprised to find the lead article in "American Startegy for the Nuclear Age" to be a reprint of a Council on Foreign Relations Report compiled in 1959 at a meeting attended by the following "liberals," some of whom were identified with the infamous Institute of Pacific Relations, many of whom advocate recognition of Red China, and all of whom are members of the Council of Foreign Relations:

Frank Altschul, Hamilton Fish Armstrong, A. A. Berle, Jr., Robert Blum, Robert R. Bowie, John Cowles, Arthur Dean, Thomas Finletter, William C. Foster, Averill Harriman, Philip Jessup, Joseph E. Johnson, Henry Luce, I. I. Rabi, Henry M. Wriston.

It might be possible, Mr. Kintner, for you and your CFR associates to palm off "American Strategy for the Nuclear Age" on the uninitiated, but you should never waste time trying to slip it into the library of an informed anti-Communist as a manual on anti-Communism. True, the book contains occasional articles by men like General Arthur G. Trudeau and Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, but these few sound pieces are sandwiched between so many contributions of CFR members that they are of little value in neutralizing the material of men like Robert Strausz-Hupe and of Dean Acheson (who turned his back on America's friend, Chiang Kai Shek, but not on Alger Hiss).

You say (3) "As the author of the article in the "Reader's Digest," I can assure you that your statement that 'Kintner's companion piece was written solely to discredit the Birch Society' is completely erroneous. I trust I know my own mind better than you."

Do you really know your own mind, Mr. Kintner? I ask the question because your short article which purported to be an attack upon all "extremist" groups mentioned only one of these groups by name — the John Birch Society. Moreover, the Society was mentioned not once, but several times, and in addition the article made unrestrained use of such smear terms as "Birchite" from the rest of the text, I assure you):

"No group or organization in the history of American politics or public life has been subjected to such a prolonged, concerted, malicious, mendacious, determined and hysterical smear at the hands of supposedly responsible publicists as the John Birch Society. . . .

"No two-bit columnist, no sick-joke night club wit, no time serving political jefe at the public hog-trough, especially in Sacremento, no editorial pundit armed with the educated language of disciplined distortion and misrepresentation, no professional peepul's friend with his hand in the peepul's pocket, no maggot intelligence of the college campus, no rancid liberal in the rag-bag ranks of the peace marchers, but hastened with banshee screams to gang up on the Birchers.

"Nobody, that is, but a large and apparently ever growing segment of public opinion which is gathered to the Birchers' ways of thinking, if not their actual ranks of enrollment, with every fresh barrage of dead cats from the gloomy mandarins of the press and radio. Numbers of people began to see in the alleged subversion attributed to the Birchers what used, once in the almost forgotten past, to be known as plain American Patriotism."

Very truly yours,
Elizabeth D. Hard

cc: (with copy of W.R.K. letter of April 22, 1963)
General Arthur G. Trudeau
Senator Thomas Dodd
Mr. Robert Welch
Mr. Lucius Beebe
Various Newspapers

Amarillo, Texas
4602 Olsen

DEAR CONGRESSMAN:

Please stop fighting brush fires and concentrate all POWER TO PASS THE LIBERTY AMENDMENT; by so doing you will get the U. S. Government OUT of competetion with private enterprise; then this now held government property will be SOLD to private concerns and the money used to pay the national debt. (1). Get the UNITED STATES OUT of the UN Trojan horse which is trying to take us over from WITHIN. (3). Stop the initiative destroying, graduated income tax which is now taxing the American people to the DEATH. SO PLEASE PASS THE LIBERTY AMENDMENT.

Following are the terms of the proposed LIBERTY AMENDMENT: which is now pending in the Congress as HJ Res. by Congressman James B. Utt in the jected to unwanted psychiatric 'treatment', for in jail a person is let alone, while in a mental hospital he may not be. A prisoner will be released after completion of sentence, and possibly before, but a mental patient may be required to undergo a change in his 'inner personality', a change that may be induced by measures far more brutal and intrusive than anything permitted in a jail, before 'psychiatric authorities' will let him go. Besides, commitment, unlike sentence, may be for an indefinite period -- up to life.

This is a discriminatory form of tyranny against which the Constitution specifically protects us.

No standard behavior norms exist, deviation from which can be termed "mental illness," yet many well-meaning people have been duped into accepting this catch-all "diagnosis" as though it were a disease entity similar to some bodily illnesses. Until the power of the Mental Health movement came into prominence, insanity was defined legally as a state in which the person was a danger to himself and to the safety of others. Under Mental Health commitment procedures, it is merely necessary that someone — almost anyone — judge him to be "in need of treatment."

In another article, THE MYTH OF MENTAL ILLNESS, published in the February, 1960 "American Psychologist", Dr. Szasz explains, "The notion of mental illness serves mainly to obscure the everyday fact that life, for most people, is a continuous struggle, not for biological survival, but for 'a place in the sun', 'peace of mind', or some other human value. . . .Sustained adherence to the myth of mental illness allows people to avoid facing this problem, believing that mental health automatically insures making the right and safe choices in one's conduct of life. But the facts are the other way.

"It is making the good choices in life that others regard, retrospectively, as good mental health! The myth of mental illness encourages us, moreover, to believe in its logical corallary: that social intercourse would be harmonious, satisfying, and the secure basis of a 'good life' were it not for the disrupting influence of mental illness". But he also points out that men must have the courage and integrity to tackle their own personal, social and ethical conflicts, and face the real nature of their problems in living, whether these problems be of a biological, economic, political or sociopolitical nature.

Dr. Georgene Seward, Professor of Psychology at University of Southern California, made a study of local psychiatrists to determine how their own training and socio-ethical orientation influenced their diagnosis and treatment of each case.

She reported to the Association for the Advancement of Psychoanalysis that "personal value orientation affect the way analysts of different schools perceive the responsibility of the treatment situation." The opposing opinions of psychiatrists for the defense or for the prosecution in many criminal cases illustrates this wide variance, and is a matter of common knowledge.

Anyone who makes a study of such cases, and of the numerous occasions when patriots who have spoken out against the United Nations and Communism have been declared "mentally ill," must concur with Dr. Seward, and conclude that there really is no criteria for judging "mental health" or "mental illness"; it is just what some psychiatrist says it is in given circumstances. This is a dangerous, and a flimsy foundation on which to erect a whole structure of Mental Health laws which can sors outright usurpation of state's rights and of the individual freedom of the entire citizenry. Senator Lister Hill's Bills 755 and 756 call for immense sums from the taxpayers to finance "mental health centers" in practically every city and town, and to provide for research under the catch-all phrases "for related purposes" which includes "relating to human development whether biological, medical, social, or behavioral, which may assist in finding the causes and means of prevention of mental retardation."

The "facilities" are to be "specifically designed for the diagnosis, treatment, education, training and custodian care." Keeping in mind that socialist-pacifist activities of Harry Overstreet date back to the Lusk Report of 1920, Americans should question the motivation behind his statement, made in THE GREAT ENTERPRIZE, written in 1952, in which he speaks of "rigidity" and "constellations of prejudices," and in which he defines people who may be "angrily against race equality, public housing, the TVA, financial and technical aid to backward countries, organized labor, and the preaching of social rather than salvational religion. . . .are now, we recognize, well along the way toward mental illness." Is this to be the basis of diagnosis?

In the California Senate Report of the Committee Investigating Education, there is a section of almost one hundred pages on subversion through Mental Health programs. Included are lengthy quotations from Dr. J. L. Moreno, father of Psycho-drama, in whose book WHO SHALL SURVIVE, is given a forewarning about the "education and training we might expect from these government-controlled "facilities" when he confesses that "highly directive sociodrama can be used for the indoctrination of any set of values, religious, communistic or fascistic." He goes on to explain that "group-centered form of sociodrama, unless prohibited by law, is a natural ally of democratic processes." Every student of Communism recognizes that "democratic processes" means transition to Communism.

Perhaps to forestall any "legal prohibitions," Congressman Emanuel Cellers has introduced House Resolution 25 providing that the Interstate Mental Health Compact should apply to all states whether they ratify it or not.

This, despite resolutions regularly introduced by Congressman Usher Burdick and Congressman Edgar Hiestand, urging that all Mental Health legislations should be curtained until Congress could investigate the entire movement.

Cellers' bills constitute an all-out effort by certain elements to gain control over the minds, the lives and the freedom of the entire population of our country.

It is imperative that concerned citizens inform themselves of the extensive Communist front activities of Dr. Wilbur Cohen, Assistant Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare, for it is this bureau which controls the activities and formulates the legislation for the whole program. At the time of Professor Cohen's appointment by President Kennedy, his entire background was presented under oath to the Senate Finance Committee, with documented proof of the contention that "Through the positions he has held and the power he has wielded, he has, more than anyone else, thrust the United States into the World Conspiracy, not only for the nationalization of medicine but for the establishment of a Socialist form of government."

In spite of the complete dossier on his activities and associations, his appointment was confirmed

"pockets of resistance" to the takeover of our country by the World Government.

These "experts," including Jerome Weisner, President Kennedy's top scientific advisor, are studying ways to "recruit and train competent secret agents" who will develop the informer system necessary to extort information from "key people" by means of "depth interviews, polygraphs, drugs, hypnosis" and "other psychological techniques." This "international control system" will include Russia and Red China, both of whose work in brainwashing and mind control could be adapted by our "experts." At the Sixth Pugwash Conference, May 29, 1960, Wiesner discussed the "inspection of people" as an "important inspection technique" with Soviet police-state General T. A. Talensky and Admiral I. A. Isakov, hailing One-Worlder L. C. Bohn's proposal that the spies could be rewarded by large sums of money and political office.

What better way to implement the "ferreting out" and destruction of patriots who resist the takeover than by using the proposed network of Mental Health "facilities" as instruments for commitment to experimental sites from which there is no hope of escape?

The ultimate goal has been expressed by Dr. Moreno in another book, SOCIOMETRY. . . AN APPROACH TO A NEW POLITICAL ORIENTATION, when he writes, "Sociometric revolutions do not promise violent and rapid results. They dig deep and their success depends upon new learning processes applied to small groups. . .As human society is ailing we can expect a psychiatric empire to emerge gradually and spread over the glove. Politicians and diplomats will move to second status.

"Social scientists, psychiatrists, sociatrists, and sociometrically oriented socialists will move into first.

"The mentor in the White House, a future President of the United States, may well be a psychiatrist before another century has passed. Is not the whole cosmos beginning more and more to look like a huge mental institution with God the physician in charge?"

Fabian Socialists likewise are working on the non-violent revolution and this program could hasten their takeover if Americans are not alerted to the danger.

Every freedom-loving American will do well to question WHICH psychiatrists are to control the world.

Dr. Szasz draws a startling parallel when he writes " 'Mental Illness' is conveniently undefined simply because there is no such entity."

He points out, "Its presence is ascertained by reference to the judgment of experts, in this case, psychiatrists. In this respect 'Mental Illness' is like witchcraft, which also was never clearly defined, but which experts found little difficulty in diagnosing. Given these circumstances, I submit that government psychiatrists (or so - called forensic psychiatrists generally), like ecclesiastic witch hunters will easily find large numbers of mentally sick persons.

"This will be especially true whenever 'the right sort' of persons prefer the 'charge.' If this is doubted, we should ask ourselves how long the witch hunter who never found any witches would have lasted in his job.

Similarly, how long would a court retain a psychiatrist who found most defendants fit to stand trial, and who never interferred on psychiatric grounds with the trial of a defendant who wanted to be tried. 4

Finally would such a psychiatrist be as popular as those of his colleagues who find the defend-of Justice named Steinberg, in the New York Times of Feb. 23, '30, describes the actual situation. "On the one side, we have intoxication with POWER and a realization that anything done by him who wields power will go unpunished; and on the other, fear, depression, silent hatred and sycophancy — the rise of two classes, masters and slaves. In turn the relations among the suspects bebome themesleves perverted. In the struggle to win the favor of the authorities treachery assumes appalling dimensions. All become slaves with respect to the government and wolves with respect to each other." Plain common sense can interpret this warning.

Again, no one denies the real need to care for the insane at the local level. But Mental Health legislation is all directed to transferring the "mentally ill" out of their own state to any and every other state "facility," including Alaska's million acre compound. Government psychiatrists on the government payroll, working in government clinics, could be the nucleus of the spy system the psychiatric elite visualize to rid the world of opposition to their schemes.

What starts as an appeal to the heart concerning the care of the truly unfortunate retared children or of the insane should not be permitted to burgeon into wholesale mind control by government bureaucrats. Legislators and physicians, in particular, should inform themselves about the orientation of those persons promoting such a questionable program.

Mental Health is discussed at length in the Russian book BRAINWASHING and Edward Hunter's book of the same title discloses how those methods were actually used on our Korean war prisoners.

This is PSYCHOPOLITICS at work, and PSYCHOPOLITICS is the ultimate instrument of Communism for taking over the free world.

ARIZONANS FOR MENTAL FREEDOM — P. O. Box 7269, Phoenix 11, Ariz.

★

SUGGESTED READING

THE FREUDIAN ETHIC — By Richard La Pierre,

PSYCHIATRY AND RESPONSIBILITY — By Schoeck & Wiggins, Editors,

THE FRENCH REVOLUTION— By Nesta Webster,

SECRET SOCIETIES AND SUBVERSIVE MOVEMENTS — By Nesta Webster,

TESTIMONY ON APPOINTMENT OF WILBER J. COHEN — By Shearon Legislative Service, 8801 Jones Mill Rd., Chevy Chase 15, M. D. (75c)

SIXTEENTH REPORT—Calif., Senate Investigating Committee on Education '57,

THE BRAIN WATCHERS — By Martin L. Gross,

MENTAL ROBOTS — By Alesen,

TECHNIQUES OF COMMUNISM by Budenz by Budenz,

CONQUEST OF THE AMERICAN MIND — By Wittmer,

PREJUDICE AND THE PRESS — By Frank Hughes.

APPROVE INSURANCE BILL

WASHINGTON (UPI) — The Senate Finance Committee Wednesday approved a bill to give World War II and Korean War veterans an opportunity to renew G.I. life insurance they have allowed to lapse.

Although the Senate has passed the measure at least five times previously, it always has died in the House.

Veterans Administration officials have said the plan would not cost the government any money because veterans would pay all the costs.

ple of America, it is time for the people to alert themselves. Certainly one of the greatest BULWARKS OF A REPUBLIC IS A FREE PRESS. (Our people, having known freedom of SPEECH, ASSEMBLY, PRESS, RELIGION DO NOT want regimentation, (Slavery).

Russian acceptance of a small number of control stations and onsite inspections has raised the hopes for an agreement on a test ban. ACTUALLY SUCH A BAN would be virtually UNPOLICED.

It would ENDANGER OUR SECURITY and HELP THE SOVIET UNION in its plan to CONQUER the whole world.

Political resolutions adopted by the Communist Party of the U.S. at its 17th national convention in New York City in Dec. 1959, included the following: "Abolish the witch-hunting HOUSE COMMITTEE on UN-American Activities and the Senate Internal Security Committee. WHY?

They want no one checking on their SUBVERSIVE WORK! The U. S. not only can get along WITHOUT the UN, it will HAVE TO if it hopes to save individual FREEDOM and preserve national INDEPENDENCE. Every day, the Mistaken who hold KEY position in the UN (they are NUMEROUS) are hacking away at private ownership and at the same time are being SUBSIDIZED by the American TAXPAYER to perform their DESTRUCTIVE WORKS! Those well-intentioned persons who say the UN has given us peace conveniently IGNORE the FACT that we have been CONSTANTLY AT WAR. How else did the Communist ENSLAVE A BILLION human beings since the UN was formed? (does GOD know?) Why did we lose thousands of men in Korea? How is the blood bath of the HUNGARIAN REVOLUTION to be explained or the war in THE MIDDLE EAST which the UN did not prevent? Or more recently the African DISASTER caused by UN policies directed against the "colonial powers"?

The UN HAS NOT, and CANNOT, bring PEACE. Negotiations and action taken through the UN have generally meant FAILURE. Subversion, sabotage, raids, assinations, kidnapings, roadblocks, guerilla fighting, civil war and threats of still greater violence ARE NOT peace. These CONSTITUTE what the communists CALL PEACEFUL CO-EXISTENCE.

Do we, THE AMERICAN PEOPLE, wish to finance economic CHAOS, irritable non-participation based on SUBVERSIVE AIMS, and the HORRIBLE PLAN which the communist have in store for mankind? (ALL of which ARE PRESENT IN THE UNITED NATIONS.

Here in the UNITED STATES, we have a government OF, BY and FOR the people. Our U. S. CONSTITUTION guarantees us this (but WE MUST ENFORCE IT). The Soviet government is of, by and for THE FEW. The FEW, the FEW.

Hundreds of millions of CHINESE are in bondage TODAY as a direct result of this art of DECEPTION. Under this cloak of democracy in China the people were SUBDUED. This strategy of DECEPTION IS BEING NOW USED but this time the stakes are MUCH HIGHER. . . THE WHOLE WORLD and the LIBERTY OF OUR CHILDREN! Yet the corner stones of our foreign policy are based upon peaceful co-existence. This is the significance of the Fullbright memorandum, the Rostow memorandum, our whole Disarmament program (it is NO DIS-armament plan at all but a blueprint for the TRANSFER of our OWN AMERICAN MILITARY to U Thant and the UN (look what the UN under Thant did in Katanga. . . a blood bath to THE DEATH).

Late in PRESIDENT GEORGE

sonally for your failure to furnish documented refutation of a single one of the statements made in my letter to Senator Dodd. Perhaps, however, I should not be surprised at such behavior, inasmuch as it seems to be a common practice now in some circles to ambush the messenger when the message carried cannot be gainsaid.

And now I would like to discuss the inaccurate statements made in your letter:

You say (1) "Mr. Dan Smoot was not at the Asilomar Conference and his distorted reporting on the remarks made by Dr. Stauz-Hupe was designed to produce the inaccurate interpretations contained in your letter."

Mr. Kintner, you could have spared yourself this clumsy attempt at "sleight of hand" because you know very well that it was no more necessary for Mr. Smoot to have been present at the Asilomar Conference in order to quote Mr. Strausz-Hupe correctly than it was for you to have attended the Twenty-first Communist Party Congress in Moscow in 1959 in order to quote Khrushchev correctly, something which you did in a recent article when you credited the Butcher with having said: "We are interested in winning in a historcally brief period of time."

Do you deny that Mr. Strausz-Hupe defined National Sovereignty at Asilomar as "an obsolete state form," and do you deny that he recommended to the Asilomar assemblage that NATO countries be transformed first into a "supranational" state and then "into a wider union?" If so, will you please tell us precisely what Mr. Strausz-Hupe did say, and at the same time tell us also whether he is still an official of the ATLANTIC UNION COMMITTEE which has striven for years to merge the United States first, into a union of North Atlantic states, and then into a world federation.

Is it not a fact that you too, Mr. Kintner, want to substitute a North Atlantic Union for American Independence and that you so stated in the following language in a speech delivered at Baton Rouge, Louisiana on May 25, 1962 —

"We must move toward greater political cooperation with our principal allies. (Emphasis added.)

Is it not true, also, that both you and Mr. Strausz Hupe are members of the Council on Foreign Relations, an organization which proposed in the following language that the Declaration of Independence be jettisoned and that a socialist-controlled Atlantic Community be substituted in its stead:

"Far closer political and economical alliance should be developed among the North Atlantic nations. . . . It is outdated to depend too rigidly on the nation-state alone. . . . Traditions must be universalized." (Emphasis added.)

You say (2) "Although the Institute for American Strategy is not 'Mr. Kintner's Institute', I am quite familiar with "American Strategy for the Nuclear Age." Have you read it? If not I will forward a copy for your perusal."

"American Strategy for the written solely to discredit the Birch Society' is completely erroneous. I trust I know my own mind better than you."

Do you really know your own mind, Mr. Kintner? I ask the question because your short article which purported to be an attack upon all "extremist" groups mentioned only one of these groups by name — the John Birch Society. Moreover, the Society was mentioned not once, but several times, and in addition the article made unrestrained use of such smear terms as "Birchite," "Birchite-type," and "Birchite-Walker," (most of which, of course, were coined in Moscow and then fed to Communist publications such as the Worker and People's World). I can appreciate your desire to have the article accepted as an objective study of what the "liberals" (and Communists) call the "extremist" movement. However, you can't get away with it as you exposed your real feelings by placing an excessive amount of emphasis on the Society. Furthermore, Senator Dodd (who seems more interested in autopsies than in cures because, unlike Joseph McCarthy, he seldom exposes a Communist until the culprit is already in the public eye) evidently considered the Society to be your main target because he made the following comments in his own unreasoned attacks which prefaced the insertion of your article and the one by Mr. Harvey Schechter (of the Anti-Defamation League) in the Congressional Record:

"Colonel Kintner is a determined foe of the John Birch Society and of other extremist organizations. . ."

You say (4) "Although you claim not to be a member of the John Birch Society, you write very much as if you were . . ."

I repeat that I am not a member of the John Birch Society, Mr. Kintner, but that does not mean, nor did it ever mean, that I consider it to be an "extremist" organization because the contrary is true. My feelings about the Society were summed up in the following paragraph of my letter of May 28, 1962 to Senator Dodd and they remain unchanged at this time:

"Do you not also agree with me that the Communists never waste motion in destroying an effective obstacle to their program of world conquest? Do you find as I do, a special signifigance in the fact that Mr. Kintner has conducted his anti-Communist crusade for seven years, virtually without notice from the Communists, whereas the John Birch Society, after two years of work in the same field, has been the target of the most vicious defamation effort ever known in this country, with the exception of Senator Joseph McCarthy, whom the anti-anti-Communist puppets finished off with the Communists pulling the strings?"

Truth is beginning to prevail, Mr. Kintner, and the stream of slander and distortion which "liberals" everywhere spewed ceaselessly at the Society has largely lost its pressure with the result that an increasing number of people are finding merit in what it is trying to accomplish.

Lucius Beebe, a regular columnist for the San Francisco Chronicle has noted this new development and I quote for you, Senator Dodd and Mr Schecter, excerpts from his column which appeared in the Chronicle of March 18, 1963. (You would take no comfort the U. S. Government OUT of competetion with private enterprise; then this now held government property will be SOLD to private concerns and the money used to pay the national debt. (1). Get the UNITED STATES OUT of the UN Trojan horse which is trying to take us over from WITHIN. (3). Stop the initiative destroying, graduated income tax which is now taxing the American people to the DEATH. SO PLEASE PASS THE LIBERTY AMENDMENT.

Following are the terms of the proposed LIBERTY AMENDMENT: which is now pending in the Congress as HJ Res. by Congressman James B. Utt in the House and S. Res. 12 by Senator Harry F. Byrd in Senate; it is supported by identical Resolutions in the States of Wyoming, Texas, Nevada, Louisiana, Georgia and South Carolina.

"Sec. 1. The Government of the United States shall not engage in any business professional, commercial, financial or industrial enterprise except as specified by the U. S. CONSTITUTION.

"Sec. 2. The Constitution or laws of any State, or the laws of the United States shall not be subject to the terms of any foreign or domestic agreement which would abrogate this amendment.

"Sec. 3. The activities of the United States Government which violate the intent and purposes of this amendment shall, within a period of three years from the date of the ratification of this amendment be liquidated and the properties and facilities affected shall be SOLD.

"Sec. 4. Three years after the ratification of this amendment the sixteenth article of amendments to the CONSTITUTION of the U. S. shall stand REPEALED and thereafter Congress shall not levy taxes on personal incomes, estates and or gifts."

Respectfully,
Mrs. B. E. Walker

Amarillo, Texas
4602 Olsen

DEAR CONGRESSMAN:

OUR SHIP OF STATE IS RAPIDLY BEING SUNK by red termites. The final step of the subversion and overthrow of this REPUBLIC CAN BE COMPLETED in Sept. 1963; 5 months from April 21st. . .the time limit set for the take-over and total SURRENDER of public Law 87-297. . . based upon the decisions of the UN Security Council and Dept., of State Document 7277 series of Sept. . . 1961.

Voiding our membership in the UN by Congress and or the Supreme Court can save us from most, but not all, of Katanga's horrible fate which WE through the UN FOUGHT and PAID FOR.

California's Rep. J. B. Utt's Bill HR 3613, a bill introduced to abolish the Disarmament Agency and REPEAL the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency Act of 1961 needs to be brought OUT of Foreign Affairs Com. and PASSED. Please use your STRONG INFLUENCE to PASS HR 3613.

We thank you for the fine work that you are doing.

Respectfully,
Mrs. B. E. Walker

By all means keep the Connelly Amendment.

Certainly we should STOP THE back-door spending by Congress and the State Dept., likewise we should start paying at least 1 per cent each year on the national debt. The U. S. has 1-111 voice in the UN. The iron curtain countries CONTROL the UN: Please GET US OUT OF THE UN.

Staff Photo—Ken Patterson

CHURCH OF GOD BISHOP SHOWS CREDENTIALS

Homer Tomlinson Says He Speaks for These Prophets

Bishop Tomlinson Proclaims Peace

Atl. Con. 6/26/63

Peace Group

By JO ANNE CRAWFORD

A prophesying 70-year-old bishop of the Church of God presented Mayor Ivan Allen a "Banner of Confidence" from his church Tuesday and pledged "the end of all evil in Atlanta."

Not unlike a benevolent Santa Claus with "peace" in his pack, Bishop Homer A. Tomlinson, dressed in red and white with flowing beard, proclaimed "a golden age for the world" on the steps of the City Hall after delivering his banner. A 15-inch square of silk, the banner has three circles on it, containing symbols of righteousness, hope and victory.

The stocky General Overseer of the Church of God is touring 11 major cities, predicting an enveloping peace for mankind and no atomic destruction. He makes his prophecy in the raiment of the last of the great prophets, Malachi, of the Old Testament.

BEARD TO PROPHESY

Head covered with a white cloth, the red-robed Bishop speaks from behind a beard attached with adhesive tape. Asked why he wears the beard to prophesy, he said, "Prophets have beards. If I'd had time, I would have grown one."

Bishop Tomlinson gave the banner to the mayor saying, "Atlanta is now due to enter upon Elysian days, with violence and destruction no more within the city." Replied the mayor, "Yes, indeed."

The peace of the cities, believes the bishop, is a prophecy made by Malachi, Sir Isaac Newton, and various prophets from the Bible.

HAS GOOD NEWS

"I have good news for everyone," he said. "The cities will be as safe as walking at noontime in a sylvan glade."

Begging not to be taken lightly, the greying, robust minister said he decided to undertake trips to cities, including New York, his home, Cleveland, Detroit, Los Angeles among others, to end the "violence that had plagued many cities amid burgeoning populations." He said he was confident his visit would coincide with the turn of the tide.

He came to Atlanta from Birmingham.

In 1952, the bishop said, he predicted the end of the Korean war and it ended. The bishop who promised to be as "spectacular for peace on earth" as other men have been for war stated that religion—all religions of the world—is booming.

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Walkers

SERS Library

CHARLESTON NEWS
AND COURIER (S.C.)
p. 8-B
Date OCT 12 1963

Racially-Mixed Group To March To Cuba

CHARLOTTE (AP)—A racially mixed group whose members claim they are marching to Cuba for peace has decided to stay in Charlotte through Monday night. They arrived here Thursday.

While here the group plans to meet with students at Davidson College and possibly Johnson C. Smith University to try to spread its idea of non-violent action.

The group, whose march is sponsored by the Committee for Non-Violent Action, paraded down Tryon Street Friday morning with signs directed against nuclear armaments and racial discrimination.

"We understand Charlotte is an oasis in a mass of ignorance, and we feel our ideas might be received in a less hostile area," said Jack Shapiro, a marcher.

Shapiro said that the marchers will try to get to Cuba in small boats even though they realize the U.S. government will try to stop them. Once in Cuba they plan to march to the U.S. Navy Base at Guantanamo Bay.

Peace Groups

Committee for Nonviolent Action

325 Lafayette St., New York, N. Y. 10002

WAlker 5-9415

CNVA

A. J. Muste, Chairman
Ralph DiGia, Treasurer
Neil D. Haworth, Co-Secretary
George Willoughby, Co-Secretary
Executive Committee
Gordon Christiansen
Mary Christiansen
David Dellinger
Barbara Deming
Robert Gilmore
Robert Gore
Bill Henry
Scott Herrick
Homer A. Jack
Bradford Lyttle
Jim Peck
Harry Purvis
Bayard Rustin
Lawrence Scott
Glenn E. Smiley
Charles Solin
Marjorie Swann
Robert Swann
Charles Walker
National Committee
Jack Bollens
Wendal Bull
Lindley Burton
Mary Cary
Horace Champney
Erica Enzer
David Finke
Harold W. Flitcraft
Donald Fortenberry
Ruth Scheidt Gonze
Robin Harper
Irwin Hogenauer
Roy Kepler
Gene Keyes
Ed Lazar
Jerry Lehmann
David McReynolds
Stewart Meacham
Robert Pickus
David Rhoads
David Rich
Viola Scott
Ralph Smeltzer
Arthur Springer
Monte Steadman
Barton Stone
Cecil Thomas
Samuel R. Tyson
Robert Vogel
Margaret von Selle
Lillian Willoughby
Wilmer Young
Richard Zink
Mel Zuck
Consultants
Albert Bigelow
Henry Cadbury
Stephen G. Cary
Dorothy Day
Richard B. Gregg
Ammon Hennacy
William R. Huntington
Ray Kinney
Milton Mayer
Mildred Scott Olmstead
Clarence E. Pickett
Earle Reynolds
Gene Sharp
Bill Sutherland
Ralph T. Templin
Regional Committees
New England CNVA
RFD 1, Box 197B
Voluntown, Conn. 06384
CNVA West
P.O. Box 5983
San Francisco, Calif. 94101

October 29, 1963

Dear friend:

To everyone's surprise and gratification, the Quebec-Washington Guantanamo Walk for Peace has now reached Georgia without suffering arrest or serious violence. These courageous people, who take their lives in their hands every day, have walked as an integrated group through Virginia, South Carolina, and North Carolina, carrying their challenging signs (for example, "End Racial Discrimination," and "Build Bridges, Not Walls -- Free Trade With Cuba"), distributing their leaflets, and holding public and private meetings that, to at least some Southerners must seem like mana from heaven after years of intellectual and spiritual privation.

Brad Lyttle, the Walk's coordinator, tells me that the attitude of the Southern officials reminds him of that of officials in Communist countries when the San Francisco to Moscow marchers walked through Eastern Europe in 1961. They are intrigued and challenged by the sincerity and idealism of the walkers; in the face of such a challenge they are anxious to prevent any incidents that might give them a "bad press"; and they show, in many little ways, that they are struggling to understand the phenomenon of nonviolence which leads its advocates on the one hand to attack their established way of life, at the risk of imprisonment or death, and on the other hand to be so warm and friendly, on a personal level, and even to claim to represent the practical fulfillment of ideals which white Southerners have always thought they believed in. The Negro community has welcomed the walkers with open arms, and an important tie-in has been established between the peace and civil-rights movements.

We are indeed fortunate to have walkers who can bring this baffling and exhilarating challenge to the beleaguered and confused Southland, as they have brought it to other regions, on their journey from Quebec, Canada toward Guantanamo, Cuba. The walkers ask little for themselves -- as I can testify after sleeping on hard floors beside them for a few nights, eating their meager rations ("There isn't enough money for anything better," they told me), and watching them "role-play" (rehearse) anticipated scenes of violent attack, as they sought to understand the psychology of their potential attackers in order to respond to them creatively. But with the same honesty with which the walkers speak to Southerners, I must say to you that the Committee for Nonviolent Action, the sponsoring and underwriting organization, is so strapped financially that it does not know from day to day how it is going to be able to continue the Walk. In addition, CNVA is committed to other important activities, including preparations for a visit of Soviet peace workers, who are "returning" the visit of the San Francisco to Moscow walkers, and are scheduled to come to the U.S. in January.

(please turn over)

For the walkers' sake -- and for the sake of you and me who believe that man is capable of better things than money-grubbing, status-seeking and nuclear war -- please make as generous a financial contribution as you can to support those who are carrying out this dangerous experiment in nonviolence and human brotherhood. Besides making it possible for them to buy food, shoes and mimeograph paper, to make phone calls to the press and the "outside world," you will give them a crucial and heartwarming psychological lift by showing that you stand behind them in their endeavors.

Sincerely,

Dave Dellinger

Dave Dellinger

- - - -

FIRST OF A SERIES ON ANTI-WAR GROUPS IN THE U.S.

A look at the peace movement in America

By Jack A. Smith
(First in a series)

WHEN THE LEADERS speak of peace, the mobilization order is already written out. It is within this context (two lines from Bertolt Brecht) that the following examination of the American peace movement is made, even—or especially—after the signing of a test ban agreement prohibiting nuclear explosions in the atmosphere.

The mobilization order was written almost two decades ago, heralding the start of the Cold War with the clarion: Halt communism at all costs. The men in command of the United States today do not shrink from the prospect of annihilating a half-billion people, if necessary, in order to implement this policy. They have, fortunately, accepted a less grandiose solution: containment.

But now the leaders speak of peace. The test ban treaty is characterized as a first step to peace. Commenting editorially on the ban Sept. 12, the GUARDIAN noted: "It would be hard to exaggerate the limitations and gaps of the treaty . . . But it does diminish drastically the prospects of additional radiation. This effect alone makes it an important accomplishment." Any interstice in the quick-step to war, however ephemeral, must be carefully examined and appreciated, but never, under pain of disaster, misunderstood.

The mobilization order has not been altered. South Vietnam, Cuba and Berlin; overkill, radiation and chemical warfare; spiraling war budgets, conscription and civil defense; hunger, disease and poverty—these are the realities of the Cold War that cannot be forgotten when the leaders speak of peace.

NO DIALOGUE: There are no present indications that the "Spirit of Moscow" will develop into a genuine dialogue on peace. "A feeling has developed, with both large and small powers, that right now the boat should not be rocked, that issues which might disrupt the U.S.-U.S.S.R. detente should not be introduced . . . Thus, arrangements on trade, cultural exchanges and space are considered more likely than agreements on nonproliferation of nuclear weapons or a ban on underground tests" (War Peace Report, Oct., 1963).

Even the prospect of agreement on peripheral Cold-War issues is causing difficulty in Washington: "There is real concern here now about the decay of the vigilance so carefully developed in the non-Communist world and about the erosion of serviceable barricades erected against the spread of Soviet influence. It is neither easy nor prudent to voice this concern out loud. No one here wishes to contend that the U.S. has a stake in tensions. No one really prefers the cares of Cold War to the problems of peace. But no one expected quite so many difficulties to develop from the first few hesitant steps toward a detente . . . None of these problems is regarded as unmanageable, but they have contributed to an inclination here to slow down the pace of East-West agreement, even on minor issues. There is no intention of avoiding profitable agreements, but each step is being tested not only for its effect on the President's domestic political standing but also for its effect on the alliance and on the less developed nations" (New York Times, Oct. 24).

Drawing by Trudy Vogel
Peace group response to test ban

ARMS CONTROL: Peace research expert Arthur Waskow, in a perceptive commentary on the test-ban treaty (Bulletin of the Committee for World Development and World Disarmament, September), wrote:

"The peace movement has assumed, and the treaty itself says, that the test ban is a first step toward general and complete disarmament. Yet a closer examination of the logic of the treaty itself and the context in which it was signed casts some doubt on this assumption. In some ways, the detente toward which the treaty points may be an obstacle to disarmament, rather than a way-station to disarmament.

"First of all, the test ban itself is not a disarming act. Not only is there no reduction in weapons stockpiles, there is no halt in the production of more weapons . . . Secondly, most of the various measures proposed by both sides as possible next steps are acts of 'arms control only,' rather than disarmament . . . Such steps would tend to stabilize both the arms balance and the political situation, but no more. They are efforts to win a greater measure of safety from the system of terror, but not to move from that system into another. Even if a considerable cut were to be made in production of new missiles and bombers . . . the resulting arms system would be something close to a stable deterrent, not a disarmed world."

Waskow's statement illustrates a problem facing peace-minded Americans: What does "peace" mean? Though the following terms are often used interchangeably, it is well to remember that a detente is not arms control, arms control is not disarmament, and disarmament is not peace. Disarmament exists when arms are eliminated. Peace exists when the causes of war are eliminated; when fear, ignorance and exploitation—both within man and the social system which he allows to govern him—are rooted out and replaced by cooperation and understanding among the world's peoples. An attempt to create a disarmed world without first or simultaneously seeking to ameliorate the causes of war seems a contradiction, for armaments are a symptom of war. To neglect the causes of war today is suicide. Thus, while civilization is justified in expelling a sigh of relief because the atmosphere is to be less poisoned, the urgency of focusing attention on the causes of war, particularly by the peace movement, was never more profound. At question is whether this is being done.

Vicky in the London Evening Standard
"Bang on, Mr. President, great salute to that test ban treaty!"

THE PEACE MOVEMENT: Though of no significance as a harbinger of peace on earth, the test-ban treaty is of extreme import to that small combination of citizens who have labored by degrees during the last five years to achieve this first inroad in the warfare state.

In conversations with peace leaders, all of them expressed the feeling that their activities have helped create the climate that made the test-ban possible. None, however, was willing to attribute to the peace movement a major role. Other considerations, they said, included: (1) the fact that it is no longer militarily necessary to test weapons in the atmosphere; (2) the China-Soviet split, which stimulated both major protagonists in the Cold War to seek a detente, with the U.S. probably motivated by a desire to isolate China; (3) an attempt to reach some form of arms stability, and (4) the creation of an election issue for Kennedy that could capitalize on peace sentiment without offending Cold Warriors.

Though the treaty may inspire the movement to greater efforts now that a first victory has been won, there is also a possibility that it may have a negative effect. Nuclear testing was the anti-war issue par excellence. The treaty has created an enormous vacuum in the moderate peace movement which was stimulated above all by opposition to testing. There are other issues, of course, but none so relatively comprehensible and accessible.

The coming year will tell whether the disarmament groups, the largest wing of the fragmented peace movement, will be able to accommodate themselves creatively to the absence of this most crucial issue, or whether they will become absorbed by the Kennedy Administration as the Democratic Party grabs for the peace issue at election time. It could happen in this way:

It is a tactic of the largest disarmament groups to exert primary pressure at the top of the social structure with direct appeals to the President and congressmen for a change of heart, rather than attempt to create ferment for a radical change among the mass of people. As their appeal is concerned largely with disarmament, rather than the causes of war, there is a possibility—given a few more disarmament gestures — that these moderate groups may find themselves so close to the Administration in apparent outlook that many of their supporters may choose to function in the larger, more socially acceptable and successful organization: the Demcoratic Party. It is an established Kennedy tactic to broaden his program just enough to draw in his moderate opposition — an action which results in a minor social reform and a major political coup.

THREE PROBLEMS: As the U.S. peace movement prepares for the post-ban new year, it faces three internal problems: insignificant numbers, a lack of funds, and a disunity of goals (which has widened the separation between moderate and radical approaches to peace).

The size of the peace movement has been determined to a large extent by the mores governing 20th Century America. It is not lack of effort, and certainly not lack of relevance, that has condemned the movement to attracting what Turn Toward Peace estimates as about 3/10th of 1% of the population. Cold-war hysteria, congressional witchhunts, conformity and ignorance each have played their part. All of these elements have been used by the Establishment to create a climate in the U.S. which equates "patriotism" with support of the basic Cold-War aims—a philosophy which has permeated sections of the peace movement as it has all elements of U.S. society.

Disunity within the movement, however, is a self-imposed debilitation. At present, the multilateralists (SANE) will not demonstrate with unilateralists, and the radicals consider the moderates unmentionably close to the Establishment, while the argument between advocates of civil disobedience and those of legal demonstrations causes yet another split.

Factors tending to weaken the movement as a political force are the exclusion of avowed leftists from any position of responsibility; the tendency of certain rigid attitudes (for example, an inherent distrust of the Soviet Union) to influence the thinking of some peace leaders; a drift toward "working with the Administration in the drive toward peace"; an inability to acknowledge the root causes of war, and a moderate, gradualist approach to the world's gravest crisis.

CALM IMPOTENCE: Characterizing the peace groups, with few exceptions, is a manifest lack of urgency, accompanied by a feeling of impotence. Last year's Cuban crisis temporarily provided the urgency, but only exposed more clearly the actual weakness of the movement. Aside from a brief flurry of activity, the only positive continuing action taken by any U.S. peace group on the issue that almost plunged the world into a nuclear war has been CNVA's Quebec-to-Guantanamo peace walk.

Further evisceration of the movement —though in this case in a positive sense— took place this year with the growing involvement of younger peace workers in the civil rights struggle. Many of these young people represented all that remained of the student peace movement that declined a year or so ago (with an assist from a parent organization which found the youngsters too difficult to control politically) during the general collapse of most campus movements.

The civil rights struggle may infuse the peace movement with a renewed sense of vitality as basic similarities between the two efforts begin to become apparent to the peace leadership. Many pacifists are calling for collaboration between the two movements. The pacifists, with their stress on nonviolent direct action, consider the successes in the Negro struggle based on this technique to be a new justification for use of civil disobedience against the war machine.

As of now, however, the major peace groups eschew such tactics and seem to be relying less heavily on demonstrations in general. The emphasis appears to be negotiation, not only between nuclear powers but between the peace movement and the Administration.

The question now is whether the movement will be able to overcome its weaknesseses in order to translate itself into an effective force for peace. The urgency was never greater.

(Subsequent articles will discuss the structure and emphasis of several peace organizations, including SANE, WSP, TTP and CNVA; how the movement plans to function in 1964; the possibility of a new peace organization, and other related questions.)

Peace Groups

4 Peace Marchers Balk at Oaths of Allegiance

By PAUL VALENTINE

Four of 22 peace marchers—bound for Cuba to picket both American and Russian military installations—have applied for passports in Atlanta but refused to sign portions of their applications.

The applicants balked at sections requiring them to swear or affirm allegiance to the U.S. Constitution and to declare or deny Communist affiliation.

The application form provides that persons refusing to sign such portions may submit "a supplementary explanatory statement." The four Atlanta applicants did this, and their applications have been processed and forwarded routinely to Washington for approval or disapproval.

ONE OF THE marchers, Yvonne Klein, 28, Minneapolis, Minn., said other members in the group who applied earlier this fall have been denied passports but at least one applicant, Kit Havice, Denver, Colo., received hers.

Mrs. Klein explained that the general pattern appeared to be that applications were approved if they did not specify that the passport holder wished to travel to Cuba. The U.S. government prohibits most travelers from going to Cuba with a few exceptions such as New York attorney James Donovan who negotiated the prisoner-medical supply exchange earlier this year.

The Cuba-bound peace marchers—sponsored by the Committee for Nonviolent Action — passed through Atlanta this week and are now heading toward South Georgia and Miami.

MRS. KLEIN SAID each passport applicant "has his own individual reasons" for refusing to sign all sections of the application and no prescribed or formula-style statement is made as a supplement to the application.

In her statement, for example, she says she cannot sign an affirmation concerning Communist party membership "simply because I feel that the only valid use of a passport is as a means of identification and that the statement required of the applicant concerning political affiliation converts the passport into a means of political control.

"The political beliefs of a citizen of the United States, or indeed of any country, ought to have no bearing on his right to hold and use a passport, nor should the passport be used punitively to prevent travel, for such punishment, it seems to me, violates the basic principle of due process of law, to which all Americans are entitled, regardless of political affiliation or belief."

AS A MEMBER of a nonviolent movement, she says in her statement, "I am unable to commit myself to a defense of the Constitution through coercion or force of arms, but only to affirm that I will support and defend nonviolently those parts of the Constitution which do not nonviolence.

She said the marchers will continue to Cuba until or unless "we are physically stopped." She speculated the group will cross from Miami to Havana "in small boats."

"WE MAY get stopped by the Coast Guard," she said, "and then we'll just have to see if we can find some other way of getting there."

Members of the group started walking last July from Quebec, Cleveland and Boston, converged at Rome, N.Y., and have since continued southward.

The marchers carry posters variously inscribed with "We Are Walking to Cuba for Peace," "Demand Freedom to Travel to Cuba," and "Soviet Troops and U.S. Marines Leave Cuba."

cant concerning political affiliation converts the passport into a means of political control.

"The political beliefs of a citizen of the United States, or indeed of any country, ought to have no bearing on his right to hold and use a passport, nor should the passport be used punitively to prevent travel, for such punishment, it seems to me, violates the basic principle of due process of law, to which all Americans are entitled, regardless of political affiliation or belief."

AS A MEMBER of a nonviolent movement, she says in her statement, "I am unable to commit myself to a defense of the Constitution through coercion or force of arms, but only to affirm that I will support and defend nonviolently those parts of the Constitution which do not violate the dictates of my conscience."

Mrs. Klein emphasized her reasoning is not necessarily the same as other applicants, and a variety of opinion and political commitment exists among the marchers.

Not all the marchers, for instance, are pacifists, she said. Though most favor unilateral disarmament, not all are committed to the pacifist discipline in their personal lives, she said, and thus would possibly strike back if personally attacked. All, however, have accepted the pledge of nonviolence for the duration of the Cuba march, she pointed out.

ALSO, SHE SAID, there is no unanimity among the marchers as far as religious or political persuasion is concerned. The group, she said, includes Unitarians, Methodists, atheists, agnostics, Quakers and persons still not religiously committed.

"And we have capitalists and Socialists in the group, too," she said. She doubts there are any Communists, she said, because of the inconsistency of Communist beliefs with the tenets of

Peace Groups

GRIFFIN, GEORGIA, NOVEMBER 9, 1963: NONVIOLENCE AND POLICE BRUTALITY

A report by members of the Quebec-Washington-Guantanamo Walk for Peace

Published by and additional copies available from:

The Committee for Nonviolent Action
325 Lafayette Street
New York City 12, New York
Phone: WAlker 5-9415 (Area Code 212)

Griffin, Georgia, a city of approximately 22,000, lies on Route 41 about 35 miles southeast of Atlanta. Seat of Spalding County, it is an agricultural and small industry center. More than 30% of Griffin's citizens are Negroes who live mainly in segregated, ghetto-like areas. It was reported to us that the integration movement there had been effectively slowed by cross burning and other Ku Klux Klan activities and that Negro students from Spelman College, Atlanta, called "northern agitators" by one Griffin official, had recently left.

The Quebec-Washington-Guantanamo Walk for Peace, 23 people ranging in age from 17 to 70, including three Negro men, 14 white men and six white women, was scheduled to pass through Griffin on Saturday, November 9, 1963, carrying signs and distributing leaflets calling for peaceful, nonviolent relations between the United States and Cuba and an end to racial segregation and discrimination. In accordance with the Walk's policy of discussing the project with local officials, Tom Rodd (17, a student from Pittsburgh) and Jack Shapiro (20, a student from Detroit) talked briefly with Griffin Chief of Police Leo Blackwell and Sheriff Gilbert of Spalding County of Thursday, November 7. Both officials seemed to understand those Walk purposes, activities and policies that would concern their professional responsibilities and assured Tom and Jack that the walkers would pass through Griffin without difficulty.

Shortly before the walkers crossed Griffin's city limits at 11:30 a.m., Friday, November 8, a passing motorist warned that they had better bypass the city. A few hundred feet inside the limits, Chief Blackwell informed Marv Davidov (32, an art dealer from Minneapolis, Minnesota, Walk marshal for the day) that leafleting would not be permitted between 4th and 10th Streets because of a "fire law" ordinance and because the leaflets might create an ugly incident with Klan members, who were powerful in the city. The Walk was stopped. Bradford Lyttle (35, Walk Coordinator from Chicago, Illinois and Voluntown, Connecticut) and other walkers explained to Chief Blackwell that members of walks for peace had distributed leaflets freely in almost every city and town in North America, Europe and the Soviet Union where these projects had been conducted and that the walkers believed it their moral and legal right to do so everywhere. Chief Blackwell remained adamant, saying that he had no authority to change the ordinance. He asked City Manager J. S. Langford to consider the matter. Mr. Langford and the walkers came to the understanding that the walkers intended to pass through Griffin on Highway 41, carrying signs and distributing leaflets along either side of the highway, but not entering business establishments. He then directed Chief Blackwell to "Take them through."

The walkers proceeded through Griffin on Highway 41, four women distributing leaflets to white and Negro citizens, most of whom accepted the literature. Michele Gloor (20, a student from Chicago) gave leaflets to a number of Negro children who were watching a football game in a lot near the highway. Police, members of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (G.B.I.) and other officials accompanied the Walk in automobiles. Several became upset by cameras the walkers were using to photograph the project and harrassed the photographers by arbitrarily and without cause ordering the cars bearing the photographers constantly to move.

A grade school for white students was situated on the highway. Children in classrooms saw the Walk and reached out of the windows for leaflets. Edie Snyder (22, a student from New York City) gave leaflets to about 75 of the students. Teachers refused leaflets offered them by Kit Havice (23, a medical student from Boulder, Colorado) and waved her off school property. The police were angered by the giving of leaflets to the students and five police and plainclothesmen ran towards Edie and Kit, one blowing his whistle. They escorted the women off the school grounds.

Having passed through major residential and business areas of Griffin without either a serious expression of hostility from the population or effort by the authorities to restrict their activities of carrying signs and distributing leaflets, the walkers arrived at a park just north of the Confederate cemetary about 200 yards from the city's southern limits. The park, about an acre in area, was triangular in shape. Along its west side Route 41 veered from southwest to south. To the south lay a small parking lot, an unnamed street and the Confederate cemetary. Taylor Street on the east formed the northern apex of the triangle where it intersected Route 41. Homes and businesses lined the far side of Taylor Street, which was a boundary of Griffin's Negro section.

Many Negro children were playing in the park. When Michele and Yvonne Klein (29, a married graduate student and teacher from Minneapolis) sought to enter the park to give them leaflets, policemen interfered, not only ordering Michele and Yvonne to leave but also shooing as many of the children out of the park as they could. They also ordered Ray Robinson, Jr. (29, a Negro ex-prizefighter from Washington, D. C.) not to give leaflets to the children.

The walkers believed this police interference a basic infringement on their rights and stopped the project to discuss the matter. Chief Blackwell justified his men's actions on the grounds that the park was not part of Highway 41's right of way, to which he believed the walkers had committed themselves to limit their distribution of leaflets. He believed also that the walkers had violated their agreement by giving leaflets to the school children. Many officers and officials gathered, including the G.B.I. agents, and although there was considerable confusion, the authorities were united in denying the walkers access to the park.

City Manager Langford entered the discussion and finally agreed to permit the walkers to give leaflets to people in the park, but by then the police had cleared the area of all Negroes, even ordering one mother to leave her parked car with her children. The Negroes retreated across Taylor Street and many of them watched the proceedings from porches of their homes. Yvonne, Michele and other walkers said they intended to go to these Negroes and give them leaflets but Manager Langford refused to allow this, saying that he would never permit the walkers to "go to those houses" (the Negro homes). "That's the final word, Chief," he said, and left. In these and other discussions the authorities expressed the opinion that they had the moral and legal right to prevent distribution of leaflets and parading. At one time, Manager Langford said he believed he had already granted the walkers many privileges and had backed down more than once.

The walkers then discussed the situation among themselves and decided that in view of the confusion, defensiveness and arbitrariness of the authorities, it would be wise to postpone attempting to give leaflets that day to people on the east side of Taylor Street. Bradford Lyttle informed Chief Blackwell of this decision and that the Walk would end at 2:00 p.m., to be resumed sometime between 9:30 and 10:00 Saturday morning. The Chief, visibly relieved, said the walkers would be arrested if they went across Taylor Street on Saturday.

Saturday morning, November 9, 22 walkers returned in three automobiles from their base in Macon to Griffin and the park. An intimation of the reception they were to get was given when a policeman in the nearby town of Barnesville saw the caravan passing and ran to consult other officers. About six miles outside of Griffin, a sheriff's car swung in behind the caravan. Numerous patrol cars, police and officials representing the G.B.I., the State Highway Patrol, the Sheriff of Spalding County, Griffin's Police, and, perhaps, administrative department were waiting at the park. Officers had been posted along Taylor Street between the park and the Negro district. Chief Blackwell ordered Bradford to have the walkers form at the south end of the park, near the Confederate cemetery, and proceed out of the city. He said the "fire law" had been extended to include the homes across Taylor Street and that any walker who tried to enter that area would be arrested. The walkers, however, wanted and had planned to resume walking at the park's north end, the intersection of Taylor Street and U.S. 41, the point from which they believed police interference in the Walk had begun, and also to leaflet along Taylor Street.

Bradford again explained to Chief Blackwell the walkers' belief that they had the moral and legal right to distribute their leaflets in all public places, and their intention to begin walking again at the intersection of 41 and Taylor. This conversation was interrupted when Chief Blackwell left to order his men to stop the line of walkers who were proceeding, with their signs lowered, to the intersection. He seemed to fear that they were going into the Negro district.

Bradford, seeing that the police had committed themselves to arrest, just had time to direct the Walk's photographers, Jack Shapiro and Mike Wells (20, a student from New York City) to start taking pictures before Sheriff Gilbert grasped his shoulder, saying something like "I'll get this one first, he's the leader," and directed him into a patrol car.

Jack Shapiro walked into the park hoping to get closer to the line of walkers so that he could take better pictures. A plainclothesman ran towards him, Jack stopped, and the man put his hand on Jack's arm, saying, "You're under arrest; get in the bus." Jack sat down in noncooperation and said, "I have nothing against you personally but I cannot cooperate with this arrest."

The officer turned towards a light colored car parked nearby and said, "Bring the electric prodder over here." A Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent approached with the prodder. (An electric cattle prodder is a device capable of giving a powerful electric shock which produces localized sensations of extreme pain and burning and involuntary muscle spasms in humans. The variety used at Griffin was a thin metal rod about thirty inches long with a red handle containing batteries and a high voltage transformer at one end and bronze prongs at the other.) He told Jack to get up and then began to apply the prod, first to Jack's chest and stomach, then towards his genitals. Jack rolled over to shield himself. The G.B.I. agent then applied the prod to the base of Jack's spine, causing him to yell and leap into the air. Failing in this torture to get Jack to walk to a bus which had been driven up, the agents carried him to the vehicle and threw him in.

Mike Wells was also proceeding towards the walkers and when stopped by Sheriff Gilbert lay down in noncooperation. The Sheriff did not ask for the cattle prodder but twisted his hand and arm, carried him to the patrol car and thrust him roughly in to join Bradford. No reply was ever given to Mike's repeated inquiries concerning whether or not he was under arrest.

Kit Havice, carrying leaflets, had walked thirty feet across the park toward Taylor Street when a policeman ran up, brabbed her arm, and ordered her to come to the bus. She sat down, told the policeman she would not cooperate. The officer first said to another, "Get a policewoman." Then he changed his mind and said, "No, get the prod over here." The two officers picked Kit up and had carried her half way to the bus when the G.B.I. agent who had been torturing Jack came with the prod and for no evident reason began to apply it to her legs and thighs. Her legs burned by the prod, Kit was shoved roughly into the bus.

A plainclothesman asked Edie Snyder if she was going to be a "lady" and walk into the bus. She replied that it was because she was a lady that she could not cooperate with injustice, and that she regretted the physical inconvenience carrying her would cause him. He and another plain clothesman then dragged her to the bus by her arms. She heard someone run up behind her and felt the prod on her knee joints and the small of her back. The plainclothesmen held her firmly as her body jerked from the shock, then tossed her into the bus.

Sam Mapp (25, a Negro artist from Atlanta) was thrown into the bus, burned with the prodder.

Throughout the arrests and afterwards in the police station, the electric cattle prod was used principally by one of the G.B.I. agents, seldom by the police or other local officials. This agent particularly horrified the walkers and many of the officials by his cold, calculated torture of the walkers, often with no apparent end in view other than hurting them.

Arthur Harvey (31, from Raymond, New Hampshire) sat down in noncooperation and was repeatedly shocked with the prodder. He kept asking for a good reason to get into the bus and when finally told that he was under arrest he walked to the vehicle. He had, however, suffered many painful burns.

Yvonne Klein's legs and thighs were burned in many places by the cruel device. She was thrown into the bus on top of the others.

Peter Gregonis (38, an electronics technician from Silverton, Oregon, and veteran of World War II and the 17th Paratroop Division) walked to the bus, but a G.B.I. agent confiscated and never returned his notebook.

Alan Nyysola (22, student from Baltimore, Maryland) was carried onto the bus feet first, dropped in the aisle. A policeman then tried to pick him up by the hair, fialed, climbed over a seat to approach him from another direction, grabbed his arm and twisted it saying Alan would now walk. Alan didn't and the officer stopped twisting suddenly, finally pulling Alan to the rear of the bus by his feet.

In the bus, a policeman ground his foot into Tom Rodd's groin.

Dennis Weeks (20, a white student from DeKalb, Illinois) and Ronnie Moose (18, a Negro student from High Point, North Carolina) had remained on the Walk's Plymouth suburban. A policeman named Underwood first removed the vehicle's key, then returned and drove it to the County Jail in Griffin, together with Dennis, Ronnie, and the Walk's signs which the police had collected, and another policeman. Dennis asked officer Underwood if they were under arrest. The officer replied, "I suppose so." Dennis then asked for the charge. The policeman replied, "I haven't any idea." At the jail, Ronnie first cooperated, then went limp and was carried in. Dennis refused to cooperate and was carried in.

Flemming Jensen (20 , a newspaper reporter from Copenhagen, Denmark) and Erica Enzer (37, a chemist from Chicago) had been assigned to remain i the Walk's DeSoto. After arresting them, a policeman got into the car's driver's seat and drove them to the jail. The sadistic G.B.I. agent sat in back. Erica asked what the charges were. The policeman replied that they would find out at the jail. Erica asked the G.B.I. agent his name but he refused to reveal it. At the jail, two policemen carried Erica ver gently into the reception room. Half way up the stairs, the G.B.I. man came up with the prodder and shocked her legs and thighs and as far up her skirts as he could.

At the park, after all the walkers had been thrown, dragged, or had walked into the bus they began to sing. Ray started with "We Shall Overcome," and everyone joined in. Eric Robinson (20, construction worker fro Lompoc, California) opened the window so the sound could carry out. A policeman ordered him to shut the window. He did not comply. The policeman got a nightstick and ordered him to shut the window again. Again, he did not comply. The officer walked back to where Eric was sitting and shu it himself.

At the County Jail, the police asked the walkers to walk off the bus. Pearl Ewald (70, a retired Quaker schoolteacher from Washington, D.C.), Art Harvey, and Sam Mapp did so. The others refused to cooperate. Michel was the first to be carried off. Two officers dragged her from the vehicl to the first set of stairs. A third officer standing nearby suggested tha they hold her in such a manner that her knees would scrape. The others wouldn't do it.

Alan Nyysola was dragged off the bus, left lying on the sidewalk. The G.B.I. agent prodded him on the face and legs. An officer held him while the agent shocked him in the groin. Alan tried to roll over to escape thi attack and the agent shocked him in the genitals, then directed the prod a his head again. Alan pulled his sweater over his head in self-protection, exposing his back, which was prodded several times. Finally, the man was distracted from Alan by the opportunity to torment Ray, and Alan was dragg into the reception room.

Ross Anderson was dragged from the bus by two officers holding him by the shoulders. As he was hauled up the steps, the cattle prod was used on his neck and face.

Tom Rodd was pulled from the bus, carried and dragged to the stairs. There the G.B.I. agent set upon him with the prod, shocking him on his fac arms, genitals, and every other part of his body the prod could reach. The policeman wanted to carry Tom into the jail but the agent said, "Naw, let him wiggle for a while."

A policeman pulled Jack Shapiro off his seat, down the aisle and out of the bus. Another policeman took hold of his thumb and little finger and both dragged him to the first set of stairs. One officer said, "Take him by the feet so his head will hit the steps." Jack protected the back of his head with his hands until they reached a small landing. There the same

G.B.I. agent stuck the cattle prodder on Jack's genitals. Jack yelled and rolled over. The agent then shocked him on the chest, ear, side, and cheek and as he rolled to escape, on the eye. The pain was so excruciating that Jack jumped up and ran inside, the G.B.I. agent after him, burning the back of his neck. The agent then ordered him up the stairs to the cellblock. Jack went, the agent repeatedly shocking him in the back. At the top, Jack turned and faced the man who forced him against a wall, then down to the floor with the prodder. The agent shouted, "Stay there," and ran back down the steps.

The cattle prodder was used on the rest of the walkers, burning them as they were being carried or dragged along. Officers burned Eric Robinson on the back of the head, hands, and back. One of the city policemen yelled, "Stop! He's not going to get up." The G.B.I. man stopped and they carried Eric into the jail. He lost a shoe which they threw in, hitting Bradford.

John Stephens was dragged to the steps of the bus by a city policeman. Sheriff Gilbert then picked him up and put him on his shoulder like a sack of potatoes. "This is an easier way," the Sheriff said, when passing another officer. The officer shrugged his shoulders.

A policeman pulled Edie Snyder off the bus by one arm. She lost her sneakers on the way and her feet and legs scraped along the sidewalk. Edie tried to explain her noncooperation to the policeman but he didn't reply and dragged her, bumping, up the jailhouse steps and threw her into the reception room. After she had lain there for several minutes, the G.B.I. man came in and prodded and burned her near the right eye, raising an ugly black welt.

Most of the walkers were carried roughly into the reception room and thrown on the floor. The G.B.I. man prodded and burned Yvonne on the legs, thighs, and up her skirts while she was being carried. In the reception room, the walkers were booked, then told to go to the cell blocks. Many refused to cooperate.

Michele Gloor was the first to be carried up. They asked her to go up. She said she could not. A policeman got the cattle prod and burned her repeatedly on the neck and legs with everyone, including the policewomen, Sheriff, and other officers looking on. When several walkers began to cry out in horror, and appeal to the man to treat Michele like a human being, he became ashamed and relinquished the prod to another burly officer who said, "Heck, I'll use it." He soon was revolted by the torture too, and together with the first officer picked up Michele and carried her towards and up the stairs to the cell block. The G.B.I. agent diligently applied the prod to Michele's legs and thighs. Tears streamed down the faces of two policemen standing by the door, but they said and did nothing.

Kit Havice got similar treatment.

John Stephens was burned all over his head and back. He pulled his sweater over his head for protection and was prodded on his exposed stomach, making a burn about eight inches long.

Alan was dragged by his arms halfway to the stairs when someone decided it would be better to pull him by his legs so that his head would bump. Alan decided then to walk and the police permitted him to stand up. The G.B.I. agent with the prod objected to this on the ground that Allan had decided to noncooperate, thus unmistakeably exposing his ugly desire to torment people with the prod.

Ray Robinson was tortured particularly brutally. He turned over on his back when the began shocking him. He was stretched full length on the floor, the police standing over him with the cattle prodder. They burned his legs, arms, then got him pinned down with the prodder in the small of his back, on his spine. Then the prod was shifted to his genital area, held firmly in place. They kept yelling, "Get up! Get up!" Ray screamed, "I can't get up. I'll die before I get up for you." He writhed in pain, shouted, "Kill me! Kill me! Go ahead and kill me!" The walkers protested at the top of their lungs, asking the police to stop, asking them how they could treat someone in such a manner. The officers finally stopped prodding Ray on the floor and dragged him upstairs by his feet, shocking and burning him on the way, particularly in his face.

Tony Brown (27, a clerical worker from San Francisco) spoke to one of the policemen standing over him, commenting on the use of the prod. He told the man it was clearly unnecessary to use prods and that it seemed obvious that in the jail they should have enough men to carry each of the walkers upstairs. Although Tony had already been booked, an officer threw him across the booking desk where Tony explained the error. Someone put a full nelson on him and carried him off the ground that way to the first stairway landing. There the prod was put to his neck. He became trapped between the floor and the wall, unable to move away from it. He screamed and eventually began weeping. Eric Robinson shouted, "Hey!" in protest against the torture and the officer booking him yelled, "Stop!" Eric said the booking officer was as scared by the brutality as he. Sheriff Gilbert came up to Tony, picked him up gently, put him on his back and carried him up the stairs. Tony put his hand across his eyes, frantically asking for his glasses which had fallen off and telling the Sheriff he could hardly see without them. Sheriff Gilbert later found the glasses and brought them to the cell.

Peter Gregonis walked off the bus and into the jail but when he saw the inhuman treatment the other walkers were receiving he told the police, "I walked willingly into this station, but now, after watching the brutality I must protest by refusing to cooperate from now on." He was dragged upstairs backwards by two policemen, each holding a leg. The G.B.I. agent followed, burning his exposed neck.

Eric was the last booked and found himself alone in the room with six policemen. One said, "Are you going to walk?" Eric replied, "No, I won't walk--please be careful with me." Two officers quickly grabbed his arms and carried him gently upstairs.

Thirteen male, white walkers were put in one second floor "tank" or large barred room, the three Negro men in a tank on the floor above. The women occupied a separate, second floor cell. The tank occupied by the thirteen men was clean, as prisons go, and equipped with metal bunks (a few with mattresses), a toilet, a sink with hot and cold water and a shower. In an adjacent tank were half a dozen white youths who proved curious about the walkers' imprisonment and not hostile. The men could talk with the Negro walkers on the floor above and heard the women singing freedom songs in another part of the building.

Dr. Williams, a local physician, visited all the walkers, asking them if they had complaints or injuries. He described the women's burns and bruises as "contusions." Pearl Ewald was feeling unwell and because of her history of heart trouble, Dr. Williams was particularly concerned about her. He did not, however, recommend that the seventy-year-old woman be taken out of the violent environment of the prison. In the tank with the thirteen walkers he was asked if he approved the use of electric cattle prods on humans, particularly on their faces. He replied that he wasn't acquainted with the instrument.

Next to appear was Sheriff Gilbert, the most humane, considerate and gentlemanly of all the authorities. He came apparently as a "go between" for the walkers and the city officials. He spoke privately with Bradford Lyttle, explaining that the walkers were being charged with two violations, one of Code 67 of the City Traffic Ordinance, "Parading without a permit," the other of City Code 402, "Violation of a lawful order of a police officer" No charges appeared lodged against the four occupants of the Walk's vehicles who also had been arrested. The Sheriff said that if the walkers would agree to leave town on Rte. 41, as the police had ordered, the charges would probably be dropped. Bradford discussed this proposal with the thirteen white walkers he was with, found it unacceptable to them, since they insisted on their rights both to begin the Walk where police interference with those distributing leaflets had commenced and to leaflet freely. Sheriff Gilbert then returned and, after hearing the walkers' decision, sat down in dismay and asked under what circumstances the walkers would leave. The walkers asked that he and the Chief of Police guarantee that officers would not harass them. He replied that he would do his best to prevent harassment in the areas under his authority but expressed fear that the walkers might be attacked by uncontrollable, hostile people near the city limits. Bradford Lyttle asked if the arm twisting had been called for. "I did that," said the Sheriff ruefully. Later he defended use of the cattle prodder on the grounds that the noncooperation had been ungentlemanly. When asked if one ungentlemanly act deserved another, he replied, "Now you're talking Christianity."

The Sheriff was convinced that the City had the right to restrict distribution of leaflets and to prevent parades. The gist of his reply was that even the American Legion had to get a parade permit--even he himself would have to get one. Also for sometime he, as most of the officials, said he believed that the walkers had intended to divert the Walk from its normal route to pass through and to pass out leaflets in the Negro area. Here again was revealed the intense fear the authorities had that the Walk would incite a mass Negro uprising. Finally, patient discussion revealed to him that all the walkers wanted to do was to retrace one block of their walk on Rte. 41, from Taylor St. to the Confederate cemetery, and that those leafleting planned only to reach the people they could see from the highway. He left again to discuss the walkers' position with the city authorities, who never participated personally in the negotiations.

Within an hour, the Sheriff returned once more, bringing with him a letter from the Griffin Department of Police. Signed by City Manager J.S. Langford, Chief of Police Leo Blackwell, and two City Commissioners, Kinsey R. Stewart and Carl E. Pruces (his script is unclear), this document was a permit to parade, granting the walkers the right to conduct their Walk in the manner they had requested as early as the preceding afternoon. All the walkers accepted the permit, making it understood that acceptance did not admit that they had applied for it, the majority of the walkers believing that while they could accept parade permits from the authorities, they shoul not, by asking for them, admit that the police had a moral or a legal right to deny permits. In the final negotiations about the letter, Sheriff Gilbert was obviously happy that an agreement had been reached that would result in the walkers' release, and so deeply moved by the entire situation that at one point he turned away to prevent his tears from being seen. He accompanied the walkers to the booking room where, in the presence of Chief Blackwell and many now placid officers, the walkers signed the personal bond which secured their release. The Sheriff said they would not have to appear for a court hearing and advised that no one return to Griffin. When the walkers left the jail he shook hands with many, excluding the Negroes. He looked at Ray hostilely.

The Walk's three automobiles waited in a nearby parking lot. All the signs which the police had gathered up at the park were intact. Cameras, duffel bags, suitcases and briefcases had been searched and dumped in the back of the DeSoto. Confiscated and not returned were copies of an article on the Walk's encounter with the KKK by Dennis Weeks, a notebook belonging to Flemming Jens en, and a copy of Gandhi's Nonviolent Resistance. Ray said he hoped the authorities would read the Gandhi book.

As the walkers prepared to enter the automobiles, Pearl Ewald suffered a severe anginal attack. Her arrest, imprisonment, and witnessing the savage attacks with the cattle prodder during the arrests and in the jail probably caused anxiety and strain which had made her feel unwell in the tank and precipitated the attack. She was placed in the DeSoto station wagon's back seat where for half an hour she suffered severe pains in her chest, facial tremors, and near loss of consciousness. Dr. Williams was summoned and advised that she be taken at once to the Griffin - Spalding County Hospital. The DeSoto with Pearl, Ray Robinson, Kit Havice, and Bradford Lyttle left for the hospital, accompanied by the younger G.B.I. plainclothesman in another car. The two other Walk vehicles, accompanied by the Sheriff and many officials, went to resume the Walk.

This report now divides into three parts. One relates the experiences of Kit Havice in taking Pearl Ewald to a Macon hospital and obtaining treatment for her there. Another is Bradford Lyttle's story of his arrest for speeding while accompanying Pearl's ambulance to Macon. Third is the account of the experiences of the walkers after they had left Griffin and were returning by car to Macon.

1. Report on Pearl and the hospital by Kit Havice

The younger G.B.I. man led us to the Griffin-Spalding Hospital. Mrs. Ewald was admitted to the emergency room. Ray was asked to leave the white waiting room so, Kit and Ray went to the Negro waiting room. The electrocardiogram did not show a heart attack and after sedation the doctor felt Pearl could be moved to Macon. The doctor agreed to mail his bill to us. Ray and Kit went to the Negro houses across from the hospital to obtain blankets to keep Pearl comfortable in the station wagon. The G.B.I. man followed us over and demanded that we return to the hospital to pay the doctor cash because the doctor would no longer trust us. An ambulance was arranged for Pearl so she would be more comfortable. When it arrived the hospital personnel refused to help the driver load the patient as they usually did and said Ray should help. Kit and Ray rode in the ambulance with Pearl.

In Milner, Bradford, who had been asked by Pearl to follow the ambulance and had arranged with the driver to do that, was arrested for speeding.

The ambulance driver drove back and attempted to explain to the Milner police that Bradford was following the ambulance. The police left with Bradford and we folllwed shortly. The police car was off the road several miles further down and the ambulance stopped to get the keys to the DeSoto from Bradford. We returned to the DeSoto but were told by a local man that we could not move it until it had been checked. Kit phoned the Lamar County Jail and was told Brad was being held on $100 bond and would be tried in court on December 7.

The ambulance proceeded without incident to Macon, where we attempted to have Pearl taken to St. Luke's, a Negro hospital. They did not have adequat facilities, however. Macon Hospital received Pearl into the emergency room and took another E.K.G. Ray and Kit went to the Negro waiting room and used that phone. The cardiologist assigned to the case examined Pearl and reported to Kit that he felt the attack was probably not serious but that Pear should remain in the hospital under observation for a few days, because E.K. changes indicating heart damage did not always develop at once. He was aske if it was possible for Pearl to be put on the Negro side of the hospital. He said he did not want to get involved in placing her there and the request was dropped.

A policeman assigned to the emergency room saw Kit and Ray in the Negro waiting room and was seen talking to the doctor. Kit went to the admitting room and was filling out the forms when the doctor came up. He told Kit he did not want to take the case any longer. He admitted the policeman had talked to him about us and told Kit that it would be better for everyone if he didn't take the case, and said it was obvious we didn't like to follow their customs. He said Pearl was probably all right and could rest in a private home somewhere. He said the hospital would treat her only on an emergency basis but would not admit her as far as he was concerned.

Kit asked if there was a Negro cardiologist in Macon and was told there was not. The doctor would not recommend anyone to take the case. The doctor left and an ambulance was arranged for, to take Pearl from the hospital to a private home. Pearl was nauseated and still very drugged from the sedative. Ray left the hospital because he felt Pearl might receive better treatment in his absence. Marvin Davidov, the lone walker who had stayed in Macon and was not arrested, arrived, and strengthened by his determination we decided it was too dangerous to move Pearl without another doctor's opinion. Marv discussed the situation with the receptionist in the emergency room. He asked her, "How can you move this woman who may have had a heart attack?" She became concerned and agreed to look into it. After several hours the doctor who had refused the case was located. He refused to tell the receptionist anything except that Pearl was well enough in his opinion to leave the hospital. The receptionist advised us to wait until Pearl was less groggy and then to move her. We insisted on calling another doctor, however, and finally had to turn to the yellow telephone pages.

Kit finally reached another cardiologist who listened carefully to the complete story. He asked if we were only in trouble with the local authorities because Kit had sat in the Negro waiting room. When this was affirmed he said there was nothing wrong with it. He said there was no question that Pearl should be under observation in the hospital and within five minutes had it cleared with the admitting desk.

2. Report of the arrest of Bradford Lyttle for speeding in Milner, Georgia by Bradford Lyttle

At the Griffin - Spalding County Hospital Dr. Williams said that while Pearl's case, in his opinion, was not an emergency one, it could prove extremely serious, even fatal, particularly in view of Mrs. Ewald's history of heart attacks, including an extremely serious one fourteen years ago.

Mrs. Ewald requested an ambulance. One was summoned and I arranged with the driver, at Mrs. Ewald's request to follow the ambulance to a hospital in Macon. Kit Havice and Ray Robinson, two other walkers, rode in the ambulance with Mrs. Ewald. Once it had reached the open highway, the ambulance driver set a steady speed of about 60 mph. I attempted to stay within 200 feet of the ambulance, not wanting to lose it, since I did not know to what hospital in Macon it was going.

We must have been passing through the small town of Milner when a squad car behind me flashed me to stop. I did. The Milner officer said I had been speeding. I explained the circumstances of the situation, as did the driver of the ambulance, who had turned around and come back when he realized that I had been stopped. The officer refused to accept the explanation as a mitigating circumstance and insisted that I leave the De Soto parked in Milner and go with him to a nearby jail.

On the way to the jail I asked the officer if it was customary to arrest people accompanying ambulances to the hospital. My experience had been that the police in such situations cleared traffic and facilitated the travel in other ways. He had noticed Mr. Robinson, a Negro, in the ambulance, knew what the Walk was and that I was a member of the Walk and may have been waiting for us to pass through Milner. The gist of his reply was, "Customary procedures for nigger-lovers like you are to lock you up."

We reached the Lamar County Jail in Barnesville at about 3:45. The officer booked me. I asked what the bond would be, and if I could make a telephone call. He replied that I'd soon know the treatment for nigger lovers, that I'd spend some hours in jail before phoning anyone. I then was locked in a "tank," where I stayed until 9:00 AM Sunday morning without learning the size of my bond or being able to phone anyone.

The tank was uncrowded, clean as jails go, and quiet. In the morning, the officer who had arrested me permitted me to make a phone call. His attitude alternated between gentlemanliness and a hostility so intense that I expected him to hit me momentarily. While I was placing the call, Erica, Kit, and Marv appeared and paid my fine of $50. Before we left we talked more with the officer and the sheriff of Lamar County. The sheriff, who had a reputation among the prisoners for being a just and helpful man, was reasonable and friendly on every matter except the race issue. He was particularly upset by the thought of a white woman and a Negro man sitting together in the same car. He made a statement extraordinary for a civilized, democratic country, which revealed the control police authorities in the South have over racial violence: "Why there are two boys back in this jail who'd throw you in the creek if I gave the word."

3. Report of the trip from Griffin to Macon by Thomas Rodd

After the Walk had crossed the Griffin city limits all police cars disappeared. We stopped the Walk and got into our vehicles, then drove south toward Macon on Route 41. There were ten people in the suburban, forcing us to drive around 35 miles per hour, and about twenty cars piled up in a lane behind us. In the town of Milner, some ten miles from Griffin, we pulled off to allow these cars to pass. Two people got out of the sedan to transfer the lunch box.

As we started away, a police car motioned us to stop. A Milner policeman got out of his car and took a look into the suburban--Michele Gloor was sitting by Ronnie Moose. Tom then got out to speak with him--he was livid with rage. "What's that white woman doin' between them two niggers. It's a disgrace to the white race." He called over the Lamar County sheriff and several local men. They spoke to Tom for some time, threatening at one point to kill all the walkers, then telling Tom, "When that walk comes into this town you better be legal." Michele got out and spoke to them for a while, and was asked the standard questions--"What if that black bastard raped you," etc.

The officer saw Peter Gregonis taking notes and confiscated a sheet with information on the conversation between myself and the officer. This incensed him even more. Finally they ordered Sam and Ronnie, both Negroes, to get out of the car, refusing to let anyone else to get nearby. They formed a circle around them, asking hostile questions and making threats. The obvious intention was to scare the daylights out of our men, but they had little success. Finally an officer returned the drivers' licenses. Ronnie and Sam were allowed to get into the cars, and the Sheriff spoke: "You can go, but not with a white woman between two niggers." In a hurry to get back and anxious to avoid more violence, the walkers complied and Michele switched places with Jack, riding in the front seat.

Atl. J&C 11/10/63

21 Peace Marchers Arrested in Griffin

Peace Groups

GRIFFIN, Nov. 9 (AP)—Twenty-one members of a biracial peace group marching from Canada to Cuba were arrested Saturday on charges of parading without a permit and refusing to obey the orders of an officer.

Police Chief Leo Blackwell said, "We tried our best to get them through our town without trouble." The town is 40 miles south of Atlanta on the way to Florida.

"I escorted them through town . . . but they insisted on going out in a residential section and putting out that literature," Blackwell said. He referred to literature of the sponsoring New York-based Committee for Nonviolent Action.

THE DEMONSTRATORS were released from jail on bond and continued on their way.

One of the participants, Pearl Ewald, 60, of Washington, D.C. was treated for exhaustion at a hospital and then joined the others going south.

The police chief said several of the demonstrators "just laid down on the ground and we had to carry them to a bus to take them to jail." He declined comment on a report that a cattle prod was used.

THE MARCH started in Quebec City. Those taking part hope to end it with picketing outside the U.S. Naval Base at Guantanamo Bay and Soviet and Cuban military installations on the island sometime in January.

Individual members have had brushes with the law in Trois Rivieres, Que., Canada, Baltimore, New York City and Lawrenceville, 30 miles northeast of Atlanta.

Marcher Tom Rodd, 17, of Pittsburgh said last week the State Department had refused to validate their passports for travel to Cuba, but that they hoped to complete the march anyway.

Microfilm Code No.

Peace ~~[illegible]~~ Gips.

SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH

Date: p. 18
NOV 14 1963

Committee Plans March In Macon This Weekend

Some 22 or 23 members of the bi-racial Committee for Non-Violent Action will march through Macon sometime this weekend, a spokesman for the group said last night.

Bradford Lyttle of Voluntown, Conn., the coordinator for the group, said they expect to reach Macon's city limits Saturday or Sunday, and will march through on U. S. Highway 41.

He said the group would not attempt to obtain a parade permit, even if the city required a permit for the march. The group, which is marching from Canada to Cuba, carries placards and distributes literature as it passes through towns.

Police Chief L. B. McCallum said last night the marchers would not be considered in violation of the law if they continue directly through town without interfering with traffic or other activities. A permit is required for parades.

McCallum said they would not be allowed to distribute pamphlets or other literature, however, because a city ordinance forbids such distribution.

The marchers will leave a point a mile south of Griffin about 8:30 this morning and begin a series of daily 15-mile walks, Lyttle said. They plan to continue from Macon toward Americus, and hope to reach Miami by New Year's.

Lyttle said the group would carry placards and distribute literature while passing through Macon, and if jailed, would continue the march when released.

Signs the marchers carry include the titles, "Demand Freedom to Visit Cuba," "End Racial Discrimination," and "Resist Evil But Not With Violence."

Twenty-one members of the group were arrested in Griffin Saturday and charged with parading without a permit and failing to obey an officer, but were released later in the day on their promise to get out of town.

Lyttle said the Griffin incident was the first of its kind the group has encountered on its long journey from Quebec, a trip which carried them through Atlanta and other southern cities. Three of the marchers are Negroes.

He said the action of Griffin was "irrational and savage" and was probably caused by "political and social pressures." Electrical cattle prods were used against members of the group, he claimed.

One of the marchers, Pearl Ewald, 60, of Washington, D. C. was in the Macon Hospital for exhaustion but has been released and is now in Florida recuperating, Lyttle said.

He said the group never applies for a permit to pass through a town because it believes such permits to be unconstitutional.

The plan to march through Americus has no connection with recent civil rights incidents there, Lyttle said.

Some local citizens have expressed an interest in joining the group as they march through Macon, according to Lyttle.

Peace Groups

Microfilm Code No.

SERS Library

BALTIMORE
AFRO-AMERICAN

P. 14

Date NOV 16 1963

'Women Strike for Peace' hear Mrs. Martin L. King

By MABS KEMP

WASHINGTON

The role of women in the fight for world peace was discussed last Friday at the National Memorial Baptist Church. It was world -wide peace day and marked the second anniversary meeting of the "Women Strike for Peace" movement.

Mrs. Dagmar Wilson, founder of the movement; Mrs. Coretta Scott King, wife of the Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr. and ex-Congressman Byron Johnson, consultant to IDOS - AID (Dept. of State), shared the speakers' platform.

"From Armaments to Abundance," the subject under discussion provoked varied aspects of facts from each speaker.

* * *

JOHNSON BACKED up statistically, data which evidenced the crushing burden of armaments. "Today when there is no war," he said, "120 billions of dollars per year are spent for armaments."

"Some 85 percent of the burden falls on just seven countries of the world."

By way of comparison, he listed the numerous benefits which could be had if just 5 billion of this amount were used to meet the visable human needs.

"The world hungers for release from this crushing burden," he added. He further stated that abundance is not dependent upon disarmament, but that disarmament would make abundance easier.

Mrs. Wilson pointed out that: "We can only bring about democracy through prosperity. Prosperity comes through disarmament. Only through disarmament can we have peace and through peace alone can we safeguard democracy."

Mrs. King, who arrived only minutes earlier from New York where she and Mrs. Wilson participated in that city's celebration believed that "because of a deep feeling and commitment of peace, freedom and world brotherhood - the strike for peace movement was born."

* * *

SHE EXPRESSED pride on being identified with such a great movement and observed also that "There cannot be peace outside of our nation without peace within our nation. No peace without racial justice and no racial justice without peace."

She implored each to go out with renewed determination and re-dedication for peace, justice and brotherhood.

Mrs. Janet Neuman chaired the meeting and benediction was said by the Rev. E. Franklin Jackson, president of the local chapter of the NAACP. Later during a social hour, the birthday cake was cut by Mesdames Wilson and King.

Marchers' Brutality Charges Contradicted by Griffin, GBI

Atl. J&C 11/17/63

Peace Groups

By PAUL VALENTINE

Some 22 peace marchers on their way through Georgia have published a report alleging extensive police brutality during a mass arrest of the group in Griffin Nov. 9.

The allegations have been categorically denied by Griffin city officials. Also, a Georgia Bureau of Investigation agent who was on the scene reported "no rough stuff." The FBI, which thus far has taken a sideline interest in the affair, has not been ordered to make a full scale investigation.

The 12-page report by the marchers claims a GBI agent used an electric cattle prod numerous times on several of the marchers when they refused to submit willingly to arrest.

Griffin City Manager J. S. Langford told The Atlanta Journal-Constitution in an interview that one cattle prod was used during the arrests but that the prod was city property and was used by a plainclothes city detective.

THE MARCHERS—sponsored by the Committee for Nonviolent Action in their trek from Quebec to Cuba where they plan to picket both Russian and American military installations—claim they were tortured by the prod, that it was applied to their faces and other vital areas, and that they were roughly dragged about during the course of arrest.

The arrests occurred on the morning of Nov. 9 when Griffin police and the marchers apparently disagreed on the place at which the group should resume its march in the city where it had stopped the day before in its southward journey.

THE MARCHERS had reached the northern city limits of Griffin Nov. 8, and, after discussion with city officials, agreed to walk through the city, staying within the right-of-way of U.S. 41.

The marchers had pacifist and integration leaflets which they wished to distribute as they walked. City officials told them an ordinance prohibits distribution of leaflets within the town's fire limits, an area encompassing the central portion of Griffin.

The marchers walked through the town and reached a public park on the south side, a few hundred yards from the southern limits of the city. They disbanded there at the end of the day.

They returned the next day to resume the march. City officials said the agreement was that the group would commence its march from the southern end of the park. March leaders said, however, they had planned to start from the northern end.

AT THAT point, both sides agree, the marchers began walking northward, back toward the center of town. Griffin Police Chief Leo Blackwell ordered them arrested. The charge, he said, was failing to follow a lawful order. (The group was additionally charged with parading without a permit.)

At the arrest order, many of the marchers sat down and refused to walk into a bus which had been summoned for the arrests. The marchers allege they were "savagely" treated, kicked, bruised and jabbed with the electric prod as officers endeavored to get them into the waiting bus and later when they dragged them off the bus and placed them in Spalding County Jail.

(Officials said the county jail was used because the city jail is too small.)

The marchers further alleged in their report that the prod was used needlessly and that a "GBI agent" jabbed some of the walkers even while they were being carried or dragged by other officers.

The Committee for Nonviolent Action report said many of the marchers suffered burns, bruises and sprains. The group members were jailed about four hours, then released on their own recognizance and ordered to appear in city court Monday.

Griffin officials have since indicated they don't care if the marchers fail to appear in court. "We just want to get them out of the county," said Chief Blackwell.

CITY MANAGER Langford said that on the day of the arrests, he saw city Detective J. D. Hudgins bring one cattle prod to the scene and use it on a number of the marchers.

He denied, however, the prod was used except when a marcher was lying or sitting on the ground and refused to move. Chief Blackwell added that the batteries in the prod were weak, "and even if they were new, it wouldn't hurt anyone." He said the prod was often preferred to carrying or dragging persons who resist arrest.

"Some of those marchers weighed a good 200 pounds," he said. "You ever try carrying somebody like that a good distance?"

Dr. Virgil Williams, Spalding County physician, who was called in by officials to examine the 22 marchers while they were in jail, said he found "minor bruises and contusions" on nine of the walkers.

He said he found "scratch-like marks" where the marchers said they had been jabbed by the electric prod pole. He said he found no indications of burning on any of the marchers.

ONE OF THE marchers, Edie Snyder, 22, New York, had a blackened right eye and a small scratch next to it. The committee report claimed the black eye was caused when an officer placed the electric prod on the skin next to her eye.

Dr. Williams said he had "no idea" how the black eye occurred. Chief Blackwell said he "understood" Miss Snyder received the black eye in Macon the night before the arrests.

The chief further explained that the marchers' bruises and bumps were a natural result when officers attempted to carry or drag the limp bodies into and out of the bus and when they carried them up the narrow stairway in the county jail.

"A lot of my men were bruised up by the end of the day too," he said.

OFFICIALS also denied confiscating marchers' cameras, notebooks and other personal items. "We didn't even fingerprint them or take their picture," said Mr. Langford. "I wish we had."

He said he had restricted the group's march through Griffin because it would have conflicted with an already-scheduled Veterans Day parade. "Besides," he said, "I felt it would be an insult not only to the veterans of this town but in all America, to let those marchers go through town with them."

GBI CHIEF Maj. B. G. Ragdale denied any GBI agent used a prod pole during the Griffin incident. He said the only agent on the scene was W. N. Darsey of nearby Sunnyside who was called in by local officials only as an "observer."

He said Agent Darsey filed a report which indicated no excessive or brutal police action by anyone. Asked if the Darsey report considered the arrests were made in a "routine fashion," Maj. Ragsdale answered, "That's well put."

He said neither the governor nor any law enforcement agency has requested that GBI investigate the allegations of brutality.

ATC. J&C 11/17/63

A Georgia Encounter

PEACE MARCHERS: WHAT EFFECT?

By PAUL VALENTINE PEACE Groups

The 22 peace marchers, bound through Georgia on their way to Cuba to picket Russian and American military installations, have encountered some physical resistance and a considerable amount of smoldering hatred along their Georgia route.

Rural Georgia is just not accustomed to seeing Negro and white men (as well as women) marching side by side, carrying banners which call for peace and racial integration. At the very best, such a spectacle would be a source of puzzlement.

In its more common form, the puzzlement takes on the hue of resentment or hatred. These marchers, coming from states far away, and dressed in odd walking clothes, are "outside agitators," striving to upset the local status quo. Their banners call for peace, their leaflets ask the Negro workhand at the side of the road to remove the shackles of his segregated captivity.

This is quite a spectacle. The citizens of Hahira or Ty Ty just don't see this kind of thing every day.

A MECHANIC in a truck stop just south of the village of Milner summed it up: "Yeah, I seen them. They right up the road now, just above Milner. They're all Communists. You ought to see them. You can tell just looking at them, they ain't got no good sense."

In encountering the peace marchers themselves, a question naggingly and repeatedly arises: Do they really have any idea of the prevailing reaction to their presence?

Regardless of their purposes, their method of going about it shows a fairly conclusive unfamiliarity with local custom and, more important, with the subtle and delicate relationship of the Negro and the white man in rural Georgia.

The marchers are generally young intellectuals, sponsored by the Committee on Nonviolent Action and committed to the disciplines of pacifism, civil disobedience and passive resistance. Then say they have linked their peace march to Cuba with a plea for racial integration because "you cannot have peace without freedom."

Their method of applying the plea for integration clearly shows, in some instances, a lack of sensitivity to local interrelationships. This, in turn, could prove injurious to their own purposes and even set back what groping approaches may have been made by local leaders for a Negro-white reconciliation.

ONE INSTANCE will suffice:

The 22 marchers were walking in single file through the quiet village of Milner last Thursday. The white residents knew they were coming and were standing silently along one side of the main street. Storekeepers in aprons came from behind their counters to watch. Customers turned and stared. Police, of various sorts, were vaguely present.

NEWS ANALYSIS

Across the street, a crew of Negro workmen were carting away bricks in wheelbarrows from a demolished building. They saw the marchers coming, too, and knew what they were. As is the policy of the march, one of the walkers peeled off the single-file line and walked among the Negroes, endeavoring to hand them leaflets. The other side of the street — the white side — was absolutely silent. The Negroes, noticeably embarrassed, took the leaflets proffered to them. They looked at them dubiously, held them in their hands during the awkward silence. Some glanced toward the other side of the street, then stuffed the leaflets deep into their pockets. The marchers continued through the silent town, heading south.

Bibb Jails 19 Racial Hikers

A+C. Con. 11/20/63

Peace Groups

MACON (AP)—Nineteen "freedom walkers" were arrested by police Tuesday on charges of illegally distributing literature and resisting an officer.

They refused bond and had their cases postponed until Wednesday afternoon in City Recorder Court. The delay was permitted to allow those arrested to obtain legal counsel.

PRIOR WARNING

They had been warned prior to their arrests by Mayor B. F. Merritt Jr., and police Chief L. B. McCallum not to distribute the handbills.

The charge of resisting an officer were lodged against 12 who dropped to the ground and had to be carried to waiting police vehicles.

McCallum said he would dismiss all charges if the group would bypass the city. He said they refused his offer.

WILL REFUSE FOOD

They announced they will refuse food while in jail and will attempt again to hand out the literature if released.

All but one of the original group of 25 peace walkers were arrested Nov. 9 at Griffin on charges of parading without a permit. They were released with instructions to leave the city.

Kenneth Meister of Voluntown, Conn., remains in jail at Lawrenceville, on charges of reckless driving. He refuses to post bond of $200.

Seven of the group are being held in Macon under bonds of $150 each, and 12 are held under bond of $300 each.

A group spokesman, Bradford Lyttle, said he felt that Macon's ordinance is invalid and the group will remain in Macon to challenge its constitutionality.

SCENE OBSERVERS

Two observers at the scene of the arrests Tuesday were Mercer University Professors Jim Holloway and Joe Hendricks, who said they represent the Macon Council on Human Relations.

Tuesday afternoon, some 15 to 20 girls who said they were students at Weselyan College attended the court hearing and were active in aiding the group's representative in obtaining an attorney.

NO CONNECTION

The Mercer University public relations office said the professors were not representing the college, and the girls said they were not representing Wesleyan.

At Tuesday's hearing four of the "freedom walkers" were also charged with contempt of court for not rising when Judge Othneil McGehee entered the courtroom.

The walkers began their trek last summer at Quebeck, Canada, and said they are protesting U.S.-Cuba relations and racial discrimination.

A+C. Con. 11/21/63

GEORGIA NEWS

17 Hikers For Peace Convicted

Peace Groups.

MACON — Seventeen of 19 peace walkers were convicted Wednesday night of charges stemming from their attempted walk through Macon and given their choice of fines or jail.

Charges against one youth were dismissed. Mrs. Barbara Deming, 46, Cape Cod, Mass., retained a Negro attorney, Thomas Jackson, to defend her and her trial was postponed until Saturday. Mrs. Deming is white.

The racially mixed group was arrested Tuesday when it sought to distribute printed material in Macon after police warned them not to.

The group started its walk from Canada to protest racial discrimination and this nation's relations with Cuba.

Those convicted returned to their cells. They left the courtroom singing freedom songs and indicated they would not pay the fines ordered by Recorder's Court Judge Othneil McGehee.

Six were convicted of violating a city ordinance prohibiting distribution of handbills and fined $15 or three days in jail.

Eleven were convicted of violating the handbill ordinance and of resisting arrest. They were fined an additional $25 or five additional days in jail.

Six were fined another $25 or five more days in jail for contempt of court when they failed to rise when the session was called to order.

A+C. Sports 11/20/63

Negro Athletes Welcome

HOUSTON, Nov. 19 (AP)—The two largest schools in Texas have decided to compete for the services of Texas Negro athletes. The University of Houston announced today Negroes who meet academic and athletic standards would be eligible for the school's intercollegiate athletic program. The action followed a similar announcement yesterday at the University of Texas.

GEORGIA COPS BURN MARCHERS WITH CATTLE PRODS

A walk for peace--into torture

Special to the Guardian

MILNER, GA.

WHITE AND NEGRO members of the Quebec-to-Cuba peace walk, brutally tortured by police in Griffin, Ga., Nov. 9, arrived in this small Southern community Nov. 14 amid threats of violence from white segregationists.

Veteran pacifist Bradford Lyttle, leader of the 3,500-mile peace walk, said: "White townspeople lined the sidewalks as we entered Milner, their faces etched with hatred. We were followed into town by hoodlums throwing rocks at us. A white man with a revolver protruding from his pocket fell in line beside walker Ray Robinson, a Negro, and for almost an hour attempted to incite him to violence by referring to Robinson as a "nigger," cursing him and shoving him. All along the route through Georgia we are being followed by whites menacing the walkers from cars."

Among the 23 walkers, sponsored by the Committee for Nonviolent Action, are three Negro men, 14 white men and six white women, including 70-year-old Pearl Ewald of Washington, who is recuperating from a heart attack suffered immediately after her release from the Griffin jail.

DIFFICULTIES with the police in Griffin approached a climax Nov. 8 when the walkers attempted to distribute peace leaflets to Negroes sitting in a park at the end of town. Police ordered the Negroes to leave the area. Lyttle called off activities for the day in protest and informed police the walkers would return the next day.

Police in Macon, Ga., arrested 19 members of CNVA's Quebec-to-Cuba peace walk Nov. 19 on charges of violating a local leafleting ordinance and resisting arrest. The walkers, who are not cooperating with police officials and have begun a fast to protest the arrests, face up to 18 months in prison if convicted.

On Nov. 9, apparently fearing the walkers were going to enter the Negro district adjacent to the park, police attempted to stop the group by arresting Lyttle. The following account is a composite supplied by members of the walk:

Approaching Lyttle, Sheriff Gilbert shouted: "I'll get this one first, he's the leader." Another policeman apprehended Jack Shapiro, 20, a Detroit student, and told him he was under arrest. Shapiro sat down, refusing to obey an order to walk to the police van.

The officer yelled to a member of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation, waiting in a parked car: "Bring the electric prodder over here." The GBI agent ordered Shapiro to rise. When the youth continued to sit, the agent applied the prod first to Shapiro's chest and stomach and then his genitals. The student rolled over to shield himself, and the agent prodded the base of his spine. Several agents then threw him in the van.

A policeman grabbed walker Kit Havice, 23, a medical student from Boulder, Col., and ordered her into the van. She refused and sat down. The officer first said to another, "Get a policewoman," and then changed his mind: "Get the prod over here instead." Two officers picked Miss Havice up and were carrying her to the van when the GBI agent who had tormented Shapiro ran over with the cattle prod and applied the electric current to Miss Havice's legs and thighs. She was shoved into the van.

A policeman approached Edith Snyder, 22, a New York City student, and asked if she was going to be a "lady" and walk to the van. She replied that it was because she was a lady that she would not cooperate with injustice. Two officers dragged her to the bus while another applied the cattle prod to her legs.

Sam Mapp, 25, a Negro artist from Atlanta, was next to be burned with the prodder and thrown in with the others. Following him was Yvonne Klein, 29, a teacher from Minneapolis, whose legs and thighs were burned before she was heaved into the van. Eventually all but two of the walkers were thrown into the van and driven to the jail.

The two, Erica Enzer, 37, a Chicago chemist, and Flemming Jensen, 20, a newspaper reporter from Copenhagen, Denmark, were driven in the car that accompanies the walkers. They were seated in the back, with the GBI agent between them. During the ride, Miss Enzer asked the agent what his name was, but he refused to answer. As she was being carried up the stairs to the jail by two policemen, the agent applied the prodder to her legs and upper thighs.

Most of the walkers in the van refused to leave under their own power and underwent the same torment as before. Alan Nyysola, 20, a student from Baltimore, was thrown from the van. As he lay on the sidewalk, the GBI agent prodded him on the face and legs. Another officer held him while the agent shocked him in the groin. The student tried to roll over to escape the prod but the agent continued to alternate between applying the electrical device to his genitals and head. Nyysola pulled his sweater over his head in self-protection, exposing his back to the prod. Finally, the agent left the student in order to work on 17-year-old Tom Rodd, a Pittsburgh student. He applied the prod to every sensitive part of Rodd's body. When a policeman attempted to carry the youth upstairs, the agent said: "Naw, let him wiggle for a while." The Rev. Ross Anderson, 63, of Americus, Ga., was similarly prodded on the neck and face and hauled up the stairs.

Shapiro was dragged from the van and up the stairs in such a manner that his head bumped against each step. At the landing, the GBI agent jammed the prodder into Shapiro's genitals and continued shocking him all over his body, including his eyes. The pain was so great that the youth jumped up and ran inside the police office, the agent running after him, burning the back of his neck. Miss Synder was dragged into the jail reception room, several minutes later the GBI agent entered and applied the cattle prodder near her eye, raising a black welt. He then turned to Miss Klein and burned her legs and upper thighs.

POLICE ORDERED the pacifists to walk to their cells. Most of them refused on the grounds that their arrest was unjust. Michele Gloor, 20, a student from Chicago, was the first to be so ordered. She refused. A policeman with a cattle prod burned her repeatedly on the neck and legs.

Several walkers cried out in horror at the pain Miss Gloor was enduring. Their appeals to the policeman had an effect: He apparently could no longer continue tormenting the girl and finally stopped. Another policeman grabbed the prodder, saying, "Heck, I'll use it." Eventually, he, too, tired and, together with the first policeman, began carrying the girl up the stairs to the cells. The GBI agent followed them, applying the prodder to Miss Gloor's legs and thighs. Miss Havice was treated similarly.

During the entire episode, tears streamed down the faces of two policemen standing by the door, but they said and did nothing.

With the women thus dispatched, the police turned to the men. John Stevens, 20 a San Francisco student, was burned on the head and back. An eight-inch burn mark was left on his stomach.

Ray Robinson Jr., a 29-year-old Negro ex-prizefighter from Washington, received particularly brutal treatment. Stretching him full length on the floor, police burned his legs, arms and spine. They shifted the prod into his genitals and held it firmly in place.

"Get up and walk," they yelled at him, but he refused. "I'd die before I'd get up for you," he replied. Writhing in pain he repeatedly shouted, "Kill me, kill me—go ahead and kill me!" He eventually was dragged upstairs.

Tony Brown, 27, a San Francisco worker, was thrown across a desk and dragged to the stairs, where the prod was applied to his neck. Peter Gregonis, 41, an electronics technician from Silverton, Ore., walked from the van to the police station, but refused to move farther when he saw the treatment accorder the other walkers. He was dragged upstairs, his head banging against the steps.

THE WHITE MALE walkers were lodged in one second-floor cell, the Negro walkers on the third floor and the white women on the fourth floor. The women began singing freedom songs and the chorus was picked up by the other two floors.

A doctor was brought in to see Pearl Ewald, a retired Quaker school teacher with a history of heart trouble. She had not been tormented by police but the sight of the other walkers in pain apparently was too great a strain for her. After a brief examination, the doctor left without recommending that Mrs. Ewald be moved from the prison. Several hours later she suffered a severe anginal attack and was taken to a hospital.

In jail, the police were confronted with a problem. They had no desire to keep the walkers in town any longer than necessary, but the group was adamant in their demand that they be allowed to distribute the peace leaflets. Several hours later, city officials decided that it would be best to give the walkers permission.

The pacifists walked out of town the same day, distributing their leaflets to white and Negro alike.

A PEACE LEAFLET FOR A LINEMAN
A walker takes the vertical route

A COP LOOKS OVER THE LITERATURE
The prelude to sadistic torture

TIME OUT FOR SOME SONGS ALONG THE PEACE TRAIL THROUGH GEORGIA
Quebec-to-Guantanamo marchers halt for a rest outside a school

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Jp 8
SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH
p. 1
Date: NOV 21 1963

Court Convicts 'Walkers' Of Distributing Literature

By DON ROUNTREE

Seventeen of 19 "peace walkers" were convicted in Recorder's Court here last night on charges of distributing literature in the city.

They were given a choice of a $15 fine or three days in the city stockade.

Charges against one of the marchers was dismissed by Judge Othniel McGehee. The 19th walker, Barbara Deming, 42, of Wellfleet, Mass., retained a Negro attorney Thomas Jackson, to defend her. Her trial will be held on Nov. 26.

The woman said she had retained Jackson, who is assisting defense attorneys in the perjury trials in U.S. District Court here, to enable her to appeal any conviction in the Recorder's Court and thus contest the legality of the city ordinance which prohibits the distribution of literature.

The racially mixed group, consisted of three Negro men, 10 white men and six white women, were arrested Tuesday morning near Wesleyan College as they passed out leaflets.

The group is marching from Canada to Cuba to protest racial discrimination and U.S. relations with Cuba.

Following the imposing of sentences, the judge ordered the courtroom cleared and held a conference with the walkers, who through their spokesman, Bradford Lyttle, 35, of Voluntown, Conn., asked Judge McGehee if he would suspend the sentences if the group walked through Macon without distributing leaflets.

Judge McGehee said he could not because he felt he had been lenient in sentencing them.

The group then left the courtroom and were taken to the city stockade to serve the sentences. The men began to sing while waiting.

The group announced last night through Tom Rodd, 17, of Pittsburgh, Pa., that all except one would continue to fast while in the stockade. Rodd said William Dady, 19, of Rochester, N.Y., was a "mild diabetic" and must take nourishment.

Charges of violating the handbill ordinance were dismissed against Rodd.

Of the 17 convicted, six were convicted of violating the city's handbill ordinance. Eleven were convicted of violating the handbill ordinance and resisting arrest and fined an additional $25 or five days in the stockade.

Six were fined another $25 or five more days in the stockade for contempt of court when they failed to rise when the court session was called to order Tuesday.

Those convicted of violating the handbill ordinance were:

Lyttle; Anthony Wilson Brown, 27, of San Diego, Calif.; Marvin Davidov, 32, of St. Paul, Minn.; Jack Shapiro, 20, of Oak Park, Mich.; Harriet Kathryn Havice, 23, of Boulder, Colo.; and Erica Enzer, 37, of Chicago.

Convicted of violating the handbill ordinance and with resisting arrest were:

Mrs. Yvonne Mathews Klein, 30, of Minneapolis, Minn.; William Frederick Dady, 19, of Rochester, N. Y.; Allen Rudolph Michael King Wells, 20, of New York City; Ray Robinson Jr., 29, of Washington, D. C.; John Milton Stephens, 20, of Richmond, Calif.; Edith Mary Snyder, 22, of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Mary Michaele Gloor, 20, of Northbrook, Ill.; Ronald Tishon Moose, 18, of High Point, N. C.; Dennis Allen Weeks, 20, of DeKalb, Ill.; and Sammuel Weaver Mapp, Jr., 24, of Atlanta.

Convicted of contempt of court were Dady, Robinson, Weeks, Miss Gloor, Miss Havice and Brown.

Robinson said he refused to stand in the courtroom because it would be a symbol of "supporting segregation."

Weeks said he refused to stand since he believed "man-made laws are an artificial institution" and standing would mean supporting them. He said he believed all should believe in a "higher divine law."

Miss Gloor said "I don't have respect for this system of law and order," because of its injustices to many people.

Miss Havice said she didn't stand because she was in sympathy with the others who refused to rise.

Those who were sentenced to three days in jail will be released tomorrow since the two days they have been jailed counts towards the sentence.

Rodd said the group had not reached a decision to work if they should be asked to do so as inmates at the stockade.

Rodd added that the group will wait in Macon until all have completed their sentences and would not pay fines unless "extraordinary" circumstances, such as sickness, should arise.

The Bibb County Coordinating Committee announced yesterday it plans to hold a special meeting tonight at the Community Church of God to discuss the arrests.

In a statement released yesterday, the Committee said "Negro citizens of Macon are greatly disturbed by the action of the city authorities in arresting the 'Freedom-Peace Marchers' for allegedly violating a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of leaflets and circulars."

The statement continued, "We may not agree with the ideals nor the methods of many peoples, but we must raise our voice in protest when the freedom of any group is curtailed or denied under color of an unconstitutional law or ordinance."

Atl Con. 11/26/63

Cuba Trek Quit Macon By Request

Peace Groups

Twenty Canada - to - Cuba "peace marchers," who had established temporary headquarters in a Macon Negro church, were asked by Negroes to leave Macon following the assassination of President John F. Kennedy.

The marchers left Saturday and returned to Atlanta where they said they planned to remain for several days.

Nineteen members of the integrated group were convicted earlier in the week of violating Macon city ordinances, but Macon Mayor B. F. Merritt commuted the jail sentences of 18 of them Friday. All 19 were freed.

SOME AGREED

Bradford Lyttle, 36, of Voluntown, Conn., said Monday that the group—some of whom were "inactive" members of "Fair Play for Cuba" — "agreed" with Macon Negro leaders that it would be better if they left.

Lee Harvey Oswald, accused of assassinating the President, was a leader in "Fair Play for Cuba."

Lyttle said that none of the marchers, all active members of the Committee for Non-Violent Action, knew of Oswald or his activities in —Dallas.

The news of the President's death reached the marchers while they picketed Macon City Hall Friday. A youth dashed up to the marchers as they broke up their picket lines and shouted:

WHY PICKET?

"Why are you picketing? Don't you know your President has been killed?"

Lyttle said several by-standers "shouted for joy" when they heard the President had been killed. "They thought we were supporters of President Kennedy. But we were not strong supporters of the President."

Lyttle said his group objected to the President's emphasis on military preparedness and the use of troops to enforce federal court orders.

The "peace marchers" said they did not know when — or if—they would continue their march to Cuba.

Microfilm Code No.

Preston Cobb

SERS Library

ATLANTA
DAILY WORLD p. 1

Date: NOV 27 1963

New Move For Cobb Planned

Attorneys for Negro teenager Preston Cobb, condemned to death for murdering his white employer two years ago, plan to start new moves in the next few days to halt Cobb's scheduled execution on Dec. 6.

Donald Hollowell, one of Cobb's lawyers, said he plans to file legal papers this week which he says "will have the effect of staying" Cobb's execution.

Cobb was convicted on Aug. 16, 1961 of murdering his white employer, Frank Coleman Dumas, 71, a farmer of Monticello in Jasper County. He originally was scheduled to die on Sept. 22, 1961, but a series of legal moves has kept him alive on death row.

Since several scheduled execution dates have been postponed, it was necessary earlier this month for Judge Robert S. Carpenter of the Ocmulgee Judicial Circuit to resentence the Negro. This was done in a brief courtroom formality and the new electrocution date was set.

Cobb was 15 at the time he was convicted for Dumas' murder. Because of his youth, his death sentence brought wide-spread protests.

No 'Peace March' Now, Mayor Urges

Atc. Jow. 11/27/63

Peace Group

Mayor Allen Wednesday urged a group of Cuba peace marchers here not to stage a proposed demonstration in protest of the deaths of President Kennedy and Lee Harvey Oswald.

The peace marchers—bound from Quebec and Washington to picket Russian and American military installations in Cuba—met with the Mayor and explained that Atlanta police had indicated they would be arrested if they demonstrated.

Police declined comment.

The group said it had planned to march from downtown Hurt Park, down Peachtree Street and back to the park.

THE MARCHERS, originally had scheduled the march for Tuesday afternoon. They reported, however, that both police and Atlanta Negro leaders approached them, asking that the march be halted.

They said the Negroes—A. T. Walden and Warren Cochrane—told them the march might be confused with local desegregation negotiations and could jeopardize bi-racial talks. The marchers said police warned them they might be arrested on vagrancy charges if they marched.

National CNVA Chairman A. J. Muste, who flew into Atlanta Monday, said Tuesday the police warnings amounted to an abridgement of civil liberties and the pleadings of Mr. Walden and Mr. Cochrane were not necessarily the feelings of all Atlanta Negroes. He said the marchers wanted further talks with other local Negroes to get a consensus of attitudes towards CNVA purposes here.

IN THEIR Wednesday consultation with the mayor, Mr. Allen told them it would be "improper and out of taste" to stage a march at this time. He said also the march could cause "an unnecessary hazard." He urged them repeatedly not to march "for your own protection as well as the city's as a whole."

CNVA Muste said after the conference the marchers would not demonstrate Wednesday, but they "might possibly" in the future. March co-ordinator Bradford Lyttle said the group would stay in Atlanta another 10 days.

They had got as far as Macon in their southward trek and were negotiating with city leaders there on demonstration and leaflet rights when news of Mr. Kennedy's assassination came.

They ceased march activities at the assassination announcement and returned to Atlanta shortly thereafter.

Mr. Muste told the mayor the proposed march would be "quiet and peaceful" and aimed at showing the group's concern over the violence of the past several days.

Allen Warns Against Peace March

Atc. Jtc 11/28/63

L Group

A group of peace marchers was urged by Mayor Ivan Allen Wednesday not to stage a proposed demonstration here. He said the request was "for your own protection as well as the city's as a whole.

The group, members of the Committee for Non-Violent Action, had expressed their intention to demonstrate in protest to the deaths of President John F. Kennedy and his assassin, Lee Harvey Oswald.

Allen told representatives of the group that a demonstration at this time would be "improper and out of taste," and that it might cause "an unnecessary hazard."

The group had originally planned to march Tuesday. They said, however, the march was postponed after Atlanta had threatened to arrest them if the demonstration was held. Police declined to comment.

The group has been staging a "peace walk" from Quebec, Canada, to Cuba in an attempt to focus attention to its advocacy of disarmament and non-violence.

Peace Marchers Defy Mayor, Parade Here

Atc. Jow. 11/29/63

L Group

By PAUL VALENTINE

More than a dozen Cuba-bound peace marchers staged a Kennedy assassination protest march through central Atlanta on Thanksgiving Day, despite an earlier request by Mayor Allen that they not do it.

The racially integrated group marched from the Atlanta University complex to Hurt Park without incident. Prior to the march, they had participated in special services at Mt. Moriah Baptist Church near Morehouse College where Atlanta Negro leader Rev. Martin Luther King Jr. spoke.

March spokesmen said they had originally planned a march last Tuesday from Hurt Park, down Peachtree Street and back to the park, but police, certain Negro leaders and eventually the mayor asked them not to do it.

THE MARCH group, sponsored by the New York - based Committee for Nonviolent Action, said police warned them they might be arrested on vagrancy charges if they marched. The group said Atlanta Negro leaders A. T. Walden and Warren Cochrane also asked them not to demonstrate because such action could be confused with current desegregation negotiations and might jeopardize talks.

A delegation of marchers at city hall Wednesday was additionally urged by Mayor Allen not to hold a march. He said a march would be "improper and out of taste at this time."

CNVA National Chairman A. J. Muste explained the march was to protest the deaths of President Kennedy and the President's accused assassin, Lee Oswald "and the general climate of reliance on violence in which we live today."

Mayor Allen said Friday he felt the march was "inappropriate" because official grief and recognition of the late President has already been accorded and "it is improper for a group of this sort to demonstrate at this time."

The marchers nevertheless held their procession Thursday. They contend any prohibition of the march would amount to a suspension of civil liberties.

Chairman Muste said that in talks with police just prior to the march, the earlier threats of arrest were not mentioned. He speculated there "was a change in policy."

Police declined comment on the arrest warnings last Tuesday and were not immediately available for further comment Friday.

The marchers are en route to Cuba to picket Russian and American military installations there.

Microfilm Code No.

Peace Groups

SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH

p. 11

Date: DEC 9 1963

Marchers To Return

The Quebec-Washington-Guantanamo "Walk for Peace," which recently was postponed following the assassination of President John F. Kennedy, will resume Tuesday at the Macon city limit.

The "peace walk" was delayed for several days in late November when 19 members of the bi-racial group were arrested by Macon police for distributing leaflets in violation of a city ordinance.

In addition, 12 members of the group were charged with resisting arrest when they sank to the ground and had to be carried into waiting police wagons.

A total of 18 received sentences, the other case being dismissed because Tom Rodd, who was charged only with passing out leaflets, contended that he had tried to distribute them but no one had taken one from him.

After serving several days in jail, in which all members of the group except one refused to eat, all were released on Friday, Nov. 22, and advised to leave town.

Since that time the group has remained in Atlanta.

Cuba-Bound Marcher Free In Gwinnett

Atl. Jan. 12/4/63

Peace Grps.

Ken Meister, 38-year-old Cuba-bound peace marcher, has been released from Gwinnett County jail on a $200 surety bond after 34 days behind bars.

Mr. Meister, one of a group of 22 peace marchers going through Georgia, was arrested Oct. 30 in Lawrenceville on a traffic charge. The car he was driving collided with another driven by Lawrenceville man Charles Wright who signed a warrant against Mr. Meister, charging reckless driving-causing an accident.

THE ACCIDENT occurred in crowded downtown Lawrenceville, and damage was minor. No one was injured.

City police did not bring the charge. A Gwinnett County deputy sheriff served the Wright warrant, and Mr. Meister was placed in county jail.

He said he refused to post the $200 bond because the bonding system is inequitable and "works against the poor." He remained in jail, waiting for his trial which is scheduled for the third Monday in January.

GWINNETT Sheriff Quill Sammon said Wednesday he agreed to release Mr. Meister on a surety bond. Mr. Meister said he agreed to leave jail because "I didn't have to post any money and because the sheriff seemed to take my word that I would appear for my trial."

The sheriff said the peace marcher "didn't give me any trouble" during his 34-day stay. "He did a lot of writing and received a lot of mail. The other prisoners liked him, too. They got to calling him 'roadrunner' since he's one of those peace walkers."

The marchers plan to walk to Cuba where they hope to picket Russian and American military installations. The group is sponsored by the New York based Committee for Nonviolent Action.

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Gps
SERS Library

MIAMI HERALD
P16C DEC 20 1963
Date:

Peacemarch Heads South For Miami--Guantanamo

16C

By JUANITA GREENE
Herald Staff Writer

This year's Christmas season finds an integrated group of dedicated, weary and slightly apprehensive peacemongers gathered at the Georgia line ready for a march through Florida.

The little band assembled by the Committee for Nonviolent Action is scheduled to cross the border on U.S. 41 between Valdosta and Jasper on Jan. 27.

Later, if they don't run into trouble on the way, they'll arrive in Miami. From here, they hope to board a boat to Cuba, then walk across the island to Guantanamo, ending a march that began in Quebec last May.

The "Walk for Peace" will attract special attention in Miami, the U.S. city most senstive to the Cuban crisis.

It's purpose is, reports Bradford Lyttle, walk coordinator, "to raise the question with Americans and Cubans as to how reconciliation and an affirmation of friendship between the people of two nations can resolve the conflict between our countries without resort to war or threat of war."

The marchers, now about 20 in number, are carrying signs and distributing leaflets, and talking with people as they go. Because they see an intimate connection between peace and civil rights, they also distrubite a leaflet urging an end to racial tension and nonviolent solutions to racial hostility.

"We believe," says the leaflet, "that we have not been born to destroy one another, or to exploit or humiliate one another, but to try to live together in peace, as one human family."

The way from Canada to Georgia was made somewhat smoother by advance preparations, that now are going on in Florida. Local members and sympathizers with the Committee for Nonviolent Action approach public officials, inform them of the walk, and urge them to "behave reasonably and nonviolently," by cooperating instead of creating obstacles.

The marchers, said Lyttle, do not ask for protection from the authorities, but seek only the freedom to exercise what they consider their moral and constitutional rights.

The current march is a follow up to one from San Francisco to Moscow sponsored by the CNVA two years ago.

"If that march was able to traverse Poland and Russia without a serious incident of violence or opposition from the authorities, the walk to Guantanamo should be able to pass through southern Georgia and Florida without trouble," said Lyttle.

In Georgia the group did meet some trouble. In Macon, 23 marchers were distributing leaflets in a park near the Negro section when city police and members of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation arrived and placed the leaders under arrest.

When the marchers refused to move, according to later reports from the marchers, they were manhandled by police, and stuck with cattle prods in sensitive parts of the body.

The mistreatment, especially of the Negro participants, is reported to have continued at the police station, where some of the marchers said they were stretched full length on the floor and the electric prods applied for long periods on the neck, face, head and genitals. Some of the younger women had the prodders applied to their legs and upper thighs, reported Mrs. Pearl Ewald, a 70-year-old retired school teacher and marcher.

She suffered a heart attack after her release from the Griffin jail and is in Miami to recuperate and to make plans for the Florida march.

A Macon police officer who refused to be identified denied that the marchers had been "mistreated in any way, shape or form."

"They're liable to say most anything," the officer said. "I hope you keep 'em down there."

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Grps
SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH
p. 3
Date:
DEC 22 1963

MACON COURT

Marcher Faces Trial

The trial of Miss Barbara Deming, one of a group of 19 "peace walkers" arrested in Macon on Nov. 19 is scheduled during the afternoon session of Recorder's Court Monday.

The marchers were arrested by city police on charges of violating a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of leaflets.

Of the 19, all but two were convicted of the charge and sentenced to a $15 fine or three days in the city stockade. Some of the group piled up additional charges — and additional convictions—by sinking to the ground when arrested, resulting in resisting charges, and by failing to stand at the beginning of their Recorder's Court trial, resulting in contempt charges.

The 18th member of the group had charges of distributing leaflets dismissed on grounds of a lack of evidence, and the 19th, Miss Deming, posted bond.

Miss Deming, 42, of Wellfleet, Mass., said at the time of the trial of the walkers that she wished to have legal counsel to appeal any possible conviction.

The walkers have contended the city ordinance prohibiting the distribution is unconstitutional.

The Deming trial is slated before Judge Othneil McGehee, who was trial judge for the other 18 walkers.

After being sentenced, the walkers were released from city stockade on Friday, Nov. 22.

They went to Atlanta for a couple of weeks, and on Tuesday, Dec. 19, resumed their trek to Cuba. The group is now located in the vicinity of Albany.

Atl. Con. 12/24/63

Albany Jails 14 on Peace Hike to Cuba

Peace Group

ALBANY, Ga. (AP) — Fourteen Canada-to-Cuba peace walkers were hauled off to jail on triple charges Monday when they failed to follow a parade route assigned them by the police chief.

They were charged with failing to observe a parade route, failure to obey an officer and disorderly conduct. Bond was set at $200 each.

The group gave advance notice of its plan to march through this southwest Georgia center, scene in recent months of mass integration demonstrations. Police Chief Laurie Pritchett informed leaders that if they proceeded down U.S. 19 they would not be disturbed.

They marched about three miles along the federal highway through the city and then turned north on a city street. Pritchett was there to meet them.

He asked them to return to U.S. 19 and when they refused Pritchett summoned police vans to take them to headquarters.

Microfilm Code No.

Peace Grps

SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH

p. 2

Date: DEC 24 1963

Marcher Is Released By Court

Charges against a "peace walker" of violating a city ordinance prohibiting the distribution of literature were dismissed in Recorder's Court yesterday.

Miss Barbara Deming, 46, of Wellflett, Mass., had been charged by city police with the violation on Nov. 19. Eighteen other walkers also were arrested then on a similar charge when they attempted to pass out leaflets on the outskirts of Macon.

The charge against Miss Deming was dismissed on a motion by Police Chief L. B. McCallum The chief said since sentences imposed against 17 of the group were commuted by the mayor on Friday, Nov. 22, police saw no need to press charges.

Also in court and supporting the motion of dismissal was City Attorney Trammell F. Shi. Shi said last night he will undertake a review of the ordinance with a view toward amending it.

He said his office is backlogged with legislative and administrative matters and work on the ordinance would probably nos begin for a while.

Miss Deming had also been charged by officers on Nov. 19 with resisting arrest.

This charge was dismissed by Recorder's Court Judge Othniel W. McGehee.

The walkers were brought before Judge McGehee on Nov. 20. All but Miss Deming elected to stand trial, without legal counsel.

Miss Deming posted a $50 cash bond and told the court she desired an attorney to appeal any possible conviction on grounds the ordinance was unconstitutional.

Representing her at that time was a local Negro attorney, Thomas Jackson. Yesterday Negro Attorney C. B. King of Albany represented Miss Deming. King said Thomas had withdrawn from the case.

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Spos
SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH
p. 2
Date: DEC 24 1963

14 Walkers Arrested

ALBANY, Ga. (AP)—Fourteen peace walkers, continuing their long trek from Canada to Cuba, landed in jail again Monday. They were arrested for failing to follow an assigned route through this south Georgia city.

A 15th person was arrested later and held for investigation after showing up at police headquarters to inquire about bond for the others, Police Chief Laurie Pritchett said.

Pritchett said the 14 walkers were charged with disorderly conduct and failing to obey an officer for attempting to deviate from their route.

The group had been told to proceed down U.S. 19 through the city and their march would not be halted. Pritchett said they walked about three miles along the highway and then turned north on a city street.

Pritchett said they refused to return to U.S. 19 and he arrested them.

Ken Meister, a spokesman for the group, said he did not expect them to post bonds of $200 each. He also said they would fast while in jail.

The marchers began their journey early this year in Quebec with Havana as their destination to protest U.S. - Cuban relations and racial discrimination.

They have been arrested several times in Georgia.

14 Marchers Abandon Fast In Albany Jail

Atl. Jour. 12/27/63

Peace Group

ALBANY, Ga., Dec. 26 (AP)—Fourteen Canada - to - Cuba marchers spent Christmas Day in jail here, but apparently ended an earlier period of fasting.

Some of the marchers fasted Tuesday but a police spokesman said most of them now appeared to be eating.

A spokesman for the group has said the marchers do not expect to put up $200 bond.

They were arrested for allegedly failing to follow an assigned route through Albany and were charged with disorderly conduct and failure to obey a police officer.

"They all had coffee this morning and most of them seem to be eating," a police spokesman said. "They're doing fine."

A 15th member of the group was arrested when he went to police headquarters several times to inquire about his colleagues. He was identified as Fred Moore of Voluntown, Conn. He was held for investigation.

The group, which plans to picket U.S., Cuban and Soviet military bases in Cuba. is protesting U.S.-Cuban relations and segregation.

Microfilm Code No.
Peace Sup
SERS Library

BALTIMORE SUN
p. 12
Date DEC 26 1963

14 MARCHERS STILL IN JAIL

Peace Group Apparently Ends Fast In Albany, Ga..

Albany, Ga., Dec. 25 (AP)—Fourteen Canada-to-Cuba peace marchers spent Christmas Day in jail here but apparently ended an earlier period of fasting.

Some of the marchers fasted yesterday but a police spokesman said most of them now appeared to be eating.

A spokesman for the group has said the marchers did not expect to put up $200 bond.

They were arrested for allegedly failing to follow an assigned route through Albany and charged with disorderly conduct and failure to obey a police officer.

"They all had coffee this morning and most of them seem to be eating," said a police spokesman today. "They're doing fine."

Others Named

A fifteenth member of the group was arrested when he went to police headquarters several times to inquire about his colleagues. He was identified as Fred Moore of, Voluntown, Conn. He was held for investigation.

The other marchers are:

Carl Arnold, Atlanta; Eric Robinson, Lompoc, Cal.; Allen Cooper and Ray Robinson, both of Washington; Katherine Havice, Boulder, Col.; Edith Snyder, New York; Bradford Lyttle, Voluntown, Conn.; Eric Enzer, Chicago; Allen Nyysola, Baltimore; Tyrone Jackson, Albany, Ga.; Yvonne Klein, Minneapolis; Anthony Brown, San Diego, Cal.; Michele Gloor, Northbrook, Ill., and Peter Gregonis, Silverton, Ore.

The group, which plans to picket United States, Cuban and Soviet military bases in Cuba, is protesting United States-Cuban relations and segregation.

WP 12/26/63

Ga. Jails 14 Marchers, 2 From D.C.

Peace Grp

Fourteen Canada-to-Cuba peace marchers — including two Washingtonians — spent Christmas Day in the Albany, Ga. jail, the Associated Press reported yesterday.

Some of the marchers fasted on Christmas Eve but a spokesman for the Albany police department said most of them appeared to be eating yesterday.

The two marchers from Washington were identified as Allen F. Copper, 25, 2124 P st. nw, and Ray Robinson, 29, 960 Randolph st. nw.

The demonstrators, who were arrested for allegedly failing to follow an assigned route through Albany, were charged with disorderly conduct and failure to obey a police officer, according to the AP. They are being held on $200 bond but a spokesman for the group said the marchers did not expect to post bond.

A 15th member of the group, identified as Fred Moore, of Voluntown, Conn., was arrested when he went to police headquarters several times to inquire about his colleagues.

The group, which plans to picket U.S., Cuban and Soviet military bases in Cuba, is protesting U.S.-Cuban relations and racial segregation.

AFL. Con. 12/31/63

12 of 14 Marchers Refuse to Leave Cells in Albany

Peace Groups.

ALBANY, Ga. — Tweleve of the 14 members of the Quebec-to-Guantanomo "Peace March" refused to leave their jail cells here Monday for trial in City Recorder's Court and Judge A. N. Durden Sr. ordered them to show cause at 9 a.m. Tuesday why they should not be held in contempt.

The marchers, arrested here Dec. 23 after they failed to observe their prescribed parade route through the city, have remained in jail in lieu of $200 bonds each.

Two of the 14 were willing to walk up a flight of stairs to the second floor courtroom.

Microfilm Code No.

Peace Groups

SERS Library

MACON (GA.)
TELEGRAPH

Date: DEC 31 1963 p. 11

Marchers Face New Charge

ALBANY, Ga. (AP)— Twelve Canada - to - Cuba peace marchers had another charge—contempt of court—added Monday to three already lodged against them at this southwest Georgia city.

Municipal Court Judge Adie N. Durden ordered the contempt charge brought for refusal of the 12 to walk to his second floor court room from the first floor jail. He called for them to appear Tuesday to answer it.

A spokesman for the marchers, Barbara Deming, 42, of Wellfleet, Mass., said some of them were too weak from fasting to walk up to the courtroom. Others, she said, have conscientious objections to "cooperating with the court system."

Police Chief Laurie Pritchett had said earlier that, while some of 14 marchers arrested Dec. 23 had fasted briefly, most of them appeared later to be eating. "They're doing fine," he said.

All had remained in jail in lieu of $200 bonds on charges of failing to follow a prescribed parade route through the city, disorderly conduct and disobeying an officer.

Two of the 14 signified willingness to stand trial Monday but the trials of all were postponed until the contempt issue is settled. The two were Tyrone Jackson, Albany, and Peter G. Gregonis, Silverton, Ore.

From: Mennonite Research Peace Statesmen Office.

COMMENTS ON THE GRIFFIN ARRESTS

Violations of Civil Liberties; Unconstitutional Activities

1. Griffin City Manager J.S. Langford and Police Chief Leo Blackwell attempted to limit and prevent the walkers from leafleting by imposing a local "fire law" or leafleting ordinance on them. Such ordinances have been ruled unconstitutional by the Supreme Court (Lowell v. Griffin, 303 U.S. 444, Jamison v. Texas, 318 U.S. 413).

2. Police prevented walkers from leafleting on Taylor Street in Griffin and in other public areas adjacent to and within the Negro residential area. They further prevented the walkers from going onto the private property of Negroes who wanted the leaflets. These actions denied the rights of the walkers to leaflet on public property and walk about the city on peaceful business and the right of citizens to accept or refuse literature.

3. Griffin authorities prevented the walkers from proceeding peacefully north along the sidewalk parallel to U.S. 41, simply on the grounds that they didn't want them going to the Negro districts. This was an arbitrary violation of their liberties.

4. Arrested walkers were charged with violating a parade permit regulation whose existence they were told about only after being put in jail. No mention was made of this ordinance in hours of earlier discussions with the walkers.

5. Four project members were arrested while sitting in cars parked in places designated by the police themselves. They, too, were charged with parading without a permit and ignoring the lawful order of a police officer although they had neither paraded nor ignored any order.

6. Bradford Lyttle was arrested right after talking with the Chief of Police, charged with parading without a permit, which he was not doing.

7. Policemen took cameras, books and personal belongings from the walkers without giving receipts for them and unlawfully kept several items.

These gross violations of the walkers' civil liberties and property rights turned Griffin into a totalitarian society that afternoon. They occurred because the authorities believed all rights involved belonged to them and it was only a privilege for the walkers to parade, leaflet, travel about the public ways of Griffin or even be in the city. Such an attitude constituted then a harrassment of the walkers but implies the gravest consequences for all citizens of Griffin who, unless they demand the observance of civil liberties and democratic rights, will soon find themselves living in a police state rather than a free society.

Police Brutality

1. Cattle Prods An electric cattle prod is a device for producing a severe shock, which, in humans, can cause intense pain, burning, scarring and involuntary muscle spasms. The variety used in Griffin was supplied by agents of the Georgia Bureau of Investigation (G.B.I.) and consisted of a metal shaft about 30 inches long, one end of which terminated in a red handle which contained batteries and a high voltage transformer, and the other end the shocking prongs.

The prod was used to stimulate noncooperating walkers to get up and walk to the bus and jail and cells. It was also used many times with no objective other than to produce pain. One walker was tortured this way after he had offered to walk to his cell, another after he had reached his cell.

Men and women were shocked and burned on their faces, genitals, arms, legs, thighs, backs, indeed anywhere that suited the fancy of the G.B.I. agent and police who used the prod.

2. Roughness Walkers had their arms and hands twisted by the authorities and were stepped on when lying on the ground. They were dragged up and down stairs. The police frequently dragged them in ways that would maximize their pain and injury.

3. Pearl Ewald, a 70-year-old retired schoolteacher, cooperated with arrest and walked to her cell. The screams and obvious pain of those being tortured and the savagery of many authorities so shocked her that soon after release she suffered an anginal attack. A doctor who examined her decided the attack probably would not be fatal but said that a woman of her age with a record of heart attacks might die momentarily. He and other doctors who examined Mrs. Ewald recommended immediate hospitalization and medical care. Her attack was directly stimulated by the police brutality.

Police brutality of this kind is appalling in a culture that claims to be civilized, democratic and Christian. It could be expected in a cruel, totalitarian society. Hardly more than a paroxysm of irrationality, fear, frustration and hatred, it has little deterrent effect but rather encourages disrespect for law and police power, and casts a loathesome reputation over any community where it occurs. It enfeebles the ability of a city to attract responsible, creative and energetic people, rather it drives them away.

We must add that even in the situations where the most brutality and suppressions of civil liberties were occurring there were few citizens of Griffin who seemed wholeheartedly to condone or enjoy them. Most of the authorities and police officials with whom we associated seemed to be, in the main, fine and intelligent people who were tragically trapped in traditions and political commitments that were inhumane and impractical. It is our hope that these men will perceive this, and with the help and encouragement of other citizens of the lovely State of Georgia rid themselves of those ignoble and violent tendencies.

ORegon 4-0914

~~Civil Liberties~~
Peace Groups

Humanity Guild

INCORPORATED

Dedicated to Peace on Earth and Goodwill to Men

853 BROADWAY, NEW YORK 3, NEW YORK

Dear Friend:

They are putting a PERIOD to man's life on earth.

WHAT IS YOUR SURVIVAL WORTH?

Is it worth more than the production cost of an A-BOMB or an H-BOMB? Is it worth more than a stockpile of NUCLEAR WEAPONS? If you value your life more than the BOMB, then you must have the same feeling about other people's lives. This means there is some hope for avoiding a NUCLEAR WAR.

"We are in the era of the thermo-nuclear bomb that can be delivered across oceans and continents and can obliterate a whole nation. With such weapons, there can be no victory for anyone. Plainly, the objective now must be to see that such a war does not occur at all."

—Dwight D. Eisenhower

Despite the TERRIBLE PERILS that face mankind in the age of NUCLEAR WEAPONS, there are individuals who defend and promote the reckless course the major powers have taken. They can be found in all segments of society, particularly much of our news media. Some people obtain vast profits as the international tension continues; there are individuals who bombard people's minds with the threat of war and the need for endless war preparation; there are individuals who use a microphone not only to keep the "cold war" alive but to heat it up whenever it suits them. They condemn and browbeat anyone who oppose their frenzied irresponsible attitude (these are the same individuals who detest "thought control" under communism). These are the individuals who have the audacity to belittle and besmirch anyone who is sincerely working for PEACE.

"That both sides begin anew the quest for peace before the dark powers of destruction unleashed by science engulf all humanity in planned or accidental self-destruction."

—President Kennedy in his Inaugural Address

Practically every good thinking person agrees on one thing, at least. NUCLEAR WAR MUST BE ELIMINATED FOREVER FOR ALL HUMANITY . . . TEST BOMBING MUST STOP! Unfortunately, the so-called 'statesmen' of the world have exhibited a peculiar talent for complicating even simple issues. The disarmament conferences are getting exactly nowhere. Isn't it about time for the people of the world to say, "Gentlemen, let's just call the whole thing off! Dump all the bombs and armaments in the ocean. You must cooperate for yourselves and all concerned." Tens of thousands of Peace Workers are now protesting. They are marching, writing letters to editors and politicians and taking a stand for the end of the cold war, for an end to hatred and suspicion, and they demand that the HYDROGEN BOMBS and all ARMAMENTS be destroyed.

This is what former Governor Meyner (New Jersey) wrote about a shelter program: "Instead of spending $150 billion or $200 billion that would be required for a national network of underground shelters, let us put just a fraction of that money and work into a massive effort to make our world safe for human habitation—while there is yet time. We ought now to be talking about building 200 million prefabricated homes for the homeless people of Asia and Africa instead of bemusing ourselves with the cruel nonsense about underground shelters. [This would be the best thing we could do for OUR OWN PROTECTION.]

"We ought to be forging links with other peoples instead of forging iron doors to deep cellars. Our ties to other people—the good we can earn, the support we can justify for world leadership—these will contribute far more to our safety and peace of mind than the holes we can jump into when it is too late."

The enclosed 24 page illustrated booklet, "IT CAN HAPPEN," clarifies the perils of the situation. HUMANITY GUILD wants to enlighten the population throughout the world and create a mass effort for PEACE FOR ALL TIME.

"Annihilation is a certainty if the arms race continues."

—Sir Charles P. Snow, Leading British Scientist

Many sections of the American press ridicule the sincerest efforts of the PEACEMAKERS. They are jailed, vilified, described as agitators, communists, or unAmerican. BUT IF WE SEE RED EVERYWHERE WE WILL LOSE SIGHT OF THE REAL ISSUES. EVERYONE ON EARTH WILL LOSE THE PEACE AND WORLD WAR III.

"If the NUCLEAR ATTACK took place during the growing season, much of the crop would have to be sacrificed. Thereafter many areas would be denied to dairy farming for a decade. . . . In addition, unless animals were included in shelters, they could be useless as food."

—Physicist Ralph Lapp, in the Bulletin of Atomic Scientists, May, 1959

We believe that the greatest weapon for PEACE IS THE TRUTH. HUMANITY GUILD will provide you with a weekly analysis, "BETWEEN THE LINES" to clarify the mind with facts. It will be concise, expose propagandists, publicity seekers and selfish interests. "BETWEEN THE LINES" will be supplemented by other publications designed to seek out the real issues obscured in the headlines. We will expose chicanery wherever it is discernible, without bias or prejudice. We have but one goal . . . PEACE, SURVIVAL AND SECURITY.

The founder of Humanity Guild built a multimillion dollar business. In October, 1961, after 43 years of trials and tribulations, he gave the enterprise, lock, stock and barrel to his loyal employees. In his 73rd year, the founder works a fourteen hour day, seven days a week. He receives no pay. He gets no expenses. He desires no publicity. The satisfaction of knowing that he has given unstintingly of both his time and his money in the interest of PEACE is his sole purpose.

HUMANITY GUILD, a nonprofit, nonsectarian, nonpolitical organization seeks financial assistance so it can send millions of booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," and other publications stating the facts.

The PEACE movement and HUMANITY GUILD to which it is dedicated, needs a contribution from you to carry on WHAT MAY WELL BE THE MOST IMPORTANT WORK OF OUR TIME. We have a plan that we can accomplish with your cooperation. "BETWEEN THE LINES" is a most important voice in world affairs.

Will you join us in our task? Will you take an active part in our work for PEACE? Join our OPERATION HUMANITY!

FIRST, fill in the coupon below as indicated, according to your ability. With the first issue of "BETWEEN THE LINES" you will also receive your embossed membership card and a beautiful gold-filled filigreed lapel emblem, which you can wear with pride, plus all other material published by HUMANITY GUILD.

SECOND, send this letter and the two copies enclosed to three people who will not break the "CHAIN FOR PEACE." If you have a foreign friend, send a copy to him. If this chain for PEACE is unbroken for only 13 mailings, "BETWEEN THE LINES" will enlarge its subscription list by 3,000,000—you will have helped to spark a PEACE demand impossible to ignore!

We are sure that this chance for survival is worth a great deal to you. Certainly it is worth the small contribution asked. With your cooperation, HUMANITY GUILD will continue to expand until it becomes stronger than the opposition. An ACCIDENT or a single misinterpreted ACT can plunge this planet into a conflict too horrible to contemplate.

PLEASE FILL IN, CUT OUT AND MAIL ONE COUPON WITH EACH MEMBERSHIP CONTRIBUTION

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

853 Broadway New York 3, N. Y.

FRIEND OF PEACE, As a conscientious American interested in PEACE, I want to do something about it! Please send me:

- ☐ 10 booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," as sample enclosed, postpaid ..... $ 1.00
- ☐ 1 year Membership in HUMANITY GUILD. I will receive an embossed Membership Card ..... $ 1.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIP. I will receive an EMBOSSED MEMBERSHIP CARD; a gold-filled LAPEL EMBLEM beautifully filigreed PEACE ON EARTH; 52 issues of "BETWEEN THE LINES"; a weekly news analysis that will expose propagandists and selfish interests, and will promote the cause of PEACE FOR ALL TIME and all OTHER MATERIALS PUBLISHED ..... $ 5.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year CONTRIBUTING MEMBERSHIP, including all the above ..... $ 10.00 per year
- ☐ LIFETIME MEMBERSHIP, including all the above $100.00

My name is _____

(Please print clearly)

Address: _____

City: _____ Zone: ____ State: _____

Total enclosed _____. Please make all contributions to HUMANITY GUILD, Inc., a nonprofit, nonsectarian organization with no political affiliations.

Would you like to be an active member in your community? Yes____ No____

A SEARCHING ANALYSIS OF THE NEWS OF THE WEEK

Between the Lines

The major sources of news media—newspapers, magazines, radio and television are swamping the American people with misinformation, distortions and brainwashing. If you are a thinking American, you are aware of this.

BETWEEN THE LINES, a four page newsletter published by HUMANITY GUILD, is dedicated to exposing the fraud, propaganda and deceitful information that, in large part has caused so many millions of Americans to feel that nuclear testing, fall out shelters, preparation for war and nuclear war itself, are somehow beneficial for us. Below are some samples of the things we write about in BETWEEN THE LINES. We write them so you may have these facts, and so that you can pass them along to some of your friends to counteract the war propaganda which deluges us. We ask you to subscribe to BETWEEN THE LINES to help HUMANITY GUILD, which is dedicated to Peace for all time, to carry on its work. Subscribe today!

PREPARATION FOR WAR AND ITS CORRUPTION:

Billions of dollars are wasted, stolen and profited in the larceny business of war materials. An investigation led by Senator Stuart Symington of the Government's stockpile buying is very revealing, though the investigation has not yet scratched the surface. Probably the whole Senate could be busy making such investigations. Anyway, Senator Symington's investigation disclosed that some suppliers to the government stockpile of war materials had been allowed to cancel Government contracts or defer deliveries if they found they could take advantage of higher prices in the general market. On the other hand, the Government is paying a company in Canada a 50 per cent premium over market prices for delivering nickel which the government does not need. Senator Symington has discovered that the Government has an excess supply of nearly all materials and continues to take materials it does not need because it made ten year contracts and cannot cancel them even though some have several years yet to run! Also, the Government purchased thirty two below-grade materials for $417,278,500. Do not suppose that these materials were bought below-grade due to the deceit of the supplier. Witness, Mr. Gutchess of the General Service Administration said, "Government purchasing agents had known these materials were in 'non-specification grades,' but that "it has been decided to make the purchase, anyway." How can this deceit and fraud take place? Reader, it is your fault and our fault because we do not take enough interest and do not participate sufficiently in the affairs of our country. But, let's do something now. Join with us. Let us work to abolish war and the preparation for war with its accompanying corruption.

AT THE GENEVA CONFERENCE:

No one wants war, we all want peace, but, the Geneva disarmament talks irk neutralist nations because of the absence of any real negotiation on the test ban issue

FACTS ABOUT HUMANITY GUILD

As a result of the work we do, HUMANITY GUILD receives thousands of pieces of mail. Much of it praises us. Some of it abuses us. The latter type of mail only makes us resolve that much more, to carry on the work we are doing. There are a few who imply that we profit from our activities. Here are the facts: The founder of HUMANITY GUILD, Inc. has for over 23 years worked for PEACE, and now devotes over 14 hours daily to HUMANITY GUILD. He has contributed over $63,000.00 in the last 4 months and not a single dollar of that has been used for the personal use of himself or his family. The Certified Public Accountant's statement shown below attests to that. The $63,000.00 spent by HUMANITY GUILD is a cost borne entirely by the founder of HUMANITY GUILD as his means of helping to bring about the cherished goal of PEACE ON EARTH. We ask our Readers who are interested in combating the war mongers, to aid us with their contributions.

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The Humanity Guild, Inc.
Balance Sheet
February 28, 1962

ASSETS
Cash in Bank	5204.17
Unused postage deposit	4211.62
N.Y. Telephone Co. deposit	50.00	9465.79
FIXED ASSETS
Furniture and Fixtures (net of depreciation)		1112.83
Total Assets		10578.62
LIABILITIES
Accrued and withheld payroll taxes	261.41
Due Harry G. Kriegel	303.25	564.66
RESERVES
Principal Fund-October 1, 1961	4542.63
Income Fund - Exhibit B	5471.33
Reserves Balance		10013.96
Total Liabilities and Reserves		10578.62

The Humanity Guild, Inc.
Income Fund
Four months ended February 28, 1962

Now listen to Walter Lippmann, the veteran, solidly conservative commentator whose opinions, it is said, have a strong influence on President Kennedy. This is what he said in an address to the Women's National Press Club in Washington, January 10:

> Always in the past, war and the threat of war, whether it was aggressive or defensive, were usable instruments. . . . War was the instrument with which social, political and legal systems of large areas were changed. Thus, in the old days before the nuclear age began, war was a usable—however horrible and expensive—instrument of national purpose: old wars could be won. . . .
>
> The poor dears among us who say they have had enough of all this talking and negotiating and now let us drop the bomb, have no idea what they are talking about. . . They belong to the past, and they have not been able to realize what the present is.
>
> In this present, only a moral idiot with a suicidal mania would press the button for a nuclear war. Yet we have learned that while a nuclear war would be lunacy, it is nevertheless an ever-present possibility. Because . . . the nerves of a nation can stand only so much provocation and humiliation, and beyond the tolerable limits, it will plunge into lunacy. . . . There is a line of intolerable provocation beyond which reactions become uncontrollable. It is the business of the government to find out where that line is and stay well back of it.
>
> Those who do not understand the nature of war in the nuclear age, those who think that war is what it was against Mexico or Spain or in the two world wars, regard the careful attempts of statesmen not to carry the provocation past the tolerable limit as weaknesses and softness and appeasement. It is not any of these things. It is not softness. It is sanity.

At his press conference on February 14, President Kennedy was asked to comment on the charge of his right-wing critics that U.S. foreign policy is now based on a "no-win" policy in the cold war. President Kennedy, after declaring that every American wants the U.S. to be se-way." How can this deceit and fraud take place? Reader, it is your fault and our fault because we do not take enough interest and do not participate sufficiently in the affairs of our country. But, let's do something now. Join with us. Let us work to abolish war and the preparation for war with its accompanying corruption.

AT THE GENEVA CONFERENCE:

No one wants war, we all want peace, but, the Geneva disarmament talks irk neutralist nations because of the absence of any real negotiation on the test ban issue. India, Burma, Ethiopia and Sweden expressed forebodings about the planned U.S. resumption on atomic testing. These countries feel that there will be no real results in the Geneva discussions and the new atomic tests will take place. Dr. Gebre-Egzy of Ethiopia expressed disappointment that none of the suggestions offered for a compromise had even been explored by the three nuclear powers. The same point was made by India's Foreign Secretary, M. J. Desai, who complained of the "take-it-or-leave-it attitude" shown by the major powers. Surely, Citizen John Smith, U.S.A. wants no atomic war. And surely, Comrade Ivan Pavolich of the U.S.S.R. wants no war. Maybe the trouble is that Citizen John and Comrade Ivan ought to exert more pressure on their respective governments that in this Atomic Age we must learn to live together.

BERLIN AND GENERAL CLAY:

General Lucius D. Clay returned from Berlin and his report was that his special assignment to raise the morale of the West Berliners and people of West Germany has been accomplished. Yet, there is evidence that the opposite is the case. The General disclosed that early in April he had been on the verge of leaving his assignment as personal representative to President Kennedy in Berlin. Clay's role in Berlin has been an anxious one not only because of problems with the Soviet but because he has objected to Washington's policies and also to the conflicting chains of command in Berlin. At this time, in accepting termination of his assignment, Administration quarters are said to believe that the General's stay in Berlin is not only unnecessary but possibly undesirable. We cannot relax our feeling of tension over Berlin even momentarily, until all American, British, French and Russian troops are out of Berlin. Why die for Berlin?

LIABILITIES
Accrued and withheld payroll taxes		261.41
Due Harry G. Kriegel		303.25	564.66
RESERVES
Principal Fund-October 1, 1961		4542.63
Income Fund - Exhibit B		5471.33
Reserves Balance			10013.96
Total Liabilities and Reserves			10578.62

The Humanity Guild, Inc.
Income Fund
Four months ended February 28, 1962

INCOME
Contributions and Gifts received
From: Harry G. Kriegel		63000.00
outside cash donations		812.55
Total Income			63812.55
Operating Expenses
Circular material, printing and mailing services		47011.65
Postage for mailings		7088.38
Payroll		2059.88
Payroll taxes		67.54
Postage permits		50.00
Typing service		30.00
Free lance researcher		434.50
Research material		155.81
		56897.76
OTHER EXPENSES
Rent	600.00
Telephone	102.58
Stationery & office supplies	304.85
Accounting, Legal & corporate expenses	315.00
Licenses	5.00
Insurance	60.00
Advertising	16.83
Dep.-Furn. & Fixt.	39.20	1443.46
Total Expenses			58341.22
Excess of Income over expenditures			5471.33

GLANTZ AND SANK
Certified Public Accountants
305 BROADWAY
NEW YORK 7, N. Y.

Note: As of April 30, 1962, at the time this report goes to press, the founder has added $30,000.00 additional to the $63,000.00 shown above making his contribution $93,000.00 to date.

is sanity.

At his press conference on February 14, President Kennedy was asked to comment on the charge of his right-wing critics that U.S. foreign policy is now based on a "no-win" policy in the cold war. President Kennedy, after declaring that every American wants the U.S. to be secure and "the cause of freedom around the world" to prevail, continued:

"We want to do that of course without having a nuclear war. Now, if someone thinks we should have a nuclear war in order to win, I can inform them that there will not be winners in the next nuclear war if there is one, and that this country and other countries will suffer very heavy blows. So that we have to proceed with responsibility and care in an age where the human race can obliterate itself."

In the recognition by both sides that nuclear war is unthinkable and can and must be avoided lies the basis for peaceful coexistence.

This does not mean that peaceful coexistence in Kennedy's book and in Khrushchev's mean the same thing. It does not mean that we can count on sanity to prevail, or that we can be sure our government will not go beyond the line of intolerable provocations. It is perilously close to that line in Vietnam today. We cannot leave it to the government "to find out where that line is and stay well back of it." The American people must have their say about this too.

This will be difficult indeed to achieve in view of the apparent belief of the power elite of the United States and West Germany that together they can, and must, rule the world. What other explanation is there of our government's Formosan Laotian, Vietnamese, Berlin, Chinese and Cuban policies? All these issues belong in the United Nations because all of them concern all mankind.

It is time for the people of the United States to take a good, hard, honest look at the postwar policies of the U.S. power elite.

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

853 Broadway New York 3, N. Y.

FRIEND OF PEACE, As a conscientious American interested in PEACE, I want to do something about it! Please send me:

- ☐ 10 booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," as sample enclosed, postpaid ..... $ 1.00
- ☐ 1 year Membership in HUMANITY GUILD. I will receive an embossed Membership Card ..... $ 1.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIP. I will receive an EMBOSSED MEMBERSHIP CARD; a gold-filled LAPEL EMBLEM beautifully filigreed PEACE ON EARTH; 52 issues of "BETWEEN THE LINES"; a weekly news analysis that will expose propagandists and selfish interests, and will promote the cause of PEACE FOR ALL TIME; and all OTHER MATERIALS PUBLISHED ..... $ 5.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year CONTRIBUTING MEMBERSHIP, including all the above ..... $ 10.00 per year
- ☐ LIFETIME MEMBERSHIP, including all the above $100.00

My name is _____
(Please print clearly)

Address: _____

City: _____ Zone: ____ State: _____

Total enclosed _____. Please make all contributions to HUMANITY GUILD, Inc., a nonprofit, nonsectarian organization with no political affiliations.

Would you like to be an active member in your community? Yes____ No____

The reaction of the stock market to "peace scares" indicates the U. S. Government's predicament in seeking disarmament.

By Edward Drew Gourley

President Kennedy has said that "Our fundamental task is to understand the forces which move the future." It seems to me that an even more basic and urgent task is to understand the forces which threaten to destroy man's hope of having any future at all. Ignorance of these forces merely adds to collective frustration and makes for a nation of apathetic and indifferent bystanders.

We view with alarm the continuing crisis, the destructiveness of modern weaponry, the increased arms appropriations, the enlargement of the military establishment, the failure of government spokesmen to achieve disarmament, the resumption of bomb testing, the stepped-up promotion for bomb shelters, and the growing number of hate organizations, bent on locking the lips of political and religious liberals, as well as stifling every intelligent approach to the problem of peace and reconciliation.

Never before in peace time history has the military assumed such influence and power. Prof. C. Wright Mills declares that "The warlords . . . have now more means of exercising power in many areas of American life which were previously civilian domains; they now have more connections; and they are now operating in a nation whose elite and whose underlying population have accepted what can only be called a military definition of reality." In a nation which spends the greater part of its $90-billion budget on security, it might be well for all of us to heed President Eisenhower's farewell warning that "In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military-industrial complex."

IMPACT OF PEACE NEWS

What is behind this dangerous drift? In the search for an answer to this question let us review some of the highly informative reports which appeared in the financial media about the time of the Korean episode. Here are a few typical examples: "If peace should come," said an investment banker, "it is difficult to imagine what would take the place of the defense program in holding up our economy." A newspaper columnist told his readers that "Stocks suffered from a miniature peace scare last week." The Journal of Commerce reported that "If the international situation had not taken a turn for the worse, we would be inclined to take a serious view of the business outlook." Moody's Investment Service told its clients that "Only increasing arms out-we find a continuation of the old refrain in the N. Y. Times: "The stock market reacted to Pres. Kennedy's disarmament plea yesterday with the sharpest decline since Premier Khrushchev made a similar plea a little more than a year ago." So it is quite evident that whether we are involved in wars—cold or hot, the result is always the same: Peace news is bad news!

Why does our economy recoil from the prospect of peace? In an article in The Nation of March 28, 1959, Paul A. Baran, Professor of Economics at Stanford University, stated that "the threat of chronic large scale unemployment faces us in spite of the fact that nearly $50 billion are spent annually for military purposes. . . . What would happen to the economy if the military pillar were to disappear is not easy to visualize. Federal taxes, undoubtedly, could be reduced, but not even the most optimistic economic analyst would expect the resulting increase in private spending to exceed or even equal the decline in government purchase . . . The producers of military 'hardware' represent now . . . a powerful articulate bloc of vested interests whose survival is predicated upon the continuation of the armaments program. The 'Contervailing power' of those who speak for reason, sanity, education, health, (etc.) is alas! no match for the modern 'merchants of death' and their witting and unwitting allies. . . . America's program for peace and prosperity depends crucially on the elimination from power of those whose vital interests are inexorably bound up with preparation for war. The nationalization of the armaments industry and the development of an imaginative, long-term plan of economic reconstruction are the basic prerequisites for the growth of a free, democratic society."

WHO WANTS ARMS?

An important book which sheds considerable light on the economics of disarmament is World Without War, by John Desmond Bernal, considered by many as the leading scientific mind in Great Britain. Here is a particularly pertinent paragraph which confirms much of the thesis already presented: "Another factor," says Dr. Bernal, "is the effect of the changeover from military production in both capitalist and socialist countries, which would be the natural consequence of any serious disarmament programme. It is perhaps the fear of this in capitalist circles that has, as much as anything else, held up

It is quite evident that Western protocol has not been formulated on humanitarian principles, but rather upon the basis of economic expedience. Therefore, the plenipotentiaries of nations thriving on arms production, cannot be expected to enter disarmament parlays with peace in their hearts. They are duty-bound to the socio-political system they represent and, often believing it sacrosanct, are seldom annoyed with qualms of conscience when rising to its defense.

Right or wrong, America is our country. When it is in the right we should feel a sense of pride, but when it is in the wrong we should not rest until the wrong is righted. This is the mark of true allegiance! This is an enlightened loyalty which transcends the narrow boundaries of conformity, because its noble fidelity is bound up with America's future rather than its status quo. It is more vitally concerned with the welfare of the many than the privilege of the few. It infuses in us that great sense of oneness with all humanity, and strengthens us to build our own happiness on the promotion of happiness for others.

We shall continue to live in a "community of fear" as long as our economy rests on an immoral foundation. America's contribution to the edifice of peace depends on two essential elements—First: an economy geared to human needs, for the inability to prosper on peace is the confession of moral bankruptcy. Second: a foreign policy which welcomes disarmament, puts an end to the Cold War, and gives forth enough good will to hold mankind in common fellowship. We must be true to ourselves and if the first essential is implemented, the second will "follow as night the day" and then no one can say we are "false to any man."

For the happy rapprochement between the East and the West we should reject Kipling's dismal prediction that the "twain" shall never meet, and take to our hearts Richard Hovey's affirmative assurance that "The East and the West in the springtime of the world shall blend." This world is still in the springtime of its history and as its present guardians, you and I must help to remove the obstacles which are preventing the human family from moving forward into a securer and happier future.

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

Incorporated March 27, 1939

HARRY G. KRIEGEL, Founder

SPONSORS

Dr. JEROME DAVIS, D.D.
Outstanding Internationally Known Educator, Author, Lecturer and World Traveler, West Haven, Conn.

MAXWELL GEISMAR
Prominent Literary Critic, Harrison, N.Y.

SYMON GOULD
Director of Health Guild
New York, N. Y.

Professor FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN

On Nuclear Testing

Because of press distortions of the Soviet position at the Geneva test ban conference, a brief review is in order. The test ban negotiations had been going on for three years without results. While many separate items of a treaty had been agreed upon, there was wide disparity on the extent of control and inspection necessary, the USSR holding that in view of the proved possibility of detecting most tests, the Western demand for a large number of on-the-spot inspections amounted in fact to a desire to gain intelligence information.

With negotiations at stalemate, the USSR took the position during 1961 that the best solution would be to merge the discussion of banning tests with disarmament talks, declaring repeatedly that once an agreement was made on complete and universal disarmament, the USSR would accept any proposals for control and inspection offered by the West, and that these should accompany every step of a disarmament program, which would necessarily also include the question of nuclear weapons and their tests.

The West denounced the Soviet proposal as an attempt "to drown the effort to get a test ban treaty." U.S. negotiator Arthur H. Dean told the UN last fall that test ban negotiations could soon be completed "if the Soviet Union will abandon its insistance on merging such negotiations in general and complete disarmament."

During the summer of 1961 the international situation gravely deteriorated. The moratorium was in fact broken by French atomic tests in the Sahara, supported by Britain and the United States. West Germany was encouraged in its demand for nuclear weapons. Cries for war over Berlin were heard in Washington, and President Kennedy's July typical examples: "If peace should come," said an investment banker, "it is difficult to imagine what would take the place of the defense program in holding up our economy." A newspaper columnist told his readers that "Stocks suffered from a miniature peace scare last week." The Journal of Commerce reported that "If the international situation had not taken a turn for the worse, we would be inclined to take a serious view of the business outlook." Moody's Investment Service told its clients that "Only increasing arms outlay seems likely to prevent a marked business setback." And the U. S. News reported that "Present prosperity is underwritten by billions being spent for armaments: it makes one shudder to think what the sudden outbreak of peace might mean to the American economy." All of which led economist Stewart Chase to question: "Must prosperity depend upon disaster?" More recently (Sept. 26, 1961) World Without War, by John Desmond Bernal, considered by many as the leading scientific mind in Great Britain. Here is a particularly pertinent paragraph which confirms much of the thesis already presented: "Another factor," says Dr. Bernal, "is the effect of the changeover from military production in both capitalist and socialist countries, which would be the natural consequence of any serious disarmament programme. It is perhaps the fear of this in capitalist circles that has, as much as anything else, held up disarmament negotiations for so long, because here the apparent interests of the capitalist and socialist countries are most violently opposed. It is quite clearly in the interests of socialist countries engaged in rapid construction, and having no fear of over-production or slumps, to wish to reduce their military expenditures; but, as already indicated, the military expenditures of capitalist countries is a kind of insurance for full employment and profits even in peace-time, and its abandonment is looked at with fear greater than war.

Mr. Gourley is an artist, lecturer and free-lance writer.

WE WANT WAR!

Red Russia Must Perish!

LET'S BURY THEM FIRST! BEFORE THEY BURY US!

To remain free, America must attack and destroy the nerve-center of the Communist conspiracy while we still have the strength to win.

WE DEMAND AN END TO ALL TALKS AND COEXSISTENCE.

WE DEMAND AN IMMEDIATE DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION

Communism Must Perish! Better Dead, Than Red!

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL PARTY
POST OFFICE BOX 191 GRACIE STATION NEW YORK 28, N. Y.

WAR PROPAGANDA LIKE THIS IS THE MARK OF THE LUNATIC FRINGE

Do the brainwashed SUPER PATRIOTS think for one moment that the U.S., one third the size of Russia, could destroy such a vast area, plus China with over 600 million people, who have reason to hate the U.S.? What lunatic can think of ATOMIC WAR? Can these brilliant minds think that Russia and China would not retaliate just as quickly and destroy tens of millions of Americans, their homes, factories, etc.? Are these HEROES willing to sacrifice tens of millions of American people because some sections of the U.S. press, who call themselves public opinion, have inculcated HATRED into their feeble minds? Can these SUPER PATRIOTS guarantee us that Russia would not use their 10,000 pound earth satellites speeding overhead at 18,000 miles an hour capable of dropping atom bombs on all our towns and cities to cause annihilation for 90% of our population?

PLEASE LOOK ON OTHER SIDE FOR MORE INTERESTING FACTS

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.
Incorporated March 27, 1939
HARRY G. KRIEGEL, Founder

SPONSORS

Dr. JEROME DAVIS, D.D.
Outstanding Internationally Known Educator, Author, Lecturer and World Traveler, West Haven, Conn.
MAXWELL GEISMAR
Prominent Literary Critic, Harrison, N.Y.
SYMON GOULD
Director of Health Guild
New York, N. Y.
Professor FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN
Distinguished historian and writer
Professor of Government of Williams College
WILLIAM T. BAIRD, Illinois
Rev. LEE H. BALL, Ardsley, N. Y.
Mrs. A. H. BENSON
Economist Writer, Ida Grove, Iowa
AURIEL BESSEMER
Writer, Lecturer, Artist, New York, N. Y.
PEARL CLINE
Writer and Poet, Montrose, Colorado
MOST REV. CLARENCE E. DUFFY
New York, N. Y.
Professor KERMIT EBY
Professor of Social Science, Euclid, Chicago
Dr. ROYAL W. FRANCE
Eminent Lawyer, New York, N. Y.
Rev. CLEMENT GORDON
New York, N. Y.
Rev. H. PAUL GUHSE, Litt. D.
Director Foundation for Religious Action
Wantagh, New York
Rev. CHESTER E. HODGSON
Brooklyn, N. Y.
JOSEPH HOVELL
Sculpture, Artist, New York, N. Y.
Mrs. ELY JACQUES KAHN
Architecture, New York, N. Y.
SAMUEL H. MARKS
Secretary New Era Letter Co., New York
Dr. LEO MAYER
Prominent Physician, New York, N. Y.
Dr. JOSEPH S. MURPHY
Doctor of Philosophy, Brandeis Univ.
MONROE REISMAN
Artist, Designer, Dallas, Texas
RICHARD ROFFMAN
Public Relations, New York, N. Y.
Dr. Rev. JACOB WATERMAN ROSE
Bronx, N. Y.
NATHAN ROSEN
President and Chief Chemist, New York
Dr. SYLVAN M. SHANE
Baltimore, Md.
SYDNEY SILVERMAN
Member of Parliament, House of Commons, London, England
PERRY A. SMITH III
Washington, D. C.
MARY W. TURNER
New York, N. Y.
LOUIS UNTERMEYER
Poet and Author, Newtown, Conn.
WILLARD UPHAUS
Executive Director of World Fellowship, Inc.
CLARA M. VINCENT
Chairman of Social Action Committee
Livonia, Mich.
REV. DEL EBERHARDT
Woodmont, Conn.
R. E. PATTEN
Publisher, E. Des Moines, Iowa

During the summer of 1961 the international situation gravely deteriorated. The moratorium was in fact broken by French atomic tests in the Sahara, supported by Britain and the United States. West Germany was encouraged in its demand for nuclear weapons. Cries for war over Berlin were heard in Washington, and President Kennedy's July 25th speech, announcing the call-up of reserves and a second big increase in military spending, and initiating the shelter hysteria, sounded like a call to arms. Demands for renewing tests were increasingly heard from the Pentagon, AEC and others in Washington. We are indebted to Albert Bofman of Chicago for the information that from April 17 to the end of August no fewer than 45 U.S. Senators and Congressmen on 64 occasions called for resumption of tests while only four of our legislators urged caution.

President Eisenhower, before he left office, had declared that the United States was no longer bound by the moratorium. President Kennedy last summer issued a last chance warning to the Russians that the U.S. would resume tests if agreement was not reached in Geneva.

During all this time, tunnels were being prepared in Nevada for underground tests, the only ones the United States was interested in at that time. Let us not forget this fact when we hear the pious castigations of the Russians for double-dealing in preparing for tests during the Geneva negotiations.

The Soviet delegation came to the Geneva Conference with a new offer. They proposed an agreement on prohibition of nuclear weapons tests in the atmosphere, under water and in space, relying on existing means of detection of each country, with a moratorium on underground tests until a system of control could be worked out in connection with a disarmament agreement.

TOWARD WAR OR PEACE?

Millions of Americans agree.

"No more tests, East or West" is the cry that goes up from the grass roots across the country.

WHO LOVE'S NGO DIEM?

When President Ngo Diem of South Vietnam decided to have a little outing and invited the diplomatic corps and the foreign press to come along on a picnic in the countryside, he had to take along a regiment of soldiers to safeguard everybody from any uninvited guests. The regiment probably didn't enjoy this extra tour of duty. They were undoubtedly still tired from their vain foray into the jungle to rescue some troops who had been on a training expedition. It was at this training expedition that two American sergeants were killed and two more captured, and the whole squad of "trainees" vanished.

* * *

Subscribe to BETWEEN THE LINES, the weekly that will give you important facts in condensed form. Not to be found in any other news media—see coupon on other side and mail today!

HUMANITY GUILD, INC. PEACE ON EARTH

PEACE or PIECES

Russia and the United States persist the Ultimate of the H-Bomb War: The world comes to an end. This is a distinct possibility. To survive the U.S.S.R. must have peace—Humanity must have total disarmament and all people must act in honest cooperation eagerly and sincerely in that direction. The people of the United States must also have PEACE to remove the burdens of armaments, to utilize these economic resources for our people, and remove apprehensions of disaster which are creating for us a nation of sheep and psychopaths. But the economic and political manipulators who rule our country must have war to keep their exploitive economy alive. They move as eagerly toward the H-bomb WAR,—a WAR promoted by Special interests and WAR MONGERS—as Khrushchev moves towards total disarmament.

No leadership exists anywhere at levels of decision in the United States to turn the world from DISASTER to PEACE. The tide is toward WAR. If WAR COMES, the blame must fall on the heads of the Superpatriots, Nazi Fascists, de Gaulle, Franco, Salazar, Adenauer, Johnson, Rusk, McNamara, Dulles, Stevenson, the Rockefellers, Du Ponts, Mellons, Morgans, Lemnitzer, Taylor et al.—if any are left to be accused.

Disarmament and Peace: Once more dire peril to the United States is bringing our people face to face with domestic causes. We may expect our wavering "allies" to back down. They have all had many a taste of defeat. They stand under the guns of the U.S.S.R. There are already many within their gates who believe "Better Dead Than Red." They will—they must—back down, leaving the United States isolated.

If our "Batistas" in the State Department and Pentagon still vote for an H-bomb WAR, we will disintegrate into dust.

These are several direction the "Atomic Nemesis" may take: Russia Will Back Down: So the wiseacre's say in the controlled mass media, to permit world tensions to continue as before and to preserve a monopolistic economy founded on war and preparations for war, and to extend the world fear of disaster. This expectation is stupid and may well be disastrous.

Russia has endured an undeclared war (cold and hot) of the United States and its allies for over 40 years—has endured Stalingrad—has fought to establish a new society even now surrounded by 33 bases foisted on other countries by dollars and pressure. Russia in the face of this bitter hostility of the West—is able to out-gun us in every military department—and has at last found its "place in the sun." (It is a pipe dream to believe that she would ever surrender the powers of H-bomb blackmail, the international weapon created at Hiroshima by the U.S.) It is under no compulsion to do so. All the odds are in its favor. In this poker game Russia plays with Aces—the west with Jacks and Deuces.

Monopoly Capitalism will collapse into wreckage, burying

FACTS ABOUT HUMANITY GUILD

As a result of the work we do, HUMANITY GUILD receives thousands of pieces of mail. Much of it praises us. Some of it abuses us. The latter type of mail only makes us resolve that much more, to carry on the work we are doing. There are a few who imply that we profit from our activities. Here are the facts: The founder of HUMANITY GUILD, Inc. has for over 23 years worked for PEACE, and now devotes over 14 hours daily to HUMANITY GUILD. He has contributed over $120,000 in the last 9 months and not a single dollar of that has been used for the personal use of himself or his family. The Certified Public Accountant's statement shown below attests to that.

JACK GREENSTEIN
CERTIFIED PUBLIC ACCOUNTANT
129 BETTY ROAD
EAST MEADOW, NEW YORK
IVANHOE 3-4087

October 1, 1962

Humanity Guild, Inc.
853 Broadway
New York, N.Y.

Gentlemen:

We have examined the Balance Sheet and related Statement of Receipts and Disbursements as of August 31, 1962 of Humanity Guild, Inc. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted accounting and auditing principles applicable in the circumstances and included all the procedures and tests we considered necessary.

Subject to the accompanying comments, the accompanying Balance Sheet and related Statement of Receipts and Disbursements present fairly the financial position of Humanity Guild, Inc. as of August 31, 1962.

Jack Greenstein
Jack Greenstein
Certified Public Accountant

HUMANITY GUILD, INC.
BALANCE SHEET
AUGUST 31, 1962

ASSETS
Cash In Bank		$1879.24
Prepaid Expenses		243.98
Security Deposits		75.00
Furniture and Fixtures	$1543.54
Less: Allowance for Depreciation	159.05	1384.49
TOTAL ASSETS		$3582.71
LIABILITIES
Accrued Payroll Taxes	$ 253.44

START HUMANITY GUILD CLUBS

The importance of HUMANITY GUILD CLUBS cannot be overemphasized for PEACE on EARTH and GOODWILL to MEN is the most important issue of our time. Clubs can be started with five members. When they grow to 30 members, new clubs should be organized among the membership to keep the groups compact and operational. Full information and instructions are available from the national office of Humanity Guild, Inc., 853 Broadway, New York 3, N. Y.

Humanity Guild, Inc. was organized in 1938. It obtained its New York State Charter on March 27, 1939, has published "HUMANITY" magazine from 1938 to 1940, a publication devoted to the rescue of thousands of unfortunate refugees in the Nazi-Fascist era. We also published and distributed millions of 24 page pamphlets some of the titles being "Refugia," "Am I My Brother's Keeper," "The Truth Will Prevail," and "Eternal Heritage." We were also the publishers of "HAPPINESS MAGAZINE" and "YOUR HAPPINESS MAGAZINE" and "IT CAN HAPPEN" plus other educational material.

We are now on press publishing the most sensational remarkable expose of our time, "THE GREAT CONSPIRACY," that will hold you spellbound from beginning to end. "THE GREAT CONSPIRACY" originally had been sold at $3.50 per copy. So important is this book that we are printing "THE GREAT CONSPIRACY" in pocket book format at a $1.00 price. Members of Humanity Guild will receive "THE GREAT CONSPIRACY" FREE. Humanity Guild intends to publish the most important books and brochures for its members and the general public as a comprehensive guide to evaluate the news issues of day to day facts that are distorted or hidden by the controlled mass media, radio, T.V. and the rabid commentators.

It will be obvious that by these procedures Humanity Guild will be a powerful factor to help all Americans to evaluate all the facts from fiction and distortion. We must know that the powerful controlled news media in the U.S.A. prepares the general public to assume and insinuate that anyone who believes in PEACE is a hindrance on the American scene, WHICH IS FALSE. Thus the great majority of the so called free world people are brainwashed so thoroughly that only a HOLOCAUST can awaken them from their stupor and then it will be too late.

True to its devotion to PEACE and GOODWILL, HUMANITY GUILD has decided to cease publication of "BETWEEN THE LINES" because two publishers claim a prior right to the name. Although we originally produced our "BETWEEN THE LINES" as of May 1, 1947, Humanity Guild decided to stop publishing "BETWEEN THE LINES" for the present. Therefore, to all our members and prospective members, and friends of HUMANITY believe "Better Dead Than Red." They will—they must—back down, leaving the United States isolated.

If our "Batistas" in the State Department and Pentagon still vote for an H-bomb WAR, we will disintegrate into dust.

These are several direction the "Atomic Nemesis" may take: Russia Will Back Down: So the wiseacre's say in the controlled mass media, to permit world tensions to continue as before and to preserve a monopolistic economy founded on war and preparations for war, and to extend the world fear of disaster. This expectation is stupid and may well be disastrous.

Russia has endured an undeclared war (cold and hot) of the United States and its allies for over 40 years—has endured Stalingrad—has fought to establish a new society even now surrounded by 33 bases foisted on other countries by dollars and pressure. Russia in the face of this bitter hostility of the West—is able to out-gun us in every military department—and has at last found its "place in the sun." (It is a pipe dream to believe that she would ever surrender the powers of H-bomb blackmail, the international weapon created at Hiroshima by the U.S.) It is under no compulsion to do so. All the odds are in its favor. In this poker game Russia plays with Aces—the west with Jacks and Deuces.

Monopoly Capitalism will collapse into wreckage, burying the Wall Street Dictatorship. NATO, the revived "unHoly Empire" instrument for the "Holy War" being waged by our manipulative system, will come to its historical end.

The United Nations is our only hope if the U.S. will allow it to be FREE. Adenauer, de Gaulle, Franco, Salazar and other "Batistas" in Europe will perish or become fugitives from justice.

The people of Latin America will overthrow its "Batista" dictatorships and will eventually drive out the money changers and will free itself from political and economic bondage.

West Europe will have no place to go but Communist. All Asia, North Africa, Central Africa, South Africa will be lost to the West.

FIND 'EM, FIGHT 'EM, FINISH 'EM. In our role in South Vietnam, one of our contributions in the effort to "civilize" the Vietcong, who are opposed to the corrupt Diem Government, is our rousing battle slogan, "FIND 'EM, FIGHT 'EM, FINISH 'EM!" Thus we instruct the pro-Diem.

Another of our civilizing roles is this: When with the help of many of our pilots and troops in American helicopters, some Vietcong troops are tortured and slain, reporters and photographers are ferried to the scene so that pictures may be taken of the dead bodies and stories written of the "VICTORY." This is intended to encourage the Diem forces, and to strike terror into the Vietcong rebels. The New York Times reports on April 26, 1962, "there were twenty-six bodies lying in two rows in the hot sun." The Vietnam countryside is being fertilized by the bodies of American boys who died, some of our own wounded were wondering what they were doing in that strange land fighting native people who wanted to determine their own form of Government. Dead bodies serve not only as fertilizers but also as a source of disease and pestilence, which are no respectors of any human body on which to breed. Dead bodies also serve to outrage and rally partisans on both sides to greater hatred and battle—a perilous situation indeed in this nuclear age.

The U.S. press reports gloatingly with big headlines, how T.V. and radio commentators dramatize our glorious work. How we murdered thousands of Vietnamese who seek freedom from our Diem stooges and his murderers. We have helicopters and planes dropping napalm bombs with no mercy in their hearts for innocent Vietnamese. We tear their guts apart just because they want a better future, but our generals and monopolists only have one viewpoint: "Find 'em, fight 'em, finish 'em."

Do you want disaster to be universal? There will be no place to flee to, no place to return. "ATOMIC NEMESIS," born of corruption and violences within our gates will spread destruction, disaster and death everywhere. We need not die! We need not choose between foreign concepts of "Communism" and death. We are free to choose our own concepts of "Americanism," extended into the economic field. For long years we have been casting our own pearls before swine in high positions.

There is "blood on the moon." Millions are doomed through the treachery and stupidity of those who are sworn to protect us. UNLESS—unless, we are awake to truth. We must reject corruption and work intelligently to save ourselves and our families in these last hours which remain for survival. Truth and an "Act of God!" can save America.

Gentlemen:

We have examined the Balance Sheet and related Statement of Receipts and Disbursements as of August 31, 1962 of Humanity Guild, Inc. Our examination was made in accordance with generally accepted accounting and auditing principles applicable in the circumstances and included all the procedures and tests we considered necessary.

Subject to the accompanying comments, the accompanying Balance Sheet and related Statement of Receipts and Disbursements present fairly the financial position of Humanity Guild, Inc. as of August 31, 1962.

Jack Greenstein
Certified Public Accountant

HUMANITY GUILD, INC.
BALANCE SHEET
AUGUST 31, 1962

ASSETS
Cash in Bank		$1879.24
Prepaid Expenses		243.98
Security Deposits		75.00
Furniture and Fixtures	$1543.54
Less: Allowance for Depreciation	159.05	1384.49
TOTAL ASSETS		$3582.71
LIABILITIES
Accrued Payroll Taxes	$ 253.44
Accrued Expenses Payable	1740.16	$1993.60
RESERVES
Balance October 1, 1961	$4327.63
Excess of Disbursements over Receipts	(2738.52)	1589.11
TOTAL LIABILITIES AND RESERVES		$3582.71

HUMANITY GUILD, INC.
STATEMENT OF RECEIPTS AND DISBURSEMENTS
OCTOBER 1, 1961 TO AUGUST 31, 1962

RECEIPTS
Contributions from H.G. Kriegel	$116247.22
Outside Contributions	3567.59
Discounts Received	826.76	$120641.57
DISBURSEMENTS
Circulars, Paper, Printing	$ 96743.83
Postage	18669.07
Payroll	4062.15
Research and Free Lance Materials	590.87
Office Expenses	390.66
Rent	1500.00
Telephone	222.05
Professional Fees	530.00
Insurance	81.93
Subscriptions	127.57
Electricity	30.82
License Fees	15.00
Repairs and Maintenance	120.00
Payroll Taxes	137.09
Depreciation - Furniture and Fixtures	159.05	123380.09
EXCESS OF DISBURSEMENTS OVER RECEIPTS		$ 2738.52

of day to day facts that are distorted or hidden by the controlled mass media, radio, T.V. and the rabid commentators.

It will be obvious that by these procedures Humanity Guild will be a powerful factor to help all Americans to evaluate all the facts from fiction and distortion. We must know that the powerful controlled news media in the U.S.A. prepares the general public to assume and insinuate that anyone who believes in PEACE is a hindrance on the American scene, WHICH IS FALSE. Thus the great majority of the so called free world people are brainwashed so thoroughly that only a HOLOCAUST can awaken them from their stupor and then it will be too late.

True to its devotion to PEACE and GOODWILL, HUMANITY GUILD has decided to cease publication of "BETWEEN THE LINES" because two publishers claim a prior right to the name. Although we originally produced our "BETWEEN THE LINES" as of May 1, 1947, Humanity Guild decided to stop publishing "BETWEEN THE LINES" for the present. Therefore, to all our members and prospective members, and friends of HUMANITY GUILD we desire to follow through an honorable commitment. Here is how we thought we could solve our problem. In substitution for our "BETWEEN THE LINES" here are two alternatives offered as per our previous folder herewith enclosed.

As a SUSTAINING MEMBER you will receive 52 issues of a weekly newspaper, the NATIONAL GUARDIAN. Founded in 1948, the GUARDIAN has lived on as the voice of a progressive America. Devoted to peace, equal rights and journalistic integrity, the GUARDIAN prints the facts about test ban and disarmament negotiations; the truth about Berlin, Vietnam, Cuba and many important world events in explicit detail. It documents every political sell-out, the business corruption and judicial frame-up. It is a paper you cannot afford to be without if you are concerned with HUMANITY'S SURVIVAL and its progress. We urge you to put a check mark in the box on the coupons below. Return the coupon to us at once so you will start receiving your NATIONAL GUARDIAN or instead if you prefer, we will obtain a year subscription for the remarkable monthly magazine, the NEW WORLD REVIEW. Either of the above we will gladly subscribe for you FREE for one year by joining HUMANITY GUILD as a Sustaining Member. You will also receive an EMBOSSED MEMBERSHIP CARD; a gold filled LAPEL EMBLEM beautifully filigreed PEACE ON EARTH and a THANK YOU RECEIPT.

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

853 Broadway New York 3, N. Y.

FRIEND OF PEACE, As a conscientious American interested in PEACE, I want to do something about it. Please send me:

- ☐ 10 booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," as sample enclosed, postpaid ..... $ 1.00
- ☐ 1 year Membership in HUMANITY GUILD. I will receive an embossed Membership Card ..... $ 1.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIP. I would like to join HUMANITY GUILD and receive 52 newsweekly issues of the NATIONAL GUARDIAN for one year. The regular price is $7.00, however, I understand that my check for $5.00 (enclosed) entitles me to all the above as a sustaining HUMANITY GUILD member and other important facts published constantly ..... $ 5.00
- ☐ 1 year SUSTAINING MEMBERSHIP. I would like to receive the remarkable factual monthly magazine, the NEW WORLD REVIEW, for one year. I understand that my check for $5.00 (enclosed) entitles me to all the above as a sustaining HUMANITY GUILD member and other important facts published constantly ..... $ 5.00 per year
- ☐ 1 year CONTRIBUTING MEMBERSHIP; including all the above ..... $ 10.00 per year
- ☐ LIFETIME MEMBERSHIP; including all the above $100.00

My name is _____
(Please print clearly)

Address: _____

City: _____ Zone: _____ State _____

Total enclosed _____. Please make all contributions to HUMANITY GUILD, Inc., a nonprofit, nonsectarian organization with no political affiliations.

Would you like to be an active member in your community? Start a chapter? Yes___ No___

THE NEW CUBAN "CRISIS"

The U.S. claims to be the strongest power in the world. We shoot at Venus and have push buttons that can destroy everything in the Soviet Union. Yet, we are in a state of hysteria because a tiny island neighbor we have long been threatening has received defensive weapons that can only reach targets about 25 miles away. Our Secretary of State dashes everywhere to put high pressure on our allies not to let ships take supplies to Cuba, although such actions would be an absolute violation of international law. We are always claiming to be a champion of the oppressed people. Are we?

During the past few weeks there have been reports of increased shipments of supplies, both military and non-military to Cuba from the Soviet Union and other Communist countries. In this country this development has been met by increasingly extravagant statements of concern, including recommendations that the United States intervene militarily to prevent what is called a "build up of Communist military power" in the Western Hemisphere, and climaxing in a Congressional action widely described as a "ready-to-fight" resolution. The Monroe Doctrine has been cited repeatedly, by our superpatriotic United States Senators.

In this it corresponds to American observation posts in Turkey, Iran and Formosa, to mention only three. We have 33 such bases and posts much closer to the Soviet Union than Cuba is to the United States, yet it is inconceivable that our Government would accept this fact as a justification for Soviet armed intervention into any of these countries. Also, of course, we maintain a military base at Guantanamo on the island of Cuba itself in complete disregard of the wishes of the Cuban Government. Is it moral that a great, rich and powerful country like the U.S. to strangle and blockade a small weak country like Cuba and create starvation for innocent people who want to solve their own way of life for a better future?

For those who have been watching developments in Cuba, the increase in help from the Soviet Union should come as no surprise. The dilemma of the Soviet Union with respect to Cuba has been freely discussed for months. The economic difficulties and our starvation tactics created by the United States blockade of Cuba, and in their desperate need for survival is due to increasing restrictions against the Cuban people who are the real sufferers because it means that the so-called "Communist showcase" in the Western Hemisphere was proving very damaging to United States prestige. It has been openly predicted that Khrushchev must make a decision either to abandon Castro or to increase aid to him very substantially. Obviously the Soviet Government chose the second of these alternatives.

On the basis both of Soviet statements and those of our own President, the largest part of the shipments to Cuba have been non-military, and most of the military equipment has been of a defensive nature and why should they not defend themselves considering the threats our mass hysterical media is creating?

Cuba is a very small country with a population of six and one half million totally vulnerable to American power, with a supply line extending sphere has indicated our own essential abandonment of the Doctrine as a whole.

Its continuation through economic blockades, embargoes, pressured and extended to other countries, or through our military intervention may possibly succeed in crushing the Castro Government at a terrible loss of life for their people and ours and possibly an atomic holocaust, but in the process it will leave a residue of bitterness and resentment that will be a breeding ground for far greater troubles, if it does not result in ATOMIC WAR itself.

A different and Friendly View of Cuba From A Newly Returned U.S. Historian by Samuel Shapiro, Dept. of History, Michigan State, back from Cuba recently, he stated in a letter to the New York Times, September 17, 1962, the following:

"While I saw much evidence of suppression, mismanagement and food shortages, I am still impressed by the positive achievements of the revolutionary regime. The Cuban economy has managed to survive the total loss of $600 million a year in United States imports fairly well: gasoline, for example has never been rationed and still sells at the old price of 32 to 34 cents a gallon.

"Despite the loss of American technicians, raw materials and replacements parts, the refineries, the electric power plants and the telephone system are functioning normally. Cuba has all but wiped out illiteracy and is engaged in a massive program of technical education; the construction of new homes, hospitals, schools and vacation hotels continues on a scale hardly matched elsewhere in Latin America. I am convinced that Castro is still supported by a majority of the Cuban people. These are some of the good features of the revolution that might be better reported if Castro relaxed the ban on American newspaper men. Cuban control of the press, however, it is understandable that many American papers have printed grossly inaccurate accounts of what has taken place on the island....

"Cuban censorship is in part a measure of self defense against American economic, diplomatic and military measures. The United States regularly continues to violate Cuban territorial waters and air space, to encourage acts of sabotage, to permit hit-and-run raids by Cuban exiles based in Miami, and to insist that it will "never" recognize Castro and we are still doing it.

"Our own ban on travel to Cuba, and the recent conviction of U.S. correspondent, William Worthy, for traveling to Cuba without permission, indicated that our devotion to freedom of the press is somewhat less than perfect. While recognizing the unpleasant totalitarian aspects of the present regime, it would be unrealistic not to admit that some of them are necessary.

"Castro and his advisers remember what happened to the Arbenze regime in Guatemala in 1954; they will certainly not relax their grip as long as the Kennedy Administration continues to cling to its policy of implacable hostility."

CUBA left alone, REALLY LEFT ALONE, to work out its destiny may accomplish their dream for a better future and it may show the rest of the hemisphere how it can create security and happiness for its people in spite of the pressures of the

From a Letter to Women Strike for Peace

VIETNAMESE MOTHERS' APPEAL

Dear Friends:

Vietnam is thousands of miles away from the United States, and certainly there has been no enmity between our two peoples. Whether we, as wives and mothers, live in Vietnam or the United States, we cherish peace, and love our sons and husbands. These are feelings which women all over the world share whatever their nationality. This identity of emotion gives us hope that you will sympathize with the situation of our people in South Vietnam. We hope that you will be moved to join us in demanding that the hostilities launched by the United States Government in the southern half of our country be brought to an end.

The Geneva agreements, concluded on July 20, 1954, undertook to restore peace to Indo-China on the basis of respect for Vietnam's independence, unity and territorial integrity. They stipulated that nation-wide free elections be held on July 20, 1956, reunifying our torn country. Were it not for the intervention of the United States Government, the national elections would have been held; and the country would have been reunited.

Supporting the tyrannical regime of Ngo Dinh Diem, United States agencies have prevented this normalization of Vietnam. The "undeclared war" in the south of our homeland has resulted in rivers of blood and tears. The terroristic raids conducted against the civilian population by American and Ngo Dinh Diem forces spread terror, sorrow and devastation. U.S. planes have been dropping noxious chemicals to destroy crops and vegetation, burning thousands of homes and plundering hundreds of tons of the people's rice paddy. People are rendered homeless, herded into concentration camps euphemized as "strategic hamlets."

Let us take just one day in South Vietnam. On May 27, 1962, fifty U.S. planes dropped 100 tons of bombs on the provinces of Quang-ngai, Quang-nam and Kontum. The bombardments lasted for six hours. Think of all the people, including women and children, who were killed! Think of all the families deprived of their homes! Think of all the children who are orphaned and the wives who are widowed!

We have deep sympathy for those American women who have lost their sons and husbands in wars. There is no legitimate reason why the fighting in our country should continue to cost the lives of American sons and husbands. Let us as Vietnamese and American mothers do our best to stop our sons from killing each other.

We are moved by the knowledge that there are people in America, particularly women and intellectuals, who have raised their voices against the U.S. aggressions committed on our soil. We warmly hail their humanity and integrity. The voices of justice must be raised everywhere in order to bring to an end this tragic bloodletting.

We sincerely thank you for speaking up for the human conscience and we convey our warm wishes for ever greater success to your Women Strike for Peace movement.

On behalf of the mothers of Vietnam and create starvation for innocent people who want to solve their own way of life for a better future?

For those who have been watching developments in Cuba, the increase in help from the Soviet Union should come as no surprise. The dilemma of the Soviet Union with respect to Cuba has been freely discussed for months. The economic difficulties and our starvation tactics created by the United States blockade of Cuba, and in their desperate need for survival is due to increasing restrictions against the Cuban people who are the real sufferers because it means that the so-called "Communist showcase" in the Western Hemisphere was proving very damaging to United States prestige. It has been openly predicted that Khrushchev must make a decision either to abandon Castro or to increase aid to him very substantially. Obviously the Soviet Government chose the second of these alternatives.

On the basis both of Soviet statements and those of our own President, the largest part of the shipments to Cuba have been non-military, and most of the military equipment has been of a defensive nature and why should they not defend themselves considering the threats our mass hysterical media is creating?

Cuba is a very small country with a population of six and one half million totally vulnerable to American power, with a supply line extending 7,000 miles back to the Soviet Union. To assume that the Cuban Government in such circumstances would seriously allow the island to be made into a military threat against the United States is ridiculous or that the Soviet Union would extend its own lines into so vulnerable a position, is wholly unrealistic. The U.S. Assistant Secretary of State for Latin American-affairs, Edwin M. Martin, has asserted that "Cuba is no military threat to the United States or any other Latin American countries."

The Monroe Doctrine is a totally unsatisfactory basis for any foreign policy decisions in the present context. Its assumptions are generally unacceptable in Latin America, and United States' intervention into affairs of the Eastern Hemi- standable that many American papers have printed grossly inaccurate accounts of what has taken place on the island....

"Cuban censorship is in part a measure of self defense against American economic, diplomatic and military measures. The United States regularly continues to violate Cuban territorial waters and air space, to encourage acts of sabotage, to permit hit-and-run raids by Cuban exiles based in Miami, and to insist that it will "never" recognize Castro and we are still doing it.

"Our own ban on travel to Cuba, and the recent conviction of U.S. correspondent, William Worthy, for traveling to Cuba without permission, indicated that our devotion to freedom of the press is somewhat less than perfect. While recognizing the unpleasant totalitarian aspects of the present regime, it would be unrealistic not to admit that some of them are necessary.

"Castro and his advisers remember what happened to the Arbenze regime in Guatemala in 1954; they will certainly not relax their grip as long as the Kennedy Administration continues to cling to its policy of implacable hostility."

CUBA left alone, REALLY LEFT ALONE, to work out its destiny may accomplish their dream for a better future and it may show the rest of the hemisphere how it can create security and happiness for its people in spite of the pressures of the U.S. and its half hearted allies. However, if we created friendly relations with the Cuban Government and people showing our good intentions to help them, don't you think we could accomplish more good that way? Instead of our war mongering threats creating a harrowing psychosis, blockading and starving them into submission only makes the Cuban people more determined to grasp at any help they can get. Cuba's downfall will reverberate all over the world and what will we gain? We can have greater friendship throughout Latin America if we showed understanding and a desire to help instead of plotting their destruction, crushed by American power it will create the hatred in the hearts of the Latin hungry and oppressed people which will do us no good in the future.

hamlets."

Let us take just one day in South Vietnam. On May 27, 1962, fifty U.S. planes dropped 100 tons of bombs on the provinces of Quang-ngai, Quang-nam and Kontum. The bombardments lasted for six hours. Think of all the people, including women and children, who were killed! Think of all the families deprived of their homes! Think of all the children who are orphaned and the wives who are widowed!

We have deep sympathy for those American women who have lost their sons and husbands in wars. There is no legitimate reason why the fighting in our country should continue to cost the lives of American sons and husbands. Let us as Vietnamese and American mothers do our best to stop our sons from killing each other.

We are moved by the knowledge that there are people in America, particularly women and intellectuals, who have raised their voices against the U.S. aggressions committed on our soil. We warmly hail their humanity and integrity. The voices of justice must be raised everywhere in order to bring to an end this tragic bloodletting.

We sincerely thank you for speaking up for the human conscience and we convey our warm wishes for ever greater success to your Women Strike for Peace movement.

On behalf of the mothers of Vietnam,

Mrs. Nguyen thi Thuc Vien, Professor
Vice-Chairman of the Vietnam Women's Union

Hanoi, June 28, 1962

WE WANT WAR!

Red Russia Must Perish!

To remain free, America must attack and destroy the nerve-center of the Communist conspiracy while we still have the strength to win.

WE DEMAND AN END TO ALL TALKS AND COEXSISTENCE.

WE DEMAND AN IMMEDIATE DECLARATION OF WAR AGAINST THE SOVIET UNION

Communism Must Perish! Better Dead, Than Red!

THE AMERICAN NATIONAL PARTY
POST OFFICE BOX 191 GRACIE STATION NEW YORK 28 N.Y.

WAR PROPAGANDA LIKE THIS IS THE MARK OF THE LUNATIC FRINGE

Do the brainwashed SUPER PATRIOTS think for one moment that the U.S., one third the size of Russia, could destroy such a vast area, plus China with over 600 million people, who have reason to hate the U.S.? What lunatic can think of ATOMIC WAR? Can these brilliant minds think that Russia and China would not retaliate just as quickly and destroy tens of millions of Americans, their homes, factories, etc.? Are these HEROES willing to sacrifice tens of millions of American people because some sections of the U.S. press, who call themselves public opinion, have inculcated HATRED into their feeble minds? Can these SUPER PATRIOTS guarantee us that Russia would not use their 10,000 pound earth satellites speeding overhead at 18,000 miles an hour capable of dropping atom bombs on all our towns and cities to cause annihilation for 90% of our population?

120 BILLIONS DOWN THE DRAIN

We would be far better off if we would find some media to retard the tensions around the globe where the United States and the Soviet Union and many countries of the world are now devoting 120 billion dollars a year preparing for war. Of this amount more than 50 billion dollars can be attributed to the United States, about 30 billion is the cost to the U.S.S.R. The balance of 40 billion dollars can be divided amongst other countries. If we could consolidate all this horrible waste for one year alone, we could build homes for one half of the world's population and give them food and sustenance and create a better life and prosperity for all mankind.

TOWARD WAR OR PEACE?

Millions of Americans agree.

"No more tests, East or West" is the cry that goes up from the grass roots across the country.

Saigon, Vietnam, October 7th, 1962. Seven more American service men were killed today, totalling 21 the U.S. military authorities announced plus many seriously wounded or burned from the wrecks of the two Army helicopters 330 miles northeast of Saigon. Is it necessary that even one life of our American service men should be lost in the thick jungled swamps and mountains of South Vietnam?

DIEM EIGHT YEAR RECORD

In eight years in office, Diem has not effected one reform requested by the United States, desperately needed by the Vietnamese. Instead he has purged himself of all capable anti-Communist leaders, imprisoned 50,000 anti-Communist Vietnamese nationalists, stripped the populace of all rights of freedom, forced the people into cruelly administered concentration camps, murdered many hundreds of innocent families in the name of "anti Communism," to let the Communist Vietcong control and terrorize the country right up to the city limits of Saigon!

Now Diem requests additional United State financial "guarantees" to prolong his jungle war—so that he can stay in power for 20 years or more to continue the graft to amass greater family wealth and power. Hated and feared by 90 per cent of his people, continuing domestic policies that would shame Hitler, Diem stays in power only because of United States support.

In the pending showdown with international Communism on all fronts, the hour is very late for South Vietnam, for Southeast Asia. These realities demand America's agonizing reappraisal of its "only-alternative with Diem" policy in South Vietnam or the unconditional abolition of colonialism, imperialist oppression and neo-colonialism that are "indispensable for the elimination of the catastrophic dangers of a thermonuclear war and for the consolidation of world peace and security."

MOURN NOT THE DEAD!!! BUT RATHER MOURN THE APATHETIC THRONG, THE COWED AND MEEK, WHO SEE THE H-BOMB THREAT; KNOW IT'S WRONG AND DARE NOT SPEAK.

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

HARRY G. KRIEGEL, Founder

Incorporated March 27, 1939

SPONSORS

Dr. JEROME DAVIS, D.D.
Outstanding Internationally Known Educator, Author, Lecturer and World Traveler, West Haven, Conn.

MAXWELL GEISMAR
Prominent Literary Critic, Harrison, N.Y.

SYMON GOULD
Director of Health Guild
New York, N.Y.

Professor FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN
Distinguished historian and writer
Professor of Government of Williams College

WILLIAM T. BAIRD, Illinois

Rev. LEE H. BALL, Ardsley, N.Y.

Mrs. A. H. BENSON
Economist Writer, Ida Grove, Iowa

AURIEL BESSEMER
Writer, Lecturer, Artist, New York, N.Y.

PEARL CLINE
Writer and Poet, Montrose, Colorado

MOST REV. CLARENCE E. DUFFY
New York, N.Y.

Professor KERMIT EBY
Professor of Social Science, Euclid, Chicago

Rev. CLEMENT GORDON
New York, N.Y.

Rev. CHESTER E. HODGSON
Brooklyn, N.Y.

JOSEPH HOVELL
Sculptor, Artist, New York, N.Y.

SAMUEL H. MARKS
Secretary New Era Letter Co., New York

Dr. LEO MAYER
Prominent Physician, New York, N.Y.

Dr. JOSEPH S. MURPHY
Doctor of Philosophy, Brandeis Univ.

MONROE REISMAN
Artist, Designer, Dallas, Texas

RICHARD ROFFMAN
Public Relations, New York, N.Y.

Dr. Rev. JACOB WATERMAN ROSE
Bronx, N.Y.

NATHAN ROSEN
President and Chief Chemist, New York

Dr. SYLVAN M. SHANE
Baltimore, Md.

SYDNEY SILVERMAN
Member of Parliament, House of Commons, London, England

PERRY A. SMITH III
Washington, D.C.

MARY W. TURNER
New York, N.Y.

LOUIS UNTERMEYER
Poet and Author, Newtown, Conn.

WILLARD UPHAUS
Executive Director of World Fellowship, Inc.

CLARA M. VINCENT
Chairman of Social Action Committee
Livonia, Mich.

REV. DEL EBERHARDT
Woodmont, Conn.

R. E. PATTEN
Publisher, E. Des Moines, Iowa

IT CAN HAPPEN

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

Incorporated March 27, 1939

HARRY G. KRIEGEL, Founder

SPONSORS

Dr. JEROME DAVIS, D.D.
Outstanding Internationally Known
Educator, Author, Lecturer and World
Traveler, West Haven, Conn.

MAXWELL GEISMAR
Prominent Literary Critic, Harrison, N.Y.

SYMON GOULD
Director of Health Guild
New York, N.Y.

Professor FREDERICK L. SCHUMAN
Distinguished historian and writer
Professor of Government of Williams College
Williamstown, Mass.

WILLIAM T. BAIRD, Illinois

Rev. LEE H. BALL, Ardsley, N. Y.

Mrs. A. H. BENSON
Economist Writer, Ida Grove, Iowa

AURIEL BESSEMER
Writer, Lecturer, Artist, New York, N. Y.

PEARL CLINE
Writer and Poet, Montrose, Colorado

MOST REV. CLARENCE E. DUFFY
New York, N. Y.

Professor KERMIT EBY
Professor of Social Science, Euclid, Chicago

DR. ROYAL W. FRANCE
Eminent Lawyer, New York, N. Y.

Rev. BENJAMIN B. CONLEY
1145 Massachusetts Ave.
Cambridge, 38, Massachusetts

Rev. CLEMENT GORDON
New York, N. Y.

Rev. CHESTER E. HODGSON
Brooklyn, N. Y.

JOSEPH HOVELL
Sculpture, Artist, New York, N. Y.

Mrs. ELY JACQUES KAHN
Architecture, New York, N. Y.

SAMUEL H. MARKS
Secretary New Era Letter Co., New York

Dr. LEO MAYER
Prominent Physician, New York, N. Y.

Dr. JOSEPH S. MURPHY
Doctor of Philosophy, Brandies Univ.

R. E. PATTEN
East Des Moines, Iowa

MONROE REISMAN
Artist, Designer, Dallas, Texas

RICHARD ROFFMAN
Public Relations, New York, N. Y.

Dr. Rev. JACOB WATERMAN ROSE
Bronx, N. Y.

NATHAN ROSEN
President and Chief Chemist, New York

Dr. SYLVAN M. SHANE
Baltimore, Md.

SYDNEY SILVERMAN
Member of Parliament, House of Commons,
London, England

PERRY A. SMITH III
Washington, D. C.

MARY W. TURNER
New York, N. Y.

LOUIS UNTERMEYER
Poet and Author, Newtown, Conn.

WILLARD UPHAUS
Executive Director of World Fellowship, Inc.
New Haven, Conn.

CLARA M. VINCENT
Chairman of Social Action Committee
Livonia, Mich.

INTRODUCTION

Humanity Guild, Inc., a nonprofit, nonpolitical, nonsectarian organization founded in 1938, strives to arouse public opinion for PEACE NOW! ALL GOVERNMENTS MUST NEGOTIATE THE ISSUES. Our booklet "IT CAN HAPPEN" and our four-page "letter of sanity" have been sent to all heads of Governments. We urge:

1 – WORLD GOVERNMENT UNDER THE U.N.
2 – ABOLITION OF ALL NUCLEAR WEAPONS
3 – TOTAL DISARMAMENT

Nor do we quibble about which of the three comes first. Humanity Guild wants to see progress on each and all of these propositions—so that people everywhere can begin to feel relief from WAR fears. Security and survival are the issues.

Humanity Guild would gladly give up all its activities the very day we are assured that PEACE ON EARTH becomes a reality. Until that blessed day arrives, Humanity Guild will continue to work day and night to present FACTS. By radio, TV, speakers', caravans going East, West, North and South – covering cities, towns and villages.

With the above program now prepared, we have printed and mailed out one million 24-page illustrated booklets entitled "IT CAN HAPPEN" also letters and magazines to every home we can reach and millions more to follow.

We know the road will be rough. We expect some people to raise "holy" passions against us. We know too that many selfish interests will try to block our aims. But we also know the ever-present danger of 10-20-50-100 Megaton Bombs hanging over us. We dare not allow this to happen to millions of Americans – to our Homes and our Democratic way of life. Until now, our country has not been despoiled by invasions. And we must strive by every means possible to avoid destruction of our nation by Nuclear War.

It is, therefore, our job to acquaint every person here and the world over to work for PEACE ON EARTH NOW or we will all suffer TOTAL ANNIHILATION because of our apathy.

You have probably noted that since we started our mass circulation of a million 24 page illustrated booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," and over a million 4 page letters of facts mailed and distributed throughout the nation and other countries that there has been a simmering down of the bombast in the press, radio and television, even the multimillion magazines, weekly and monthly, have softened the WAR provoking psychosis.

This is because numerous fine PEACE organizations all over the world have invigorated hundreds of thousands of men, women and children who are on the march protesting and paying the penalty by going to jail for their beliefs. Which are: To work for programs to keep the PEACE – and to stop the brink of war mentality.

On Monday, January 15, 1962, thousands of women and children picketed in a driving rain in many parts of the country and thousands of these determined "Women Strike for Peace" sloshed through rain puddles in Washington, D. C. with placards stating "NEVER SAY DIE." One little girl waved a poster stating "WHEN IT RAINS IT POURS – STRONTIUM 90." The significant part of this rally was that PRESIDENT JOHN F. KENNEDY was watching this scene through the window of the White House and on that very same day at a news conference he answered one questioner as follows:

> "Well, I think it's that these women are extremely earnest, that they talk, they are as concerned as we all are at the possibility of a nuclear war. They talked this morning to Mr. (Adrian S.) Fisher, who is the deputy director of our disarmament agency, and they – we stressed the effort we are going to put into the disarmament conference coming up in March. I saw the ladies myself. I recognized while they were there, there were a great number of them, it was in the rain, I understood what they were attempting to say, therefore, I consider that their message was received."

Humanitarians, Theologians of every denomination, Historians, Philosophers, Scientists, Professors, Writers, Artists, Doctors and human beings of every color and creed demand that the enormity of a possible mishap SHOULD NOT HAPPEN!!! AT ANY TIME!!!

> We must be true to ourselves and if the first essential is implemented, the second will "follow as night the day" and then no one can say we are "false to any man."

". . . Shelters are an absolute delusion"

— Walter Lippmann

THE principal danger of the present program is the false sense of security engendered. It is much like a quack cure for cancer. If we are lucky, the "treatment" may not kill us, but in the meantime, while the cancer is growing and becoming incurable, we fail to go to a reputable physician for sensible treatment. By buying a shelter program which does not shelter, and thereby believing that we can survive a thermonuclear war, we are increasing the probability of war. This probability increases both, because we may be more willing to "go to the brink" if we think survival is possible and because we are less likely to devise and take any of the constructive steps which may ease tension and secure the peace.

BACK TO THE CAVES

In a large midwest American city this Fall, the planning commission held public hearings for the purpose of deciding how best to protect the inhabitants of the area in the event of an enemy nuclear bomb attack. One of the persons called to testify before the commission was the planning director of the community, Charles Washburn. Asked for his recommendations as to what kind of shelters the city could construct, Mr. Washburn replied: "I have no use for them. If society has reached that stage, I would rather take my chances in the next world. We crawled out of caves only a few thousand years ago and I have no intention of crawling back in again."

Mr. Washburn's summary is indeed one which all of us must face up to.

The unhappy but unarguable fact is that shelter from an H-bomb in a target area is not possible. As Senator Bourke Hickenlooper of Iowa declared: "If you don't get killed in the blast, you may get killed in the radiation. If you don't get killed in the radiation, you get killed in the firestorm. If you don't get killed by the fire, you get killed by lack of oxygen."

Imagine a family, cowering in the dark confines of a small damp shelter, knowing that death is all around them, that they will come up into a world totally different from what they have known, not even sure that they themselves are not being fatally affected in spite of their preparations. There would be no electric power, no lights except for makeshift candle or flashlight. Attempts to cook or produce heat would consume more oxygen and complicate the task of the member of the family pumping the hand ventilator system. Food would be limited in both quantity and variety, and to all the other uncertainties would be added the possibility that there would be no more food available when they came out. Can anyone believe that there would not be far more than "overt regressions" in human beings subjected to such an experience?

Radioactive fallout is a threat not only to humans but also to animals, crops and unpackaged food. It can contaminate your homes, cars, yards, fields, and water supplies to the extent that they should not be used until they have been decontaminated.

How do you deal with these things? When an underwater nuclear bomb was exploded at Bikini in 1946, the test ships, inundated with radioactive water, could not be boarded except briefly and by heavily protected workers a year later, and then some ships had to be sunk. How do the survivors go about decontaminating the myriad things they have to handle and walk on and live in? We stand at the crossroads of World Peace or World Destruction.

There are no other possible solutions before us other than a complete extinction or the prospect of a modern-day cave life.

Before we can realistically consider living for short or long periods in bomb shelters, we must, have a clear idea of just what faces us.

Wars have always been part of man's experience. But never until today, never before now, has man himself possessed weapons that enable him to destroy all life on this planet.

Sudden Death

The death and destruction that modern weapons and missiles can wreak is unthinkable. Heretofore the greatest single act of destruction in the history of man occurred at a few minutes past 8 o'clock on a sunny Monday morning August 6, 1945, when an American Army Air Force plane dropped an atom bomb over the city of Hiroshima. That one act, by one pilot, by one plane, in a matter of seconds obliterated an entire city of 400,000 inhabitants. In a matter of minutes, nothing remained of a busy city except a burning scar. The city's power, transportation and communication facilities were instantly destroyed. In a flash, close to a quarter of a million men, women and children lay dead, dying or maimed.

Such sudden death and destruction knows no parallel in all human experience. But yet, according to all scientific and military experts, the Hiroshima bomb is now outmoded — as out-of-date for a war of the future as was the static trench warfare of World War I to the mobile tactics of World War II.

Here are facts given by renowned experts: In testimony before the special sub-committee of the Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, Dr. Kellogg, one of America's great research scientists, described the predicted effect of a nuclear bomb attack upon the United States. Based on the 1958 population figures of 175 million Americans, Dr. Kellogg believes that 83,000,000 of our countrymen would meet their deaths, that 25,000,000 would sustain serious injury. To recognize that 83,000,000 of our people would die in a single nuclear attack and to consider the accompanying destruction to homes, hospitals, schools and other of our institutions, leads one to the frightening realization that a nuclear war would end our lives and our society.

Great Sea of Fire

Scientists Harrison Brown and James Real have attempted to describe what such a phenomenon would mean to an American city in a nuclear war, taking Los Angeles as an example. (The reader should bear in mind that the description is based on the assumption that the city has been hit by a single 10-megaton bomb, and that the probability is that in a struggle so desperate as all-out nuclear war, major cities would be hit by several bombs, rather than one.)

The area would be one great sea of fire, which would burn until there was nothing more to consume. A good proportion of the metropolitan area's three-and-a-half million cars and trucks would be lifted and thrown like grotesque Molotov cocktails, to spew flaming gasoline, oil and automotive shrapnel onto and into everything in their paths. In an instant most underground gasoline and oil tanks would rupture and explode within the blast area, and a large proportion of the remainder within the firestorm radius would follow, each in its own particular manner — pumps and pipes sheered and, finally, higher and higher ambient temperatures which would soon expand, rupture, and explode the remainder. It seems safe to speculate that in Los Angeles at least a twenty-five mile radius and an unknown distance beyond it would be, within minutes, engulfed in a suffocating firestorm that would persist for a long time.

It is worth stating the significant sentence which Brown and Real conclude their account:

"Rationally, were we to make vigorous efforts to survive a large-scale nuclear war, we would forget about our existing cities, reconcile ourselves to the loss of their inhabitants, and concentrate our efforts in other areas."

No Hiding Place

What protection, as individuals, can we hope for from any of the shelter programs that are being urged upon us?

Californian Allan Jonas, director of that state's CD office, was described in a California newspaper as having "suddenly decided that all planning is of questionable value." Mr. Jonas was quoted as saying, "There is no hiding place in California."

(1) The radioactive "cloud" from a single, relatively small nuclear bomb may be expected to cover an area downwind for fully 200 miles. Since no one knows how many bombs would be dropped, or what the weather conditions would be, an attack may be presumed to cover a large area surrounding the target with lethal fallout.

(2) The downgrading of fallout as a danger is connected with the presumed building on a large scale of "fallout shelters." Estimates vary as to the length of time it would be necessary to remain in such a shelter after an attack, but few are willing to guess less than two weeks, and some scientists calculate the time in months. No one has maintained that human beings anywhere near the target area are likely to survive the fallout unless they are in adequate shelters. This is an important point to remember in evaluating the total CD program.

CD literature speaks optimistically of the "do-it-yourself" basement shelter, yet no one knows the effectiveness of any shelter against a thermonuclear blast. These shelters, (already protected by the superstructure of the house), call for a minimum of 8 inches of concrete, 12 inches of earth, or 30 inches of wood.

Apparently, the huge expense involved in excavation and construction precludes 2/3 of our population; people who can't afford to own homes, let alone basement shelters therein; people who, ironically, will carry the greatest load of the subsidized shelter program!

The N.Y. WORLD TELEGRAM & SUN of July 24, 1958, the office of Defense and Civilian Mobilization has had "an engineering study undertaken by Guy B. Panero and associates of 420 Lexington Avenue, New York City . . . and paid $18,000.00 for it." This study calls for the carving out of a mammoth shelter in the solid rock that lies under Manhattan, 800 feet deep, in which four million city dwellers could take shelter.

The plan provides for blowing up the entrance ramps after everyone is in, and would in effect create an underground city, complete with "restraint areas" for those who can't take it, and occupational therapy for sufferers from claustrophobia. Estimates of its cost range from $3 to $6 billion, (spending on a fabulous scale, you see, is easier than facing the truth.) Of this plan, Dan Wakefield comments: "Aside from the economic feasibility of burrowing an entire city underground, there are still some old-fashioned segments of the population who resent the notion of living like moles."

A few additional observations about the "city underground" are in order. Again leaving aside the economic practicability of building shelters to house the 48 million residents and workers in the 130 American cities of more than 100,000 population, these added obstacles exist:

This is not really a shelter concept, but a form of evacuation. Four million people can't move anywhere in 18 minutes, so that the population would have to go underground before the attack, i.e., the war, begins. Such a move is subject to all the criticisms of evacuation proper. When would the move be made? If the attack did not occur, but tension continued, would they stay underground indefinitely? Since these are not really underground cities, but only living quarters for the city's inhabitants, what would happen to commerce and industry?

If people were evacuated and the attack did not come, how could the life of the city continue? Who would operate its power stations, its hospitals, its banks and businesses? If all these things came to a stop, what would happen to the economy of the country as a whole?

Who would make the decisions to return to the city if the attack did not occur? Could such a return be made without exposing people to the same danger from which they had fled? Or would their return have to wait until the settlement of political differences had relaxed tension? (And would it not be better and easier to settle them before the tension had reached such a point rather than after?)

But such plans are not really worthy of extended discussion. The spending of uncounted billions of dollars to dig holes in the ground can only be the product of minds that have become separated from reality.

One more point needs to be made, unpleasant though it be. It was summed up succinctly by noted author Philip Wylie, who served as a consultant to FCDA during both the Truman and Eisenhower administrations. Wylie tried mightily to arouse Americans from what he regarded as their "apathy" toward civil defense against A-bomb attack, but changed his attitude completely with the advent of the H-bombs, when he "became certain that an all-out engagement with such weapons would create conditions in cities, towns, the countryside, and elsewhere for which no plan — whether of city evacuation, shelters, early warning — radar lines, or anything else — would be of value."

In support of his conclusion he cited much the same kind of considerations as have been included in this pamphlet, and then added:

Instant Blindness

"But, this matter of taking shelter or getting out in time, would create such a hideous situation that no program could be imagined that would control it. Granting clear weather, the explosion of the medium-sized H-weapon, day or night, would cause all persons indoors or out within view of the fireball to look at it by uncontrollable reflex. And such people . . . would be made blind instantly, even at a distance of 40 miles from the explosion. Sudden light, thousands of times brighter than the sun, would make them turn around to see the source . . . and that instinctive glance would burn their retinas so that they would be sightless forever. Their cars, trucks, trains and planes would smash. People in the countryside would be unable even to find their way home (over an area) on the order of 5,000 square miles per 'shot.'"

Commissioner Robert Moses, who has built and supervised most of New York's major traffic arteries, declared "you can't evacuate cities in a short time on the basis of any warning system, however effective. You cannot get the inhabitants quickly out of town without killing and maiming more in the process than would be lost or wounded in the explosions, fire, concussions, and fallout . . . The key strategic places of congestion in all big cities are at water crossings and main streets. Within half an hour after an alarm had been sounded, not only would these bottlenecks be completely choked up, but there would be devastation due merely to cars and people being run down."

Right or wrong, America is our country. When it is in the right we should feel a sense of pride, but when it is in the wrong we should not rest until the wrong is righted. This is the mark of true allegiance! This is an enlightened loyalty which transcends the narrow boundaries of conformity, because its noble fidelity is bound up with America's future rather than its status quo. It is more vitally concerned with the welfare of the many than the privilege of the few. It infuses in us that great sense of oneness with all humanity, and strengthens us to build our own happiness on the promotion of happiness for others.

Twenty Minutes — Everybody Out

If evacuation does not begin until the attack is launched, the city will have less than twenty minutes to empty itself. Can anyone who has ever seen the slow-moving lines of traffic clogging the roads out of a city on a summer Friday afternoon believe that this can be done? Every car in the city trying to get out at the same time! Drivers struck by panic, driving recklessly, fighting for space! Men trying to cross the main lines of traffic to reach their families! It defies reason not to believe that within minutes of the alarm every road out of the city would be hopelessly blocked.

Suppose these millions of men, women, and children, invalids, babies, the infirm, the occupants of prisons and mental hospitals, all were successfully moved out—what then? How would they be fed, housed, cared for: The modern city is an incredibly complex system of collection and distribution that can be thrown into confusion by a two-day strike of tugboat operators or a heavy snowfall. Lines of trucks and freight cars move into a city daily bringing the food, milk, fuel and other necessities of life for its inhabitants. Huge water pipes bring their contents from miles away; elaborate sewage systems are needed to dispose of the city's daily waste.

What will take the place of all these for the scattered inhabitants? A few cities are supplied by farms and orchards within easy access, but most have to bring their food from many miles away. The imagination reels at the storage capacity needed to handle even a week's stockpile of necessities, to which must be added the further complication of the need for protection from radioactive contamination.

The same consideration would apply to shelter. Even if the weather permitted, such devices as huge tent cities would provide practically no more protection from radiation than it would be standing in the open.

As the doughty Senator from Ohio, Stephan M. Young, puts it: "It is just too absurd to consider evacuation plans under the circumstances."

The Poisoned Earth

Where do our survivors find food and fuel? There are still a few places in our country where people live, on what they grow, on their own land. Such people might have a fighting chance to survive and try to build a new life. But most Americans depend now on an enormous mechanized complex of production and distribution that, for all its size, is as delicate as a watch. That system would disintegrate. Roads, railroads, airfields would be destroyed. The massive control and distribution centers in the cities would be buried beneath mounds of radioactive rubble. Our survivors would come out of their cramped shelter to a world of little or no food, contaminated water, poisoned earth — and, of course, death.

The inescapable fact of the post-war world would be death — vast, massive death, with all the horrifying complications that go with it. What preparations can be made to deal with 50 or 100 million corpses, especially when removal of the dead may have to be delayed to allow for safe handling due to decay because of the radioactivity?

A sampling of what this task means was given by the officer in charge of disposal of the dead when Americans reoccupied Manila after hard fighting in 1944. In an interview he described the horror of the maggots and flies which multiplied prodigiously in the vicinity of unburied bodies. He told of the difficulty in hiring laborers to bury decomposed dead, even at high rates and with extra incentives, such as food and the looting of bodies. He told of contaminated water supplies; sewers clogged with the dead . . . Only a few of the American soldiers had ability to withstand the psychological aspects of the work. With a few exceptions, nausea, vomiting and loss of appetite occurred after a few days. This occurred with a total of 39,000 bodies to be disposed of in eight weeks.

Civil Defense will not work. It will not work because nothing will. If all-out nuclear war between the two giants of the world should come, then all mankind will have lost. Those who survive would survive by chance: a missed bomb, a change in the wind. From that point on, they would have to improvise. Few of them probably would improvise well enough; most of them would die a little later on.

To talk of "victory" in such circumstances, as some of our military commentators still do, is to mock. Even if, by some macabre calculation, one side or the other would be adjudged to have "won," the victory would be meaningless. All that we prize of freedom and hope would be lost in a welter of death and terror; all that man has created of beauty and dignity would be among the radioactive particles floating down to poison the whole earth.

The fact is that war can no longer be tolerated.

"There is now," said former President Eisenhower, after the results of an H-bomb test had been announced, "no alternative to peace."

It is true. There is no alternative to peace, and so all the best efforts, the passionate concern of all men, must be turned to the making of peace.

Disarmament, the resolution of political conflicts, negotiation, compromise — these are what we must concentrate on.

Civil Defense diverts us from this all-important task. It contributes to the image of a nation making ready for war. It sustains the deadly myth that war is inevitable, and defrauds us with the pretense that somehow man can manage to deal with it. We can spend our wealth burrowing fearfully into the ground, sacrificing everything to the possibility of questionable survival in a primitive poisoned world for a relative handful of people. Or we can put the same money and effort into a vast effort at massive reconciliation; providing homes for the homeless, food for the hungry, throughout the world.

Crushing Taxation

Of such a program Governor Meyner wrote: "Instead of spending the $150 billion or $200 billion that would be required for a national network of underground shelters, let us put just a fraction of that money and work into a massive effort to make our world safe for human habitation—while there is yet time. We ought now to be talking about building 200 million pre-fabricated homes for the homeless people of Asia and Africa—instead of bemusing ourselves with the cruel nonsense about underground shelters.

We ought to be forging links with other peoples instead of forging iron doors to deep cellars. Our ties to other people — the good will we can earn, the support we can justify for world leadership — these will contribute far more to our safety and peace of mind than the holes we can jump into when it is too late. . . ."

There are two kinds of preparedness. One is the kind represented by the big bombs. If we are ever in a showdown on that level, God help us.

Then, there is the other kind of showdown looming ahead in the world — and it requires another kind of preparedness. This is the non-military showdown. It will be determined by the side that has the most to say about human freedom for all peoples, and by the side that can earn and keep the respect and support of the overwhelming majority of the world's people.

Surely this nobler, more rewarding concept of life could be expected to send a thrill of hope around the world. To pose as the constructive power of human dignity and concern against the forces that would degrade and debase humanity would be to capture for the democratic idea the dynamism that it has largely lost. There is no certain way to safety in a world that lies in the shadow of the Bomb, but this is at least the course that holds the only promise of conserving human dignity and decency.

The Danger — Can We Chance It

A nuclear-armed Bomarc missile was almost fired accidentally at an Atlantic seaboard missile base in the spring of 1960. A group of Air Force officers sitting down to dinner, happened to look out the window and noticed that fumes were coming from the electronically controlled Bomarc's tail pipe. Rushing out to the missile, the officers were able to halt the firing by disconnecting wires and throwing switches. After months of investigation, the cause of the near firing is still undetermined. One theory is that radio signals from passing cars might have combined with signals from a radio station in a way that fed a fire order into the Bomarc's electronic brain.

"Are we," wrote George F. Kennan, former Chief of the State Department's policy planning division, "to flee like haunted creatures from one defensive device to another, each more costly and humiliating than the one before, cowering underground one day, breaking up our cities the next, attempting to surround ourselves with elaborate electronic shields on the third, concerned only to prolong the length of our lives while sacrificing all the values for which it might be worthwhile to live at all? If I thought that this was the best the future held for us, I should be tempted to join those who say "Let us divest ourselves of this weapon altogether; let us stake our safety on God's grace and our own good consciences and on that measure of common sense and humanity which even our adversaries possess; but then let us at least walk like men, with our heads up, so long as we are permitted to walk at all."

AS QUOTED:

Pope John XXIII Christmas message of December 21, 1961 over the Vatican City radio: This authority, alas, full of humanity and meekness and holding out the joy of universal peace, remains, with the passing of the years, a sign of contradiction and of the obstinacy of men in their relations with one another.

If we look at the events of recent times, we might well say that in our day fear and alarm are producing a burning fever of strangement one from another, and though this is unconscious in many cases, it is, for all that, noticeable in dealings with others, and leads to continuous disturbance in domestic, social, civil and international relationships.

Such an observation is all the more tragic when one reflects that in the Creator's providential plan, men are meant to understand, to help and to complete one another, by brotherly cooperation, by patiently overcoming differences, by sharing the goods of the earth fairly, according to charity and justice.

But here, on the contrary, under the cloak of fair words, when at least, the outward appearance is maintained, and even that unfortunately is not always the case, there is often a spirit opposed to peace.

It is the pride of the man of power who tramples under foot. It is the greed of the man of wealth who hardens his heart to the needs of his brothers.

It is the callousness of the complacent man who pays no heed to the great cry of suffering which exists in the world. It is the selfishness of the man who thinks exclusively of himself.

The invitation should be all the more pressing for mutual distrust is making conditions progressively worse.

Man is no longer brother, good, merciful and loving, to his fellow men, but has become a stranger, calculating, suspicious and selfish.

Every individual must be good, because he is the mirror of a clear conscience, which does not admit of duplicity, cunning, hardness of heart.

The family, too, must be good, with mutual love burning like a flame in the exercise of all virtue.

There is furthermore that goodness which should rule our actions outside the confines of the home, though in union with it.

As an invitation to the exercise of this duty, we turn to the appeal, which with all trust we started out to make in this radio broadcast — to desire peace and to eliminate all obstacles in its way.

We cannot believe that the terrific energy now under the control of man will be released for the world's destruction. For side by side with elements of fear and apprehension, there are positive signs of goodwill that is constructive and productive of good.

While we give thanks to the Lord, the source of goodness, we also give voice to a heartfelt appeal that all those who control the economic forces should risk everything but not the peace of the world and the lives of men — to seek every means that modern progress has put at their disposal to increase the welfare and security of the world, and not to sow disgust and mutual suspicion.

We also appeal to those responsible for forming public opinion, even if only in a limited area, to fear the severe judgement of God and of history and to proceed with caution, governed by a sense of balance.

On not a few occasions in modern times — and this we state with candor and regret — the press has contributed to the production of an atmosphere of aversion, enmity and discord.

We appeal to the rulers of the nations, who today hold in their hands the fate of mankind. You also are men, fragile and mortal. Upon you are the anxious eyes of our fellow men, who are first your brothers before they are your subjects.

Think of the tragedy of initiating a chain reaction of acts, decisions, resentments that could erupt into rash and irreparable deeds.

You have received great powers not to destroy but to build, not to divide but to unite, not to cause tears to be shed but to provide employment and security.

These are the various applications of that goodness that should penetrate every aspect of human life.

May it appeal to all men of goodwill to make salutary reflections on the applications of those principles upon which well-ordered social life is founded.

* * *

"That both sides begin anew the quest for peace, before the dark powers of destruction unleashed by science engulf all humanity in planned or accidental self-destruction."

—President Kennedy in his Inaugural Address

* * *

FORMER PRESIDENT EISENHOWER put it: "If I were in a very fine shelter and they (his family) were not there, I would just walk out. I would not want to face that kind of a world and the loss of my family."

"We are in the era of the thermonuclear bomb that can obliterate cities and can be delivered across continents. With such weapons, there can be no victory for anyone. Plainly, the objective now must be to see that such a war does not occur at all."—Dwight D. Eisenhower

"Every gun that is made, every warship launched, every rocket fired signifies, in the final sense, a theft from those who hunger and are not fed, those who are cold and are not clothed. We pay for a single fighter plane with a half billion bushels of wheat. We pay for a single destroyer with new homes that could have housed more than 8,000 people . . . is there no other way the world can live?"—Dwight D. Eisenhower

* * *

U. S. Senator STEPHEN M. YOUNG, Ohio:

"Civil defense today is a myth, based on theories as antiquated as mustache cups, tallow dips, and civil war cannon balls. In the nuclear age, there can be no realistic civil defense programs. We must devote our efforts to the utmost toward finding a peaceful solution to the world's problems. It is our only permanent shelter."

* * *

Gov. ROBERT B. MEYNER, New Jersey:

"The basic purpose of modern warfare is to kill an entire city . . . If a city like San Francisco or Los Angeles or Trenton were to be hit by a few megaton bombs, everything in the civil defense handbook would go out the window. There is one and only one defense against a nuclear war — and that is peace."

"These facts would be enough to make me skeptical about the effectiveness of fallout shelters. But there is also the matter of warning time. An intercontinental ballistic missile can travel well over 5,000 miles in less than half an hour; a rocket launched from a submarine 200 miles off the East Coast would reach New York in a matter of minutes. If the U.S. were hit by surprise, few people would have time to climb, crawl or fight their way into shelters."

"What would happen to those who did? When would it be safe to come out? Survivors of a nuclear attack would discover that our society and civilization no longer existed. The psychological and physical consequences of this realization — raw shock — are almost beyond comprehension."

"Man would have to depend solely upon his own devices to exist. He could not grow nourishing food because the soil would be shot through with radioactivity, particularly strontium 90, a long-term byproduct of nuclear explosions. As direct fallout, it settles on vegetation which is consumed directly by animals and humans; it also lodges in the soil and seeps into growing matter through root systems. Like calcium, when ingested, it lodges in the bone structure. Strontium 90 is a breeder of bone cancer and leukemia. Thus many survivors would literally die a lingering death."

ELEANOR ROOSEVELT:

"I think it is nonsense to build bomb shelters. It is quite evident, from all we are told about modern nuclear weapons, that the shelters would be useless. We had better bend our efforts to preventing nuclear war and not worry about how we can preserve our own skins. I do not approve of individuals building shelters, and I would consider it a waste of government money to build them for public use."

"Wars can be prevented just as surely as they are provoked and we who fail to prevent them must share in the guilt for the dead."—General Omar Bradley

* * *

ADMIRAL YARNALL, who preceded Halsey as Pacific Fleet Commander, told an audience at Brown University:

"I think the United States lost the moral leadership of the world when it dropped atomic bombs on Hiroshima and Nagasaki when Japan was at that time a defeated nation and was suing for peace. It was a diabolic act of no military value and resulted in the death of hundreds of thousands of civilians . . . If we are to use such weapons in the future, or engage in indiscriminate area bombing by aircraft as practised on both Germany and Japan, civilization as we know it is finished."

* * *

"Today we are faced with the pre-eminent fact that, if civilization is to survive, we must cultivate the science of human relationships, the ability of all peoples, of all kinds, to live together and work together, in the same world, at peace."—Franklin D. Roosevelt, (in his last recorded message)

* * *

We think the problem for today and tomorrow is one of avoiding extreme positions, and it seems to us that a national shelter system, built by the government and used by the government as part of its military deterrent shield, would encourage tendencies toward extreme positions rather than encouraging them.

The heads of governments of the world must persistently and constantly cooperate to find a way out of the dangerous impasse that through stubbornness endangers the innocent people everywhere on the face of the earth. We are too near to the brink of war and nuclear holocaust NOW, which could exterminate life on this planet.

How can we be assured that the 10,000 pound earth satellites speeding overhead at 18,000 miles an hour, capable of dropping atom bombs on the world's cities, will not be used to create the greatest holocaust and destruction of mankind on our planet. If we want to avoid immediate calamity it is up to you to do your bit for yourself, your family, your relatives, and for mankind the world over. Write to your president, and the cabinet members, senators, congressmen . . . AND URGE OTHERS TO DO SO NOW.

THIS WE BELIEVE . . .

Far from being ignored, the so-called common man wields an incalculable power. If he speaks for Peace he can be heard; if he is heard, he can be free; if he is free, he can grow to build bridges of understanding with other men of other lands.

Currently, the Russians are making proposals for a cessation of nuclear testing and for a conference on general disarmament. Surely, the Russians are not everything we want them to be, yet if we examine our own fears, we may come to understand theirs. We must accept the new thinking which is essential if we desire prospects of survival more than we desire hanging to the bitterness of old quarrels.

In disseminating information on Peace and world disarmament, the Humanity Guild, Inc., seeks to make a contribution to the greatest crusade of our time — the crusade for the survival of mankind through the preservation of World Peace. Is this effort worthy of your ininterest and support?

The greatest weakness of the models about behavior in wartime which are computed on paper and which treat men as if they were two-dimensional, is that they do not cope with the emotional undergirding of man's actions. Thus, any posture which encourages men or nations to push other men or nations into positions from which they cannot emotionally retreat is a dangerous posture indeed.

It is our feeling that a national shelter program which was intended to harden the national will would be perceived by our leadership and by the public in such a way as to encourage undue adventurism and truculence in our diplomatic and power politics maneuvering. As such we could very easily push an enemy into a position which would leave him no alternative than the emotional irrational one of attack, or of in turn pushing us into a position which could only lead to violence on our part.

The only immediate solution for peace on earth NOW is TOTAL DISARMAMENT WHICH SHOULD INCLUDE THE ELIMINATION OF ALL STOCKPILES OF ALL BOMBS AT ONCE from all countries who possess its capabilities for the destruction of the world and mankind.

WITHOUT A CONCERTED EFFORT ON THE PART OF THE GOVERNMENTS OF THE NATIONS AND EVERY INDIVIDUAL WITHIN THESE NATIONS, ALL THE fall-out shelters which could be built in the next half-century will be to no avail. "PEACE IN OUR TIME" was the slogan of World War II—Humanity Guild, Inc. says "PEACE NOW OR NEVER"—atomic fission and hydrogen blast do not wait for "OUR TIME."

We need your financial help NOW so that we can mail and distribute millions of our booklets, "IT CAN HAPPEN," and millions of our four page "letters of sanity" sending facts everywhere. We plead for any contribution your heart and ability can spare for this most vital cause.

THIS IS NO IDLE DREAM – IT IS MAN-KINDS NEED – IT IS UP TO ALL OF US. IT MUST BE DONE!! NOW!! JOIN US AT ONCE FOR "PEACE IN OUR TIME."

Humanity Guild was formed in 1938 to dramatize dynamically the aims and hopes of peace-loving peoples the world over. You can organize a branch in your community and we will cooperate with you. PEACE-MINDED PEOPLE MUST GAIN THE POWER WHICH IS RIGHTFULLY THEIRS FOR A PEACEFUL WORLD FOR SURVIVAL AND SECURITY. Price of additional booklets 10 for $1.00 postpaid in U.S.A.

HUMANITY GUILD, Inc.

853 Broadway New York 3, N. Y.

A non-profit, non-politically affiliated organization dedicated to

"PEACE ON EARTH, TO MEN OF GOOD WILL"

Printed in U.S.A

Atlanta Workshop in Nonviolence
1014 Piedmont Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia 30309
July 20, 1967

Dear Friend,

Since the Workshop opened four months ago we have passed out more than 60,000 leaflets, answered hundreds of inquiries from people requesting information on the war and on the draft, sponsored 5 major demonstrations and dozens of minor ones, and provided comprehensive draft information to dozens of draft-age men.

All of this costs a good deal of money, over $400 a month, in fact. Here's how we spend that:

$200 for salaries and expenses
85 for rent
15 for phone and utilities
80 for paper and ink
20 for other office supplies.

A few notes--the $200 works out to $150 for Henry and Sue, $25 for Harvey Clemens, and $25 for whichever poverty-stricken volunteers are sleeping on our floors and working full time. Everybody else works free. $80 buys 16,000 leaflets and 1,000 copies of the Newsletter every month. "Other office supplies" includes also special leaflets that we buy from other organizations and give away free.

Is it worth it all? We think so. More than anything we have done our constant leafletting has brought results. Practically every day there are 4 or 5 coupons from our leaflets in the mail from people who want more information on the war and from men of draft age who want CC counselling. On Mondays following the Friday and Sunday vigils there is often a deluge. Our draft leafletting, especially, is paying off. We are currently counselling about 5 CO's a week--an unprecedented number for Atlanta. This is especially significant for those of us who believe that wars will stop when men refuse to fight in them.

The $400 a month has to come from somewhere, though. $200 we get from the War Resisters League, another $50 to $100 from friends outside Atlanta, and about $25 from the sale of literature (including the Newsletter,) buttons, and magazine subscriptions. This leaves $75 to $125 that we must raise every month from Georgians just to maintain our present activities.

In addition, the special Hiroshima Day march sponsored by the Atlanta Alliance for Peace is going to need help. The Alliance has asked its member organizations to help raise money for publicity and speakers' expenses. The Workshop is not the richest peace organization in Atlanta, but we want to do our part in financing Hiroshima Day. We stuck our necks out and promised to try as hard as we could to raise $100 for the Alliance. Needless to say, we can only do this with your help.

-OVER-

It is hard to be always asking you for money. We know how many worthy causes are on your mind. However, the war goes on and on. Each month more billions are spent on killing. We must continue to spend hundreds on saving lives.

Peace,

Henry Bass

Henry Bass

Sue Bass

Sue Bass

Harvey Clemens

Harvey Clemens

☐ I enclose $_____ for the work of the Atlanta Workshop in Nonviolence.

☐ I enclose $_____ for the Hiroshima Day project of the Atlanta Alliance for Peace.

☐ I am planning to attend the Hiroshima Day march.

☐ I will be able to help with leafletting, posters, etc., for Hiroshima Day.

☐ I will be able to put up _____ out-of-town demonstrators for the weekend of August 5-6.

☐ I will be able to do draft leafletting/general leafletting every _____ afternoon/evening. (day of week)

☐ I enclose $_____ for a subscription to WIN/the National Guardian/Liberation/the Southern Patriot. (New or renewal?)

☐ Please add the following names to your mailing list:

NAME _____ PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____ CITY _____ ZIP _____

NAME _____ PHONE _____
ADDRESS _____ CITY _____ ZIP _____

☐ Please remove my name from your mailing list.

NAME _____ PHONE _____

ADDRESS _____ CITY _____ ZIP _____

Please make all checks payable to the Atlanta Workshop in Nonviolence and send to P. C. Box 7477, Atlanta, Georgia 30309.

(new file) PEACE MOVEMENT

AT THE WORKSHOP

flower power

The most exciting event coming up for Atlanta peacemongers is the Hiroshima Day march on August 6 sponsored by the Atlanta Alliance for Peace, of which the Workshop is a member. The groups that make up the Alliance are expected to express their efforts for peace in a variety of ways. The Workshop is working on a 7 foot peace dove of papier mache and a magnificent yellow submarine to carry in the march. Some groups are expected to march either in mourning or at least wearing black armbands. A Red Cross bloodmobile will probably be at the Saturday evening rally and along the parade route on Sunday. A call and schedule for the Hiroshima weekend of August 5-6 is enclosed. Please read it and plan to come to march with one of the groups. Also, the Alliance needs help on both advance publicity and providing accommodations for out-of-town demonstrators. Please fill in the coupon on the yellow sheet if you will be able to help.

Our draft program and our general leafletting are both increasingly successful --we get an average of 4 coupons a day returned and are seeing 5 draft counsellees a week. With more work those totals should keep increasing. But even to maintain our present pace we need more help from you. Going leafletting every afternoon and evening is pretty dull. If you could give a few hours every week it would help a lot.

War Games, an already famous new movie about what happens after THE BOMB falls on England, is coming to the Festival Cinema for at least a week beginning Monday, August 28. It's an important movie for you to see and an ideal one to bring your friends to. The Workshop is planning a theatre party. Details will be announced in the August issue of the Newsletter.

The Workshop is now selling subscriptions to both WIN magazine (leaflet enclosed) and the National Guardian for a profit, and we are dickering with Liberation magazine and the Southern Patriot. You get your subscriptions at the regular price, and you are helping the Workshop at the same time. We'll be sending out a Guardian subscription blank later on. In the meantime, those prices are $7 for 1 year (52 issues,) $3.50 for students. Please send your new, renewal, and gift subscriptions for the four periodicals to the Workshop.

Keep these dates in mind:

EVERY THURSDAY, 8 PM--Workshop meeting.
EVERY FRIDAY, noon to 1 PM--silent vigil for peace at Five Points.
EVERY SUNDAY, 10 to 11 AM--vigil and leafletting, 1st Baptist Church, Peachtree and 5th Street.
AUGUST 5-6--Hiroshima weekend. See the complete schedule.
AUGUST 28--War Games opens at the Festival Cinema.

NOTE: The social book discussion group has been adjourned for the summer and will resume in September. The schedule for future meetings of the seminar on nonviolent tactics will be announced in the next issue (August) of the Newsletter.

--Sue and Henry Bass

ATLANTA ALLIANCE FOR PEACE

334 Auburn Ave., N.E. Atlanta Ga. 30303 Telephone 404 - 522 - 1420

A SOUTHWIDE CALL TO ACTION TO END THE WAR IN VIETNAM

American Friends Service Committee

Atlanta Committee to End The War in Vietnam

Atlanta Peace Center

Atlanta Veterans For Peace

Atlanta Workshop in Nonviolence

Atlantans For Peace

Georgia State Committee on Social Issues

Mennonite House

Peace Education Project

Quaker House

Southern Christian Leadership Conference

Southern Student Organizing Committee

Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee

Vine City Council

On August 6, 1945, Hiroshima suffered the horror of the first atomic bomb. Twenty-two years later, on August 6, 1967, we will gather in Atlanta to protest the war in Vietnam. It is fitting that we meet on Hiroshima Day to demand an end to this immoral and illegal war, especially since each escalation in Vietnam brings us closer to a nuclear holocaust. Today's hydrogen bomb is 200 times more destructive than the bomb which obliterated Hiroshima; and many nations now stock-pile this terrible weapon. We must learn to avoid war or face annihilation.

A growing number of Americans from all walks of life oppose the war in Vietnam. On April 15 almost half a million of them marched in New York City, and in Atlanta and 144 other cities concerned citizens stand each week in silent vigil to protest the war. We differ in our reasons for opposing the Vietnam war. Some of us oppose it as militarily unsound. A growing number of us, both black and white believe it to be a racist war of genocide and that the U.S. government is again showing a contempt for Asians in its cruel and inhuman weapons never employed in Europe. Some of us feel that American claims of defending democracy are hypocritical and that instead U.S. troops are defending American business investments. Others see that the Vietnam war has undermined the anti-poverty program.

The children of Mississippi, the slum-dwellers of New York, the unemployed of Appalachia, the poor of Vine City, and the napalmed children of Vietnam are all victims of the war in Asia. All of us are united in opposing this unjust war. We believe that we can best support efforts of peace by bringing the troops home now.

JOIN US IN ATLANTA ON AUGUST 6th!

HIROSHIMA DAY

A SOUTHWIDE WEEKEND TO END THE WAR IN VIETNAM

August 5-6

sponsored by

THE ATLANTA ALLIANCE FOR PEACE

SATURDAY, August 5---RALLY!

7:30 PM, Piedmont Park: Sing out, art festival, nationally famous singers

11 PM, Piedmont Park: All night vigil for peace led by Father Malcolm Boyd

SUNDAY, August 6----------

MARCH FOR PEACE

1:30 PM: Assemble at Piedmont Park

2 PM: March to Grant Park

3:30 PM: Speakers and entertainment

PARTIAL LIST OF SPEAKERS:

RALPH ABERNATHY
FATHER PHILIP BERRIGAN, S. S. J
JAMES BEVEL
HONORABLE JULIAN BOND
FATHER MALCOLM BOYD
MRS. AMELIA BOYNTON
DICK GREGORY
CLARENCE JORDAN
RABBI JACOB WEINSTEIN

for more information,
for accommodation for out-of-town marchers
contact:

Harry Willson
334 Auburn Avenue
Atlanta, Ga. 30303
522-1420
522-6506

Henry Bass
1014 Piedmont Ave.
Atlanta, Ga. 30309
872-1137

Charles Webster
Rm 502, 41 Exchange Pl
Atlanta, Ga. 30303
523-6629

What have you been missing?

find Out iN

WIN PEACE AND FREEDOM THRU NONVIOLENT ACTION

the biweekly magazine of the peace & nonviolence movement in America

So you don't believe war brings peace tyranny means democracy hate is love.
A lot of people don't.
But what are you doing about it?
And what are they doing about it?
That's what you'll find out in WIN.
Turn the page. Read on.

SPRING MOBILIZATION pp.5-12 draft card burnings
boston-pentagon peace walk

WIN

PEACE & FREEDOM THROUGH NONVIOLENT ACTION

VOLUME III NUMBER 8 APRIL 28, 1967 25¢

—photo by Don Auclair

WIN is a twice-monthly radical pacifist magazine of the peace movement that tells you and shows you, in words and photographs, what's going on—in peace action across America. On picket lines, at demonstrations, at meetings and conferences, whenever civil disobedience is committed. Wherever people walk, dance, march, sit, stand, laugh, cry, talk, and sing for peace and freedom. From Duluth and Phoenix, the Bay Area, Iowa, and New York. Peace action reported by people who create it.

What do flying kites, white bicycles, balloon happenings, yellow submarines, manifestivities, Gentle Thursdays, and flower power have to do with peace?

WIN readers know. Do you?

WIN readers also know about burning, mutilating, and eating draft cards; about draft resistance and noncooperation; about income tax refusal, telephone tax refusal; about all kinds of civil disobedience and other creative forms of nonviolent direct action.

—UPI photo

WIN is a "how to" guide to better, more effective demonstrations. Advice for the novice protester. Discussion and criticism for the advanced resister. How to mount demonstrations. Observations on leafleting and fasts. Ideas about picketing, vigiling, police relations, courtroom strategy, jailhouse etiquette. All about nonviolent direct action, what works and what doesn't work—exploring nonviolent tactics as a means to change in a violent world.

—photo by Bill Wingell

WIN is full of choice tidbits of information essential to any peace activist. There are reviews of books and movies on war and peace, in Vietnam and around the world. New and old peace actionists debate the old and new tactics, radical versus reformist politics, personalities ranging from Gandhi to Freud to Malcolm X, the relationship of nonviolence to revolution and civil rights.

—photo by Neil Haworth

WIN is published by the Committee for Nonviolent Action and the New York Workshop in Nonviolence.

WIN is a member of the Underground Press Syndicate.

Subscribe to WIN now!

☐ One year subscription to WIN, $5.

☐ Six issue trial subscription to WIN, $1.

☐ A. J. Muste: 1885-1967, 16-page reprint from WIN, 35¢, 10 or more, 20¢ each.

[redacted]

I enclose $_____ for items checked.

I enclose _____ contribution over and above the cost of my subscription to help WIN grow.

Name _____

Address _____

_____ Zip _____

THE ATLANTA WORKSHOP IN NONVIOLENCE
1014 PIEDMONT AVENUE, N. E.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA 30309
872-1137

Finally, a pacifist journal put out by the front (picket) line participants in peace action. —Jim Peck

Your publication is an inspiration to a novice in the peace movement. The accounts of various demonstrations are truly heartwarming—encourage me not to lose hope in my city of apathy!

—Mary Hodsdon
Wilmington, Delaware

Your magazine continues to be a wellspring of creative and challenging pacifist thought in a very arid desert made dry by the narrowness and patness of the usual, more formalistic approaches to questions of war and peace.

—Dan Raphael
Seattle, Washington

Joy, affirmation, chaos, flowers to the enemy. Political nonviolence, psychedelic pacifism, terror to the Old Left. WIN is all these and more. Good poetry and bad. Bad articles and brilliant. Pushing, provocative, singing. Read WIN and dance in the streets.

—David McReynolds

Atl. J+C 5/26/63
L.E.

Here's First Part Of Ragen Report

Here is the text of the first portion of the Ragen report on the George penal system. Mr. Ragen, a penologist from Illinois, made the study at the request of the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. His report was released Wednesday by Gov. Sanders and the commission.

Texts of the other portions of this report will be published in The Atlanta Journal, beginning Monday.

The Ragen ★ Report

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

The Department of Corrections in the state of Georgia is administered by a director who is responsible to a Board of Corrections for the operation of the department. The board and the director are in practicality accountable to the governor. Of course, if there is to be a Department of Corrections Board, its members should be appointed for staggered terms and politics should have no part in their appointment.

However, the experience has been that board members have little or no practical knowledge of statewide penal administration and at times, for various reasons, block progressive movements of an efficient department head. Competent leadership, competent policy making and competent execution of those policies are essential to successful penal and corrections administration. The system existent now in Georgia does not tend in that direction.

The director ideally should be appointed by the governor and charged with the operation of the department, and he alone, held responsible by the governor for all divisions within the department. No correctional institution or penal system can be operated efficiently if politics has any part in the program, or in the selection or dismissal of personnel. (Politics control in the Georgia Department of Corrections to the exclusion or relegation of the welfare and rehabilitation of its inmates.)

All employes should be under the Merit System of Personnel Code, excepting the director and division heads on the policy-making level.

ANY INDIVIDUAL being considered for the position of director must be an administrator or successful executive, and should possess some knowledge of the state laws. He must have fortitude and determination, and be progressive in undertaking the improvements so urgently needed. Initiative is a vital factor. He must be firm in his convictions and guided by common sense.

A combination of these qualities should lead to a successful functioning of the divisions of the department. Any employe found in violation of the rules should be subject to disciplinary action, dependent upon the seriousness of the violation. This could be in the form of a reprimand, suspension from duty, or even discharge, should the nature of the offense warrant it.

If discipline for employes is lacking, it follows that there can be no discipline for inmates, and consequently there can be no successful program in the institutions.

Favoritism, politics, etc., must play no part insofar as employes or inmates are concerned, and it is most important that the director support the division head if he is competent and qualified.

Properly trained personnel are most essential to the successful operation of a prison. A guard training school should be established at Reidsville as soon as possible, to train all custodial personnel for all divisions of the department. Personnel must be competent if the program is to be successful, and there must be an employe for each required post.

IF PRACTICAL prison procedure is followed, only felons should be placed in the prisons and state prison camps. All misdemeanants should be confined to the various county camps that are livable.

The Department of Corrections should set up standards and programs and inspection of county units as to housing, treatment, operation, etc. This practice should be inaugurated as soon as possible, and all county camps should be approved or disapproved by the Department of Corrections.

Legislation should be enacted excluding certain categories of misdemeanants from the state prison system.

The department should establish or use a central institution for acceptable misdemeanants from the county units and for the misdemeanants from counties that do not have a camp.

In a few extreme cases, such as known escape risks, psychopaths, etc., it may be necessary to assign a misdemeanant to a prison. These, however, must be proved by records, etc., and should be an exception rather than a practice.

Under no circumstances should inmates be moved from one location to another to satisfy some citizen or the inmate, as is presently the practice. The combined housing of felons and misdemeanants

ANY INDIVIDUAL being considered for the position of director must be an administrator or successful executive, and should possess some knowledge of the state laws. He must have fortitude and determination, and be progressive in undertaking the improvements so urgently needed. Initiative is a vital factor. He must be firm in his convictions and guided by common sense.

A combination of these qualities should lead to a successful functioning of the department. If the director lacks any one of these essential qualifications, the system can only be expected to wallow and deteriorate, and Georgia will continue to be in the same position it is in today. No director, however, can operate the Georgia Department of Corrections successfully unless he has sufficient money available to employ competent personnel, construct buildings and furnish them with needed equipment, set up proper educational and industrial programs, etc.

Prisons are big business and are supported by the taxpayers and should be operated in a business-like manner. The handling of public funds is a public trust, and each division should set up a budget of sufficient amount to carry out a practical program. Each division head should attempt to live within his budget.

THE DIRECTOR should have as his assistant, an individual who has had experience in the operation of a prison or camp. He must know inmates and personnel, the value of work programs and educational programs. He should know and understand the importance of discipline and rehabilitation, and visit all institutions in the state as often as possible, with a view of making progressive recommendations concerning programs, food, housing, etc., to the division head and director.

The director, through policy, regulations and visitation, should supervise and direct the operation of each and every division within the department. Division heads, of course, must be competent. Establishing policy and regulations and directing the operation of their particular division is most important.

No institution head can sit in his office and run a successful program. It is also most important that the director visit each installation and familiarize himself with the operations and programs as often as possible.

At a later date, the individual records of inmates should be removed from the director's office to the institution wherein the inmate is confined. The parole office in Atlanta, however, should maintain a file on each inmate, containing a copy of all information pertinent to the prisoner.

This should include a copy of a letter from the prosecuting attorney covering the crime involved, a classification report from a professional classification board, the FBI report and all other pertinent information. It is realized that it will be impossible to move these records until such time as the diagnostic center is established and inmates are properly classified.

IN ALL institutions and divisions, there should be a system of rules and regulations and guidance covering assignments and operations to govern employes of all misdemeanants from counties that do not have a camp.

In a few extreme cases, such as known escape risks, psychopaths, etc., it may be necessary to assign a misdemeanant to a prison. These, however, must be proved by records, etc., and should be an exception rather than a practice.

Under no circumstances should inmates be moved from one location to another to satisfy some citizen or the inmate, as is presently the practice. The combined housing of felons and misdemeanants in one institution is not in keeping with good prison administration. It can only breed crimes.

IN STATE CAMPS (branches) now operated by the Department of Corrections, only felons should be assigned; they should be very carefully screened and for the most part, used in reforestration of state land and parks and land salvage programs.

As time goes on, less emphasis should be placed on state road and bridge construction by the use of inmate labor and eventually it should be discontinued. While I understand the practice of using inmates on road work in Georgia has been followed for a long period of time, I seriously doubt its feasibility and rehabilitative results. This practice is followed in very few states today.

If the state camps are to continue, I strongly recommend that only the younger felons be assigned, and that they be carefully selected. For the most part, these youngsters do not know how to work, nor do they understand discipline. No one has said "no" to them and made it stick; many are school dropouts.

They must be taught to work and the meaning of discipline. As mentioned, escape risks, sex deviates and those incapable of absorbing rehabilitative help should not be considered for placement in the state camps. These camps should have both academic and vocational educational programs.

FOR THE SUCCESS of a program, it is to be understood that the director and each division head have an adequate and efficient staff to manage the over-all operation of the entire department. No prison or camp can be successfully operated without an employe at each assignment and post.

I feel there is a desire and determination to improve the prison system of Georgia by the governor, and the outstanding commission he has selected. There will be no difficulty in finding competent people in the great state of Georgia, qualified after training, to carry out this program, but to do so, reasonable working hours, a living wage for custodial and lower bracket employes (minimum $300 per month), and a good training program for the employes, are essential.

There is nothing mysterious about prisons or the Department of Corrections as some people would have the public believe. Visiting, by permission, should be encouraged for professional, civic and church groups.

Good government is indicative of good politics and successful politicians demand good government.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The State Prison at Reidsville.

Atl. Jour. 5/27/63
L.E.

REIDSVILLE

Overcrowding Perils Prison; More Personnel Needed

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

The State of Georgia purchased the Reidsville institution from the federal government and has used it since that time to house felons and misdemeanants.

A large percentage of the inmates confined have been rejected, so to speak, by the various county institutions because of physical disability, or in some cases, more extensive custody was necessary other than is offered by the county or state camps. Only felons, however, should be confined to Reidsville. The misdemeanants should be removed to other locations at an early date to eliminate the serious overcrowding that is dangerous to any institution.

ROBERT BALKCOM, the warden, is doing a very creditable job for the state of Georgia, with the money and equipment that has been furnished him. I am sure that a great number of the citizens of Georgia do not know, or realize, how well Warden Balkcom has managed with so few of the essentials necessary in the operation of a penal institution.

The lack of proper classification of inmates, and the existing dormitories, with very few cell houses, add to the tremendous job of the warden, and the other personnel. Every dormitory I visited was overcrowded.

Prisoners should never be housed in dormitories unless they have been carefully selected, and a custodial officer should be assigned to each dormitory around the clock.

THE OLDER cell houses are very much in need of repair, and I especially refer to the locking devices, which are dangerous in their present state.

Two modern cell blocks, however, have been constructed at a cost of $1,400 per cell, which is most commendable. This was done under the supervision of Warden Balkcom by a civilian tradesman and inmate labor. The cell houses are modern and will serve the state of Georgia well. I was told, however, that they are unable to occupy one of the cell blocks at the present time because the warden is unable to obtain sufficient personnel to supervise the men. Proper supervision is most important, even though inmates are locked in cell houses at night.

IN MY OPINION, it will al-

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 2

ant for prison personnel to have all information pertaining to a prisoner.

WITH THE SPACE available near the present administration building an addition could be constructed on each side, or a second story added, to make sufficient room for the important funcions of the business administration and record offices.

A most unusual situation exists at Reidsville in that Warden Balkcom has been "holding court," so to speak, and handling all of the discipline of inmates who violate rules of the institution, rather than placing this authority in the hands of someone who is not properly qualified. It is a sad state of affairs when there are not sufficient capable people who could be assigned to the handling of discipline and assignment of inmates.

The "court" as it is commonly known, is one of the nerve centers of any institution, and certainly, if it is not properly supervised by a prison-wise person, very serious results can, and in all probability will occur.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Other Phases of the Reidsville Operation.

serve the state of Georgia well. I was told, however, that they are unable to occupy one of the cell blocks at the present time because the warden is unable to obtain sufficient personnel to supervise the men. Proper supervision is most important, even though inmates are locked in cell houses at night.

IN MY OPINION, it will always be impossible to obtain qualified personnel until the salary is increased to a minimum of $300 per month and all employes work only eight hours a day. Then too, there must be sufficient help—a man for each post—if Georgia is to properly operate this institution without criticism.

Funds must be made available and Reidsville permitted to establish a school for the training of personnel, where all personnel for the various assignments throughout the state can be trained in the same manner and then transferred to the institution or camp where they are needed.

All employes should be civil service or merit, and all should be thoroughly investigated as to background and character, and if found lacking should not be employed. All advancements should be made through the ranks.

During the employe's training period, he should be supplied with books of rules and regulations for the guidance of inmates and employes.

Administration Records

There is insufficient space for the competent operation of a practical business administration. This is not meant, in any way, to reflect upon any employe. It is the system.

I also found the record office inadequate in space and proper record keeping. There is little or no information in an inmate's file.

Each file should contain a letter from the state's attorney of the county of conviction, covering the inmate's crime, complete court history, proper classification reports submitted by professional people, a copy of the FBI report, and any and all other information pertaining to each and every inmate. (A copy of all record office files should also be in the hands of the assigning and disciplinary officer, who should be a qualified captain in rank).

UNDER THE PRESENT system employed by the Department of Corrections, it is necessary that records, even though inadequate, be available to the director for his assignment of inmates to the camps and institutions throughout the state, which in my opinion is dangerous.

With the establishment of a diagnostic center and a qualified classification board, these records should be removed from the director's office in Atlanta, and, as previously stated, the warden of the institution where the inmate is assigned should have complete information — a copy of every record pertaining to each inmate.

The chances for rehabilitating an inmate without positive and complete records at hand, are practically nil. It is very import-

Atl. Jour. 5/28/63
L.C.

REIDSVILLE

Prison's Medical Service More Than Adequate

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

The hospital at Reidsville is modern and the medical service, in my opinion, is more than adequate. Four doctors are more than ample to care for the medical needs of an institution of this type.

Certainly, if the misdemeanants are not longer committed to the Reidsville institution, one full-time doctor and a part-time surgeon, with the services of a full-time dentist, will take care of the medical and hospital needs and requirements.

Much thought, however, should be given to employing a pharmacist to order, make up and dispense medicines. A capable pharmacist will more than justify the salary paid him, and he of more value than the three doctors.

The Ragen Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 3

Solitary Or Isolation

Solitary or isolation is a necessity in any prison.

I am sure that most wardens would be glad to abolish this assignment, but always there are a percentage of inmates who will not live within the rules either by denial of privileges or loss of good time, thereby making it necessary to remove them from the general population, in some cases for a few days, others for longer periods of time depending upon the seriousness of the violation and type of individual. In some cases, it becomes necessary to confine a man in segregation with no time set for release.

The so-called "solitary" is composed of modern cells in the administration building adjoining the hospital. Men are confined for a maximum period of 30 days and are served bread and water during their stay, excepting for a full meal every third day. The doctor visits solitary daily and any man in need of medical attention is removed immediately. It is recommended that there be a limit of 15 days for those confined in solitary and that one full meal be served each day, the same as is served in the general dining room at noon.

I would suggest that the word "solitary" be discarded and "isolation" be used instead.

Segregation

The men in segregation are confined in modern cells, furnished a bed, three full meals a day and given library privileges. They are assigned for no definite period of time, which is proper, but are released periodically into the general population on trial or probatiton. This is in keeping with good prison administration.

If there were employment and educational programs at Reidsville, the number of men in segregation and isolation could be reduced by 75 per cent. This people are troublesome people.

Academic Vocational Program

Reidsville has no educational program for inmates, neither academic nor vocational, which is not in keeping with modern prison procedure for the rehabilitation of prisoners.

Buildings adequate to carry on these programs should be constructed as soon as possible. A detailed description of the procedures and requirements of these programs will be found elsewhere in this report.

A vocational school is most necessary and should be a part of the educational program. A building should be constructed which could consist of four walls, a roof and floor, with low partitions to separate the various vocations.

In all vocational and educational buildings, there should be no rooms or enclosures where the men cannot be supervised by an officer or teacher at all times, and partitions should be of glass to eliminate "hideouts."

Library

It is my understanding that few library books are presently available to the inmates, but I was shown a new building under construction which will house a library and was advised by Warden Balkcom that more books will be at the disposal of inmates in the near future. Properly selected books and periodicals, including sufficient educational, fictional and nonfictional material is most important to the inmates in any penal institution. Books must be kept in circulation and properly supervised by employes in order to eliminate trafficking.

Chapel and Religious Services

The chapel is very small, but I was advised by the warden that it serves Reidsville. All inmates are encouraged to attend church services, and many do.

I talked with both the Protestant and Catholic chaplains—Rev. Edgar Lee Jenkins and Father George Mathis. They indicated they receive full cooperation from the warden and supervising officials of the institution, and at no time had they seen or witnessed an act of unusual punishment of inmates.

It is recommended that qualified chaplains be selected and made full-time employes. Each should hold at least one service per week and should be available five days a week to counsel the inmates in religion. A good chaplain is very important in any prison, but his duties should be confined to religious activities and perheps counseling with relatives or friends of an inmate.

Theater

There is a small theater and it is my understanding a movie is shown each week. Due to its size, it is necessary to show the movie several times so it can be seen by the entire population. Properly selected movies are very important for educational as well as recreational purposes.

Alcoholics Anonymous Program

This institution has an active Alcoholics Anonymous program, conducted each Sunday by outside AA members. It is suggested that this program be encouraged and expanded.

Parole Officer

The assignment of a parole officer at the Reidsville institution is an innovation and the agent appeared to be very interested and concerned with his responsibilities. It is my belief that all prisoners, if and when released, should be by parole and should be supervised for a period of time.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Farm and Other Operations at Reidsville.

WISHING WELL

6	5	3	8	4	7	2	6	5	3	8	4
L	N	Y	A	G	A	F	O	E	O	W	O
8	4	7	2	6	3	5	8	4	7	6	2
I	L	A	I	V	U	W	L	D	S	E	E
2	6	3	8	5	4	7	6	3	5	4	8
V	A	A	L	A	L	H	N	R	B	I	T
8	4	2	6	7	3	5	8	4	6	3	2
H	N	E	D	N	N	I	R	E	W	A	G
6	4	3	5	4	8	6	2	7	3	5	4
O	C	F	O	D	I	R	I	E	O	F	N
3	5	4	8	2	6	3	5	4	7	2	2
R	C	E	L	F	K	T	H	W	T	T	U
7	6	3	5	7	4	2	6	8	3	7	5
I	J	N	E	V	S	S	O	L	E	E	R

Count the letters in your first name. If 6 or more, subtract 4; if less than 6, add 3. The result is your number. Letters under your number spell a message.—(c1963.)

Atl. Jour. 5/29/63
L.E.

EQUIPMENT NEEDED

Reidsville: Bright Spot In Dim Prison Picture

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

Reidsville and all of the buildings on the reservation are clean, which is most commendable. The kitchen, bake shop and cold storage were clean and amply stocked with commodities. The equipment appeared to be in fair condition; however, there should be some replacements and some new equipment added. The food being served at the time of my visit was appetizing and well prepared.

Canning Plant

Vegetables and fruits raised on the institution farm are canned and stored for use at the Reidsville institution. The surplus is transferred to other prisons within the state.

The plant is not fully equipped and is, therefore, not operating to full capacity.

It is recommended that this plant be removed to a new building outside of the enclosure and properly equipped. In transporting produce inside the enclosure, a certain amount of danger is involved. There is always the possibility of contraband being brought in in crates and boxes. It would also afford a saving in time.

A properly equipped canning plant at Reidsville and planting and production from the excellent farm could supply sufficient canned goods for all of the hospitals and prisons of the state, at a savings to the taxpayers. It would also provide employment to many inmates now unassigned and would serve as good vocational training.

If this canning plant is removed to a new building, the space now being used can be utilized by the proposed road sign and metal working plant.

There is a small print shop for institutional needs which employs a few men.

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 4

Print Shop

There is a small print shop for institutional needs which employs a few men.

License Plate Plant

There is an inadequacy of equipment in this plant. If it were enlarged and properly equipped, metal road signs for the Highway Department, now being purchased from another source, could be manufactured.

Tailor Shop

This shop should be transferred to the new proposed institution after completion.

Mattress Shop

It is my understanding mattresses are manufactured for institution use only. This should be enlarged and mattresses manufactured for all institutions.

Storage Building

The building now being used for storage inside the enclosure should be remodeled and converted into an industrial building, or removed, and a warehouse constructed outside the enclosure. This would eliminate deliveries being made inside by commercial vehicles, which is a good precautonary measure. Also, there is less danger of loss by carelessness, theft or fire.

Farm

It is my understanding that approximately 1,100 men are assigned to the prison farm. In my opinion, 400 would be ample. The farm is one of the most modern prison farms in America; it consists of approximately 8,000 acres and produces almost a million dollars worth of vegetables, milk, grains and livestock yearly. It produces all of the vegetables or fire.

Farm

It is my understanding that approximately 1,100 men are assigned to the prison farm. In my opinion, 400 would be ample. The farm is one of the most modern prison farms in America; it consists of approximately 8,000 acres and produces almost a million dollars worth of vegetables, milk, grains and livestock yearly. It produces all of the vegetables necessary for table use and 200,000 gallons of vegetables and fruits are canned. It also supplies all of the needed pork, beef and milk used at the institution. At the time of my visit, there were 3,000 hogs, more than 1,400 beef cattle, 350 dairy cows, 13,000 chickens and 8,000 laying hens.

There is also an excellent nursery which supplies pine seedings for the Department of Forestry.

Georgia can be justly proud of its farm; it is outstanding. It is recommended, however, that a dormitory be constructed outside of the enclosure to eliminate the necessity of moving men in and out of the institution each day. The possibility of carrying information and contraband in and out is always a hazard. Supervision for those outside the wall apparently is adequate as there were only six escape attempts in 1962.

Reidsville, to supplement its farm program, is in need of a well-rounded industrial program, which is covered elsewhere in this report.

Former Women's Prison

After the transferring of all female prisoners from the Reidsville institution to Milledgeville, the building formerly occupied by them was converted to housing male prisoners. The men confined are relatively older and physically unfit for conventional employment and unable to follow the regular routine at the Reidsville institution.

The building is both inadequate and over-crowded—conditions which can only provoke criticism—but it was clean. Due to its location, it should be considered an annex to Reidsville and tradesmen from Reidsville could construct an addition to this building, providing adequate space for those confined and an industrial program as well as an educational program.

Light industries could be installed to occupy time and afford some training for self-sufficiency on release.

By all means, only felons should be confined at Reidsville and the annex.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The Georgia Industrial Institution at Alto.

R.E.-

ALTO NEEDS ATTENTION

Privacy at Dormitories Should Be Done Away With

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

At one time, the buildings of the Alto Institution were used as a hospital, the patients were moved to another location and an attempt is being made to convert the institution into a reformatory for young offenders. At the time of my visit, the population was approximately 800, the majority were felons, with some misdemeanants, most of them under 20 years of age.

Some of the larger rooms in the main building are being used as dormitories, with bars installed over windows and doors. Dormitories are extremely impractical in most institutions, particularly for younger offenders. Since the prison system cannot be transformed over night, it is recommended that observation points be made by cutting windows in the hall walls of the dormitories, and within the dormitories, remove half-walls and walls of toilets and showers, thus eliminating the danger of hideouts and violations that follows, such as strong-arm tactics and unnatural sex practices, etc.

An officer should be assigned to each dormitory, with a competent supervisory officer checking on the officer after lockup so that proper surveillance is maintained at all times. The so-called "private rooms" should be eliminated at once. There should be no room or section unsupervised by an officer. A dormitory, if it is to be used in prison housing, must be so constructed to afford constant supervision throughout a 24-hour period.

Very serious consideration should be given as soon as possible, to the construction of cell houses to eliminate the dormitories and thus provide proper housing for the youthful offenders committed to Alto. Cell houses are more practical, not necessarily for security alone, but to house offenders separately, thus avoiding violations that might otherwise occur and resultant scars that may never heal.

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 5

It would have been more practical had cell houses been erected at the time the institution was occupied, and the space now used as dormitories converted into classrooms and shops. I have visited nearly every penal institution and reformatory in America, and Alto, in my opinion, is most inadequate in management, housing, program, and purpose.

Confined in this institution are the younger type offenders. For the most part, these boys are undoubtedly school drop-outs, have never held a job, do not know how to work, no one has ever said "NO" to them and made it stick, and therefore, are in need of discipline and a program to fit them. If they are not reached or rehabilitated and returned to society better equipped, they will, without a doubt, return to crime.

Alto, as it is operated today, is a fertile crime-breeding ground. It is not difficult to escape from this institution, as the records indicate. When an inmate does escape the chances are he will commit another crime to effect a successful getaway, such as stealing an automobile, burglary for money or clothing, rape murder, etc.

Kitchen and Dining Room

The kitchen and dining room are not properly set up for the preparation and serving of food. These areas were disorderly and the men in charge had little dietary experience. The equipment was only fair and the food being prepared appeared to be inferior. The housekeeping was bad and there was a complete lack of supervision and "knowhow" on the part of those in charge.

Medical Program

A medical and hospital program is very much needed at Alto.

Academic Program

At the present time, a new building is being constructed to be used as an academic school. Apparently no thought was given to the proper type of construction for a school to educate the type of inmate-student confined at Alto. I was told there would be classes from the first grade through four years of high school. If this materializes as anticipated, it is commendable.

I urge that windows and doors be installed in the walls of each room so there can be supervision from the hallway at all times. As previously indicated, inmates especially in this age category, should never be left unguarded or unsupervised in a classroom, or elsewhere in an institution.

Within this same building, an auditorium and gymnasium are being completed, which should be adequate for indoor recreation.

It is strongly urged that those who complete the school requirements be issued a diploma and an arrangement made with the county superintendent of schools or the superintendent of the Cornelia high and grade schools to hold examinations, grade papers and issue diplomas, the same as those given to the graduates of the Cornelia schools. This, of course, providing the reformatory teachers have the required credentials.

The inmates confined at Alto are failures when they enter, but if they improve themselves by education, etc., the diploma they receive should not carry a prison brand, such as the plan followed today. The Jack Forrester School is a prison brand and steps should be taken to alter the method immediately.

There is in effect at the Alto institution, I was told, a plan whereby teachers are assigned under the jurisdiction of the superintendent of schools for the purpose of establishing an educational program. This is commendable, and with proper leadership and prison training, could greatly benefit the institution and those confined. While I am sure, however, the individuals ars excellent instructors in the public school system, without proper custodial training and some prison "knowhow" little will be gained; most certainly, they can get no help as Alto is operated today. It is my suggestion that all educational personnel spend several weeks in an institution of a similar type. (Pontiac, Illinois, is recommended for proper instruction and custodial training).

Vocational Training

The construction of a new vocational training building is contemplated when the academic building program is completed. In my opinion, however, it would be much more practical to construct a cell house rather than the vocational building, and some of the present dormitories used for classrooms and shops.

The building or space used for vocational training should have no inside walls or partitions; vocational classes should be divided by separations, not more than 40 inches in height. Thus, various vocational crafts could be taught in specific areas and enable more effective supervision.

As a part of the vocational training program, there should be classes and actual work in the maintenance of the institution, under the supervision of qualified civilians. This should include plumbing, electrical work, woodworking, refrigeration, machine shop, welding, etc., as well as auto body and fender work on state owned vehicles; auto mechanics, bricklaying, carpentry, cement finishing, sign and display, spray painting, typewriter and business machine repair.

Each student should be given an aptitude test before his assignment to any class. It is common for boys and inmates to overestimate their potential and capabilities.

Industrial Program

The Alto institution should have, and can carry, a properly selected industrial program.

Farm Program

The farm program is nil, and the dairy, as it is operated, can only be classified inferior. This program is greatly in need of expansion and improvement. Additional land should be acquired and the present buildings remodeled or replaced. A general "cleanup" is badly needed and a good housekeeping program established. A competent farm superintendent should be employed and trained at Reidsville and given the complete support and help of the institution administrator. There is no reason why, if more land were purchased, a practical farm operation could not be carried on.

Library

A library is very important and necessary in any penal institution or reformatory. It should be stocked with approved books, educational, fictional, etc., and operated under the supervision of a qualified civilian. This is not being done at Alto.

Religion

I viewed a new chapel which is under construction. Full - time chaplains should be employed to hold weekly services and counsel the inmate population. Good chaplains are very important to a successful prison operation.

Superintendent

The superintendent of the Alto Reformatory should be a man not more than 45 years of age, having an academic and vocational background; should be an executive capable of delegating authority to competent employes so that his program can be carried out. He must be dedicated to establishing and furthering an educational program, so urgently needed. If he lacks prison background and training, he should spend at least one month in an institution having a program such as should be established at Alto. He would be most welcome to visit the Pontiac Institution in Illinois. His assistant should be prison wise and capable. Paramount, of course, is safe custody and discipline, followed closely by a program.

Lack of leadership is evident throughout the institution. The guards, of which there are too few, are untrained, underpaid and have few, if any, rules and regulations to follow. The "chain of command" accompanying this report should be used at Alto in setting up procedures for personnel, the same as recommended at Reidsville.

I wonder too, about the value of exploiting inmates by transporting them throughout the state in a bus.

If there is to be a worthwhile program at Alto, new and competent leadership is needed and sufficient properly trained and paid personnel to administer the program for young offenders. If inmates at Alto are not rehabilitated during their stay, without a doubt, they will return to crime. Alto today, in my opinion, is a crime school. What a boy does not know when he gets to Alto, he will learn after his arrival, and after release, society will again pay, either in loss of property, and not beyond thinking, loss of life, but most positively, in tax monies expended for the arrest and conviction of the individual, who may have been reached had the program been one of rehabilitation.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: County and State Camps.

6/2/63

Inmates Do Jobs To Serve Georgia

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

This confinement of male and female prisoners in separate divisions on a single reservation is unique in that inmates are working for another State Department in a worthwhile capacity while serving their sentences. They replace civilian personnel whose services would otherwise be required to perform these duties, and whose salaries, I am sure, would be at the "prevailing" rate in the community, which, of course, would be paid by tax monies from the Hospital Operating Fund. This appears to be a very satisfactory arrangement and I see no reason to change the program; however, the male population should be only felons.

The male division has a population of 186 inmates—94 misdemeanants and 92 felons. There are 43 employes in this division, whose salaries range from $255 per month for the guards to $845 per month for the warden. Employe-personnel work eight hours a day, six days a week, and all are serving under the Georgia State Personnel Code, which is commendable.

The female division is on the same reservation, in a frame building, but widely separated from the male division, and has a population of 240 inmates—159 felons and 81 misdemeanants. Thirty matrons supervise these female prisoners under the direct supervision of a certified female captain. All employes are under the direction of Warden W. N. McHan, and the salary range is $285 to $367 per month.

This is the only prison in the state where the employes are paid the rate established by the Personnel Code, which is commendable.

Women's Division

Many of the prisoners are assigned to the laundry where they perform work for the patients and staff of the hospital. The quality of their work is comparable to laundry work of private enterprise.

Others are assigned to the kitchen of the hospital and assist in the preparation of meals for patients and personnel.

Still others work in the medical laboratory and the X-ray department.

These assignments, in all probability, are in keeping with the duties some of these inmates would be performing if they were committed to any women's institution away from the state hospital.

Because of the expense involved,

The Ragen Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 7

paid a small salary for their work. This could be $10 to $20 per month. It should be compulsory that at least one-half of these earnings be saved for the day they will be released and enter free society.

New Fire-Proof Building:

As previously stated, it would be impractical to have separate institutions for the housing of female felons and misdemeanants because there are so few female prisoners; however, I cannot stress too strongly the importance of constructing a fireproof building in which to house them. This should include sleeping quarters, proper bathing facilities, ample dining and kitchen space, a sewing room where all clothing should be made as indicated herein, recreation and educational area and space for segregation for various types of inmates. No prisoner, male or female, should be locked or confined in any building that is not fireproof. It is to be remembered that in all prisons there are mental defectives, paranoid cases, psychotics and psychopaths who could, and in some instances, would, start a fire to satisfy a desire, or a means to escape. Buildings housing prisoners should be fireproof.

Men's Division

There is a new, modern building which adequately serves as living quarters for the men; however, there is need for better housekeeping—a place for everything with everything in its place.

All care should be used in choosing male inmate personnel, and no one with a history of sex violence or deviation, or who might

Others are assigned to the kitchen of the hospital and assist in the preparation of meals for patients and personnel.

Still others work in the medical laboratory and the X-ray department.

These assignments, in all probability, are in keeping with the duties some of these inmates would be performing if they were committed to any women's institution away from the state hospital.

Because of the expense involved, and the small number of female convictions of both felons and misdemeanants, in my opinion, it would be impractical to operate two institutions—one for felons and the other for misdemeanants. It is recommended that both female felons and misdemeanants be committed to the one institution.

Academic Program:

It is strongly urged that an academic program be established and carried on in cooperation with local school authorities. Those qualifying and meeting the requirements should be given recognition bearing no prison identification. The women could continue in their working assignments and the educational program carried on in the evening after working hours.

Beauty Culture:

It is further recommended that equipment be made available so beauty culture can be taught to those who are qualified and interested. It is a very good vocation which can be offered after working hours, with a qualified teacher supervising the instruction.

Women, not employed in a particular assignment in the hospital, should do the house work and serve the meals in the women's living quarters. Most institutions have some inmates who are not physically able to perform routine duties or who require maximum security, who can also be assigned to the housekeeping in the women's prison quarters.

Manufacture of Women's Garments:

The manufacturing of all garments for the women prisoners; and, if possible, some hospital patients, should be done by those in need of maximum security and others who would fit into the program, under the supervision of a qualified seamstress.

Payment for Services:

It is recommended that all women confined at Milledgeville be owners should be fireproof.

Men's Division

There is a new, modern building which adequately serves as living quarters for the men; however, there is need for better housekeeping—a place for everything with everything in its place.

All care should be used in choosing male inmate personnel, and no one with a history of sex violence or deviation, or who might be considered an escape risk, should be selected for this assignment. All should be felons with long sentences.

It is my understanding that male inmates assigned to the Milledgeville institution are tradesmen, or men desiring to learn a trade, who work under supervision of a qualified civilian employe. This is as it should be.

The housekeeping in the maintenance shop could be greatly improved. Most important is the establishing of a tool crib. A tool check should be made at the beginning and end of each work period, and all tools checked in and out of the tool crib.

Vocational Training Program:

Every effort should be made to inaugurate a vocational training program in maintenance work, and all male inmates should be encouraged to participate, both in the shop and classroom. Books, courses and practical and qualified leadership should be furnished so that a man can learn a trade and become qualified to earn a living in free society. After all, these inmates are saving the state many tax dollars.

Men are also being taught the barbering trade, which I understand is under the supervision of a qualified teacher of barbering, and when the men meet the requirements of the state board, receive a license to practice in the State of Georgia. This is indeed important and very creditable. . . .

Academic Program:

An academic program should also be established in the Men's Division. Classes could be carried on after working hours as recommended for the Women's Division.

Payment for Services:

As recommended for the female prisoners, male inmates assigned to the Milledgeville Hospital who do maintenance work, should be paid a sum from $10 to $20 per month, half of which should be saved for their release day.

AS PREVIOUSLY indicated, the Milledgeville arrangement is unique and appears to be a very practical operation—persons serving time for crimes against society in the State of Georgia, paying their debt to the state and at the same time saving the taxpayers many dollars which would have to be paid to civilian employes to do the same work. . . .

Warden McHan impressed me as being capable, conscientious and having full knowledge of his responsibilities.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Rock Quarry Prison Branch at Buford.

L.C.

'UNFIT FOR HUMANS'

Citizens Would Abandon Buford Rock Quarry

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

I am sure if the citizens o Georgia were permitted to visi the Buford branch, they would condemn it as unfit for the confinement of human beings. It should be abandoned, the men moved to another institution and later confined in the annex recommended to be constructed adjoining the proposed diagnostic depot.

The men incarcerated here are classified under the present mostly non-existent, inadequate classification system. The warden, however, advised he has little or no trouble and stated the discipline was good. Though termed "non-conformists," they should still be treated and confined in an institution acceptable by correctional standards.

The warden in charge has had little practical prison training, but if given proper training and guidance, I am sure he would make a useful employe. Without a doubt, the men respect him. He is strict, and I understand, fair, and I believe he is doing the best he can with what has been made available to him and in view of his lack of practical prison training.

THE INSTITUTION is inadequate. The housing in no way conforms to even the minimum of present day standards. The housekeeping is bad.

There are 38 guards and their maximum salary is $220 per month. They receive no training or guidance. They can only hope they do not make a mistake. There is no advancement through the ranks. There are few written rules or regulations for inmates or employes.

The men are housed in a dormitory-type cage or steel structure, with a runway on all sides. Supervision is by armed guards in a tower above the cage, which also serves as the armory. There is no central control of keys, locks, culinary equipment and tools, and no numbering of keys or locks.

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 8

This condition is extremely dangerous.

There is no academic or vocational training program; no classification program; no information or record of any significance is maintained as to the inmates.

The food is prepared by an unskilled steward with the help of inmates. The best of food ingredients, not properly prepared and served, constitutes a waste.

The doctor visits the institution twice a week, but I am advised he is on call.

The commissary privileges are inadequate. I was told money is not allowed in the hands of the inmates, but the warden indicated that contraband does appear from time to time.

The inmate library contains very few books and the men confined in the dormitories are allowed a radio and television. The general population is permitted Sunday newspapers.

THE PRISON reservation consists of 100 acres of land. A large quarry is located on the reservation, with the remaining acreage in pasture for the few cows that supply a part of the milk used. A few hogs are raised and, while there is no farm program, a few vegetables are grown.

The only employment is provided by the rock quarry. It is my understanding that rock is crushed and piled, and a little is used for road construction. This operation is costing thousands of dollars each year and little constructive or useful is being accomplished. When an inmate works, he should be able to see the fruits of his labor.

MEN ARE removed from the building to an adjoining one on the outside of the cell houses, where they are dressed in clothing for work in the quarry. Perhaps this is thought to be a safeguard, but is a health hazard as well as degrading to the men.

The segregation unit is on the second floor of the building. It perhaps would be suitable for isolation, if remodeled, but is not, in my opinion, proper for segregation of men.

Isolation is located in the basement and is a disgrace and discredit to the state. It is dark and the ventilation is bad. No one was confined at the time, but certainly no human should be in this section.

As previously stated, this institution should be condemned as unfit for the housing of human beings and should be abandoned as soon as possible; however, the building could be gutted and modernized and another section added, converting it into dormitories that could be properly supervised and used to house misdemeanants that are acceptable from the county camps.

There should be an academic and vocational program established to give help to these misdemeanants during their confinement.

TO FURTHER occupy these men, I would suggest that a toy repair project be inaugurated. The service clubs of Atlanta could furnish material (paint, a few nuts and bolts, dress goods for doll clothing, etc.) which I am sure they would be glad to do, and with advertising through the press, radio, etc., discarded toys could be picked up at a designated location or locations throughout the city. Truck and transportation companies, I am sure, would also cooperate if a definite day were set to pick up these discarded toys, and would return a completed load to a central location to be distributed to poor and underprivileged youngsters at Christmas and Easter time. Without a doubt thousands of toys could be renovated and the program would serve a twofold purpose — afford a little happiness to poor children, and just as important, occupy the men and in some cases, teach a trade beneficial to them after release.

Also recommended is the establishment of an upholstery and repair shop for used furniture.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Reception and Diagnostic Center.

L.E

DIAGNOSTIC CENTER

Psychiatrist, Dentist Needed With Room for Expansion

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

The need for a Diagnostic Center for the classification of all felons in the Georgia State Prison System is clearly ascertained. This center should be established at the earliest possible date.

This department should be adequately staffed with at least a psychiatrist, psychologists, sociologists, a competent medical man and one dentist. These staff members should be constituted as the Classification Board. Each felon sentenced to the prison system could then be examined and classified by the board and transferred to the institution recommended by the board.

It should be established and constructed where there is the greatest concentration of population within an area not more than 40 miles from a university so that the recommended professional staff can be recruited. It is practically impossible to obtain qualified personnel if the center is far removed from the university area, where there are graduate programs in psychology and sociology.

IT IS IMPORTANT that this professional staff be practical and cooperative. In all fields there are so-called "do-gooders" who are most impractical in an effective prison program. In a desirable classification program the staff members, in addition to their professional knowledge, must have their "feet on the ground" so to say, and must follow practical recommendations most beneficial to the rehabilitation of the inmate.

They must also keep in mind that the Department of Corrections is first responsible for the safe custody of prisoners and then rehabilitation; academic and vocational education; religious training; recreation, etc. and that by all means discipline be imposed; for without proper discipline there can be no program.

This Classification Board should act in an advisory capacity to the director and should have no administrative authority in the custody or general operation of the Diagnostic Center.

Every warden, where possible, should follow the classification recommendations as closely as possible in assignments and treatment.

THE FINDINGS of the Classification Board, upon admittance of the inmate, will also be very helpful to the Parole Board in evaluating inmates for parole. It is also recommended that prior to the parole of an inmate, the Parole Board request a member of the Classification Board to re-evaluate the inmate so that the Parole Board members may have the benefit of current findings. This reevaluation by the Classification Board member would be accomplished at the prison where the inmate is housed.

The Diagnostic Center should be a well-constructed cell house, composed of approximately 200 cells and not more than two galleries high. It should have a number of divisions where men can be segregated if the need should arise.

There should be at least 10 small interview rooms and a

The Ragen Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 9

conference room for the use of the professional staff in conducting group therapy and counseling.

There should also be adequate office space for the staff and a stenographic pool, and a first aid room for medical and dental examinations. (If surgery is indicated, the inmate should be removed to hospital facilities in the proposed adjoining institution).

The Diagnostic Center should be within an enclosure with ample security measures for a recreation yard, and in my opinion should cost no more than $750,000 if inmate labor is used, with practical civilian supervision.

Proposed Institution Adjoining Diagnostic Center

Within an adjoining enclosure, but not connected to the Diagnostic Center, should be another cell house, or two, for the housing of 300 to 400 inmates of the recidivist, non-comformist and non-improvable type.

The Rock Quarry institution should be abandoned as soon as possible so far as housing felons is concerned, and the type of men assigned to Buford removed to this proposed institution as soon as it is completed, or to Reidsville.

I am sure that in Reidsville, and in some of the camps, as well as in the new men being committed, there will always be enough of the above mentioned types that should not be committed to institutions where there are men of the improvable type. There are many men in prison who do not want anything but a life of crime. Many prisoners, subsequent to being released from prison, go back to crime for a livelihood. They consider arrest and conviction an occupational hazard.

Inmates of this type (and many have long prison records) serve their time and after release follow the same line of endeavor. Ninty-five per cent of this type are good prisoners and serve their time and cooperate in an institutional program.

There is a small percentage of men in all prisons who are psycopaths and troublemakers. This type, in many cases, must be segregated; therefore, within this proposed institution, there should be a building with 25 cells to separate the troublemakers from the general population. Many men, however, after being segregated for a period of time, can be successfully released into the general population, but most men of this type need close supervision.

I am very familiar with the type of inmate suggested for this proposed institution and I know that these men will serve time with more ease if the discipline is strict, but fair, and if they are given assignments to keep them occupied.

Also within this proposed adjoining enclosure, should be constructed the buildings necessary for the successful operation of an institution housing approximately 500 men—kitchen, dining room, bakery, laundry, heating plant, small, but completely equipped hospital, etc.

The food for the men in the Diagnostic Center should be prepared here and served from steam tables on wheels. Laundry should also be done for the center, thus eliminating the expense of installing separate kitchen, laundry, heating, etc., facilities at the Diagnostic Center. Medical and dental personnel can serve both institutions.

In this proposed institution, there should also be a garment department of sufficient size to employ approximately 200 men, to manufacture all of the clothing needs (everything from a handkerchief to a suit of clothing) for all male wards of the state, including patients in the state hospital.

There should also be an academic and vocational training program. While most of those assigned would be of the non-improvable type, there will be a certain percentage who will improve if given some help and guidance.

At a later time, it may be desirable to establish more industries. I, therefore, suggest sufficient land—at least 80 acres—be acquired for expansion purposes.

I am sure if the suggested program is followed, it will pay great dividends to the Georgia Prison System in a few years. With competent civilian supervision and inmate construction workers, this annex should cost less than $3,500,000. Plain, practical building construction is all that is needed—so-called gingerbread and a lot of walls and corners cost money and serve no useful purpose.

It is my understanding that Georgia, by using prison labor can construct at the rate of approximately $3.50 per square foot.

Proposed Prison In Hart County

Farm land in Hart County, Ga., which I understand was purchased by the Department of Corrections as a location for a proposed prison, is only a few miles from the South Carolina border. I do not consider it a practical location for several reasons:

1. It is not centrally located.
2. It is far removed from Metropolitan areas from where a high percentage of prison populations emanate.
3. Staffing and transportation would be very expensive.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: General Guidelines on Running a Prison System.

L.E.

MAN IT 24 HOURS A DAY

Armory of Prime Importance To Any Penal Institution

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

An armory is a most important assignment. A major institution should have a strong room in the administration building, manned by an employe throughout the 24-hour period, who aids in the supervision of passageways and movement of inmates in the administration building, and in particular, the opening and closing of gates where inmates may be passing through the guardhall.

Guns, munitions, keys, flashlights, hacksaw blades and other instruments which would be dangerous should they fall into the hands of inmates should be kept in the armory, and maintained in top condition at all times.

ALL ARTICLES withdrawn should be receipted for, either by the depositing of employe's numbered identification tag or a written receipt that is returned to the individual on return of the article. At the end of each work period, the armory officer must notify his relief as to all items not returned and give him other pertinent information pertaining to the assignment.

Keys should be numbered, as should be corresponding locks on doors, windows, etc., throughout the institution, and the keys for a particular assignment or shop, carried on one large key ring.

It is of prime importance that an accurate inventory be maintained of everything in the armory, firearm numbers, etc., and also of the tags and receipts deposited for the items issued therefrom.

Commissaries

There should be a commissary or PX where prisoners, with money on deposit in their account, can purchase snacks, tobacco, candy and other permissible items; however, no inmate should be permitted to spend more than $6 per week. If there is no limit on commissary purchases, merchandise will be used as a medium of exchange in place of money.

INMATES SHOULD NOT be permitted to carry or have money in their possession at any time. If this is not now in effect in any Georgia prisons, an order should be issued giving them 2

The Ragen Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 10

of an institution within the Georgia Department of Corrections.

Education Program

The Department of Public Safety in Illinois, and I know the same arrangement exists in several other states, has set up educational programs in each institution by making arrangements with local school authorities in the community where an institution is located to recognize the prison schools. Qualified teachers are employed to teach prison schools and in some cases qualified inmates are used under the supervision of civilian teachers. The curriculum of the prison schools is in line with that of the community schools.

INMATES, capable of learning and with less than an eighth grade education, must attend school until they have completed eight grades, at the end of which a member of the local school faculty holds an examination, grades the papers, and if the inmate qualifies, he is given an eighth grade diploma, the same as any child receives who graduates from the eighth grade in the community school. After graduating from eighth grade, all inmates are encouraged to attend high school, the same arrangement with the high school in the community of the institution prevailing as is followed in the grade school set-up.

It is to be understood that the prisons have qualified civilians in charge of the prison schools. In some institutions, college courses by TV are carried on in the above mentioned manner and recognition is given by the college in which the program originates.

THEN TOO, every institution should have a vocational program whereby at least 40 vocations can be offered and due recognition is given to those who finish the vocation of their selection. It is most important to administer aptitude tests to inmates before assigning them to any vocation to see whether they are capable of carrying it. Many will over-rate their ability.

It is most important that the Georgia institutions set up a rule book covering all assignments of the particular institution. However, as time goes on, after the rule book has been completed, it will be necessary to issue information and orders covering rules and regulations. It is most important that all employes understand and know of new orders covering rules and regulations, therefore the following procedure should be followed:

The new orders should be read at roll call and copies placed on the bulletin boards and a copy placed in a loose-leaf binder at the entrance of the institution proper, preferably at the guardhall gate where employes who may have been on vacation or on sick leave at the time the order was issued will have the opportunity to bring themselves up to date on the latest rules and regulations pertaining to the institution.

IN ADDITION to a rule book for inmates, it will also be necessary to issue orders and regulations for inmates; a copy of such should be placed in each assignment in the institution and also read over the institution public address system. In this way, there will be no excuse for inmates claiming they are not up on the rules and regulations of the institution.

Food

Good food is very important in any penal institution. It should be of first quality, properly prepared and served, if full value is to be derived. Under no circumstances should its preparation and serving be left in the hands of an amateur. A qualified steward should be appointed for each institution. The saving in waste, properly balanced meals and the feeling good food creates will more than compensate his salary. Bad food or that haphazardly prepared and served, only causes discontent and unrest.

All food in camps or institutions should be served cafeteria style. The cafeteria system will not only save food but it will be warm at time of serving.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Housekeeping, Parole and Other Phases of Prison Operation.

Commissaries

There should be a commissary or PX where prisoners, with money on deposit in their account, can purchase snacks, tobacco, candy and other permissible items; however, no inmate should be permitted to spend more than $6 per week. If there is no limit on commissary purchases, merchandise will be used as a medium of exchange in place of money.

INMATES SHOULD NOT be permitted to carry or have money in their possession at any time. If this is not now in effect in any Georgia prisons, an order should be issued giving them 2 weeks in which to turn in the money; thereafter, money found on anyone should be considered contraband, turned in to the Inmates' Benefit Fund and the possessor disciplined. Money is most dangerous in any prison; favors can be bought, illegitimate activities engaged in and unfortunately some employe personnel will deal with inmates for cash considerations.

Construction

I find that by using inmates in construction programs under the supervision of qualified civilian construction foremen, the cost of most buildings would be no more than $3.50 per square foot, which, in my opinion, is constructing practical buildings at a very minimum cost; it is giving employment, which is so important in a prison operation. Then, too, it is most important to teach inmates some sort of a vocation during their term of confinement.

Discipline

Most inmates find their way to institutions because of lack of discipline in the home, school and in the free community. People who are not supervised and guided during their formative years, in later years, in many cases, build up a desire to resist authority, and are particularly the type people who find their way into institutions.

THEREFORE, it is most important that in addition to the proper educational program and guidance, discipline for inmates must be positive but fair.

Any employe in charge of an assignment must have full control over those inmates in his charge, or any so-called gain towards rehabilitation will be lost. Institutions without discipline for inmates or employes will fail.

No warden can be expected to carry the responsibility of covering all assignments in the institution, and he must, by necessity, delegate responsibilities to other competent employes.

The chain of command, if followed by those in authority, will be helpful in the administration

Atl. Jour. 6/6/63
R. E.

Employment Help

New Clothes, Few Dollars Should Go With Release

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

It is my understanding that inmates being released from an institution in Georgia today are given very few clothes and no money, other than a ticket to the county of conviction. The Department of Correction should establish a system whereby each felon released should be given a suit of clothes, shoes, underwear, etc. and at least $20 in cash to sustain him until he finds employment. Misdemeanants should be given a cheap suit of clothes and a few dollars.

Housekeeping

Cells, shops and every assignment throughout the institution should be spic and span at all times. There should not be a given time for cleaning up—it should be on a continuous basis.

Most inmates must be taught the art of housekeeping. They are notorious for hoarding contraband, clothing and other paraphernalia, which is certainly not in line with good housekeeping. They should be issued a given number of articles of clothing—underwear, pants, coat, shirts, shoes, etc. and should be charged therewith. Under no circumstances should anything be replaced unless the old or worn articles are turned into the Clothing Room.

Informers or Stool Pigeons

An institution should not be operated on the basis of inmate stool pigeons or informers. While I know that every institution is populated by men who are more than ready to tell stories on others to gain a point for themselves, under no circumstances should any inmate be punished on the word of another inmate and if word comes to any prison personnel, it should be thoroughly investigated before action is taken. Stool pigeons or informers are dangerous to any institution.

A warden, if he is to be successful, must have a properly trained custodial force and operate on their findings rather than the word of any inmate, but most important, all information received by an employe should be checked for authenticity, etc.

Mail

Inmates confined in any institution must keep in contact with their family or friends so that if and when released, there will be someone interested in helping him when returned to a free society. It is most important that inmates

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 11

speak, and enter society without supervision.

Georgia has provision for minimum and maximum sentencing. In this manner, those thought to be good parole risks can be released by the Parole Board after serving an eligibility period; others held until ready for release, and whether we like to think so or not, there are a few in prison who should never be released, or at least should be held for many years.

Men being released should be fitted with acceptable street clothing so as not to be identified as ex-convicts, and should be given at least $20 to carry them until a check is earned.

Plant Maintenance

Most important to any institution is a capable plant maintenance man titled the chief engineer or the master mechanic. Working under his supervision should be sufficient maintenance men of various trades, whatever the needs may be, to maintain equipment, buildings, etc., of the institution. Inmates assigned to these men should be capable of learning the trade and each trade should be a vocation and a school build around each trade. Available to inmates and civilians should be a proper library covering all phases of plant maintenance and maintenance work in general. Inmates, if they have the money, or if the institution can pay for it, should be permitted to take courses by correspondence or classroom training under the supervision of qualified maintenance people.

With proper maintenance and good supervision, the State of Georgia can save many, many dollars and at the same time, while inmates are serving their time in the institution, they can be learning a trade which would be an asset to them after their release into a free society.

Those who finish the trade and qualify should be given some sort of a certificate or diploma, if at all possible, issued after an examination by a qualified person at the local high school, or tradesmen who are qualified to sign the certificate, with no identification so far as the prison is concerned.

Radio

In each institution, be it a maximum security prison or a prison camp, a master radio should be installed and each inmate issued a pair of earphones. This master radio should be located so that the programs can be supervised by a civilian while on duty. Several stations can be made available if switch boxes are placed where the earphones are plugged in. The system today is not only impractical but inmates who want to read or sleep must listen to radio programs selected by someone, be they good or bad.

Then, too, there are some programs that should not be permitted — crime, riots, etc. In many prisons, escapes have been made possible because of the noise of radios and TVs. The sound of sawing of bars, etc., is covered by the noise of the radio.

Recreation

Very important in any institution is a worthwhile recreational program; work, education, religious services, of course, should always come first, but at the end of a work period, there should be time allotted in the recreation yard so inmates may be enabled to "blow off steam," so to say. It is urgently recommended that a well - rounded recreational program be established in each institution encompassing such sports as baseball, softball, volley ball, badminton, horse shoes, checkers, chess, dominoes — anything to change the routine of prison life for an hour at the end of a work period.

Reservation

Prisons as a rule are well supplied with manpower. The lawns and gardens should be neat and be a beauty spot so far as landscaping is concerned. Landscaping and horticulture is a fine vocation if taught by a qualified leader. Proper landscaping will be one of the fine scenic aspects that an institution can offer to the citizens and visitors.

Surplus Property

It is my understanding that there is equipment in institutions in other governmental departments of the State of Georgia that is not in use. I refer particularly to an abattoir, or slaughterhouse, and a feed mill at the Milledgeville institution, which is under the jurisdiction of another state department.

There should be a property control setup, whereby all surplus property could be listed by institution and if needed by another institution, be transferred to various State Departments or Divisions.

Sex Perversion

There are sex offenders confined in all institutions. It is most important that they be classified, closely supervised, segregated and assigned to details where they will be under the close supervision of an officer at all times. Sex deviates are a potential source of serious trouble in an inmate population and unless there is the closest supervision, stabbings, possibly killings and certainly unrest can be expected.

Contraband

Show me an institution with loose upervision of tools and equipment and I will show you an institution full of contraband.

A tool crib should be established on each assignment—a place not to deposit some of the tools, but all of them. The tools for each assignment should be identified with a code number or letter, and tools when issued should be charged to the person (inmate or employe) to whom they are issued and he should be held responsible for the safe return of the tool at the end of the work period.

Contraband can mean knives, "escape tools" and other items dangerous and detrimental to the welfare of the institution and its population (inmates and employes.) The checking and counting of tools and close supervision of equipment, emery wheels, lathes, etc., is most important.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Prison Industries.

A warden, if he is to be successful, must have a properly trained custodial force and operate on their findings rather than the word of any inmate, but most important, all information received by an employe should be checked for authenticity, etc.

Mail

Inmates confined in any institution must keep in contact with their family or friends so that if and when released, there will be someone interested in helping him when returned to a free society. It is most important that inmates be permitted to list those people whom they expect to have visit them and correspond with them.

Inmates should be permitted to write at least one letter each week and be permitted to receive all mail that is forwarded to them; however, both incoming and outgoing mail should be carefully censored.

Most important to an institution is that nothing comes in from the outside to inmates. I refer to boxes and packages of food stuff, clothing or any parcel whatsoever. The inmate commissary or PX should carry all permissible items and in most cases the commissary items purchased by inmates in the PX will be cheaper than relatives and friends can purchase them on the outside. Then, too, the profits of the PX should be returned to inmates in the way of athletic equipment, library books, etc.

Money and Valuables

Under no circumstances should inmates be permitted to have money on their person or be in a position where they can get money. All monies and valuables belonging to inmates should be held in the business office. If there is money in the institution at this time, it is suggested that inmates be given 10 days to two weeks to turn in their money to the business office and be given a proper receipt.

After that date, money should be considered contraband and those in possession of it should lose it and it should be placed in a benefit fund where it could be spent for athletic equipment, library books, school supplies, etc.

By no means should money be transferred from one inmate to another. All care should be taken to see that an inmate with money in the institution does not forward it to someone on the outside and have them return it to another inmate in payment of a debt, who is a friend of the inmate having the money.

Newspapers

Inmates who have money and can buy daily newspapers should be permitted to do so providing they come from the publisher. Under no circumstances should second hand papers be mailed in from the outside nor should relatives be permitted to subscribe for papers for them. All subscriptions should originate in the institution. Friends and relatives who want the inmate to have periodicals or newspapers can deposit the money for them in the institution.

Parole

It is my opinion that under ideal custodial and post-release procedures the release of all felons should be by parole and parole only or by conditional release where parole is not indicated. No one should be discharged with "no strings attached," so to

PRODUCTIVE WORK

Prison Industry Facilities For 1,500 Are Needed

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

A survey of the Georgia Prison System reveals the startling information that less than 100 prisoners are provided with full time productive employment in prison industries. More than 1,500 should be working and producing useful items in manufacturing enterprises.

It is very evident, of course, that these extremely large and disproportionate number of work assignments outside the prison are due to the fact that there is nothing for the prisoners to do inside.

It is only necessary to compare the Georgia Prison System with other states of approximately the same size and similar conditions to realize the tremendous potential for improvements in prisoner work programs with the accompanying rehabilitative opportunities.

IT IS ALSO significant to review recent suggestions and recommendations made by some officials in the Georgia Department of Corrections in the past, as well as resolutions and bills passed by the Georgia Legislature. Without exception, these recommendations, resolutions and requests have been directed towards a program of expansion in the area of prison industries.

In spite of these efforts on the part of some officials and legislators during the past period of years, nothing has happened.

The purpose of this report is to make some positive recommendations for a program of prisoner employment in a diversified program of industries, which will result in full time productive employment for 1,500 to 2,000 prisoners. This cannot be accomplished immediately. However, the plan for future developments can be established now and, if programmed properly, will result in the ultimate goal being reached within a period of five years.

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 12

FIRST OF ALL, a planning program requires that certain assumptions be made and certain requirements be spelled out. For the purpose of planning a prison industries program, certain assumptions have already been spelled out in this report in terms of the number, type and size of correctional institutions where one or more industrial shops will be desirable.

The main state prison at Reidsville is now and will continue to be the largest single institution. It will house adult males and will conduct a continuing large agricultural program, but at the same time, plans should be made there for the largest industrial facilities in the prison system of Georgia. The institution should provide facilities for felons, only with sentences of more than one year. No misdemeanants should be housed at Reidsville.

The Georgia Industrial Institute in Alto should continue to be an institution for youthful offenders, but should not be limited to a maximum age if a useful purpose is to be served by transferring a limited numbers of older prisoners to this institution.

AN AGRICULTURAL program, in terms of dairy, truck farming and other similar activities should continue, but must be greatly improved and enlarged. Emphasis should be placed on academic education and vocational training programs with industrial assignments available for a limited number of inmates. Industrial assignments should be of such a character that the academic and vocational training facilities will contribute towards a certain number of production workers.

The women prisoners at Milledgeville should continue to carry on their very productive and useful work assignments at the State Hospital, but a small percentage of women should be available for a small production type garment factory with emphasis on training for future outside employment.

A new institution should be constructed which would serve as a reception and diagnostic center, with an annex that would provide facilities for a group of maximum security prisoners. It is estimated that between 400 and 500 maximum security prisoners will be maintained at this institution as more or less permanent assignments.

On the basis of the above assumptions, recommendations are made for each of the above institutions with indications where special requirements should be provided and in the case of the main prison at Reidsville, the industrial plans suggested are listed in the order of recommended priority.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Prison Industries at Reidsville.

Reidsville Needs Several Industries

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 13

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

A diversified group of prison industries is being suggested for Reidsville, where the majority of the state prisoners will be assigned.

It has been demonstrated in other states that diversification is a very important element to be considered when planning and activating the prison industrial program. There also should be diversification of products within each industry as much as possible.

A number of small to medium industrial activities will provide a much broader basis for training programs and permit more effective placement in terms of classification than a few large industrial enterprises. In addition, by diversifying industrial plants, the impact on any one outside industry in terms of competition is very much reduced and usually would be most insignificant.

The total prison population of 2,000 at Reidsville, all or certainly most of them to be confined within the main enclosure, will provide adequate labor for all the recommended industrial plants. However, it is strongly recommended that a dormitory, with all facilities, be constructed for inmates assigned to the farm outside the enclosure.

If there is not sufficient area within the present fenced enclosure of the institution to permit the construction of sufficient floor area to house the industries suggested, additional area requirements should be provided by constructing a single fenced enclosure outside of the present institution which will be designated as the industrial area and will be provided with necessary security facilities, such as guard towers, to permit assignments of any of the prison population to the work areas.

The guard towers for the industrial area, of course, should be manned during the daytime or working periods only, since all prisoners would return to the main enclosure at the end of each work day.

Metalworking Industry

The metalworking industry has been given top priority for several reasons:

1. Modern equipment should replace present obsolete license plate industry machinery.
2. It is logical, practical and profitable to expand from license plates into other metal products.
3. This industry provides the greatest source of diversified inmate training.
4. Profits or savings from the sales of metal products are higher than any other industry.
5. Adequate and suitable space is presently available.

The present license plate factory recently acquired two new presses, but the remainder of the machinery still being used is antiquated and worn out. It lacks adequate capacity and is so badly worn that it is impossible to maintain satisfactory standards of quality. This plant should be modernized and equipped with the latest and most efficient equipment now available for the license plate industry.

Many states have demonstrated the feasibility of expanding from license plates into highway

The metalworking industry is the only production shop suggested for the present factory building inside the main prison. The same building probably will have adequate space to provide room for a group of maintenance shops as well as the production requirements for the metalworking plant.

Canning Industry

The present canning plant is inadequate and much of the equipment is in need of replacement. Because of the high productive land available at Reidsville, it is reasonable to suggest that the canning operation should be modernized and expanded so that productive capacity not only will be sufficient for the correctional institutions but also will have a surplus for use at other state institutions.

The canning operation should be moved outside the present enclosure and installed in a new building located in the industrial area. This building should be designed for the specific purpose of housing canning machinery and structural designs should be incorportated which will permit the most efficient operating methods.

Meat Packing and Processing

Reidsville has one of the finest and most productive prison farms in America and, in my opinion, can grow to maturity enough cattle and hogs to take care of all State Hospital and prison meat needs. There is no reason an abattoir of sufficient size could not be made a part of their industrial program.

Fresh and smoked meats and sausages, etc., could be processed and delivered in refrigerator trucks to all institutions. It may be necessary at times to purchase livestock on the hoof if the farm could not supply the needs.

Garment Factory

There is a small nucleus of a production garment factory at Reidsville now, but it should be expanded and moved to the proposed annex to the Diagnostic Center. The production in this shop should be primarily the manufacture of all cotton work garments required for the state institutions, as well as similar products required by other state institutions or institutions of any political subdivision desiring them.

The plant should be equipped with modern machinery, and production methods as well as plant layouts should conform to accepted outside manufacturing standards. At a later date, wool garments should be manufactured.

Book Repair Industry

The best example of a successful book repair industry in a prison is the plant at the State Penitentiary in South Carolina. The savings to the textbook agency exceeds $150,000 annually. This industry has a rather unique characteristic in that it provides employment to a substantial number of physically handicapped or elderly prisoners who could not otherwise be given productive employment.

Aside from the very impressive savings to the using agencies, this industry will show a profit to the Prison Industrial Department and give training and skills as well as good work habits to a substantial number of inmates.

A new building will be required for this operation, and the planning for this structure should incorporate sufficient floor area to permit the printing industry to be operated in the same building with the book repair operations.

The bookbinding plant should be located in the annex of the former women's prison.

Soap Plant and Paint Factory

These two industrial plants can supply all state needs. They quite often are operated together and it is advantageous to house them under the same roof. This is not because of similarity in production equipment or methods, but because of some of the quality control requirements maintained in the chemical laboratory.

Aside from the training value for prisoners and the savings in cost to the using agencies, these two industries have demonstrated that by maintaining close and accurate control over raw materials and formulations, the consistency and quality of the finished product can be maintained at a very high level.

Laundry

With the population at Reidsville, it is strongly suggested that a building be constructed and laundry equipment be purchased to do laundry work for state hospitals within a hundred miles. Trucks and trailers in which to deliver the clean laundry and pick up the soiled laundry will be a requirement. Laundry work done by prisons today is a practical operation and is being followed by many states in the above fashion.

Knitting Industry

This plant would be equipped with machinery to produce all types of knitted underwear, sweaters and men's, women's and children's hosiery. The assembly operation for knitted underwear requires a variety of sewing machines, and maintenance mechanics can be taught to inmates.

Tobacco Industry

This plant would be designed for the production of tobacco and tobacco products currently being issued as free items to patients of state hospitals as well as inmates of the correctional institutions. Smoking tobacco undoubtedly would be the biggest item, although other products such as chewing tobaccos also would be manufactured.

Florida recently has modernized and expanded the tobacco industry at the state prison. It has been a very successful operation for many years. Georgia's farm land can supply the tobacco for this industry.

Wood Furniture

Although the state undoubtedly is purchasing a substantial volume of wood items (cabinets, trays, tables, chairs, etc.) for offices and other purposes, this activity has been given comparatively low priority because of the rather high cost of machinery, equipment and buildings, together with the fact that to be successful, there must be available supervisors and technical personnel with experience and training in these specific areas of institution furniture requirements.

Quite often this type of instructional personnel demands higher compensation than prison industries are permitted to pay, with the result that quality and quantity of production suffers. The possibility should not be ignored.

Summary

If all of the above recommended industrial programs are activated at Reidsville, they should provide full time employment for 1,200 to 1,500 prisoners. It is inconceivable that all of these activities can be installed in a short period of time. A planning program which contemplates an initial expenditure of $500,000 to $750,000 for buildings and equipment for the first year and $150,000 to $300,000 over a period of succeeding years until completion should provide a reasonable and practical schedule of expansion.

Eventually the value of production from these shops should total $2,000,000 to $2,500,000 annually, and the earnings or profits from operations should be sufficient to substantially offset their initial cost and return continual dividends to the state—both tangible and in the eventual rehabilitation of the men and women whose lives are reshaped by this constructive effort.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Industry and Training at Alto, Milledgeville and Elsewhere.

5. Adequate and suitable space is presently available.

The present license plate factory recently acquired two new presses, but the remainder of the machinery still being used is antiquated and worn out. It lacks adequate capacity and is so badly worn that it is impossible to maintain satisfactory standards of quality. This plant should be modernized and equipped with the latest and most efficient equipment now available for the license plate industry.

Many states have demonstrated the feasibility of expanding from license plates into highway signs and other sheet metal products. There is a similarity in various areas of production and it is very logical, practical and profitable to integrate, coordinate and organize equipment and production methods for a variety of metal products and metal furniture.

The production of highway signs and road markers for the State Highway Department will provide employment for a very substantial number of prisoners and the counties and cities of the state will significantly increase the market for these items. The expansion recommended would include facilities for the manufacture of steel lockers, shelving, cabinets, cupboards and other similar products used by state institutions and agencies.

No other prison industry offers the diversified and valuable training opportunities that are to be found in the metal-working plant. More than 20 different work assignments are available and skills can be acquired in the areas of press and shear operators, tool and die set-up men, welders, both gas and electric, as well as spray painting and finishing assignments. This is the type of work that appeals most to men and because it is a man's occupation and many skills can be acquired, the motivation of workers is much greater than with some less attractive industrial work programs.

There is a very substantial and attractive margin of profit or savings from the operation of this industry because the difference between raw materials and normal selling price of all products is considerable, and therefore the earnings for this industry will usually exceed any other production shops.

There is ample space now available in the license plate factory to permit modernization and some expansion. More space will be available as soon as the industrial area outside the prison enclosure becomes a reality and new industry buildings are erected in that compound.

Book Repair Industry

The best example of a successful book repair industry in a prison is the plant at the State Penitentiary in South Carolina. The savings to the textbook agency exceeds $150,000 annually. This industry has a rather unique characteristic in that it provides employment to a substantial number of physically handicapped or elderly prisoners who could not otherwise be given productive employment.

Aside from the very impressive savings to the using agencies, this industry will show a profit to the Prison Industrial Department

Atl. Jour. 6/10/63
L. C.

New Building Needed

FURNITURE PLANT AT ALTO SUGGESTED FOR TRAINING

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

This institution, with a population of youthful offenders, most of them requiring academic or vocational training opportunities, has certain inherent problems which appear when a production industry is introduced.

There are, of course, a limited number of young men in an institution of this kind, who will benefit more from exposure to a production routine than from strictly academic or vocational training programs. There would be another group that would benefit through a combination of academic, vocational and industrial training.

TUBULAR FURNITURE: The equipment and variety of job assignments present in a tubular production line makes this industry particularly well adapted to the programs mentioned earlier. Many of the skills and occupational know-how can be obtained within relatively short periods of time. Furthermore, the actual work assignments are of such a character that they create an interest in the younger men so that their interest and attention can be maintained.

Some efforts have been made in the direction of tubular school furniture production at this institution, but its productive capacity is very definitely limited and restricted because component parts are purchased rather than manufactured. Equipment for the actual production of all components permits a much more flexible operation, a more diversified line of products and economies in manufacturing costs. Adequate and suitable space is not available for a complete manufacturing plant so that a new building would have to be planned and constructed.

FURNITURE REPAIR AND UPHOLSTERING: This particular type of work has been selected because of its important training value and the possible application of skills on jobs after release. Every state, county and city have large quantities of both wood and metal furniture that can be salvaged and restored to usefulness and, if properly equipped with tools and materials, the work can be performed by young prisoners with resulting good quality finished items and valuable training for future application.

The upholstering of settees and chairs produced in the tubular steel furniture factory is only one of many applications. The resto-

The Ragen Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 14

expect preferential consideration and by all means, clothing for female prisoners and some hospital patients should be manufactured.

Reception and Diagnostic Center And Annex

This is a new institution recommended in another section of the report. In addition to having facilities for receiving and classifying new prisoners, it is proposed that the annex institution be provided with cell facilities for four to five hundred men and a small maximum security facility designed to provide living and working quarters for four to five hundred prisoners requiring custody controls not available at other institutions.

In this annex institution, it is recommended that a modern tailor shop be constructed in which to assign at least 200 men to manufacture everything in the clothing line from a handkerchief to a finished suit and overcoat. This shop would not only provide employment but real trade training for men during confinement.

Expansion of Prison Industries

There is a critical need for expanding prison industries in the Georgia correctional institutions. Present operations are not only completely inadequate from the standpoint of providing needed employment, but do not provide a diversified base of training for prison population.

It is not the purpose of this report to provide specialized advice on the expansion and improve-

Incentive Pay, Time Allowances

It has been well established by experience in other progressive correctional systems that the successful operation of prison industries makes it necessary that adequate incentives for productive work and accomplishment be provided. The present pay plan for prisoners who are employed in the Georgia institutions is not adequate for this purpose.

Consideration should be given to the establishment of the pay scale arrangement whereby men employed in productive industries would be paid on a basis in keeping with their productive efforts. Consideration should also be given to providing special good time allowances for those employed in industry. This has been found to be most helpful in generating good work habits and maximum production.

Industries Law

It is noted that the present statutes under which Georgia prison industries are operated contain the necessary provisions to enable the development of a sound and comprehensive state use type prison industries system. The statutes provide the necessary authority to require state departments to purchase items which can properly be made in the institutions. It would appear that failure to utilize this authority properly be made in the institutions. It would appear that failure to utilize this authority properly is the result of lack of funds and lack of aggressive administration and that this failure has not only resulted in a loss of revenue to the state in terms of savings and state purchases, but has contributed to the idleness and lack of rehabilitation in the institution. Experience has shown that with the proper management of prison industries on a business-like basis and the establishment of industries which have been carefully determined to fit into the state use requirements, as discussed above, prison industries can, over a period of years, become self-supporting and actually return funds to the State Treasury.

Several systems now having established state use type industries with revolving funds, return periodically substantial sums of money to the government. However, it is to be remembered that a good product must be manufactured. Unless the product is good, other tax-supported bodies will and should refuse to accept them. It costs no more to produce a good product than an inferior one, but to produce a good product there must be competent civilian leadership and discipline.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: The need for training in prison.

lar type of work has been selected because of its important training value and the possible application of skills on jobs after release. Every state, county and city have large quantities of both wood and metal furniture that can be salvaged and restored to usefulness and, if properly equipped with tools and materials, the work can be performed by young prisoners with resulting good quality finished items and valuable training for future application.

The upholstering of settees and chairs produced in the tubular steel furniture factory is only one of many applications. The restoration of institution and office furniture requiring re-upholstering is in itself a trade on the outside.

Women's Prison at Milledgeville

The women at this institution are performing a very valuable service to the hospital and at the same time many of them are receiving instructions and training which will provide them with occupational opportunities after discharge.

There is need for an academic educational program for more of the women and undoubtedly a small industrial operation such as a production type garment factory would be very valuable. It need not be large to have high productive capacity.

Equipment should be as diversified as possible so as to offer training in as many areas of the sewing trade as is practical. All equipment and production methods should be patterned on outside factory procedures so that women assigned to this project will obtain the training and skill which can be applied to work opportunities in outside industry.

It is of more than a passing interest to note that each year sees more garment factories established in the Southern and Southeastern states and the opportunities for obtaining employment are on the increase. Therefore, those with experience should naturally ing for men during confinement.

Expansion of Prison Industries

There is a critical need for expanding prison industries in the Georgia correctional institutions. Present operations are not only completely inadequate from the standpoint of providing needed employment, but do not provide a diversified base of training for prison population.

It is not the purpose of this report to provide specialized advice on the expansion and improvement of the Prison Industries Program. Georgia should obtain the advice of well qualified prison industries specialists in this area before proceeding with any capital expenditure, either to improve existing industries or provide additional factories. Failure to do this can result in extensive outlays of funds for industries which are either not suited to the needs or are improperly laid out and developed. There is only one company in this field — the John R. Wald Co. of Huntingdon, Pa. — and I would suggest that it be consulted.

I would also suggest, because of the need for such products, that serious consideration be given to inauguration of the following industries:

MATTRESS FACTORY: This is one of the most profitable industrial plants in a prison, one that will give employment to people who are not qualified for tedious work. Mattresses can be made, not only for the prisons, but for all state institutions.

SHOE FACTORY: A shoe factory to supply shoes of all kinds for all wards of the state is a good industry for any institution.

COTTON YARN: Because of the cotton raised in the state of Georgia, serious consideration should be given to the construction of a cotton mill to process cotton and for the spinning of cotton yarn.

6/11/63

REHABILITATION IGNORED

Untrained Guards Create Disrespect Among Inmates

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

In the Georgia Penal System today, little thought has been given to the selection or training of employes. The only qualifications a guard is expected to have is the "right connections" politically, and to be able to "hold his own." If he fulfills these qualifications, he is given a uniform and an assignment.

Too often, he lacks the requirements necessary for the just performance of his assignment. As a result, he creates within the inmates disrespect and fear and fails to gain their respect or trust.

No thought is given to rehabilitation or preparation of inmates for their return to society even though a great percentage of the prisoners will eventually be released.

It is a recognized fact that the prison guard is the person that is most in contact with the prisoners, and therefore, he is expected to develop within them a desire to prepare themselves for their return to free society. In addition, he must be firm, but fair, and have the know-how and ability to cope with nonconformists, sharp operators, etc.

After selecting employes who appear to be potentially fitted for work in the field of correction, it is then necessary for prison administrators to provide these employes with the proper and adequate training which will enable them to attain their highest degree of usefulness.

THE COMBINATION of ability, training and experience which go into the making of an effective correctional employe is not something which can be purchased, it must be created.

Today, many of the penal institutions of our country are being staffed with highly trained personnel. All custodial officers are chosen from a Civil Service or Personnel Department list of persons who have qualified by examination. Each is thoroughly investigated before employment by the Department of Correction.

There is no really solid Civil Service or Personnel Code now in effect in the Georgia Prison System except at the Milledgeville Hospital Branch.

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 15

In my opinion, all employes with the exception of the warden of an institution, should be under the personnel or Civil Service Code. They should be selected by the warden after successful completion of an examination, interview and an investigation made by an independent investigative agency. This investigation should inquire into the man's background and standing in the community, relative to the type of person he may be, and if the person does not measure up to the standard set, he should not be employed.

Training Program

Applicants accepted for the position of guard in a modern penitentiary first undergo several weeks of training designed to acquaint them with the many problems that arise in handling men and women who have violated the laws. The result of this training is evidenced by the greater efficiency in the operation of the prisons, in the protection of the officers, the civilians and the taxpayers.

The purpose of a training school for guards is to develop and train prospective members of the custodial staff of the penal institutions so they will develop the qualifications necessary for the handling of inmates.

The basic requirements for leadership are stressed, and the student guard is trained to meet any emergency. The course is designed to develop a complete knowledge of the duties each officer may be executing so the student, upon completion of the course, may be able to immediately function as an active member of the custodial staff. . . .

The transition for personnel from civil employment to correctional work is, to say the least, difficult. The job he is to do must look very complex to the ordinary new correctional officer. In his orientation classes, he must be told and must thoroughly understand that he is not only to guard individual with an individual personality and treat each impartially. If rehabilitation of inmates is to be successful, it would seem he must possess almost every virtue of mankind.

It is most important that there be sufficient employes to cover every post; no institution can be operated successfully unless there is sufficient personnel.

In-Service Training

Programs for recruitment, basic orientation and continuous training of employes in correctional institutions have long since passed the stage where they were regarded as innovations and have become generally accepted as necessary adjuncts to the successful management of reformatories and prisons.

The need for such programs, linked closely as they are to the institution philosophy of correctional treatment, is, however, more acute in some areas than in others. As research into the knowledge of criminal behavior compel an unceasing revision of attitudes and beliefs, so, too, must the methods of custody and treatment undergo continuous change.

ONE OF the important precepts of correctional work is that human behavior, as found in its worsened and more extreme forms behind the walls and bars of penal institutions, is not something to be dealt with according only to prejudice and superstition. The analysis of and evaluation of human behavior are a many-faceted science, encompassing sociology, psychology, medicine and law, as well as other branches of human behavior.

Often too lightly regarded as a rehabilitative measure is the creation of a wholesome environment in prison. Reasonably pleasant and comfortable surroundings are essential in creating a receptive attitude on the part of the inmates toward the balance of the treatment program; however, custody is a penal administrator's first obligation.

WE REALIZE that custody alone is not enough and that treatment, training, occupation and physical care of inmates provide the foundations for a complete program. Discipline and training are the most important phases of institutional life. Until these objectives are achieved, little else can be accomplished.

This description of routine duties of a correctional officer may sound exaggerated, but it is typical of the performance expected in a well-operated institution. In larger maximum security prisons especially, no one maintains as close contact with the inmates as the officer on the inmates' assignments.

He is the one person who has those who qualify. Those who fail to qualify should be reduced in salary or be removed from the service.

A living wage must be paid to custodial employes in the prisons and certainly this wage must be increased over the salary paid to employes in the Georgia prisons today. Unless a living wage is available, no institution can be expected to move forward, but by all means salary should be paid according to the job or post held—not on an individual basis; in other words, a captain should be paid a captain's salary; a lieutenant, a lieutenant's salary; a sergeant, a sergeant's salary; and a guard, a guard's salary, regardless of who the individual might be.

Retirement

I understand that Georgia does have an acceptable retirement program; this is most important for prison personnel. Georgia, by all means, should encourage participation therein so that after a man has served his state for the years required to be eligible for a pension, he will have something to look forward to in his old age.

Rules and Regulations

Available to every employe in every institution should be rules and regulations covering every assignment. . . .

It is impossible to include every rule and regulation in any rule book; therefore, as it becomes necessary, new rules and orders emanating from the warden only and over his signature, must be issued in bulletin form and read at the roll call of employes

A copy should be placed on bulletin boards throughout the institution and one in a loose-leaf binder located in the guardhall of the institution easily accessible to employes who may have been absent on vacation or sick leave. At the end of the year, these bulletins should be bound and placed in the officers' library for the information and benefit of new employes entering the service.

Discipline-Employes

Very important is the handling of employe discipline. If there is no discipline for employes, there can be no effective disciplinary program for inmates.

Employes who violate rules and those who do not measure up to satndard should be warned first by pink sheet. If no improvement is forthcoming, a suspension without pay, and as a last resort for those who do not comply or improve, discharge.

It is to be remembered, however, that there must be sufficient qualified personnel to cover all posts to give proper supervision. This, Georgia does not have; therefore, its program is very lacking in accepted prison management standards.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Education Program for Adults and Youths in Prison.

signed to develop a complete knowledge of the duties each officer may be executing so the student, upon completion of the course, may be able to immediately function as an active member of the custodial staff. . . .

The transition for personnel from civil employment to correctional work is, to say the least, difficult. The job he is to do must look very complex to the ordinary new correctional officer. In his orientation classes, he must be told and must thoroughly understand that he is not only to guard against the escape of prisoners and to maintain order, but he must also supervise the quantity and quality of the inmates' work.

He is expected to act as counselor to inmates in personal matters, consider each inmate as an piece program. Discipline and training are the most important phases of institutional life. Until these objectives are achieved, little else can be accomplished.

This description of routine duties of a correctional officer may sound exaggerated, but it is typical of the performance expected in a well-operated institution. In larger maximum security prisons especially, no one maintains as close contact with the inmates as the officer on the inmates' assignments.

He is the one person who has an opportunity to become thoroughly acquainted with the inmate, to learn the inmate's faults, his virtues, his capabilities, his limitations, his moods, etc.

Every successful prison administrator realizes that the result of his program depends upon the effectiveness of the personnel. It is the correctional officer who is in the key position to exert the most effective influence upon the inmate. Therefore, it is most important that the correctional officer be equipped by temperament and training to make the best possible use of his position.

Library-Employes

It is very important to maintain an employes' library in every institution, stocked with books and magazines pertinent to operation, routine and treatment. It is understandable that prison personnel will not always see eye to eye with some of the views expressed, but some benefit is derived from learning the mode of operation of others.

Promotion Through

Custodial officers must have complete confidence and understand that when vacancies occur in positions of higher rank, each member of the custodial staff will be given equal consideration for promotion, and that one will be chosen. Politics, religion, nationality, etc., have no part in any promotion—only efficiency and ability. It must be understood that if employes are not capable of handling the position into which they are promoted, they will be demoted to their former rank.

Salaries

To obtain qualified personnel, it is most important that at least prevailing salaries in the community in which the institution is located, and in some communities more, be taken into consideration. There should be a 40-hour week, with at least a two-week vacation after a year of service, and advancement in salary under the merit system by steps for

Atl. Jour. 6/12/63

ADULT EDUCATION

Discipline of Schooling A Challenge to Prisoners

By JOSEPH E. RAGEN

The Ragen ★ Report

This is the text of a portion of the report on Georgia's prison system made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government. The texts of other parts of the report will appear in The Atlanta Journal.

NO. 16

Academic training is one of the most outstanding treatment programs available for prison inmates.

Men of all ages who have lacked proper discipline in their formative years find that academic education presented in a sound and interesting, as well as demanding, program can be a challenge that they want to meet. An educational program that is not demanding of the time and effort of this class of students is a failure from the start.

The program must be structured so as to insure that constant supervision of students results in active participation of all students. A great number of students who attend class passively and put out no effort to improve themselves will eventually deteriorate the classroom discipline. Supervisors must constantly review records of the students and interview them to further motivate all students. Intelligent students must be pushed so as to accomplish more than average performance. Slower students must also be counseled so as to give credit for progress as well as to point out shortcomings.

Usually a standard adult education course will serve adequately for a youthful group; however, this young group is not as aware of the importance of education on a personal project basis. Older groups have been made aware of higher education requirements through personal experience and failure. Students must have the end results of a good education pointed out to them. They must be made aware of their future and their own ability to change their civic, social, and economic standards.

Among any group of adult education courses, the prospective students or assigned students should not be humiliated because of their lower educational standing. Sarcasm from custodial personnel, as well as inmates, can ruin the entire educational program. A well-rounded public relations program, inside as well as outside the institution, will offset this problem and as an end result will give added prestige to the educational department.

THE FIRST FACTOR to be considered in setting up a penal educational program for youthful or older offenders is discipline. Discipline is most important in any penal educational program; for a youthful group it is mandatory; but it must be fair.

At least 90 per cent of the youthful offenders are school drop-outs. The primary reason that they originally had to leave school was the fact that schools in free society were unable to exert a proper amount of discipline over the student. Where supervision is normally lacking in the home and where the student finds lax discipline in the free society schools, he will rebel against the authority — to a degree, therefore, the pattern of rebellion against lax authority will follow in a penal educational program unless the staff of the educational program has full command. Discipline must be administered firmly as well as in a fair manner.

Penal students may be allowed the privilege of smoking in school; however, smoking should be limited to five-minute breaks between classes. In the event the students are careless and disregard rules of cleanliness with regard to their smoking habits, this privilege can be revoked for a definite period of time.

This type of discipline should be handled through and by the authority of the senior disciplinary officer of the institution, as should other behavior problems within the school; however, civilian teachers must report violators to disciplinary officers.

FREQUENTLY, penal schools are limited in scope due to the small number of civilian certified teachers that are available through budgets and appropriations. A penal school can expand with a limited number of these teachers if it implements a program using inmate instructors under competent civilian supervisors. Teachers should be allotted by the state for this purpose as they are allotted to the public schools. These supervisors can organize inmate teachers into well - rounded, stable instructors in particular fields of specialty. The use of college trained inmates as instructors is most desirable; however, an inmate with a high school education who displays a propensity for any of the elementary, primary, or even secondary subjects, can do an excellent job of teaching if he is properly guided.

Most curriculums should be explicit as to the sequence of subject matter to be taught. If possible, lesson plans for every class should be prepared and kept on file. The starting point would be a strong course curriculum. As the inmate instructors develop themselves, they can develop the lesson plans and put them on file. The curriculum in this type of teaching experience must be rigid as opposed to flexible. This type of stability will offset most of the instability of normally unqualified teachers.

IT HAS BEEN observed in Illinois — particularly at the Stateville Prison, Joliet, Ill. — that in some cases, inmates respond to inmate instructors to a higher degree than to civilian instructors. Inmates are more apt to become successfully involved in the learning process due to the fact that they are being taught by one of their own rather than by a civilian teacher, who in a sense would represent the administration and police authority.

Further, the civilian supervisory teaching staff must not be relieved of the responsibility of maintaining the discipline and security program. Programs of rehabilitation, discipline and security must be the concern of all levels of correctional workers, and this applies to teachers as well as custodial officers.

PRIMARY CONCERN in administering a penal educational program with inmate instructors is that of certification. In Illinois, certification of the program is achieved through the issuing of certified diplomas or certificates of equivalency, issued both by the county and by the state. These diplomas or certificates do not indicate that they were earned in prison.

This certification can be obtained through local schools or at the state level. The Illinois system presently has the county superintendent of schools issue diplomas for elementary level; high school equivalency certificates through the State G.E.D. testing program. Under both programs, students are tested according to the requirements of the local school system or the state agency. But it is to be remembered that all examinations must be given by civilian teachers and graded by them. The Illinois prison diplomas are recognized by the North Central Association of Secondary Schools and Colleges. In short, prison high school graduates can enter any major university or college.

NEXT IN THE ATLANTA JOURNAL: Physical Plant for Education; a Vocational School.

L.E.

ADULT EDUCATION

Separation of Facilities Proposed for Each Phase

By JOSEPH R. RAGEN

In regard to the physical plant for an adult education program, it is desirable that each phase of the educational program be kept separate from the others; therefore, depending on enrollment figures, it would be advisable to have the elementary and secondary programs in separate areas—even separate buildings.

The design of new school buildings should allow for a maximum amount of observation of the entire school situation by the custodial officers. Classrooms should be partitioned off in order to avoid acoustical problems. These partitions should be part masonry and mostly glass. A 40-inch masonry wall with a glass partition from the masonry to the ceiling will allow for good lighting and a maximum amount of observation.

Any further educational programs, such as educational television, should be quartered separately also. Education by television is rapidly becoming a stimulus to many penal educational programs.

The Stateville Penitentiary and the Women's Reformatory at Dwight offer two years of college and award an associate in arts degree from the Chicago Junior Colleges as certification. This is accomplished through the educational television channel in Chicago. An entire two-year curriculum is offered through this medium. Testing that normally requires students to appear at testing centers throughout the city its accomplished by bringing the tests into the prison.

IT IS DESIRED that students participating in the above outlined educational programs do so on a full-time basis. For those students unable to participate in a full-time program, it is suggested that an institutional correspondence school be established in conjunction with the regular educational program.

This can be accomplished by using the same textbooks as are used in normal classes, then setting up a brochure of instruction for the correspondence students. This operation would be controlled and co-ordinated by the school system.

Outside college correspondence courses should be encouraged for those inmates qualified for such. Nearby colleges and universities should be invited to offer college level courses in the prison.

The Ragen ★ Report

Today's installment concludes the report on Georgia's prison system. The report, made by an expert penologist from Illinois and released by Gov. Sanders and the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government, has been printed by The Atlanta Journal as a public service.

NO. 17

A GOOD LIBRARY is essential to a good educational program. The library must not only be available to students, but to the general inmate population as well. The library must be structured so as to allow the maximum amount of circulation of the books in it.

A civilian librarian would be desired to run the library program; however, inmates can function in this capacity quite effectively. Proper supervisory practices must exist so as not to allow the inmates to traffick with the library books.

The school library must have the type of books available that are in normal schools for reference work. Encyclopedias should be made available to students on a library loan basis. Further, old textbooks should not be discarded. They can be implemented into the library program.

It is surprising how many inmates, not actively engaged in full-time educational programs within an institution, are interested in obtaining a full set of elementary grade textbooks for private study, or just interested in obtaining an English textbook. These books, although out of date for normal classroom use, are important tools in motivating intellectually stagnant inmates to obtain a higher level of education.

Textbooks used in classroom study should be up to date and present the modern approach to the teaching of a specific subject matter. In particular, books used in the elementary program—specifically at the primary levels—should be of the adult education variety. Reader's Digest publishes adult education readers for grades one through five. These types of books are very effective. Further, certain publishers will take standard type novels or classics and rewrite them to elementary level, thus creating a more palatable type of reading matter for adult education reading programs.

Although it has been suggested that the above type of educational program be as rigid as possible in regard to curriculum, it must also be considered that a stagnant educational program can be as inefficient as an overly ambitious one. New ideas must be worked in, but must be done in a manner so as not to interrupt the current cycle.

It is most important that the academic program be set up in cooperation with the public educational facilities within the district where the institution is situated so that recognition can be given to inmates completing the requirements. It would be equally beneficial if the same policy could be followed with the vocational training program of the institution so that certification of vocational skills could be obtained through either county or state accreditation.

Vocational School

The Vocational School should be under the supervision of a qualified civilian superintendent with civilian asistants, as well as qualified inmates, to teach worthwhile trades to inmates.

Following are some of the vocations recomended:

Printing	Body and Fender
Refrigeration	Auto Mechanics
Welding	Sign Painting
Bricklaying	Typewriter Repair
Carpentry	Radio and TV
Drafting	Small Appliance Repair
Machine Shop	Lawn Mower Repair
Plumbing	Washing Machine Repair

There are many vocations that can be taught.

To operate a successful vocational school, an aptitude test should be administered to interested inmates before they are assigned to the school, thus eliminating those who are not capable of absorbing or learning.

When an inmate has fulfilled the requirements, a certificate should be issued to him, bearing no identification so far as the prison is concerned.

In addition to vocations taught in the vocational school proper, many other trades can be taught in the prison industrial shops, maintenance shop, culinary department, laundry, etc., where men may learn the habit of factory routine as well as the trade.

Law Enforcement

Official Shuns Part Of Ragen Report

By The Associated Press

State prisons director Fred Hallford says he disagrees with some sections of the Ragen report on Georgia's prisons system.

Hallford said Tuesday his department has no plans to implement some of the recommendations of the Governor's Commission for Efficiency and Improvement in Government.

The director, who assumed his duties in July, outlines his opinions on the operation and improvement of the Georgia penal system in response to inquiries.

Hallford said the report "probably accelerated improvements" in the Georgia system, because it "accelerated public interest" in the system. But he said several of the needs cited were in the works before the study was made.

The report to which Hallford referred was made by Illinois penologist Joseph E. Ragen, who was hired by the state to make a thorough investigation of the Georgia prison system and recommend improvements. The report stirred considerable controversy when released in May.

ONE SECTION of the Ragen report which Hallford said "I don't agree with at all at the present time" concerned the setting up of a blanket policy of separating felons from misdemeanor prisoners throughout the prison system.

"Some of the misdemeanants who have past records are a worse influence in prison than some of the felons," he said.

Hallford said there is no plan to restrict county public works camps to prisoners serving misdemeanor sentences as was recommended.

"There is an indicated need for closer supervision," he said, but added that he sees "no advantage" in excluding felons from the camps.

The New York Times Magazine
FEBRUARY 12, 1967

PERSONALITIES

'. . . It Swings. We're Part of an Adventure'

The People Around Bobby

By RICHARD REEVES

ON a cold, clear October morning in 1959, 16 people met in the living room of Robert F. Kennedy's home in Hyannis Port, Mass., to plan the Presidential campaign of John F. Kennedy. They talked until dark and when the day was over each man knew what he had to do to put John Kennedy in the White House.

In addition to the candidate and his brother, there were three other members of the Kennedy family in the room: their father Joseph P. Kennedy, brother Edward M. Kennedy and brother-in-law Stephen Smith. Also listening as John Kennedy spoke from in front of the large fireplace that dominates the room were Theodore C. Sorensen, the candidate's speechwriter; Kenneth O'Donnell and Lawrence F. O'Brien, a pair of Massachusetts political friends; Pierre Salinger, a former California newspaper editor; John Bailey, the Democratic chairman of Connecticut, and pollster Louis Harris.

In writing about this meeting, Theodore H. White, in his book "The Making of the President 1960," said:

"John F. Kennedy in his 14 years in politics has had many servants, many aides, many helpers. As he has outgrown each level of operation, he has gently stripped off his earlier helpers and retained only those who could go on effectively with him to the next level. These men here assembled were those who had survived a decade of Kennedy selection."

There are few people interested in American politics who do not believe that some day there will be a similar meeting, probably in the same room, to plan another Kennedy Presidential campaign. This time Robert F. Kennedy will stand where his brother stood.

Who will be with him? Certainly some of the same people who came for his brother will come again. But they would be joined by others—the servants, aides and helpers who have been selected during more than a decade by Bobby Kennedy.

In his years as Senate investigator, campaign manager, Attorney General and Senator from New York, Kennedy has developed his own circle of friends and advisers. That does not mean that there is a well-defined Inner Circle or Shadow Cabinet or Kennedy Brain Trust.

"You know what he's like," said Kennedy's administrative assistant, Joseph F. Dolan, flipping his hand toward the desk in the Senator's blue-carpeted Washington office. "Robert Kennedy knows somebody who knows a lot about any subject. He talks to a lot of people. Who he talks to depends on what he's doing at the time. He doesn't talk to John Galbraith about organized crime."

Life magazine attempted to compile lists of those people last fall. "That's silly," Bobby snapped when a Life reporter showed him hundreds of names listed under such headings as "Inner Circle" and "Political Advisers."

Life editors abandoned the project when they decided it was impossible to answer such questions as whether Joe Dolan is more important to Kennedy than, say, Arthur Schlesinger Jr. Is Dolan in the

(Continued on Page 82)

RICHARD REEVES is a reporter on the staff of The New York Times who specializes in politics.

"There is a special bond between R.F.K. and those who fought the Teamsters with him, who were in the big game against Hoffa U." Here, as Attorney General, in 1963, with Burke Marshall (left) and Ed Guthman.

People Around Bobby (Cont.)

(From Page 25)

Inner Circle because he talks to the Senator all day, hired the Kennedy staff and carries the Kennedy cigars? Or is Schlesinger more important because Kennedy constantly calls him for advice and lets him use the Kennedy apartment in New York?

Ironically, what Life couldn't do in several months, Look magazine editors did in several angry days this year during the wrangle over the serialization of William Manchester's book on the assassination of John F. Kennedy. Look editors very privately called their little list "the Kennedy goon squad." It included the names of the Kennedy family's representatives during the fight over "The Death of a President"—Edwin O. Guthman, John Seigenthaler, Burke Marshall, Richard N. Goodwin, Schlesinger and Sorensen.

These were some of the people Manchester was apparently referring to when he said, "The Senator is surrounded by people who have hitched their wagon to his star . . . people who are betting their futures on another Kennedy administration, who are willing to do anything."

THAT group of six men is evenly divided between men who served John Kennedy—Goodwin, Sorensen and Schlesinger—and men whose primary loyalty has always been to Robert Kennedy. Guthman, Seigenthaler and Marshall all were brought to the Justice Department by Attorney General Kennedy and fought alongside him during the battles to convict James R. Hoffa and to integrate the Universities of Mississippi and Alabama.

Robert Kennedy was the 31-year-old chief counsel of the Senate's rackets committee in 1957 when he met Ed Guthman in Seattle and John Seigenthaler in Nashville. He sought out both of them for the same reason — Guthman was a Seattle Times reporter investigating corruption in the International Brotherhood of Teamsters, and Seigenthaler was a Nashville Tennessean reporter doing the same thing.

Joseph F. Dolan

John J. Burns

Guthman, who is 47 years old, and Seigenthaler, who is 39, teamed with Kennedy to dig up evidence that sent several Teamster officials to jail and eventually led to the conviction of Jimmy Hoffa for jury tampering. When Kennedy became Attorney General in 1961, he immediately called both men, asking Guthman to become his press secretary and Seigenthaler to be his administrative assistant.

Guthman stayed with Kennedy until after his election to the Senate, then joined The Los Angeles Times as national news editor. Seigenthaler, who is generally credited with writing Kennedy's book, "The Enemy Within," stayed two years—he was once clubbed unconscious while protecting Freedom Riders in Alabama—then was named editor of The Tennessean. Both men left Kennedy reluctantly—more money was one reason—but both have the essential Bobby quality, absolute loyalty, and both will almost certainly be back when he needs them.

Guthman and Seigenthaler are somewhat typical of the kind of men Bobby likes. They are rugged men—"So many of Kennedy's guys look like Marlboro men," a reporter observed—who give the impression they could still wear their old football uniforms. His friends have been men like David Hackett, his prep-school friend and an Olympic hockey player, and the late Dean Markham, a college buddy who died in a plane crash last September and whom Kennedy once described as "the meanest lineman in Harvard history."

(Continued)

What size 12 are you?

CAPE COD ORIGINALS

has a skirt proportion-sized to you.

When it comes to permanent press, A-line skirts, Cape Cod Originals has you sized up — perfectly. Proportion-tailored, of Fortrel and Cotton, this Cape Cod Original is permanently pressed to keep its good looks washing after washing — without ironing.
And this A-line beauty has all the fashion features you want: high-rise — no waist band tailoring, tab back, railroad stitching.
In black, brown, navy, denim, olive-green, sand beige, raspberry, sweetpea pink, daffodil yellow and lilac.
Proportion sizes 8-20. About $4.99.
Write to Cape Cod Originals, Brockton, Mass. for the store nearest you.

Use Antique Oil Finish for a hard finish with a soft lustre on tables, cabinets, bar tops, paneling... finished or unfinished.

MAIL THIS FREE COUPON

MINWAX Co., Inc., Dep't. NYTA 27
72 Oak Street
Delawanna, N.J. 07014

Send booklets on Minwax Method of Wood Finishing with Color Card. Also address of my nearest dealer:

Name.....

Address.....

City.....

State.....Zip.....

(Continued)

Football and Kennedy. He loves the game and once described it as the best training, except for war, that a man could have. In fact, traveling with Bobby reminds a man of going to the game in the high-school team's bus. There is the excitement, the manliness—instead of the uniforms and leather pads there are rolled-up sleeves, cigars and rumpled hair—the thrill of going to the stadium where everybody will cheer you and you'll show them that you're the best. Guthman and Seigenthaler were on the team for the big game—against Hoffa U. There is a special bond between Kennedy and the people who battled the Teamsters with him. After Hoffa was convicted on March 4, 1964, Kennedy's staff presented him with a wallet embossed with the words: "We, the jury, find the defendant guilty as charged."

Kennedy held a party in his office last year to reward a young girl who had prepared a complicated bill he introduced that day. During the party, the excited girl, wearing a corsage given to her by the Senator, was asked how she felt.

"This is the second greatest day of my life," she answered.

"What was the greatest day?"

"The day we got Hoffa!" she said firmly.

"You have to go through something with Bob Kennedy before you have a relationship with him," Guthman said. "And relationships are everything with him. It's hard to explain but it's straight. He's absolutely honest with you."

Theodore C. Sorensen

Guthman and Seigenthaler have gone through a lot with Bobby. He usually wants to know what they think about his problems; they were the first two men he asked to read "The Death of a President."

In Los Angeles last October, Kennedy broke off campaigning for Gov. Edmund Brown to visit Guthman's wife when he learned she was in Cedars of Lebanon Hospital. He was obviously more interested in the Guthman family ("How's Jo-Ann? How's Les doing at school?") than in the cheers of a few more crowds.

While tens of thousands of people were cheering Kennedy during his tour of Latin America last year, Seigenthaler would occasionally stand on the edge of a crowd and yell: "Kennedeee, Go Home!" Not many men are close enough to Bobby to do that.

BURKE MARSHALL, chief of the Justice Department's civil-rights division under Kennedy, might be close enough, but shouting isn't his style. There is a legend that neither man spoke for five minutes when Marshall first met Kennedy, who often waits for other people to speak first.

Marshall, a brilliant 44-year-old lawyer, now vice president and general counsel of International Business Machines, was the anonymous "Kennedy family spokesman" who first announced that the family might go to court to force Look and Harper & Row to make changes in Manchester's manuscript. The statement he read at that time was written by Sorensen, whose New York law firm represented the family.

"Call Burke Marshall and ask him about that" is often Kennedy's first reaction to a problem, especially in the field of civil rights, according to members of his staff. "I once heard the Senator say that Burke Marshall has the world's best judgment on anything," said one Kennedy aide.

A slight man who doesn't fit the football mold—he looks like a high-domed payroll clerk—Marshall had never met a Kennedy until January, 1961, when he was invited to talk to the Attorney General, who had heard of Marshall's reputation as an outstanding Washington antitrust lawyer. Marshall thinks so highly of privacy that after Kennedy offered him the job, he took his oath of office from a notary public.

DICK GOODWIN, who has paddled a dugout canoe in Brazil with Bobby and written his speeches, is probably the most important holdover from John Kennedy's team. While Sorensen, who is 38, and Schlesinger, 49, are tied down with their own careers, Goodwin, 35, has more freedom as Senior Fellow at Wesleyan University's Center for Advanced Studies and has time to answer any call from Bobby.

There have been a lot of calls. Goodwin traveled through Latin America with Kennedy in 1965—they almost drowned together paddling a dugout through a tropical storm on a branch of the Amazon River—and has worked on every important Kennedy speech. Before being drafted by Bobby, Goodwin wrote President Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress" speech and President Johnson's "Great Society" speech.

Arthur Schlesinger Jr.

No one really knows where Dick Goodwin's talents end. In his 35 years he has managed to finish first in his class in Tufts and Harvard Law School, to clerk for Supreme Court Justice Felix Frankfurter, investigate rigged quiz shows in the nineteen-fifties, be a special assistant to Ted Sorensen, John Kennedy and Lyndon Johnson, help organize the Peace Corps and the Alliance for Progress, be a Deputy Assistant Secretary of State and a Presidential consultant on the arts, write several books, represent Jacqueline Kennedy in the Manchester dispute and play touch football with Bobby.

Playing football must have been Goodwin's greatest challenge. He has the pallid complexion of a librarian who hates sports and his rumpled suits hang unevenly on his unmuscled body. When a group of reporters who didn't know Goodwin saw him board a plane for California last fall with Kennedy, they tried to guess who he was. Their consensus: he was a hung-over Italian newspaperman.

"One of the reasons I'm with Kennedy," he told a reporter during that flight, "is that he's one of the focal points that affords intellectuals the opportunity to get their ideas into the arena of public affairs . . . there's something about him—a modern quality—that reflects the tempo of the times. He's the most profound man in public life today. It's not just that he's willing to talk to John Kenneth Galbraith and Robert Lowell, it's that he's willing to talk to Galbraith about poetry and Lowell about Vietnam."

Then he took another puff on one of the long cigars favored by Kennedy and the people around him and turned to Bobby, who was talking to someone else, and said, "Don't worry, I won't tell him what you're really like." They both laughed.

KENNEDY says that Sorensen and Schlesinger are now "pretty remote," compared to their close relationship

Use
TRADE MINWAX MARK
WOOD FINISH
for a beautiful, easy-care finish for floors, antiques, unfinished furniture, paneling.

MAIL THIS FREE COUPON

MINWAX Co., Inc., Dept. NYTW 27
72 Oak Street
Delawanna, N.J. 07014

Send booklets on Minwax Method of Wood Finishing with Color Card. Also address of my nearest dealer:

Name.....
Address.....
City.....
State.....Zip.....

with his brother. But, in a way, that's a geographical distinction. Both men have careers in New York —Sorensen as a lawyer, Schlesinger as a professor at City University of New York — but Bobby knows their telephone numbers and dials them when anything important is happening in Washington.

"Sorensen and Schlesinger are his utility infielders," said a Kennedy aide. "They can play any position. He checks with them on everything he's doing to see what they think. Schlesinger gives him the liberal judgment and he tempers it with his own instincts."

Kennedy recently picked Sorensen as chairman of an advisory group to make recommendations for rebuilding New York's crumbling Democratic organization. That move started talk that Sorensen planned to run for New York's other Senate seat in 1968, but Sorensen privately calls the speculation "ridiculous."

Kennedy's No. 1 man in New York is his 39-year-old brother-in-law, Steve Smith, who is married to Bobby's sister Jean.

Family, of course, is everything to the Kennedys. If political writers must draw circles around Bobby, Smith and 34-year-old Ted Kennedy are inside a line that no outsider can ever cross. New York's Senator Kennedy and Massachusetts' Senator Kennedy are in constant touch and many of the 98 non-Kennedy Senators grumble because Teddy and Bobby sit in for each other on the important Labor and Public Welfare Committee. When both brothers are present, they sometimes pass needling notes back and forth. Once, when Bobby was fumbling questions about an amendment he obviously had never

(Continued)

William vanden Heuvel

India Ink Prints™
on the one and only authentic Madras, hand woven and imported from Madras, India

Intrigue from India. Fascinating print—inky darks against spicy madras golds, reds, blues. Exotic effect that gives your wardrobe a one-of-a-kind feeling. Start with this scoop-pocketed wrap-around skirt, about $12. Sizes 12-20. Available in all Lane Bryant TALL over 5'7" shops —coast to coast or write R. C. Quinn, 525 Seventh Ave., N. Y. 10017.

In exclusive fashions by R.C.Quinn®

ADD YEARS TO YOUR LIFE

BUY or RENT
a Cog-Driven
HOME ELEVATOR

- Ride up and down relaxed in absolute safety
- Occupies minimum stairway space
- Operates at the touch of a button
- Installed on straight and curved stairways
- Tax deductible in most cases

ALSO ALL WEATHER OUTDOOR LIFTS

for FREE Literature Write or Call
UPJOHN RUSSO Co.
111 Flatbush Avenue
Brooklyn 17, N.Y.
MA 2-5000

WECOLATOR CO. of NY-14 Kernochan Ave., Hempstead, N.Y.

The Golden Door
RESTAURANT
Atop the International Arrival Building
Kennedy International Airport
Reservations: 656-4600

Imagine!
AFRICAN ZEBRA RUGS
only $195

In stock again. Most fashionable elegant accessory from America's greatest selection. Compare our price with any currently being offered. Comparable value at least $350. How can we do it! We import direct from Africa! Average length 8'.
Only $195 ppd.
Money back guarantee. By Mail. No COD's. Free Catalog.
HUNTING WORLD
INCORPORATED—DEPT B
420 EAST 51 STREET, NEW YORK 10022

COINTREAU
WORLD-RENOWNED LIQUEUR
COINTREAU
PERFECT AFTER DINNER
COINTREAU
LENDS COCKTAILS MAGIC
COINTREAU
EXCITING ON THE ROCKS
COINTREAU
HONORED BY CHEFS
COINTREAU
FOR GOURMET DISHES
COINTREAU
SYMBOL OF GOOD LIVING
COINTREAU
THE WIDE WORLD OVER
COINTREAU

COINTREAU LIQUEUR • 80 PROOF PRODUCED & BOTTLED BY COINTREAU LTD., PENNINGTON, N. J.

(Continued)

read, a committee aide saw him get a note from Teddy that read: "Keep it up, Robbie boy, you're doing a great job."

Steve Smith manages both Kennedy political campaigns and the family's $300-million investment portfolio from an office in New York's Pan Am Building. He is a handsome, quiet man who avoided personal publicity even when he managed the Senate campaigns of the Kennedy brothers. But as a member of the family, he can't always avoid Bobby's anger. On one bad campaign day in Westchester County in 1964 when Bobby was several hours behind schedule, he reached Smith on a car telephone and shouted: "Steve, I just want to tell you one thing. It wasn't like this when I ran my brother's campaign!"

William D. Rogers

Bobby slammed down the phone and discreet staff members looked out the car windows. They rarely see that kind of anger. "If he's mad at us, he just turns the steely blues on us," one said.

But Smith, whom a reporter once described as "a hard-boiled Freddy Bartholomew," is certainly tough enough to take two hot Irish sentences. He's a no-nonsense type from a Brooklyn Irish family that owns a prosperous river barge company. When Ted Kennedy was seeking his first Senate nomination at a Massachusetts Democratic convention, Smith walked by a party being held by an opposing candidate with this comment: "Look at those guys. They're having fun and getting drunk. Where will they be tomorrow?"

Smith has been called the best all-round athlete—Bobby might argue about that—in the athletic Kennedy family, and the bruising sports he played in prep school tell something about him. He was the goalie on the hockey and lacrosse teams.

New York politicians interested in talking to Kennedy usually have to reach him through Smith, state Democratic chairman John J. Burns, 45, or William vanden Heuvel, a 37-year-old Park Avenue lawyer. Vanden Heuvel has traveled around the world with Kennedy, carrying his shirts and protecting him from surging crowds in a dozen countries.

Shirt-carrying — Kennedy always changes his shirt several times a day —and running for tea, looking for his lost shoes and toting his bags are part of being around Bobby. "If you want to be Secretary of State you have to know how to get his shirts out of those plastic bags," said one slightly bitter ex-aide.

Body-blocking is another essential talent for a Kennedy friend. Big men like vanden Heuvel and Guthman are like Green Bay Packer linemen protecting Bart Starr when the "Bobby, Bobby, Bobby!" mobs blitz their Senator.

Vanden Heuvel, who has his own political ambitions in New York, will be Kennedy's top man at the New York State Constitutional Convention which begins in April. He has had a remarkable career of association with famous men since leaving Rochester, N. Y., where his mother ran a boarding house and his father was a factory worker. Before joining Kennedy in the Justice Department in 1961, he was a law partner of Republican Senator Jacob Javits, an aide to former New York Governor Averell Harriman and a partner and aide of the late "Wild Bill" Donovan, the Republican lawyer-general who headed the O.S.S. during World War II.

Vanden Heuvel and his wife, who is the daughter of Jules Stein, chairman of the board of Music Corporation of America, are two of New York's "beautiful people." Probably the most publicized members of that set, Mr. and Mrs. S. Carter Burden—New York papers call them "the beautiful little Burdens"—have also made it with Bobby. Amanda Burden, a daughter of Mrs. William S. Paley, was named America's best-dressed woman in 1965 at the age of 21. Her 25-year-old husband is an aide in Kennedy's New York office. "Most people don't know it," said a friend of the Senator's, "but he really gets a kick out of mingling with those jet-set people. I'm not jealous, but I think that's part of the reason he has those people around."

Richard N. Goodwin

KENNEDY has a personal staff of 40, most of them in his Washington office under the watchful blue eyes of Joe Dolan. The Kennedy staff —young and dedicated to working 60 to 90 smiling hours each week—is crammed into five small rooms in the Senate Office Building. Dolan is in a 10-foot-square cubicle with a secretary, and Press Secretary Frank Mankiewicz is wedged into another cubicle with Legislative Assistant Wendell Pigman and three girls.

Books, folders, newspapers, memos with Bobby's cramped "Keep me posted" written in the margins and pictures of Kennedy children are piled everywhere. It's almost impossible to move without two excuse me's and three collisions with cheery girls. Everything is cheerful. On the day William Manchester attacked the Kennedys in an interview that included the quote, "Mao Tse-tung and Jackie are the two most inscrutable people I know," staffers answered excited calls with this line: "We're trying to get Chou En-lai to say Mao is more inscrutable."

But, occasionally, overcrowding can be embarrassing. Lying among the telephone books and crumpled notes scattered on the carpet a couple of weeks ago was this confidential memo from a staff member:

"I managed to meet Thomas Vail, editor and publisher of The Cleveland Plain Dealer. He says he's a good friend of Ed Guthman's. I think we can count on him. He borders on being an unconditional friend. His attractive wife is another asset."

Besides Dolan and Mankiewicz, the most important staff men are two hustling young legislative aides, Adam Walinsky, 30, and Peter Edelman, 29, and Thomas Johnston, a 30-year-old former television producer, who runs Kennedy's New York office.

"Adam and Peter do most of the Senator's speeches," a former aide said. "They think of themselves as the Sorensen and Schlesinger of the future."

Although he chain-smokes Kools, Mankiewicz looks like another Marlboro man. He was Latin American director of the Peace Corps before joining Kennedy last June. He turned down several lucrative offers to take the job, which pays less than the $25,000 he made as a Los Angeles lawyer in 1960.

Mankiewicz, who is 42 and a nephew of movie producer Joseph Mankiewicz, left California to become a minor Peace Corps executive in 1961. He first met Kennedy late in 1965 when he was one of two dozen men asked to brief the Senator before his Latin American trip. Six months later, Kennedy called again, and Mankiewicz, who was once city editor of a Santa Monica weekly newspaper, began handling the demands of the dozens of American and foreign newspapers, magazines, radio and television stations that ask for exclusive interviews with Bobby each day. On slow days, he talks to one of at least 15 writers currently working on Bobby books.

Stephen Smith

Mankiewicz's salary is paid personally by the Senator. Like most other Senators, Kennedy also pays his legislative assistants with his own money. Dolan gets $24,900 a year, which is paid by the Government.

JOE DOLAN, a 45-year-old former Assistant Deputy Attorney General, gives most people the impression that he is some sort of Disorganization Man. He once shook hands with the same reporter three times within 20 minutes in a small room. Each time he stuck out his hand, he said: "Hi, I'm Joe Dolan." When he met the same reporter again an hour later, he shook hands and said: "Hi, I'm Joe Dolan."

But Joe Dolan must be doing something right. "It's hard for us to figure out why Joe is so valuable to Bob," said a Kennedy friend. "But he depends on Joe's judgment, and he wouldn't have that job unless he was damn good."

Dolan is a tall, sandy-haired man who wears glasses at several different angles. He has the nasal voice of a soft-spoken New York cop (and does a good imitation of Bobby) but lost the city accent by spending 12 years in Colorado after graduating near the top of his class at St. John's Law School.

He worked for Robert Kennedy in the Rocky Mountain states during the 1960 campaign and after the election resigned his seat in the Colorado House of Representatives to go to the Justice Department. During those years, Dolan saw Kennedy two or three times a month as he specialized in screening possible Federal judicial appointments and took a few obscene insults while leading Negro students into the University of Alabama.

"When he decided to go to New York and run," Dolan said, pushing his glasses down until the lenses pointed toward the floor. "I told him

(Continued)

Peter Edelman, Adam Walinsky

Open Mon, Thurs eves

Sale

FINAL WEEK

Underway at International Our semi-annual clearance sale of the finest Scandinavian and American furniture for every room in the house. Designs by Scandinavia's gifted designers, carefully executed in Bangkok teak or walnut. Dining tables and chairs, sofas, occasional chairs, cabinets and chests, desks, occasional tables, lamps, rugs and accessories at wonderful savings. Sale items reduced 10% to 50%.

International home furnishings

NEW YORK LOS ANGELES BOSTON

440 PARK AVE SOUTH (CORNER 30TH ST) MU 4-1155

And visit our WAREHOUSE OUTLET store at 220 EAST 23 ST (6TH FLOOR) ■ MU 9-2920

DAILY & SATURDAY 10-6. MONDAY. THURSDAY EVES. 'TIL 8:30

Collect Signed Originals by America's Foremost Artists

Since 1934, Associated American Artists' program has offered art lovers the finest and largest collection of limited edition, signed, original etchings, lithographs, and woodcuts, for as little as ten dollars.

Many of our offerings are now in major museums and public collections. Many are valued at more than 20 times their original price. Send for our current catalog which contains illustrations of original prints including works by Altman, Dobkin, Florsheim, Greenwood, Gross, Hirsch, Kleinholz, Landau, Doris Lee, Margulies, Marx, O'Connor, Raphael Soyer, Summers, and Wilson.

"Eagles" by Jacob Landau. $30 matted 18½" x 21½"

"Iris" by Alexander Dobkin. $10 matted 14" x 18"

"Setting Sun" by Richard Florsheim. $10 matted 18" x 14"

Associated American Artists
605 5th Ave., N.Y. 10017, Studio 12

For free catalog containing 47 different illustrations, send 25 cents for handling.

Name _____

Address _____

City _____ State _____ Zip _____

*plus $1 shipping.

It tells them you are a knowledgeable traditionalist

Case in point: this fine club woven with bold but well-mannered authentic British Club insignia. A worthy and distinctive complement to your distinguished evening or business wardrobe.

P.S. To further excell in traditionalism send for your free booklet, "Tiemanship," Resilio Traditional Neckwear, Empire State Building, New York 10001.

Our Manager

HE'S A PERFECTIONIST!

John Francis Isard has very definite ideas on running an intimate, elegant hotel. He's a stickler for personal service. So you'll find a concierge in our lobby. Chambermaids who really fuss over a room. Reception people who make a point of learning your name. Elevator operators who smile a "Good Morning" . . . and mean it. Waiters who wait . . . patiently . . . on your every wish. There's Delmonico's world-famous Restaurant and Wine Cellar for luncheon and dinner and dancing. And beautiful newly-decorated rooms—air-conditioned and television, of course. Next trip to New York give John Isard a call.

Corporate suites at special annual rentals.

DELMONICO'S
HOTEL
Park Avenue at 59th Street, New York, N.Y. 10022
Telephone: 212-EL 5-2500 • Cable: Elegance, N.Y.

(Continued)

I wanted to go, too. He said, 'All right, if you want to.' Real enthusiastic! Then he asked me if I wanted to come back to Washington with him and I said, 'O.K.' We get along fine."

ADAM WALINSKY, a Yale Law School graduate (Order of the Coif) who had worked more or less unnoticed in the Justice Department, also wanted to be on Kennedy's campaign staff. "I really wanted in. I'm from New York and I thought he needed me," Walinsky said, sitting at a desk littered with copies of Dissent, Foreign Affairs and several other journals not sold in drugstores. "I had to knock down doors, but I made it and now I'm working for the best man in this town."

John Seigenthaler

Walinsky is a brash young man who brags about his reputation as Kennedy's top speech writer and shrugs off his reputation as the most unpopular staffer on Capitol Hill. He happily refers to his critics as "those clucks." One of them described him as "nasty and brilliant, in that order."

He does most of his writing at home in McLean, Va., which not coincidentally is the town where his boss lives. With a devotion not uncommon around Bobby, Walinsky searched for months to find a piece of property close to the Kennedys' Hickory Hill estate.

A Kennedy speech may be born with the casual words, "I want to say something about Latin America." The writing is anything but casual. His long Senate speech on Latin America last May was the product of six months of work that began when William D. Rogers, a 39-year-old former Alliance for Progress official who is a close friend of Kennedy's, prepared a list of several dozen Latin-American experts.

Walinsky talked to everyone on the list, which included Kennedy loyalists like Dick Goodwin, academic neutrals like Raymond Vernon of Harvard and Kalman Silvert of Dartmouth, and American college students from South American countries. "About two dozen people—Frank Mankiewicz was one—were really exceptional," Walinsky recalled. "We arranged for the Senator to speak to them. Then the Senator and I sat down for hours to talk about theme and approach."

Walinsky wrote the first draft after Kennedy's tour of Latin America. Then the two men sat down together again. "What I really want to say is this," Bobby would say and write a sentence in longhand. Or, "Let's put in what those miners said to me in Chile." And, "Check that part with Dick Goodwin."

"After that," Walinsky said, "the Senator starts asking people he likes and trusts what they think of it. That's when he telephones people like Sorensen and Schlesinger."

The night before his February, 1966, speech suggesting that the Vietcong be part of a future Vietnamese Government, Kennedy called former Presidential adviser Richard E. Neustadt three times from McLean. Professor Neustadt, 47, is director of Harvard's Institute of Politics, which was attacked last month as a Kennedy talent-recruiting center. The attacks were turned away by college officials who drily commented that the Senator would find it easier to take over the Government than to take over Harvard.

A month earlier, when Kennedy wanted advice on what to say about New York City's transit strike, he called United Nations Ambassador Arthur Goldberg, who was his brother's Secretary of Labor.

The telephone is Bobby's link to the hundreds of people whose names were on the Life magazine lists. The green console phones on the desks of staff members have 18 buttons. The 18th button is red and it lights if Kennedy is using his office phone. "I know the instant he walks into his office that my light will flash on," Joe Dolan said. "If the light is off for more than a couple of minutes, that means he's left."

Frank Mankiewicz

The list grows longer every day. Kennedy seeks advice from close friends such as 47-year-old Washington lawyer Louis Oberdorfer and former Deputy Secretary of Defense Roswell Gilpatric, 60, and from strangers, such as Laurence Cole, a 30-year-old social worker on the Lower East Side of Manhattan. Many of the people he calls are officials in the Johnson Administration. "And some of them aren't very anxious to have their names published on any Kennedy list," an aide noted.

Not all Kennedy speeches, of course, are discussed for as long as the one on Latin America. The final draft of his civil-rights speech last October at the University of California at Berkeley was finished by Walinsky and Goodwin in a Fresno motel at 5 A.M. on the day it was delivered. The text was then typed by Kennedy's faithful secretary, Angela Novello, and the Senator made final changes while riding in a car filled with local politicians.

One more of Kennedy's bright young men on Capitol Hill is legislative assistant Peter Edelman, a Harvard Law School graduate (magna cum laude) from Minnesota, who was also a Justice Department assistant. Although his dark hair and glasses make him look like Walinsky, Edelman is known as the quiet Kennedy man who does most of the research and drafting of legislation.

"We get very irritated about those brain-trust stories," Edelman said, puffing a Kennedy-length cigar in the same uncertain way the Senator does. "Of course, the Senator relies on his friends the way any man does. But the work is done here."

THE Senator doesn't mix his workers with touch-football players. If staff members go to Hickory Hill, and they seldom do, they go to work. In fact, the only complaint—whispered, of course—they ever make about Bobby is his habit of departing for a weekend with Ethel and the children and leaving the staff with enough work to make sure they won't have time to play with their own kids. "Give me a memo Monday morning on that poverty bill" is not a young father's idea of an ideal Friday afternoon farewell.

Thomas Johnston

"You have to be willing to take a hell of a licking if you want to work for Bob Kennedy," Ed Guthman said. "But, it's worth it," he added.

So, while Bill Rogers or General Maxwell Taylor plays tennis with Bobby and Ethel, Adam Walinsky or Peter Edelman may be bent over a typewriter. "Of course it's worth it," Walinsky said. "I wish I could find the words. Have you ever read about Lee's lieutenants during the Civil War? The feeling they had for him? I mean it's just that it—it swings. We're part of an adventure." ■

PICTURE CREDITS

1—THE NEW YORK TIMES (GEORGE TAMES)

12—CULVER PICTURES, INC.

25—THE NEW YORK TIMES (GEORGE TAMES)

28-29—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL; SOVFOTO; ASSOCIATED PRESS

30-31—THE NEW YORK TIMES (SAM FALK)

32-33—GOTTSCHO-SCHLEISNER, INC.

34-35—LEONARD LEE RUE III FROM ANNAN PHOTO FEATURES; NORTH JERSEY CONSERVATION FOUNDATION

40-42—MOLLY ADAMS

44—"GOYA: HIS COMPLETE ETCHINGS, AQUATINTS, AND LITHOGRAPHS," HARRY N. ABRAMS, INC., NEW YORK

54—CULVER PICTURES, INC.

65—SUSAN ROSENTHAL

67—NEW YORK TIMES STUDIO (BILL ALLER)

68—NEW YORK TIMES STUDIO (GENE MAGGIO)

72—ROY PINNEY FROM MONKMEYER

75-78-79—ALBERTUS-YALE NEWS BUREAU

82—THE NEW YORK TIMES (GEORGE TAMES)

83—THE NEW YORK TIMES (SAM FALK)

84—JOURNAL STAR, LINCOLN, NEBRASKA; THE NEW YORK TIMES (GEORGE TAMES)

85—BURT GLINN FROM MAGNUM

86—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL; HOLLY BOWER

87—THE NEW YORK TIMES (SAM FALK, GEORGE TAMES)

88—JACK CORN

89—THE NEW YORK TIMES (SAM FALK)

90-91—UNITED PRESS INTERNATIONAL

93—EASTFOTO

97-98-99—TIM KANTOR

PERSONALITIES
NYT 3/10/67

Dean Quits Harvard To Aid Negro College

By FRED M. HECHINGER

The dean of Harvard College announced yesterday that he would resign to devote full time to the education of struggling students at a small Negro college in Birmingham, Ala..

John U. Monro will leave one of the most prestigious positions in American undergraduate education on July 1 to become director of freshman studies at Miles College, an institution that is only just approaching full accreditation. He will also head a faculty committee to revise the curriculum.

"I want to disassociate myself from any idea that this is a sacrifice," the 54-year-old Massachusetts-born, Harvard-bred educator said at a news conference at the New York Hilton Hotel. "I see it as a job of enormous reward."

The announcement was made jointly by Mr. Monro and Lucius

Continued on Page 23, Column 1

"CASINO ROYALE" IS TOO MUCH for one James Bond! Woody Allen is James Bond!—Advt.

DEAN OF HARVARD JOINS MILES STAFF

Continued From Page 1, Col. 2

H. Pitts, president of Miles, who was born the seventh son of a cotton tenant farmer in Georgia in 1915. He welcomed Mr. Monro to Birmingham as a "town of perpetual promise and problems."

"This is not a new decision," Mr. Monro said. He recalled that he had spent three summers at Miles helping to prepare a special curriculum for freshmen and grooming graduates of nearby Negro schools for college.

"I came to the point where I had to decide whether I could go on with this and still do justice to my work at Harvard," he said.

He added that he had come to like Birmingham and to admire "the courage and determination of President Pitts."

At Harvard, President Nathan M. Pusey and Franklin L. Ford, dean of the faculty of arts and sciences, expressed regret over the loss of "a great Dean of the College" and said a successor to Mr. Monro would be appointed soon.

Mr. Pusey said Dean Monro had been "among the first to seek out submerged talents among the nation's youth, and bring them into the great stream of higher learning." He devoted much of his time during his nine years as dean to programs directly concerned with the teaching of undergraduates.

Miles College—with an enrollment of 1,000—is perhaps as different from Harvard as the vast diversity of American higher education permits. Compared with the Ivy League institution's endowment of over $1-billion, the 62-year-old coeducational college for Negroes, founded by the Christian Methodist Episcopal Church, had lost its accreditation in 1958 because of its deficient library facilities and lack of Ph.D.'s on the faculty.

It had an endowment income of less than $20,000 annually and before Mr. Pitts agreed to assume the presidency in 1961, the school considered closing for lack of support.

Shortly after Mr. Pitts took over a "mile of dimes" campaign was begun in which students with tin cups solicited funds from Negro families to stock the library. When Eugene Conner, then Commissioner of Safety, halted the drive, national publicity resulted in nationwide donations to buy 65,000 books.

During the last four years, the college has raised and spent more than $1.55-million for capital improvements. It has attracted Ph.D.'s for the regular faculty as well as others who serve temporarily without pay.

"We have an international faculty," said Mr. Pitts. It has included Cuban refugees, volunteers from India and Africa, one Ph.D. each from Malaysia, Lebanon and Turkey, a husband and wife team from Holland, both holding doctorates, a white Mississippian and a Woodrow Wilson scholar.

Asked why he chose Miles for his new mission, Dean Munro said: "Because the man asked me down."

It was a reference to a call by Mr. Pitts in the summer of 1964 to teach English in a special pre-college session. With him came six student-teachers from Harvard and Radcliffe.

Mr. Pitts said that nearly 4,000 Negroes graduated from the Birmingham high schools annually and that Niles, situated on a 32-acre site in Jones Valley at the city's outskirts, "is still the only four-year college regularly open to Negro students within 50 miles of Birmingham."

Dean Monro warned that excessive stress on Ph.D.'s for accreditation, "not only for Negro colleges but for scores and scores of white ones too" overlooked the need to "get people who know something about teaching."

Miles College has a faculty of 58, including 15 Ph.D.'s, with 15 in the special freshman program that Mr. Monro will head. Mr. Pitts said the accreditation committee would review the school's qualifications in April.

Whitney M. Young Jr., executive director of the National Urban League, in addressing the press conference, said:

"At this time, when the news media are filled with stories of racial conflict and the indiscretion of a Negro Congressman and debates over black power, this is a significant incident. I wish only it got equal play."

Educational Handyman

John Usher Monro

Special to The New York Times

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., March 9—The office of the Dean of Harvard College is situated where the action is, overlooking the Yard, through which at some hour of the day almost every student in the college passes on his way to class, to the Square, or to his dormitory. That is the way that John Usher Monro, an administrative general handyman for 21 years, likes it. Today, in New York, Mr. Monro formally acknowledged a decision he reached last summer—to go to Birmingham, Ala., to become director of freshman studies at Miles College. The other day, in an interview in his office, he said, "The educational institutions of this nation have a job to do to fulfill the educational needs of our young people, because that is what this country is all about, but by and large they are not doing it."

Man in the News

But at Miles, where he has been working for the last three summers, Mr. Monro said he found the situation he had in mind, a college that had an intimate relationship with the community it was serving.

Miles is a Negro college. There are no dormitories. The 1,000 students commute daily from the surrounding area. About half of the faculty are white, a recent development, according to Mr. Monroe.

Aware of Social Problems

Mr. Mönro has been concerned with closing the gap between gifted students and the money to finance their education, since the end of World War II. He worked his way through Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., as a grocery errand boy and was a scholarship student at Harvard. But he is also aware of the social problems in education.

Several years ago, discussing the problems of admissions officers, Mr. Mönro said.

"You break your back getting some tough little kid from a slum to come here, you give him a full scholarship, and then he leaves in the middle of his freshman year because he just can't take it. He's unhappy, we're unhappy. You ask yourself, 'Did you do this for him or for yourself?' You just don't know."

In the seven years before World War II, Mr. Monro served as a writer in the Harvard news office and as a correspondent for The Boston Transcript. When the war broke out, he enlisted in the Navy in public relations, applied for sea duty and eventually became damage control officer of the aircraft carrier Enterprise.

As a result of his "organizational leadership," after a kamikaze attack on the carrier off Okinawa in 1945, Mr. Monro was awarded the Bronze Star.

The war over, Mr. Monro was on the verge of turning to newspaper work as a member of the staff of the short-lived New York Daily PM when he stopped by at Harvard on his way to New York. Wilbur J. Bender, then adviser to returning veterans, invited him to join the university as his assistant.

From that day, Mr. Monro has spent most of his time combing the hinterlands, including small towns, farms and the city slums for talented students to bring to Harvard and educate. His titles have been director of the financial aid office, assistant to the provost, instructor in English and dean of the college, an office he assumed in 1958.

The New York Times

Found what he had in mind

(Dr. Monro at news conference yesterday in New York.)

Helped Develop Service

During his directorship of the financial aid office, Mr. Monro was instrumental in developing the College Scholarship Service, through which more than 800 colleges share financial data on student applications for aid.

When he is asked about what he does with the rest of the time he is not working Mr. Monro answers, "There isn't any rest of the time."

Yet, despite his not following any particular physical regimen, Mr. Monro looks at least 10 years less than his 54. He has a shock of gray hair, black eyebrows and deepset, gray eyes. The educator is trim of carriage, favors blue button-down shirts and sports jackets with leather elbow patches.

In a university community that is extremely sensitive about its traditions and prerogatives, Mr. Monro is respected as one who will listen and talk about even the most embarrassing incidents.

These have included a confrontation with Defense Secretary Robert S. McNamara by an unruly group of students, from which resulted a more orderly discussion between students and Arthur J. Goldberg, chief United States Representative to the United Nations.

Mr. Monro was born in North Andover, Dec. 13, 1912. He is married to the former Dorothy Stevens Foster. They have two daughters and a grandson.

In the summer, when he allows himself to get away from his work, Mr. Monro enjoys brief stays at a family summer place in Freeport, Me.

PERSONALITIES

**

HEW Choice Finds Racism a Misnomer

AC 3/26/68

BY JACK MILLER

WASHINGTON (AP)—The man President Johnson has nominated as secretary of Health, Education and Welfare disagreed Monday with the conclusion of a presidential commission that white racism is a principal cause of riots.

Wilbur J. Cohen, acting secretary of the department, said at his first news conference since Johnson announced his nomination as secretary Friday:

"I think you could also say that there is black racism and brown racism and red racism . . . I'm not sure that its (the term's) use is a great help."

Cohen's statement on the riot commission report differs from the views of many liberals but is in line with criticism voiced by Vice President Hubert H. Humphrey, who has said the report overstressed the racism angle.

Cohen said "I wish some of the energy that has gone into rioting" had gone instead into self-improvement. Without specifying Negroes, he said he sees a need for oppressed people to be "lifting themselves up by their own bootstraps."

While he did not deny that white racism plays a part in causing riots, Cohen said he feels the riot commission oversimplified the situation by attributing too much of the problem to that phrase.

The acting secretary added he thinks many civil rights groups and reporters have "been repulsed by those who think Black Power means black segregation."

Cohen, 54, was undersecretary to John W. Gardner, who resigned March 1 and has become chairman of the National Urban Coalition.

Cohen said he and his wife both plan to campaign for the reelection of President Johnson.

When asked his view of Gardner's statement that Americans do not realize the gravity of the nation's domestic problems, Cohen said "if people like my wife and other women would go out and speak" on problems such as child health and poverty, "there might be more support for some of these programs."

Cohen said he believes the Social Security program should be expanded so that fewer people would have to be on welfare. He made clear, however, that he does not anticipate a fusing of the social security and welfare programs.

GRANNY GRAND'$

POLICE

is it wrong to handcuff the police?

The Warren Court has taken the lead in insuring to the poor the rights that the rich take for granted.

WILLIAM J. DEMPSEY, JR.

On October 5, 1953, President Eisenhower appointed Earl Warren Chief Justice of the United States. This selection of the extraordinarily popular governor was not controversial. It seemed likely that he would be a middle-of-the-roader who might use his political skills to keep the Court in tune with dominant public opinion.

Thirteen years later, Warren is variously pilloried as an arch-enemy of the people and praised as one of the greatest Chief Justices since John Marshall, and the "Warren Court" has become the most controversial bench since the "Nine Old Men" were thwarting President Roosevelt's efforts to deal with the Great Depression.

It all began on May 17, 1954, when the Chief Justice, for a unanimous Court, handed down probably the most important decision in the country's history—Brown v. Board of Education, the desegregation case. There the Court required us finally to begin redeeming the promise made to the Negro in the Civil War. The effort is painful, and the Court has been bitterly assailed for forcing us to make it.

But if the Brown decision were the Warren Court's only departure from precedent, it is unlikely that any serious attack upon the Court could have been long sustained. A series of decisions before Brown had undermined the old "separate but equal" doctrine, so that, while Brown was the final and decisive step, it was hardly unexpected. More importantly, the harsh injustice of the country's treatment of the Negro was perfectly evident, so that the Brown decision carried the authority of high moral principle that could not for long be denied.

It is now clear, of course, that Brown signaled only the beginning of a remarkable period of judicial innovation. However, for some time after Brown the course the Warren Court would chart was uncertain. Shortly after Brown, the Court dealt with the first wave of cases generated by the McCarthy-inspired legislative investigations of Communists past and present, real and alleged. When the Court sharply limited those investigations, the reaction was just as abusive, and possibly more broadly based, than that which followed Brown. However, the Court retreated in its next group of Communist-investigation decisions, leaving the law cloudy and the critics confused.

This sort of ambiguity in the Court's attitude toward politically sensitive questions was due primarily to Justice Frankfurter, whose vote was frequently decisive in a narrowly divided Court. While Frankfurter sometimes expressed personal sympathy with the liberal approach of the Chief Justice and Justices Black, Douglas, and Brennan, he believed that the Court should pay great deference to the Congress and to the states. Consequently, more often than not he struck a cautious—some would say a timid—note in the name of what he termed "judicial restraint."

In 1962, however, Frankfurter was replaced by Arthur Goldberg, who in turn has been replaced by Abe Fortas. The impact of this shift in dramatis personae has been enormous. Building on some scattered prior decisions, the Court has in the past few years imposed important new limitations upon federal and state governments respecting such matters as reapportionment of legislatures, the relationship between government and religion, and law enforcement.

Of these recent decisions, none have been more controversial than those dealing with criminal law. In one speech and article after another, law enforcement officers have complained bitterly that they have been "handcuffed" by the Court, and they have been seconded by a battery of journalists and lawyers. While the Court has also had its defenders, the drumbeat of criticism, against the background of mounting concern over "crime in the streets," has generated a wave of antagonism toward the Court.

To be sure, the Court has been at the center of maelstroms before during its long history and has often emerged with enhanced stature. Still, if the current criticism of the Court is well founded, Justice Frankfurter's fears for the Court may yet be realized. The question, then, is: "Who is right, the critics or the Court?"

If the controversy could be resolved by answering the question whether the Court has "handcuffed" the police, cloture on the debate would be quite in order. There is no doubt that this is precisely what the Court has done. That is to say, there is no doubt that the Court has made more difficult the policeman's job of putting criminals in jail.

But framing the question in such terms is just a debater's trick. It scores points with the audience, but does not represent a genuine effort to appraise the Court's decisions.

The fact is that the Bill of Rights was specifically designed to put "handcuffs" on the government in its dealings with its citizens. Thus, although the legislature may rightly conclude that domestic peace would best be secured by stilling a dissenting political or religious minority, the First Amendment says: "Thou Shalt Not." And although the police may believe that dragnet arrests and indiscriminate searches would make law enforcement more efficient—a belief that is surely well founded, as the experience of Nazi Germany demonstrates—the Fourth Amendment bars the way.

Thus the question is not whether the police have been "handcuffed," but to what purpose and to what extent. While the answer in large measure turns upon an analysis of the relevant constitutional provisions, this is not as arcane a subject as some would have it appear. Consider the principle decisions:

In 1961, the Court ruled in Mapp v. Ohio that evidence seized by the police in violation of the search and seizure provisions of the Fourth Amendment may not be used in state criminal prosecutions. It could be, and has been, argued—as it is

---

Admitting that the Supreme Court has made the policeman's job more difficult, William J. Dempsey, Jr. examines the reasons for the Court's recent decisions applying the Fourth, Fifth, and Sixth Amendments to the work of law enforcement officers. He compares the 1966 Miranda decision to the 1954 desegregation decision, because in it the Court was staking its fortune upon our capacity to live up to our American ideals. The author, a graduate of Yale Law School, is a practicing attorney in Washington, D.C.

---

most artfully put—that just because the constable blunders the criminal should not go free.

While that argument has an appealing ring, it was ultimately rejected by the Court because experience demonstrated that the police could not be deterred from violating the Constitution except by removing the incentive—that is, except by preventing convictions based on illegally secured evidence.

While as a matter of abstract logic the decision in Mapp could have gone either way, surely the Court's view was best designed to secure to the public the safeguards of the Fourth Amendment. There was compelling evidence that, in those states permitting the use at trial of illegally obtained evidence, the police had blatantly ignored the strictures of the Constitution.

If the police themselves, or state or local legislative units, had enforced sanctions against these police transgressions, Mapp might never have been decided. But who ever heard of a policeman being fired or demoted because he conducted an illegal search or seizure? And since the victims of this sort of police illegality are almost invariably the hapless poor, private lawsuits against offending police were virtually nonexistent. Enforcement of the Fourth Amendment fell to the Court by default.

Moreover, it seems most unlikely that Mapp will have untoward impact on law enforcement. Federal authorities have been bound by the Mapp exclusionary rule since a Supreme Court decision in 1914; and by the time of Mapp over half of the states had adopted the same rule as a matter of state law. In these circumstances, it is hardly credible that one need fear venturing onto the streets at night because of Mapp.

Requiring a layman to defend himself against a criminal charge is like requiring him to take out his own appendix.

Next, in 1963 the Court, in Gideon v. Wainwright, ruled that the states are obliged to provide attorneys to defend all indigents charged with felonies. The Sixth Amendment secures the right of counsel in criminal cases, and in 1938 the Court ruled that this provision means, not merely that a rich person may have a lawyer defend him, but also that the federal government must provide counsel to the poor person. In Gideon (which was argued by then Mr., now Mr. Justice, Fortas), the Court extended this same principle to the states by virtue of the "fundamental fairness" doctrine of the Fourteenth Amendment.

The reasonableness of this decision hardly seems open to question. Anyone should realize that requiring a layman to defend himself against a criminal charge is like requiring him to take out his own appendix. So the aftermath of Gideon dramatically demonstrated, for on a new trial, this time with the aid of counsel, Gideon himself was acquitted.

Once again, the impact of this decision on law enforcement will probably be minimal. The federal government has survived since 1938 under the Gideon right-to-counsel rule, and in Gideon some 22 states urged the Court to apply the same rule to the states. This widespread governmental support for the Gideon principle suggests that the picture of a cagey lawyer securing acquittal of a guilty defendant by a masterful stratagem is, by and large, the product of TV scenario writers, not of the courtroom.

In a related series of cases, the Court has made other efforts to keep the true balance between the rich and poor by requiring the states to provide counsel for indigents on appeal as well as at trial, and to provide a transcript of the trial so that the right to appeal might be meaningful. The justifications for the decisions, as well as their probable impact on law enforcement, are of the same order as Gideon's.

The Court's most recent important criminal law decision, Miranda v. Arizona, is the most controversial and the most difficult. There the Court, in a 5-4 decision, determined that no conviction based upon a confession would be sustained where the defendant had not been warned that he had the right to remain silent, that anything he said could be used against him, that he had the right to speak with counsel before speaking to the police, and that if he could not afford a lawyer one would be provided for him.

The Court based Miranda upon the Fifth Amendment, which prescribes that no one may be compelled to incriminate himself in a criminal case. In principle, the decision seems unexceptionable. A confession is obviously "incriminating," so that the question is whether a confession obtained through police interrogation is "compelled" within the meaning of the Fifth Amendment where the accused is not advised of his rights and does not have the chance to consult counsel. Certainly there must be grave doubt whether such a confession is truly voluntary rather than compelled.

Moreover, since a person who is arrested does have the right not to confess and the right to talk to a lawyer, it is hard to see how anyone could reasonably object because the Court insists that a person be told that he has those rights.

Of these recent decisions, none have been more controversial than those dealing with criminal law.

In addition, in Miranda as in Mapp, the Court was troubled by the continuing failure of the police to police themselves. The 1931 disclosure by the Wickersham Report of widespread police brutality, coupled with the repeated judicial injunctions against such practices, should have led to their elimination long ago. Yet cases still arise all too frequently in which the police have literally beaten confessions out of the accused.

The Court was also influenced by the fact that, although police have probably abandoned the crudest methods of coercion, the more sophisticated techniques of psychological pressures have come into widespread use. The advice of one popular police manual cited by the Court is this:

> Where emotional appeals and tricks are employed to no avail, [the interrogator] must rely on an oppressive atmosphere of dogged persistence. He must interrogate steadily and without relent, leaving the subject no prospect of surcease. He must dominate his subject and overwhelm him with his inexorable will to obtain the truth. . . . In a serious case, the interrogation may continue for days, with the required intervals for food and sleep, but with no respite from the atmosphere of domination.

Or, as a prosecuting attorney put it in one case in somewhat more earthy terms:

> Why this talk about being undressed? Of course, they had the right to undress him to to look for bullet scars, and keep the clothes off him. That was quite proper police procedure. That is some more psychology—let him sit around with a blanket on him, humiliate him there for awhile; let him sit in the corner; let him think he is going to get a shellacking.

The Bill of Rights was specifically designed to put "handcuffs" on the government in its dealings with its citizens.

That methods short of physical coercion are effective on guilty and innocent alike is demonstrated by the recent New York case in which a Negro confessed to two murders and rape that he had not committed.

The dissenting Justices in Miranda thought that instances of physical or psychological coercion could be dealt with on a case-by-case basis without the imposition upon the police of any inflexible rules. But assuming that this is so—and the disheartening experience under this traditional approach suggests that it is not—it does not explain why there should be any criticism of the Court's effort to make doubly sure that the Fifth Amendment is not breached.

There is, of course, an explanation. It emerges clearly from the dissenting opinions as well as from other attacks upon Miranda. It is that we cannot really afford to apply the Bill of Rights in full measure.

To be sure, if a wealthy person is arrested he is bound to call his lawyer right away, and there is nothing that can be done about that. But the vast majority of criminal defendants are poor and have no lawyer to call, and they must not be permitted to see one before they confess lest our system of law enforcement collapse. So reads the indictment of Miranda in what is doubtless its least attractive, but also its only plausible, form.

The plea to that indictment must at this moment be the Scotch verdict "not proven."

Some scattered post-Miranda returns suggest that those who claim that the psychological urge of a guilty person to confess is almost overwhelming may be correct, so that warning him of his legal rights may have little impact. But the data is too slim for judgment.

More importantly, perhaps, there is no reliable information respecting the importance of confessions in law enforcement. We know, of course, that confessions are often used; but we do not know to what extent they are essential. One hope is that, deprived of the easy confession route to conviction, the police may do more hard investigative work.

Thus, the Los Angeles District Attorney has stated: "It begins to appear that many of these seemingly restrictive decisions are going to contribute directly to a more effective, efficient, and professional level of law enforcement." Again, the Court in Miranda suggested that the experience of some foreign countries and of the FBI, who for some time have substantially followed the Miranda rule, bears out this prediction. This is surely encouraging, particularly given the fact that the author of Miranda, the Chief Justice, was for some years a prosecuting attorney known for his relentless enforcement of the law and also for his rigorous adherence to court-established police standards. Still, the fact is that no one really knows what the impact of Miranda will be.

But of course now we will know in due course, whereas if the Court had not decided Miranda we never would. Obviously, this is risky business. But if the Court had denied persons arrested the right to be informed of their rights, the risks would have been just as real, even though on a lower level of visibility. Such a decision would at bottom have amounted to an admission that one of the principles we pretend to hold inviolate—the right of the citizen to be free of police power until proven guilty—must in practice be sacrificed. The sacrifice would be corrosive, for the principle is of the highest order, proceeding as it does from centuries of experience in limiting the power of the state over the person. As the Court put it in Miranda, the "one overriding thought" behind the Fifth Amendment is "the respect a government . . . must accord to the dignity and integrity of its citizens," the respect for "the inviolability of the human personality." This is a noble expression; one rooted deeply in the Judaeo-Christian ethic; one not to be cast aside without cost.

In more immediate terms, consider the relationship of Miranda to our cancerous dual problems of race and poverty. Miranda, together with the Mapp enforcement of the search and seizure amendment and the Gideon enforcement of the right to counsel amendment, are in a most important sense emanations of our growing moral sensitivity to the plight of our poor and our oppressed. The civil rights movement and the war on poverty have brought to general attention what should have been obvious: the poor—who are also generally the Negro—have been severely put upon by our society for a long time, and one instrument of their degradation has been their treatment by the police. It is hardly any wonder that crime is a prominent dividend of our sins of injustice and want of charity.

As the Warren Court in Brown took the lead in desegregation—to the everlasting shame of the Executive and the Congress—so too in Miranda it has taken the lead in insuring to the poor the rights that we recognize as a matter of course for the rich.

There is no reliable information respecting the importance of confessions in law enforcement.

In taking this step, the Court has staked its fortune upon our capacity to live up to our own ideals. Perhaps our society has become so complex and our ills so grave that we cannot.

Or perhaps, by encouraging the police to accommodate themselves to the new standards and by sacrificing so that they can be given the financial resources necessary to effective law enforcement, we can. The Court has taken a generous, rather than a mean, view of our capacities and our goodwill. We may pray that the Court is right.

Reprinted from

THE CATHOLIC WORLD

February 1967

For additional copies, write to

THE AMERICAN JEWISH COMMITTEE

INSTITUTE OF HUMAN RELATIONS

165 EAST 56 STREET, NEW YORK, N. Y. 10022

Single copy, 10¢

Quantity prices on request

POLICE AID SOUGHT IN CALMING CITIES

POLICE

New Ideas Urged to Ease Racially Tense Areas

6/28/67

By GENE ROBERTS

Special to The New York Times

EAST LANSING, Mich., May 26—Specialists in police-community relations urged at a conference here this week new concepts in law enforcement, in an effort to calm racially tense areas of the nation.

"Instead of rating our police officers in terms of how many tickets they write," asked Nelson A. Watson, an official of the International Association of Chiefs of Police, "can't we rate them in terms of the good human relations contacts they have made?"

Dan W. Dodson, director of the Center for Human Relations and Community Studies at New York University, suggested an overhaul of police examinations in an effort to attract policemen who would have rapport with "ghetto dwellers."

He said most recruitment examinations reflected the standards of the nation's white majority, and thus tended to eliminate large numbers of Negroes from police service.

At Michigan State

The suggestions were made at the 13th annual Institute of Police and Community Relations, which ended at Michigan State University today after a six-day session. Louis A. Radelet, the institute's director, said about 375 policemen and representatives from civic and community relations organizations attended.

Many others, he said, were turned away as a result of the decision to keep the institute at a manageable size. He attributed the interest, in part, to rising concern over summer racial disturbances and a growing awareness on the part of police of the need for an "improved relationship" with the public.

The concern over rioting and other "civil disturbances" was reflected again and again here in the questions that institute participants asked veteran law enforcement officers and community relations specialists. Many wanted to know what steps they could take immediately to insure a calm summer.

Lieut. Robert Rice of the Pennsylvania State Police said his organization had made progress in the Philadelphia area by assigning two men to work full time in meeting and talking with "potentially hostile people" and organizations in both the Negro and white communities.

To Build Confidence

He said this served to build confidence in the police and to turn potential enemies of law enforcement into allies.

"We're doing much the same thing," said a San Diego policeman, "'and we've had people [extremists] like that stop a riot."

And Herbert L. Carter, a con-munity relations specialists. Many wanted to know what steps they could take immediately to insure a calm summer.

Lieut. Robert Rice of the Pennsylvania State Police said his organization had made progress in the Philadelphia area by assigning two men to work full time in meeting and talking with "potentially hostile people" and organizations in both the Negro and white communities.

To Build Confidence

He said this served to build confidence in the police and to turn potential enemies of law enforcement into allies.

"We're doing much the same thing," said a San Diego policeman, "'and we've had people [extremists] like that stop a riot."

And Herbert L. Carter, a consultant with the Los Angeles County Commission on Human Relations, said his organization was taking steps to promote discussion between policemen and members of ghetto groups that the police consider "extremists."

"There are a lot of bugaboos about this black power business," commented Mr. Dodson of New York University in urging the police to make an effort to understand militant minority groups.

On 'Being Pushy'

"I want to say that I do not believe it is possible for a member of a group which is powerless in a society to grow to maturity without some trauma in the perception of his himself. Most minority groups have been accused at some time of being pushy."

Mr. Watson said that riots frequently occurred as a result of the following chain of events: An officer attempts to arrest a ghetto dweller, the dweller refuses to submit to arrest peacefully, a crowd gathers, and the policeman uses force to make the arrest on grounds that his authority will be undermined if he "backs away."

"Now I ask the question, Does this mean that a different approach to law and order is required in these [ghetto] areas as compared to others because of basic psychological and environmental differences?"

Several speakers, including Mr. Dodson, said a major part of the blame for racial unrest in recent years lay in poor housing conditions and inadequate incomes in Negro ghettos. This, they said, creates tension and despair and makes it possible for a relatively minor incident to trigger a riot.

"Aside from police training," added Mr. Watson, "we must take steps at the community level to reduce the sensitivity of the trigger by correcting those situations which lead to expressions of dissatisfaction, and, perhaps, eventual rebellion."

Close-Up

POLICE

'Brutality' or 'Rudeness,' It's a Serious Problem

AC 7/13/67

Three plainclothes detectives shouldered their way into a private Negro club on Simpson Road, looking for crimes of vice. They found none. As they entered, a club member touched a detective's arm and asked to see identification. He was jailed for interfering with an officer.

Minutes later the detectives were down the street at a shopping center, closing in on a clutch of Negro youths on the sidewalk as though stalking arch-villains. The police admittedly hadn't known the boys previously, but said they had heard them cursing loudly. This reporter had heard no cursing or undue noise. The youths were frisked, lined up, harshly questioned and then packed in a paddy wagon under a blanket public disturbance charge.

The next day the shopping center owner was at police headquarters asking for increased police patrols because the youths were threatening to break every window in the center in retaliation for police harassment.

Less than a week later, near a shopping center a short distance away, a man lay dead in a doorway, a child was seriously wounded and two others were injured when shotgun blasts turned Dixie Hills into a war front. Large scale street violence had erupted in Atlanta for the third time in less than a year.

The arrests this reporter witnessed were not exceptions and not unrelated to the ensuing Dixie Hills uprising. They were samples of the continuing police methods that build the frustrations that feed the fires set by the Stokely Carmichaels.

Dixie Hills is no traditional slum of dense, gut-level poverty. Some wondered why violence struck there. Perhaps one reason was that Negroes there have something basic in common with their kin in Vine City and Summerhill — the frustration of being trapped in a ghetto and a deep, trembling fear of police.

In their turn the police feel frustration at Supreme Court rulings, spiraling crime rates, mounting unrest among Negroes and demands for more sophisticated policing. They take it out on Negroes, tightening the grip of authority, and the tension spiral climbs toward its point.

The same arm of the law which must carry shotguns and helmets into violence-torn ghettos is the arm which also must carry a measure of the blame for that violence. The jailings I witnessed in pre-riot Dixie Hills were, in my opinion, on trumped up charges. The detectives harassed. They contributed nothing toward calming Negro nerves.

There have been many complaints of police brutality. They were heard in Dixie Hills and on Broad Street downtown. Though often called upon to be with police on the scene, I have never seen proof of outright brutality. What I have seen is more subtle, harder to fight in court. Alderman Richard Freeman, who heads the Police Committee, asked if it wasn't "discourtesy, not brutality" about which Negroes in Dixie Hills complained. My term would be stronger: Rudeness, which the dictionary says includes the "desire to wound."

Perhaps it is not brutality to call a Negro "boy," or to refuse to step aside to let a Negro pass, or to shoulder a Negro aside needlessly. A court wouldn't call it brutality when detectives joke at length about starting a "rout" and calling in a mythical truckload of bricks "if they want some trouble." But such has been all too common among Atlanta police, as it was that night on Simpson Road.

The Negro jailed for asking to see a detective's identification said he was from the North. "I don't know how you do things down here," he told the officer. Later the same detective explained "how" to another Negro club member: "I don't want any of you touching me," he said several times.

Police have a hard enough job. The pay is low, the work thankless. Yet too often, out of ignorance or frustration, police aggravate their own working conditions. The officer on the street is the hand of the white man which most often touches the ghetto-trapped Negroes, too frequently and too dramatically driving home to them what Carmichael berates as "white power."

Atlanta knows it must meet the slum tragedy head-on if it is to silence the angry. It must provide opportunity for jobs, housing, education. More immediately it must see to it that those with authority in their hands recognize that Negroes are due their rights, including the same personal dignity all men seek, and that Negroes, too, are innocent until proven guilty.

The editorial page is a page of opinion, an unusual forum for a reporter whose customary role is to record fact without commentary. But I was there last September in Summerhill, and again on Boulevard, and the racial tension I see now in Atlanta demands this speaking out.

Coourtesy is not the exclusive responsibility of the select few in the police department's Crime Prevention Bureau or the bi-racial Community Relations Council which hears with tiring regularity the catalogue of tragic slum stories. Both agencies have used common decency well in opening lines of communication so Atlanta's slum-dwellers may be heard. They must not work alone. Theirs is the responsibility of all men, and all policemen.—DICK HEBERT.

Pol.
~~Rel. Rights~~ - Gen.

Election 1962:

Thunder on the Right

WHEN THE Conservative party of New York State cried out recently against the "tyranny of liberal interlopers" in the Republican party who had "again and again . . . imposed on the voters of New York a meaningless choice between Tweedledum and Tweedledee," their indignation echoed back over several decades. "Me-tooism" has been the recurrent cry of right-wing Republicans, as their party has brushed aside more orthodox candidates to nominate a series of men called "upstart" or "watered down" Republicans: Willkie, Dewey, the triumphant Eisenhower, and Richard Nixon. No wonder the public is bored, they assert, with pallid political debate. Let us be done with compromise; let us recover our integrity, and penetrate the prevailing political fog with stirring convictions, clearly stated and courageously defended.

And why not? The call to political purity has an enduring appeal; Eisenhower was elected in 1952 in part because of a public weariness with "politics as usual" and a yearning for a purer, more elevated governmental plane. It eventually became evident that despite the Eisenhower crusade and the President's genuine indifference to politics, politics as usual had not, after all, been abolished, and the minks and freezers of the Truman era were followed by the saga of Sherman Adams, which, in turn, was followed by Billie Sol Estes. Nevertheless, hope springs eternal that the body politic may one day be cleansed of its compromise and corruptions, that a new political day may dawn in which issues are faced and fought forthrightly.

The same argument is used on the other side, too; it is not only the Right which longs for freedom to speak its own voice. "Who needs the South?" impatient Northern liberal Democrats have been heard to suggest. But today, for the most part, the thunder is from the right, as conservatives seek to define a position against what they see as the predominant liberal consensus. Their hope is that Americans may be awakened, before it is too late, by True Conservatives able to bring the national peril into focus, and that candidates who stand rather than straddle will bring to the polls millions of apathetic voters who have sat out years of "Me-Tooist" elections.

It is most unlikely to happen. Discontented New York Conservatives who claim the Republican leadership under Rockefeller has "made the Republican party on the state level virtually indistinguishable from the Democratic party" will do well to look back to the year 1949, when the parties and their candidates could be readily distinguished. That year, old-line liberal Democrat Herbert Lehman was running for the Senate against a Republican candidate who had had enough of Me-Tooism and took a clear conservative line—the late John Foster Dulles. Dulles spoke out firmly against the "welfare state" and was roundly defeated by Lehman by a margin of 200,000 votes.

Unfortunately for conservative hopes, those apathetic citizens who sit home on election day are not, for the most part, Republicans at all, either of modern or conservative stripe; they are Democrats. In 1960, when our pre-election surveys used a series of questions about past voting habits and present voting intentions to divide respondents into those likely or unlikely to vote, Democrats represented 49 per cent of the likely voters and 60 percent of those unlikely to vote. The same pattern was evident in 1956.

IN 1960, although no True Conservative was running for President, it was the Republicans who were more involved in the election. Asked in September how important they thought the outcome of the election, 59 per cent of the Republicans interviewed replied that it was of major importance that their candidate won. Only 49 per cent of the Democrats echoed this sentiment. One month later, 74 per cent of the Republicans and only 65 per cent of the Democrats reported that they were "very much interested in the coming election." The silent America is, for the most part, a Democratic America; the hidden America waiting to spring to voting action at the "True Conservative" call just doesn't exist.

If ultra-conservatives wish to contribute their convictions to the national political dialogue, they have a right—and a duty—to do so. But they should not do so under the illusion that they can arouse a groundswell of latent conservative sentiment, that they can persuade the nation to follow them. The Republicans who might have large followings are liberals such as Richard Nixon, Nelson Rockefeller, Jacob Javits, John Sherman Cooper, Clifford Case. If the ultra-conservative Republicans kill them off, they will kill their party.

We are a moderate nation, long used to following the middle of the road, capable at most of brief attraction to intermittent eruptions from left or right. In the early Thirties, the nation was for a while willing to go along with all of Roosevelt's experiments, but by the end of the decade, the people were calling a stop to further social innovation. So, in the Fifties, McCarthyism, while never enjoying majority support, had for a time some popular appeal; but a few months before the Senator's death, only 16 per cent of the public approved of him, 20 per cent disapproved, and the rest were "neutral." Today, among those who have heard of the John Birch Society, only 8 per cent hold a favorable opinion of it.

This moderation is nothing new. American politics, like that of all healthy democratic countries, is based on compromise, and the way we work out our compromises is within our political parties. In such a large and heterogeneous country, any winner in the political arena must represent a coalition of forces; no single ideological or regional view can prevail. This has been true from the beginning, and the first Me-Too candidate was William Henry Harrison, who brought the conservative Whigs to power in 1840 through a frontier-flavored, Jacksonian-type campaign. Our political party history has been characterized by a series of shifting coalitions, as political, social and economic forces waxed and waned on the political scene. When one party has begun to represent too fixedly the limited beliefs or interests of any single group, becoming unresponsive to the popular forces of the day, that party has eventually lost power. Sometimes liberalism has found its best home in the Republican party, sometimes in the Democratic. Minority protests against the prevailing majority have only found effective expression through influencing a major party's policies; third parties have produced much oratory, but have left little mark in elected candidates. Dictatorship remains man's only escape from political compromise, because political compromise is part of the essential fabric of the democratic way of life.

—ELMO ROPER.

1/9/63

1963 Pol. General

JOHN W. McCORMACK, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, Speaker, and Ralph R. Roberts, a citizen of the State of Indiana, Clerk of the House of Representatives of the Eighty-eighth Congress.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

RULES OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 5) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That the Rules of the House of Representatives of the Eighty-seventh Congress, together with all applicable provisions of the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1946, as amended, be, and they are hereby, adopted as the Rules of the House of Representatives of the Eighty-eighth Congress, with the following amendment therein as a part thereof, to wit:

Strike out subsection (p) of rule X and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(p) Committee on Rules, to consist of fifteen Members."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 4 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent that all Members may revise and extend their remarks on the subject under discussion at this time.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this resolution is to increase the size of the Committee on Rules from 12 to 15 members.

This resolution will do no more nor less than make permanent the rule under which we operated during the 87th Congress.

The experience of the last 2 years has allayed every fear which was expressed at the time the temporary rule was adopted.

Opponents of this resolution contended that if it was passed it would lead to packing and purging of all the committees of the House, to floods of closed rules being reported, and to other consequences too dire to contemplate.

The experience of the 87th Congress under two Speakers has proved that these fears were unfounded. Now our Republican friends want to purge and to pack: they want to purge a Democrat and pack on a Republican.

This change in the Committee on Rules did not dismantle the Committee on Rules or undermine its authority.

It had no adverse effect on any other committee of the House.

It did not alter the prerogatives of the chairman or any other member of the Committee on Rules.

All it did was to establish the principal of majority rule and responsible government in the Committee on Rules and make the Committee on Rules the servant and not the master of the House.

There is nothing sacrosanct about a 12-man committee.

Historically the Rules Committee has consisted of an odd number of members during many Congresses.

Under the permanent rules of the House every committee of the House has an odd number of members except the Committee on Rules where a tie vote thwarts the entire legislative process.

Opponents of this resolution argue that it is not needed—that under other procedures the majority may always express its will.

Any Member who has served in this House as much as one term knows that as a practical matter this is not true.

They talk about suspension of the rules.

This is an extraordinary procedure requiring a two-thirds vote under which debate is limited and the opportunity to offer amendments is denied.

This procedure is one under which historically, except on very rare occasions, major legislation is not considered.

They talk about the discharge petition.

This is only a safety valve, which may be used to circumvent not only the Committee on Rules but all legislative committees of the House.

If we were to start reporting a large number of major bills of a controversial character under discharge petitions, we might as well abolish the committee system.

We would be denying ourselves the use of those procedures which have been developed through the years for the orderly consideration of legislation.

This extraordinary procedure is certainly no substitute for the general rules of the House.

They talk about Calendar Wednesday.

Every time a matter is brought out under the Calendar Wednesday procedure, the same Members who oppose this resolution resort to every kind of dilatory tactic, every kind of delay, every kind of filibuster which the rules of the House make possible.

Calendar Wednesday is limited in scope.

This is not a procedure designed to protect majority rule: This rule is available only to committees.

We believe that the majority of the Members of this House should have a reasonable opportunity to have major legislation considered under the regular rules of the House.

This is the issue here.

I hope the resolution is agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I am opposed to the adoption of this resolution. It is unwise, it is unnecessary, it is inadvisable, and I think it is highly improper that we adopt it at this time. It is no secret that I was against this sort of move 2 years ago. My view did not prevail at that time. The Committee on Rules membership was increased from 12 to 15.

If I understand the majority leader correctly—and I do not have to elaborate here on the high respect and regard I have for him—he said that many things we prophesied did not come to pass.

Let me comment on that by saying from what I could observe it did not make much difference that the membership of the Rules Committee was increased from 12 to 15. An education bill came before the committee of 15 in 1961 and it was defeated decisively in committee. I recall that subsequently an omnibus educational facilities bill was called up on Calendar Wednesday, bypassing the Rules Committee. What happened? The House of Representatives correctly refused to consider it, by a vote of 242 to 170.

I say the pending proposal is unwise. You will observe that this is a permanent increase in the committee membership. In the resolution, reference is made to the 1946 Reorganization Act that established the size of the committees. This is the first time that an attempt has been made to change the basic act with respect to numbers. Certainly, temporarily we have increased numbers, but never have we attempted to make the change permanent before today.

May I say the arguments for this proposition are based on erroneous and invalid assumptions. Even the Chief Executive—for whom I have the highest regard, and for whom I have come down here in the well of the House and fought for things he said were important, some of them not very popular back home in my area—has stated, "I hope that the Rules Committee is kept to its present number, because we can't function if it isn't. We are through if we lose. Our whole program, in my opinion, would be emasculated."

I say the record disproves that.

If I may be permitted to add, with all humility, that the President's statement is something of an affront, not only to the Republican members of the Rules Committee, on which I served at one time, but to all members of the Rules Committee—and I am not so sure the affront does not apply to the whole Congress, because, after all, it is our business, our responsibility, to legislate for the good of this country.

I say that the record disproves the validity of the President's contention because the Republican members of the Rules Committee for years, including the last 2 years, have helped to vote out rules on highly controversial measures, many of them they did not believe in. Who can stand up here and say that the Members on my side, and I say generally on both sides of the aisle, did not support measures that needed to be enacted?

There are times when the Rules Committee should not report measures. I have been majority leader twice. I am proud we had a Rules Committee that had courage enough and stamina enough to stand up against reporting measures to the floor, many of which would have bankrupted the Treasury of the United States.

So I say again, Mr. Speaker, whatever is reported by any legislative committee, whether the Rules Committee is 15 or 12, has its fair chance of being considered on the floor.

I trust the resolution will be voted down, and that then we can proceed to the adoption of rules of the House as they existed before the past Congress.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] 5 minutes.

Mr. BOGGS. Mr. Speaker, I would venture that at the time that we debated this issue at the beginning of the 87th Congress the vast majority of the Members of this body did not even know that the resolution which we adopted with respect to the Committee on Rules was limited to the 87th Congress. I am convinced of the fact that most of them thought at that time that we were permanently changing the ratio on the Committee on Rules to 15 to 10. So, this is not a new issue confronting us today. What we are trying to do is maintain the committee at 15.

Now, I had hoped that this issue would not come up. I can say, and I think with all sincerity, that the leadership cooperated with the chairman and the other members of the Committee on Rules throughout the 87th Congress. I know of no effort at any time on the part of the Speaker or anyone else associated with the scheduling of legislation to run roughshod over the Committee on Rules or any other committee. Early this winter some of our Members, upon returning here, began talking about the 21-day rule and of curbing the jurisdiction of the Committee on Rules. I was opposed to this and it was my feeling that the matter would be resolved without any difficulty and that the chairman of the committee would not join issue in light of existing full cooperation between him and the Speaker. That did not happen. So, here today we are debating the matter all over again.

Now, let us reduce this thing to its fundamentals. We are told that this is a packing device. That is a word that so many people use. I have heard this committee compared to a court. It has no relationship to a court, as everybody knows. It is an agency of the Congress of the United States, created to carry out the will of the majority of the Congress of the United States and to carry on the business of legislating. For 80 years the Committee on Rules was not even a standing committee of the House. In five Congresses the Speaker did not even appoint a Committee on Rules. The membership has been 5, 11, 12, 14, and 15 at various times. The notion that there is something sacrosanct about the number is not so.

Now, let us talk about "packing." I read in the press—and I do not know whether this is so or not, but I read—and if I am wrong, I want someone to correct me—that at the Republican conference on yesterday the conference voted unanimously 145 to nothing, as I read it, to vote down the previous question here today so that an amendment could be offered which would provide for a Committee on Rules of 9 to 6 rather than 10 to 5. Now, if I am wrong about that, I hope that the minority leader will correct me. Am I wrong about that news report?

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BOGGS. Surely.

Mr. HALLECK. I was down at the White House, and the gentleman was present at the meeting.

Mr. BOGGS. Yes.

Mr. HALLECK. And I was not here at the conclusion of the caucus. But I think his understanding of what happened is correct, and shortly the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAIRD] will explain that in some detail.

Mr. BOGGS. I thank the gentleman from the bottom of my heart.

What this means is that this so-called packing issue has gone out the window. The Republican opposition wants to pack the committee by adding a Republican and purge it by removing a Democrat.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Louisiana yield to me?

Mr. BOGGS. Surely.

Mr. HALLECK. It is true that the gentleman from Louisiana is a member of the great Committee on Ways and Means?

Mr. BOGGS. Correct.

Mr. HALLECK. It is composed of a membership of 15 to 10, is it not?

Mr. BOGGS. Yes, sir.

Mr. HALLECK. And has been that way since we have been here?

Mr. BOGGS. Right.

Mr. HALLECK. If the gentleman will yield further, would the gentleman think of us putting two or three more Democrats on that committee just because the gentleman wanted to get something out of that committee that the gentleman could not otherwise get out?

Mr. BOGGS. The Ways and Means Committee is a legislative committee. The Rules Committee is procedural, but the gentleman has not replied to my statement, because I said to the gentleman if there be a principle involved—and I think there is—I think the principle is whether or not democracy works, and not one of packing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] has expired.

Mr. BOGGS. Would the gentleman from Oklahoma yield me additional time? May I have 3 additional minutes?

Mr. ALBERT. I yield the gentleman 3 additional minutes.

Mr. BOGGS. Back in the 87th Congress, some people proposed that my good friend, the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. COLMER], be purged from the committee. I was one of those who went to Speaker Rayburn—God bless his soul—and said "Mr. Speaker, this cannot happen." I was opposed to it. Now I am opposed to a proposition today which will purge from this committee Congressman SISK if the Republican proposition is adopted, because that is exactly what it means.

Members of the House know that the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CURTIS] who is my good friend, made a speech here in 1961 and here is what he said. I quote from him directly:

> I remember in the 83d Congress when we won by a majority of 6, at which time we packed the Rules Committee, if one wants to use that term, 2 to 1 or 8 to 4, the Ways and Means Committee 15 to 10, the Appropriations Committee 30 to 20. The principle is a sound principle and I think in this instance we make a mistake as the Republican Party to oppose this basic proposal.

In other words, what the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CURTIS] was saying was that had the Republicans elected a majority of the House of Representatives, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] would have had his way. The Committee on Ways and Means would be 15 to 10 Republicans rather than 15 to 10 Democrats. The Committee on Rules would be 15 to 10 Republicans rather than 15 to 10 Democrats. Yet no one would call this purging or packing these two committees.

But bear in mind that the Rules Committee is not a legislative committee. It is a policy committee and designed to respond to the majority whether it be Republican or Democratic.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. BOGGS. I would be happy to yield to the distinguished majority leader.

Mr. ALBERT. On the question raised by the distinguished minority leader in changing the membership of the Committee on Ways and Means, the Committee on Ways and Means is a legislative committee and the matter of a 2-to-1 ratio on legislative committees has never been the practice of the House of Representatives. The Committee on Rules is a committee which has more to do with the procedures of the House of Representatives than any other body in the Congress.

Mr. BOGGS. Exactly. Let me make this one final point, and I do not say this in any partisan way. I address this to my dear friends, my colleagues who come from the South. I like to use the expression that the great former Speaker used: "I am a Democrat without prefix or suffix." I am proud to be a Democrat. I am proud to be a southerner and a native of Mississippi. I am proud to be a citizen of the greatest country on earth—the United States of America.

There were many people who predicted that those of us who said democracy ought to work, that the majority ought to be able to assert its will, that 435 Members ought to be able to vote rather than just 6 Members on an issue, that we were going to be defeated. What really happened? I look over here and I see my great friend, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. LONG] sitting in Congress. He defeated a very dear friend of mine, the gentleman from Louisiana, Mr. Harold McSween, who voted the other way.

Then I look about and I see a young man from Georgia sitting back here. He looks like a very fine man. I was devoted to Judge Davis. He was very close to my dear friend, the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH]. He took the well of this House, if I remember correctly, and predicted all of these dire things. Well, there sits this young man. I am sorry that Judge Davis is not here.

I could go on and call this roll. Over here on your side I saw today the distinguished new Governor of Pennsylvania, Governor Scranton, and God bless him. I think he is going to make a great Governor. But I remember how he voted on this issue, and I look back and I do not believe there is a single Member who sits on the Republican side who voted to let democracy work who was defeated.

I say to the Members of the House from the South who are afraid, "Do not be afraid. The Democratic Party is being built stronger than ever in the South." I am glad the Republicans are making strides in the South. I think it is a good thing for our country. It is good to have a strong two-party system.

But these are the issues. I trust that the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma will prevail.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAIRD].

FAIRPLAY AMENDMENTS

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, I think it is well for us first to review where we are in the House proceedings. The gentleman from Oklahoma, I understand, will move the previous question after his hour has expired. We will have a vote on whether to put the previous question at that time. If the previous question motion carries, debate will be ended and there will be no opportunity to consider amendments to the Rules of the House of Representatives for the 88th Congress.

I believe it is most important that today we be given an opportunity to discuss fully and fairly the Rules of the House of Representatives. There have been many times during my 10-year period of service here in the House when I have heard Members on both sides of the aisle criticize various House rules. This is the proper time to give real consideration to the Rules of the House of Representatives. It is my hope that the motion on the previous question will fail. If this motion fails it is my intent to see that the amendments approved by the Republican conference yesterday are offered.

The fairplay amendments are as follows:

Amend the resolution by striking out line 6, page 1, and inserting in lieu thereof the following amendments therein as a part thereof, to wit: Strike out subsection (p) of rule X and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(p) Committee on Rules, to consist of fifteen Members (nine majority and six minority)."

That rule XI is hereby amended by adding at the end thereof:

"(r) All House standing and investigative committee staffs shall be composed 40 per centum of members selected by, responsible to, and serving at the pleasure of a majority of minority committee members."

That rule XXVIII, clause 2, is hereby amended by striking out the period and inserting a colon, and adding the following: "Provided, That time for discussion on conference reports shall be divided, with 50 per centum of the time to be controlled by the majority party and 50 per centum by the minority party."

I do not see why the majority party should fear these amendments. They should be willing to debate them individually, and then vote them up or down. By moving the previous question adequate debate on these amendments cannot be had and it would not give the minority party an opportunity to present its case fully and thoroughly.

In this last election 48 percent of the American people voted for Republican congressional candidates. It is true that as far as the membership is concerned we have only 40 percent of the Members. But we feel that as a minority party we should be given recognition for that 40 percent membership here in the House of Representatives if representative government is truly to work. We are not asking for 48 percent; we are asking for 40 percent which represents our membership.

It should be understood that if I should ever be fortunate enough to be a member of the majority party in some future Congress, I would support these very same amendments for the minority. These fairplay amendments are absolutely necessary and vital so that the House of Representatives may have true two-party interplay.

Mr. Speaker, what are these amendments. The first proposed amendment to the rules providing for fairplay would establish that the Rules Committee be made up of 15 members. We will not argue with the majority if they insist on that particular number. I do not want to get into a numbers game as far as the total membership is concerned, but this amendment would provide that the minority would have the same representation on this committee as we have Members in the House of Representatives; the same ratio that prevails in the Committee on Ways and Means, the same ratio that prevails in the Committee on Appropriations. That is 40 percent, which is our representation in the House.

The second amendment would provide that 40 percent of the committee staffs would have to have the approval of a majority of the minority.

The majority party has access to a tremendous amount of help from the executive branch of our Government.

The minority party is in a position where it has responsibilities to a vast segment of the people of the United States, but we do not have adequate staffing of many of the committees. This would provide that 40 percent of those staffs would have the approval of a majority of the minority.

The third amendment which we would like to propose with the approval of the Republican conference would provide that the minority party would have equal time of conference reports. Legislation today is being written more and more in conference. It is most important that the minority party, in order to present adequately its position on the floor of the House and to the American people, be given the assurance that when a conference report comes to the floor of the House of Representatives the minority party under the rules of the House of Representatives be recognized for one-half of the time.

These are the three amendments we propose. But if the previous question is voted down, it gives an opportunity for other amendments that may have been discussed by other Members to be considered as well. It is my hope that the previous question will be voted down. Certainly the minority party cannot be placed in a position where it supports the adoption of the rules as set forth in the Albert resolution, because they do not give proper protection to the minority. We in the minority are simply asking for fairplay.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT].

Mr. HÉBERT. Mr. Speaker, I was born a Democrat, I have lived as a Democrat, and I will die as a Democrat. I learned the philosophy of the Democratic Party at the knee of my father, who echoed the philosophy he heard at the knee of his father about the principles of the Democratic Party. I believe in that philosophy today as I believed in it then. Principles do not change with the times. I still live in the shadow of that which I learned in my youth, in full cognizance of the fact that, while being a member of the Democratic Party, I have the right to disagree and not be disagreeable.

I am not a party hack and I am not a party pawn. Let us get the record straight. I am opposed to the packing, fixing, stacking, or whatever other synonym you may use, whether it comes from my own side of the aisle or from the other side of the aisle. The principle of packing is wrong, no matter who advances it, whether it be from the Democratic or Republican side, and it is on principle that I speak and address you today.

As dean of the Louisiana delegation, I declined to call a caucus on this subject. I held this was a matter of decision and determination for each individual to make with himself, his constituency and his conscience. I accept that rule myself and feel confident that I echo the wishes and the will of my constituency, which has sent me here for 22 years, longer than any man in the history of my district. So I think I represent their wishes. My conscience dictates that I stand up to the principles in which I believe. If I failed to rise here today and take this opportunity to state my position I would not be worthy of the seat which I occupy in this House.

Walk with me in spirit down to the Jefferson Memorial. Lift your eyes and read what is written in that circle above the statue of Thomas Jefferson:

I have pledged upon the altar of God eternal hostility to any form of tyranny over the mind of man.

That is the principle involved here today. This may not be the most sophisticated group of individuals in the world, but it is certainly not the most naive. We all know that this proposition is a device for control. This is changing the rules to suit the purpose of the moment. This is a device, not even subtle, to use the tyranny of control by numbers over the Rules Committee.

It was 50 years ago—almost to the day, that the then called liberals in the House changed the rules of this body and wrested the power of tyranny and control over the minds of individuals from the then Republican Speaker Joe Cannon. The fight was led by that great Missourian Champ Clark who became one of our great Speakers of the House of Representatives and almost the Democratic nominee for the office of President of the United States. He was backed up by that great Alabaman Oscar Underwood from the South—yes. And, incidentally, I might say I have no objection to being called a southern Democrat. I am proud of it and I hope I always hold my head high and say, "Yes, classify me as a southern Democrat, if you will; you pay me tribute and homage, and do me honor."

What did these liberals do 50 years ago? They formed a Rules Committee to wrest the power of tyranny from the then Speaker of the House. My distinguished colleague from New Orleans has told you this is a permanent piece of legislation. He is correct, and therein is the danger. There is the real danger.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, will my colleague and dear friend yield?

Mr. HÉBERT. Certainly, I yield to my colleague.

Mr. ALBERT. Does not the gentleman think it is just as important to wrest undue power from six Members as the House wrested such undue power from one Member in the past?

Mr. HÉBERT. I think it is most important that the will of the majority of this House be worked. I think the majority here should prevail and I do not think anybody in this House should have the power and control over what the majority of the House wants. I do not care whether it is 1 man, 6 men, or 20 men. The gentleman has put his finger on the real issue. Any time 218 Members of this body want a bill considered on the floor of this House, they just have to walk a few steps and sign a discharge petition and the fact that the majority does not sign such a petition means that they do not want it.

It is the principle of majority rule that I fight for today, be it on a committee or in the House itself. Packing is not majority rule, packing is the exercise of tyranny over the minds of men which Jefferson cried out against and to which I subscribe. Packing a committee or a court is repugnant to the democratic processes and I denounce it.

Anybody who believes in majority rule cannot support this insidious device to thwart the will of the duly constituted Committee on Rules as provided in the Reorganization Act.

It should be of more than passing interest to the membership of this House and particularly to my southern colleagues to review the names of the organizations and individuals who have joined together to send letters to Members of Congress urging them to pack the Rules Committee.

This list speaks more eloquently than anything I may say here today. Read the list and ask yourselves if you accept the philosophy of how many of these organizations from the NAACP down to the very end.

It is most interesting to see some of my colleagues from the South and some of my conservative Republican friends standing shoulder to shoulder phalanx-like with such organizations.

Here is the list:

National Association for the Advancement of Colored People: Roy Wilkins, executive secretary.

American Veterans Committee: Murray Gross, national chairman.

American Civil Liberties Union: John deJ. Pemberton, Jr., executive director.

Textile Workers Union of America: John W. Edelman, Washington representative.

International Union of Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers: James B. Carey, president.

Friends Committee on National Legislation: Edward F. Snyder, executive secretary.

Union of American Hebrew Congregations: Rabbi Richard G. Hirsch, director religious action center.

Japanese American Citizens League: Mike Masaoka, Washington representative.

American Federation of State, County, and Municipal Employees: Arnold S. Zander, president.

American Jewish Committee: A. M. Sonnabend, president.

Transport Workers Union of America: Matthew Guinan, secretary-treasurer.

Unitarian Fellowship for Social Justice: Rev. Robert Zoerheide, vice chairman.

American Newspaper Guild: Charles A. Perlik, Jr., secretary-treasurer.

United Automobile, Aerospace & Agricultural Workers of America: Walter P. Reuther, president.

National Farmers Union: James Patton, president.

Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith: Benjamin R. Epstein, national director.

Women's International League for Peace and Freedom (U.S. Section): Dr. Dorothy H. Hutchinson, president.

Americans for Democratic Action: Joseph L. Rauh, Jr., vice chairman.

Industrial Union Department, AFL-CIO: Walter P. Reuther, president.

American Jewish Congress: Rabbi Joachim Prinz, president.

Catholic Council on Civil Liberties: Matthew Clarke, Washington representative.

National Alliance of Postal Employees: Ashby G. Smith, president.

Delta Sigma Theta Sorority: Miss Marie Barksdale, executive director.

Jewish War Veterans: Morton L. London, national commander.

United Rubber, Cork, Linoleum & Plastic Workers of America: George Burdon, president.

Council for Christian Social Action of the United Church of Christ: Dr. Ray Gibbons, director.

Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters: A. Philip Randolph, president.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROOSEVELT].

Mr. ROOSEVELT. Mr. Speaker, there are a number of us from both sides of the aisle who had hoped today to offer an amendment to the rules that would deal with the transfer of the jurisdiction of the House Un-American Activities Committee to the Committee on the Judiciary. However, it becomes very obvious today that the only way to do this would be to help the Republican minority defeat the proposition of the previous question and thus to attack the leadership from this side of the aisle; therefore, there are a number of us who have introduced and will introduce a House resolution to accomplish our purpose. This resolution will be referred to the Committee on Rules and I am happy to tell my colleagues that the distinguished chairman of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALTER], has agreed with me that he would join in a request that it be heard by the committee. I am satisfied therefore this House will at a later date be able to work its will on this question. Those of us who want this action to be taken will have our day in court. We have no right to ask for more. I hope therefore that the leadership on this side of the aisle will be supported and a large majority cast for the motion of the gentleman from Oklahoma. The basic issue involved in my resolution will be fully discussed soon.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BROWN].

(Mr. BROWN of Ohio asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, almost an hour ago I listened with very rapt attention to one of the most eloquent speeches I have heard in a long, long time, when our beloved Speaker, and my good personal friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts, JOHN MCCORMACK, assumed the speakership of this House for the 88th Congress.

In his great address, it is true, he indicated his rather firm conviction and belief that perhaps all of the virtues which have come to mankind throughout the centuries now rest within the confines of his own political party, while all of the vices to which men have fallen victim throughout the centuries belonged to those of us who may be members of the opposite party. There may be some disagreement about that.

But I do not believe any of us can disagree with that which the Speaker said when he called upon the membership of this House to cast aside partisanship in the consideration of the great issues that come before us. So, despite some peculiar statements which have been made here, I shall not make a political speech or attempt to make a political issue out of the problem that now confronts us.

Let me fix in your minds clearly, if I may, my position. I have the very firm conviction that it is just as ethically and morally wrong for a President of the United States to attempt to pack a committee of the Congress of the United States for purely political purposes and to gain his way, whether he be a Democrat or Republican, as for a President of the United States to attempt to pack the Supreme Court in order to get a judicial decision that will please him and go the way he wants it to go; or just as wrong morally and ethically as for a great labor leader to attempt to pack a jury in order to get an acquittal of a criminal charge against himself.

I say to you that such is wrong, that it is evil, that regardless of whether we are Democrats or Republicans we should have the manhood and the moral fiber to stand up and denounce that which is evil and is wrong, and to vote against it, because there can be nothing gained permanently by doing that which we know in our own hearts and souls is wrong. As the ranking minority member of the Rules Committee I am just a bit provoked, discouraged and disheartened by statements to the effect that legislation will be emasculated in our committee unless the committee is packed by the addition of three new members which, of course, in turn would reduce the effectiveness of the minority Members of the House, and of the committee itself.

Let us look at the record, as the late Al Smith—by the way, a great member of the Democratic Party—often said in the past. There are about 20,000 bills and resolutions introduced in each Congress. Out of that number relatively few ever come before the Rules Committee of the House for 90 percent are stopped in the legislative committees of the House. Do we hear nothing about their being obstructionists? No. Many of them are stopped in the Ways and Means Committee of this House, the great Ways and Means Committee, or in the Judiciary Committee, and some other great committee where we have very able and honest men. That is where such bills are stopped.

Let us look further at the record for a moment as to what happened when we had only 12 members of the Rules Committee, 8 from the majority and 4 from the minority party, and I refer to the 86th Congress. Requests for hearings were made for 146 bills. Hearings were held on 124, and rules were granted to send to the floor for consideration 111 of those bills. Only five rules were denied. One of the bills that was before the Rules Committee, and not heard, was passed on the Consent Calendar, eight under suspension, and some were superseded by other bills when mistakes were found in them.

Nineteen Senate bills came before the House committee in the 86th Congress. There were requests for hearings on that number, and on 15, hearings were held. Fourteen rules, out of the fifteen requested, were granted.

Does that look as if there was any blocking of the House's right to vote on this legislation?

Let us look at the record for another moment. Reference was made a while ago as to the right of the Congress to get a vote on any bill any time it pleases by signing a discharge petition. In the last 24 or 25 years there have been only 2 discharge petitions signed by a majority of the Members of this House, out of some 212 discharge petitions filed. Does that look as if the great, bad ogre, the Rules Committee, whether it be made up of Democrats or Republicans, has been blocking the House of Representatives from working its will? Only one bill was passed on a Calendar Wednesday. Dozens were turned down.

I say to you, this whole proposal, this whole suggested resolution, is simply to cover up, and to control the actions, politically if you please, of a committee of this Congress, something that is morally and ethically wrong, and you and I know it.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH].

(Mr. SMITH of Virginia asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks and to include extraneous matter.)

Mr. SMITH of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, we are talking today about a question that has been debated in this House ever since most of us were born, as to what to do about the Rules Committee. It will be debated when we are gone. Everything has been said about it, I think, that can be said. Certainly I have debated it on numerous occasions. I do not want to go into an extended debate because I have not the allotted time.

As you were told by the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. HÉBERT], the Rules Committee was set up in order to take away the power of one man to determine what should come before this House. This is an effort to put it back where it came from.

The previous Speaker, our beloved friend, Mr. Rayburn, did not want it as a permanent proposition, and he wrote the resolution, or had it written, that fixed it as a one-term proposition.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few plain words to some folks who come from my part of the country.

I have been a Democrat all my life. I have never voted anything but the Democratic ticket. I have some prefixes and suffixes which the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS], my distinguished friend, said he did not have. I am a conservative Democrat, I am a southern Democrat, and I believe my country's welfare is more important than any political party and I further believe that this matter of packing the Rules Committee affects more closely our area of the country than anywhere else.

If this resolution passes, you all know what it means, and it will happen again, and that is to say whenever the President wants a bill passed or the Speaker wants a bill submitted to the floor, he gets it. Now, I think that there ought to be some discretion about this matter so that the Committee on Rules could do now like they have done in the past, at least give the matter some looking over, give it some consideration and a little time, so that the country might know what some of these measures are about. I hope none of my southern friends are going to be complaining around here when certain measures come up that are going to come up, and come up quite promptly, if the Committee on Rules is packed again. And, I hope that when they go to vote on this resolution that they will remember that there are some things involved in this that will greatly and adversely affect their States; not just how many people should be on the Committee on Rules or who shall govern the Committee on Rules. But, it is known that there are many important things to our part of the country that are involved in this packing of the Committee on Rules as it was 2 years ago. And, I hope that at least those Members who voted against the packing before will see fit to do the same thing again, because I believe it is vital to the interests of their States, and I know there are some things that will be coming up that I know you will be against. Do you want it to come out of the committee like the Committee on Ways and Means or some other committee one day, get a rule the next day, bring it up the next day before you have a chance to study it and know what it is about and providing your people an opportunity back home to express their views to you? Now, I am not talking about civil rights. We got licked on that. It should have taught us a lesson, but I am afraid it did not.

Let me say for the benefit of some of the new Members who will soon learn this procedure, we are here in a very difficult fiscal situation. We have run deficit budgets for years and years and years on top of years. We have increased our debt until the interest on it is twice what the whole budget was when I came to the Congress. And, we are over $300 billion in debt now. And, there will not be but 2 or 3 months from now when you will be called upon to again increase the debt limit, and you are going to have to do it if you pass the kind of a budget that the papers say will be presented to us, which will be the largest budget presented to this or any other country at any time in the history of the world, while along with that you are going to be asked to vote a tax cut while you increase expenses. Now, are you going to put yourself in a position like that? Are you going to yield up every little leverage or every little weapon you may have to defeat measures so unsound? Are you going to yield some of your prerogatives and privileges here today that are going to adversely affect your people for the next 20 years? If you do, that is your business and none of mine. I hope that the Members will vote on the rollcall like they would vote if this was a secret ballot, and I would have no fear of its consequences.

I conclude my remarks by including the following editorial from yesterday's Evening Star of Washington, D.C., which expresses my views completely, succinctly, and accurately:

RULES FIGHT

As all brave men must, Speaker MCCORMACK talks confidently of leading his forces to victory in tomorrow's battle over the size of the House Rules Committee. And perhaps the vote will vindicate him on this score.

But we do not think the Speaker is justified in his gloomy forecast of party failure if the size of the committee is restored to 12 instead of 15. Mr. MCCORMACK did not go as far as the President, who said last month that his program would be emasculated unless the committee is again enlarged. But the Speaker did suggest that the Democrats, as the majority party, could not discharge their responsibilities with a 12-member Rules Committee.

The facts, in our judgment, do not support this despairing view. Someone has to decide which bills will be brought before the House for action and which will not. Otherwise chaos would result. For years, until severe pressure by the newly elected President brought about the packing of the Rules Committee in the 87th Congress, that group did the job. And on the whole it did well. If the Rules Committee should be packed again with complaisant members so that it becomes nothing more than a rubberstamp, then the Speaker, presumably acting by direction of the President, will decide which bills will be voted on and which will not. If such a situation appeals to the House, all well and good.

The fact is, however, that it is not necessary to pack the Rules Committee in order to get a vote on any bill which a majority of the Members wants to vote on. There are several ways in which a bill that is bottled up in the committee can be brought to the floor. The simplest, perhaps, is through a petition signed by a bare majority of the House membership. This is more difficult, of course, than cracking the whip over a packed committee. But it is not unduly difficult if the desire is there.

The real difficulty arises in the case of administration-backed bills to which House Members are opposed, but for which they would have to vote for political reasons if the measures should be brought to the floor. In these situations, the reluctant Members are happy to see the bills buried in the Rules Committee and, of course, will not sign discharge petitions. But it does not follow from this that the Rules Committee is thwarting the will of the majority, and every House Member knows it.

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, I intend to support the resolution offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ALBERT] to fix the membership of the Committee on Rules at 15 members.

The issue here, as I see it, is a very simple one. It is not a matter of whether the various bills reported by the Committee on Rules are or are not good and sound bills. It is simply a matter of whether the decision as to the merits of legislation reported favorably from the various standing committees of the House should be made by the House itself or by a single committee of the House.

I cannot subscribe to the theory that it is well or proper for any committee or group of Members to hold a veto over the action of the House as a whole. I cannot support the theory that the right to determine whether a particular bill reported by a standing committee should or should not be passed can properly be delegated to any small group of Members of the House. I believe these decisions can only be made by the House as a whole. If the day ever comes when Members of the House have to be protected from themselves by having the Committee on Rules make decisions for them, then we have no business continuing to serve.

The enlargement of the committee is intended to facilitate its proper function which is simply to determine the circumstances under which legislation will be considered by the House, and to prevent the committee from improperly exercising the function of passing finally and ultimately on the merits of this legislation.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, this is an open attempt by the executive branch of the Government to control directly one of the most powerful committees of Congress. Executive control of the House Rules Committee means another step toward a Hitler-type rubberstamp Congress. Already the Supreme Court has dangerously usurped the legislative power of Congress. This cold, blatant bid to further dominate Congress—this time by the executive branch—is a stark, naked attempt to deprive the people of a direct voice in national affairs and national legislation.

In 1961 the rule-packing forces were led by the House Speaker, an officer of our own choosing in the legislative branch. This time the rule-packing campaign is commanded by the executive branch openly, which is an unconstitutional, unwarranted, and unnecessary effort to usurp the power of Congress as guaranteed by the Constitution.

Executive packing of the Rules Committee will be the first step to launch the Nation on another Federal wild-spending spree. It is the first step of the Washington planners to nationalize education, to control and nationalize medicine and hospitalization, and to legalize and establish a domestic peace corps. It will lead to expanded welfare and so-called depressed area giveaways, also needless additional foreign aid. It will be a grandiose freedom ride on a national scale and further regimentation of the States, local communities, and the individual.

Those of us who oppose packing of the Rules Committee are for constitutional government. We are for States rights, rights of communities, and individual freedom. We are for a sound dollar which will benefit all of the American people, but most of all the workingman. We are for a balanced budget. We are for eliminating deficit financing. We are for fiscal responsibility.

If this Nation is to be preserved and kept fiscally sound and the value of our dollar protected and gold protected, we must defeat this nefarious attempt to pack and make a rubberstamp of the Rules Committee.

Mr. RYAN of New York. Mr. Speaker, I support the resolution offered by the distinguished majority leader which will increase the size of the Committee on Rules from 12 to 15 members. I believe that this is a minimum change which is needed to deal with the power of the Committee on Rules to block legislation. I do not believe that the Committee on Rules, consisting of 12 or 15 or any other number of members, should be able to determine the substantive merit of particular legislation. Yet, this is exactly the role the Committee on Rules has assumed. And the gentleman from Virginia, Judge SMITH, has said candidly and unequivocally that a 12-member committee is in the interest of the conservative bloc. I will vote for the 15 members, but I believe more basic reforms are necessary to overcome the obstructionism of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. Speaker, it is most regrettable that the House will not have the opportunity to consider adoption of the 21-day rule and the 7-day rule on conference reports.

The 21-day rule would provide that, if the Committee on Rules shall adversely report, or fail to report within 21 calendar days after reference, any resolution pending before the committee providing for an order of business for the consideration by the House of any public bill or joint resolution favorably reported by a committee of the House, on days when it shall be in order to call up motions to discharge committees it shall be in order for the chairman or any member of the committee which reported such bill or joint resolution to call up for consideration by the House the resolution which the Committee on Rules has adversely reported or failed to report. Therefore, the House could make its own decisions on recommendations made to it by its legislative committees.

The 7-day rule on conference reports would permit the House to send bills passed by both it and the Senate to a House-Senate conference, after 7 legislative days of inaction by the Committee on Rules. Thus, the entire House, not merely two or three members of the Committee on Rules, could decide whether or not to send the bill to conference.

It should be noted that the 21-day rule was adopted by the 81st Congress, and it worked very well in 1949–50 in bringing important measures to the House floor for a vote. For example, it brought an anti-poll-tax bill and a rivers and harbors bill to the floor for a successful vote, and it forced action on housing and minimum wage bills. In fact, seven of the eight measures brought to the floor by use of the 21-day rule passed the House.

The mere expansion of the Committee on Rules to 15 will not necessarily enable the House to deal effectively and constructively with the multitude of crucial and pressing domestic and international problems this Nation faces. In fact, even with an enlarged committee, vital legislation was blocked in the 87th Congress. The administration was blocked on 2 major bills, aid to education and a Department of Urban Affairs, and was also stopped cold on 22 other bills. Among the bills drafted and voted out by legislative committees and bottled up by the Committee on Rules were: The mass transit bill, the Youth Conservation Corps bill, bills to provide grants for medical and dental school construction and loans for medical and dental students, three migratory labor bills passed by the Senate and reported by the House committee, a bill to establish a Federal Equal Employment Opportunities Committee, and a bill to prohibit Federal aid to impacted school districts which are segregated.

Mr. Speaker, the great unfinished business facing America is civil rights. It is very doubtful that the 15-member committee will clear civil rights measures. Therefore, the 21-day rule is essential to prevent the Committee on Rules from blocking effective civil rights legislation.

To regain its constitutional and necessary role as the major policymaking and problem-solving branch of Government, Congress must revise its organization and operations.

For example, the House must have the power to send bills to a House-Senate conference to work out differences in House and Senate versions, when a conference has been blocked by inaction of the Committee on Rules.

The House must also overcome its inability to consider home-rule legislation for the District of Columbia. The House Committee on the District of Columbia has never permitted a home-rule bill to reach the floor for a vote, notwithstanding the fact that five times since 1948 the other body has passed home-rule legislation, both major party platforms have advocated it since 1948, and Presidents Truman, Eisenhower, and Kennedy have all supported home rule.

I have introduced today a concurrent resolution to establish a Joint Committee on the Organization of the Congress. This resolution is identical to House Concurrent Resolution 577 which I introduced in the 87th Congress. The proposed committee composed of seven Representatives and seven Senators would make a full study of the organization and operation of the Congress and recommend improvements to strengthen it, simplify and expedite its work, improve its relations with other branches of Government, and enable it to meet its constitutional responsibilities.

The committee's studies would include the organization and operation of each House of Congress and the relation between them, their relations with other branches of Government, and the employment and remuneration of officers and employees of the two Houses, their committees, and Members.

The committee would also study the structure of, and relation between, the various committees, the rules, parliamentary procedure, practices, and precedents of either House, and the matter of consolidation and reorganization of committees and their jurisdictions.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the establishment of this committee with the hope that it will make recommendations, which, if adopted, will enable the Congress to function as a truly representative and democratic body, able and willing to effectively enact legislation on all the major problems of today.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished Speaker of the House of Representatives, the Honorable JOHN McCORMACK.

(Mr. McCORMACK asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, to listen to the arguments of some of our friends, one would think that there is something sacred in the number 12 for the Rules Committee. As the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BOGGS] pointed out, the Rules Committee at one time was five, an odd number. Another time it was 11, an odd number. The odd number enables the majority vote. A 6-to-6 vote means that a rule is not reported out. If my friend, the distinguished gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH], took the floor and said that a 6-to-6 vote would be an affirmative vote, the gentleman would be on sounder ground. But a 6-to-6 vote is a negative vote.

I have always felt throughout the years that the Rules Committee should be a majority. Two years ago we did not make it 13 because we wanted to keep the ratio of 2 to 1. If we went to 13 there would be 9 Democrats and 4 Republicans, and we did not want to disturb the ratio. That is an agreement which has existed between the parties and the leadership for years, that on the Committee on Rules there would be a ratio of 2 to 1. Also that the Committee on Ways and Means would be 15 to 10. We are not going to try and disturb the Committee on Ways and Means now, although you give us the precedent for doing so in the action of your conference yesterday when you wanted a Rules Committee of 15, with 6 on the minority side. We could construe that as a violation of the understanding over the years, but as far as I am concerned I see no intention of doing so now.

The Republican conference yesterday agreed to the proposition of 15. There is no principle involved in connection with the size of a committee. It is purely a procedural matter. In what position will my Republican friends be when now they admit the committee should be composed of 15 members when they vote against the 15-man committee when that vote comes up in the House, as I expect it will a little later in the afternoon?

The great majority of my Republican friends—you note I say the "great majority"—have opposed the 15-man committee in the past. Now they say a 15-man committee is desirable by a division of 9 of the majority and 6 of the minority.

If one studies the Rules of the House of Representatives, one will find that there is not one committee which divides among the majority and the minority. The Committee on Banking and Currency is to consist of 27 members, the Committee on the District of Columbia is to consist of 25 members, the Committee on Education and Labor is to consist of 25 members, and so on down the line.

This is the first time that I know of when an attempt has been made to write into the Rules of the House of Representatives the number that shall be on the majority side and the number that shall be on the minority side. That has always been a matter of discussion from Congress to Congress between the leadership of both parties. Then when there is a little embarrassing situation in one party or another, we recognize that and we sort of get together and take care of it. For example, we have increased any number of committees. The Committee on Agriculture under the rules is 27. It is now 35. We will have to keep that increase a little later by resolution of this Congress. The Committee on Appropriations under the rules is 43. It is now 50.

The Committee on Banking and Currency under the rules is 27, and it is now 30. The Committee on Education under the rules is 25, and it was 31 in the last Congress and it will be 31 in this Congress. So on down the line. I can name any number of other committees where under the rules there is prescribed a certain membership, but actually in the last Congress and in the past Congresses their membership is greater than the rules provide. In each Congress we had to provide for that and we will have to do it in this Congress.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCORMACK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman agree with me in the statement that I made when I talked on this matter that in no instance where we have increased the number of members on a committee has it been for the sort of purpose that is here involved?

Mr. McCORMACK. Will the gentleman please repeat that statement?

Mr. HALLECK. Will the gentleman agree with the statement that I made heretofore—and he realizes that he and I have sat together as majority and minority members to work out the division on the committees—will he agree with me that in no instance when we have increased the number on a committee for a particular Congress has it ever been done for the purpose that is perfectly obvious here in connection with this increase from 12 to 15?

Mr. McCORMACK. Of course, what is perfectly obvious is the fact, as I hope, that a majority of the House will want to make the Committee on Rules more representative of the will of the House, and enable the Members of the House to have a reasonable opportunity to pass upon major measures. Now, to answer specifically the gentleman's question, I will say this. I cannot answer for every Congress in the past, but we have sat down and ironed these things out, and the committees, practically all of them, are greater in number than is provided by the rules. So there is nothing sacred about the number of members on the committees. That is what I am emphasizing.

As Sam Rayburn said 2 years ago—and I quote:

> I think the House should be allowed on great measures to work its will and it cannot work its will if the Committee on Rules is so constituted as not to allow the House to pass on those things.

That is a sound proposition. With an even number of members on the Committee on Rules, it constitutes as to many measures a means of denying the House the opportunity to pass upon important legislation. The step we took 2 years ago was a wise one. The step we took 2 years ago was a proper one. The step we are now about to take, to make this number permanent, if the resolution is adopted, is a sound one because, if my Republican friends by any chance should win 2 years from now, they will not be faced with this situation that faces us today.

This is a procedural matter and from every angle that anyone can look at it, the number of 15 members on this committee should be maintained.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to adopt the resolution.

Mr. ALBERT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, I take this time to state the parliamentary situation. As I understand from the remarks of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LAIRD], a separate vote will probably be demanded on the previous question, which I shall move at the conclusion of my remarks. The position of the majority is that the vote should be "yea" on the previous question and "yea" on the resolution.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ALBERT. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, it has been my understanding that if the resolution offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma be defeated, immediately thereupon the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. SMITH] as chairman of the Committee on Rules, will be recognized to offer the rules of the 87th Congress as the rules of the 88th Congress.

Mr. ALBERT. The majority leader is not in a position to know whom the Speaker will recognize on the disposition of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The SPEAKER. The question is on ordering the previous question.

Mr. LAIRD. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 249, nays 183, not voting 1, as follows:

[Roll No. 3]

YEAS—249

Abbitt
Addabbo
Albert
Andrews
Ashley
Ashmore
Aspinall
Baring
Barrett
Bass
Beckworth
Bennett, Fla.
Blatnik
Boggs
Boland
Bolling
Bonner
Brademas
Brooks
Brown, Calif.
Buckley
Burke
Burkhalter
Burleson
Byrnes
Cameron
Carey
Casey
Celler
Chelf
Clark
Cohelan
Cooley
Corman
Daddario
Daniels
Davis, Ga.
Davis, Tenn.
Dawson
Delaney
Dent
Denton
Diggs
Dingell
Donohue
Dorn
Dowdy
Downing
Doyle
Dulski
Duncan
Edmondson
Edwards
Elliott
Everett
Evins
Fallon
Farbstein
Fascell
Feighan
Finnegan
Fisher
Flood
Flynt
Fogarty
Forrester
Fountain
Fraser
Friedel
Fulton, Tenn.
Fuqua
Gallagher
Garmatz
Gary Giaimo
Gibbons
Gilbert
Gill
Gonzalez
Grabowski
Grant
Gray
Green, Oreg.
Green, Pa.
Griffiths
Hagan, Ga.
Hagen, Calif.
Haley
Hanna
Hansen
Harding
Hardy
Harris
Hawkins
Hays
Healey
Hébert
Hechler
Hemphill
Henderson
Herlong
Holifield
Holland
Huddleston
Hull
Ichord
Jarman
Jennings
Joelson
Johnson, Calif.
Johnson, Wis.
Jones, Ala.
Jones, Mo.
Karsten
Karth
Kastenmeier
Kee
Kelly
Keogh
Kilgore
King, Calif.
Kirwan
Kluczynski
Kornegay
Landrum
Lankford
Leggett
Lennon
Lesinski
Libonati
Long, La.
Long, Md.
McDowell
McFall
McMillan
Macdonald
Madden
Mahon
Marsh
Matsunaga
Matthews
Miller, Calif.
Mills
Minish
Monagan
Montoya
Moorhead
Morgan
Morris
Morrison
Moss
Multer
Murphy, Ill.
Murphy, N.Y.
Natcher
Nedzi
Nix
O'Brien, Ill.
O'Brien, N.Y.
O'Hara, Ill.
O'Hara, Mich.
Olsen, Mont.
Olson, Minn.
O'Neill
Passman
Patman
Patten
Pepper
Perkins
Philbin
Pike
Pilcher
Poage
Pool
Powell
Price
Pucinski
Purcell
Rains
Randall
Reuss
Rhodes, Pa.
Rivers, Alaska
Rivers, S.C.
Roberts, Ala.
Roberts, Tex.
Rodino
Rogers, Colo.
Rogers, Fla.
Rogers, Tex.
Rooney
Roosevelt
Rosenthal
Rostenkowski
Roush
Roybal
Ryan, Mich.
Ryan, N.Y.
St. Germain
St. Onge
Scott
Secrest
Selden
Senner
Shelley
Sheppard
Shipley
Sickles
Sikes
Sisk
Slack
Smith, Iowa
Smith, Va.
Staebler
Staggers
Steed
Stephens
Stratton
Stubblefield
Sullivan
Taylor
Teague, Tex.
Thomas
Thompson, La.
Thompson, N.J.
Thompson, Tex.
Thornberry
Toll
Trimble
Tuck
Tuten
Udall
Ullman
Van Deerlin
Vanik
Vinson
Waggonner
Walter
Watson
Watts
Weltner
White
Whitener
Wickersham
Willis
Wilson, Charles H.
Wright
Young
Zablocki

NAYS—183

Abele
Abernethy
Adair
Alger
Anderson
Arends
Ashbrook
Auchincloss
Avery
Ayres
Baker
Baldwin
Barry
Bates
Battin
Becker
Beermann
Belcher
Bell
Bennett, Mich.
Berry
Betts
Bolton, Frances P.
Bolton, Oliver P.
Bow
Bray
Brock
Bromwell
Broomfield
Brotzman
Brown, Ohio
Broyhill, N.C.
Broyhill, Va.
Bruce
Burton
Byrnes, Wis.
Cahill
Cannon
Cederberg
Chamberlain
Chenoweth
Clancy
Cleveland
Collier
Colmer
Conte
Corbett
Cramer
Cunningham
Curtin
Curtis
Dague
Derounian
Derwinski
Devine
Dole
Dwyer
Ellsworth
Findley
Fino
Ford
Foreman
Frelinghuysen
Fulton, Pa.
Gathings
Gavin
Glenn
Goodell
Goodling
Griffin
Gross
Grover
Gubser
Gurney
Hall
Halleck
Halpern
Harrison
Harsha
Harvey, Ind.
Harvey, Mich.
Hoeven
Hoffman
Horan
Horton
Hosmer
Hutchinson
Jensen
Johansen
Jonas
Keith
Kilburn
King, N.Y.
Knox
Kunkel
Kyl
Laird
Langen
Latta
Lindsay
Lipscomb
Lloyd
McClory
McCulloch
McDade
McIntire
McLoskey
MacGregor
Mailliard
Martin, Calif.
Martin, Mass.
Martin, Nebr.
Mathias
May
Meader
Michel
Miller, N.Y.
Milliken
Minshall
Moore
Morse
Morton
Mosher
Nelsen
Norblad
Nygaard
O'Konski
Osmers
Ostertag
Pelly
Pillion
Pirnie
Poff
Quie
Quillen
Reid, Ill.
Reid, N.Y.
Reifel
Rhodes, Ariz.
Rich
Riehlman
Robison
Roudebush
Rumsfeld
St. George
Saylor
Schadeberg
Schenck
Schneebeli
Schweiker
Schwengel
Short
Shriver
Sibal
Siler
Skubitz
Smith, Calif.
Snyder
Springer
Stafford
Stinson
Taft
Talcott
Teague, Calif.
Thomson, Wis.
Tollefson
Tupper
Utt
Van Pelt
Wallhauser
Weaver
Westland
Whalley
Wharton
Whitten
Widnall
Williams
Wilson, Bob
Wilson, Ind.
Winstead
Wydler
Wyman
Younger

NOT VOTING—1

Murray

So the previous question was ordered.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. DAVIS of Tennessee and Mr. ASHLEY changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 235, nays 196, not voting 2, as follows:

[Roll No. 4]

YEAS—235

Addabbo
Albert
Ashley
Aspinall
Ayres
Baldwin
Barrett
Bass
Bates
Bennett, Fla.
Bennett, Mich.
Blatnik
Boggs
Boland
Bolling
Bonner
Brademas
Brooks
Broomfield
Brown, Calif.
Buckley
Burke
Burkhalter
Byrne, Pa.
Cahill
Cameron
Carey
Celler
Chelf
Clark
Cohelan
Conte
Cooley
Corbett
Corman
Daddario
Daniels
Davis, Ga.
Dawson
Delaney
Dent
Denton
Diggs
Dingell
Donohue
Doyle
Dulski
Duncan
Dwyer
Edmondson
Edwards
Elliott
Ellsworth
Evins
Fallon
Farbstein
Fascell
Feighan
Finnegan
Fino
Flood
Flynt
Fogarty
Forrester
Fraser
Friedel
Fulton, Tenn.
Gallagher
Garmatz
Giaimo
Gibbons
Gilbert
Gill
Glenn
Gonzalez
Grabowski
Gray
Green, Oreg.
Green, Pa.
Griffiths
Grover
Hagan, Ga.
Hagen, Calif.
Halpern
Hanna
Hansen
Harding
Harris
Hawkins
Hays
Healey
Hechler
Hemphill
Henderson
Holifield
Holland
Horton
Hull
Ichord
Jennings
Joelson
Johnson, Calif.
Johnson, Wis.
Jones, Ala.
Karsten
Karth
Kastenmeier
Kee
Kelly
Keogh
King, Calif.
Kirwan
Kluczynski
Landrum
Lankford
Leggett
Lesinski
Libonati
Lindsay
Long, La.
Long, Md.
McDade
McDowell
McFall
Macdonald
Madden
Mahon
Martin, Mass.
Mathias
Matsunaga
Miller, Calif.
Mills
Minish
Monagan
Montoya
Moorhead
Morgan
Morris
Morrison
Morse
Moss
Multer
Murphy, Ill.
Murphy, N.Y.
Natcher
Nedzi
Nix
O'Brien, Ill.
O'Brien, N.Y.
O'Hara, Ill.
O'Hara, Mich.
O'Konski
Olsen, Mont.
Olson, Minn.
O'Neill
Osmers
Patman
Patten
Pepper
Perkins
Philbin
Pike
Pilcher
Poage
Pool
Powell
Price
Pucinski
Purcell
Rains
Randall
Reid, N.Y.
Reuss
Rhodes, Pa.
Rivers, Alaska
Roberts, Ala.
Roberts, Tex.
Rodino
Rogers, Colo.
Rooney
Roosevelt
Rosenthal
Rostenkowski
Roush
Roybal
Ryan, Mich.
Ryan, N.Y.
St. Germain
St. Onge
Saylor
Secrest
Senner
Shelley
Sheppard
Shipley
Sibal
Sickles
Sikes
Sisk
Slack
Smith, Iowa
Staebler
Stafford
Staggers
Steed
Stephens
Stratton
Stubblefield
Sullivan
Taylor
Teague, Tex.
Thomas
Thompson, La.
Thompson, N.J.
Thompson, Tex.
Thornberry
Toll
Trimble
Tupper
Tuten
Udall, Morris K.
Ullman
Van Deerlin
Vanik
Vinson
Wallhauser
Walter
Watts
Weltner
White
Wickersham
Willis
Wilson, Charles H.
Wright
Young
Zablocki

NAYS—196

Abbitt	Fountain	Moore
Abele	Frelinghuysen	Morton
Abernethy	Fulton, Pa.	Mosher
Adair	Fuqua	Nelsen
Alger	Gary	Norblad
Anderson	Gathings	Nygaard
Andrews	Gavin	Ostertag
Arends	Goodell	Passman
Ashbrook	Goodling	Pelly
Ashmore	Grant	Pillion
Auchincloss	Griffin	Pirnie
Avery	Gross	Poff
Baker	Gubser	Quie
Baring	Gurney	Quillen
Barry	Haley	Reid, Ill.
Battin	Hall	Reifel
Becker	Halleck	Rhodes, Ariz.
Beckworth	Hardy	Rich
Beermann	Harrison	Riehlman
Belcher	Harsha	Rivers, S.C.
Bell	Harvey, Ind.	Robison
Berry	Harvey, Mich.	Rogers, Fla.
Betts	Hébert	Rogers, Tex.
Bolton, Frances P.	Herlong	Roudebush
	Hoeven	Rumsfeld
Bolton, Oliver P.	Hoffman	St. George
	Horan	Schadeberg
Bow	Hosmer	Schenck
Bray	Huddleston	Schneebeli
Brock	Hutchinson	Schweiker
Bromwell	Jarman	Schwengel
Brotzman	Jensen	Scott
Brown, Ohio	Johansen	Selden
Broyhill, N.C.	Jonas	Short
Broyhill, Va.	Jones, Mo.	Shriver
Bruce	Keith	Siler
Burleson	Kilburn	Skubitz
Burton	Kilgore	Smith, Calif.
Byrnes, Wis.	King, N.Y.	Smith, Va.
Cannon	Knox	Snyder
Casey	Kornegay	Springer
Cederberg	Kunkel	Stinson
Chamberlain	Kyl	Taft
Chenoweth	Laird	Talcott
Clancy	Langen	Teague, Calif.
Cleveland	Latta	Thomson, Wis.
Collier	Lennon	Tollefson
Colmer	Lipscomb	Tuck
Cramer	Lloyd	Utt
Cunningham	McClory	Van Pelt
Curtin	McCulloch	Waggonner
Curtis	McIntire	Watson
Dague	McLoskey	Weaver
Davis, Tenn.	McMillan	Westland
Derounian	MacGregor	Whalley
Derwinski	Mailliard	Wharton
Devine	Marsh	Whitener
Dole	Martin, Calif.	Whitten
Dorn	Martin, Nebr.	Widnall
Dowdy	Matthews	Williams
Downing	May	Wilson, Bob
Everett	Meader	Wilson, Ind.
Findley	Michel	Winstead
Fisher	Miller, N.Y.	Wydler
Ford	Milliken	Wyman
Foreman	Minshall	Younger

NOT VOTING—2

Murray	White

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Pol. Gen.

United Press International Photo

FRESHMEN DEMOCRATIC CONGRESSMEN FROM GEORGIA
Ready to Go to Work in Washington Are C. L. Weltner (L) and J. R. Tuten

United Press International Photo

HOUSE SPEAKER'S PAGE GETS READY BY REMOVING COVER FROM MIKE IN HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
16-Year-Old Robert F. Barnes Is Only Person Here; Soon It Will Be Crowded With Lawmakers

Capital More Like Old Self As Congress Again Bustles

By MARTHA COLE

WASHINGTON, Jan. 9 (AP) — The capital looked more like its old self Wednesday. Its pulse was faster, its pace quicker.

But also the change was a little like that which comes over a household when a rich but sometimes cranky uncle pays his annual visit. There was both pleasure and pain.

As the taxicab driver said when he swung down Pennsylvania Avenue toward the Capitol — "I'm glad to see Congress come back, but it sure stirs up this traffic."

Things were stirring all over town. President Kennedy had returned from his Florida vacation, and Congress was reassembling at noon.

For the 12 new senators and diana, Birch E. Bayh, the Democratic Campaign Committee of Indiana was throwing an afternoon reception for which 1,500 Indiana meat balls had been ordered, 1,500 fancy finger sandwiches and 800 deviled eggs.

The President's brother, new Sen. Edward M. Kennedy, D-Mass., was having an informal open house in his offices.

Sen. Kennedy said he was going to hold his speeches and public appearances to a minimum, that he couldn't go to everything.

"You can't go to all of them; you turn some of them down," said another new Congress member, Rep. Everett G. Burkhalter, D-Calif., of the invitations he had received.

"It's really busy. I don't get time to look at my mail."

This innovation in the official social goings-on was planned to introduce new members of Congress to members of the executive branch, such as cabinet heads and the White House staff.

Tuesday night there was the big to-do over the Mona Lisa. Wednesday, there's a big dinner given by the Women's National Press Club.

BOTH HOUSE and Senate in the 88th Congress are only slightly changed in their numerical partisan lineup compared with the 87th when it began two years ago.

In the new House there are 258 Democrats, 176 Republicans and one Democratic vacancy. This compares with 262 Democrats and 175 Republicans two years ago when the House had 437 members instead of the current 435.

In the Senate the session opens with 67 Democrats and 33 Republicans. Two years ago it began with 65 Democrats, 35 Republicans.

There are 67 new House members and 12 new Senators.

And if you yell "Thompson!" in the lobby of the House, four congressmen might answer.

The Thompson clan holds top name duplication honors in the Congress, though Rep. Vernon Thomson, R-Wis., spells it without a "P."

The other three are T. A. Thompson, D-La., Frank Thompson, D-N.J., and Clark Thompson, D-Tex.

United Press International Photo

AIDES PLACE FURNISHINGS IN OFFICE OF NEW SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY
His Office Furnishings Are of Products Made in Home State of Massachusetts

a household when a rich but sometimes cranky uncle pays his annual visit. There was both pleasure and pain.

As the taxicab driver said when he swung down Pennsylvania Avenue toward the Capitol — "I'm glad to see Congress come back, but it sure stirs up this traffic."

Things were stirring all over town. President Kennedy had returned from his Florida vacation, and Congress was reassembling at noon.

For the 12 new senators and 67 new representatives it was go, go, go.

MOST OF THEM planned informal receptions in their offices after the noontime office oathtaking in the chambers of the House and Senate.

For the new senator from In- D-Mass., was having an informal open house in his offices.

Sen. Kennedy said he was going to hold his speeches and public appearances to a minimum, that he couldn't go to everything.

"You can't go to all of them; you turn some of them down," said another new Congress member, Rep. Everett G. Burkhalter, D-Calif., of the invitations he had received.

"It's really busy. I don't get time to look at my mail."

For about two weeks, the newcomers to Congress will be feted, welcomed at receptions, honored at dinners.

Added to the usual affairs this year are two receptions being given by Vice President and Mrs. Lyndon B. Johnson at their Washington home Thursday and Friday nights.

Wednesday, there's a big dinner given by the Women's National Press Club.

BOTH HOUSE and Senate in the 88th Congress are only slightly changed in their numerical partisan lineup compared with the 87th when it began two years ago.

In the new House there are 258 Democrats, 176 Republicans and one Democratic vacancy. This compares with 262 Demo-

There are 67 new House members and 12 new Senators.

And if you yell "Thompson!" in the lobby of the House, four congressmen might answer.

The Thompson clan holds top name duplication honors in the Congress, though Rep. Vernon Thomson, R-Wis., spells it without a "P."

The other three are T. A. Thompson, D-La., Frank Thompson, D-N.J., and Clark Thompson, D-Tex.

United Press International Photo

AIDES PLACE FURNISHINGS IN OFFICE OF NEW SENATOR EDWARD M. KENNEDY
His Office Furnishings Are of Products Made in Home State of Massachusetts

Associated Press Wirephoto

THEY WILL BEGIN THEIR NEW JOBS AS SENATORS AS 88TH CONGRESS OPENS
(L-R) Daniel Brewster, P. H. Dominick, Gaylord Nelson, Daniel Inouge and G. S. McGovern

New U.S. Senatorial Faces

United Press International Photo

GEORGIA'S REP. CARL VINSON
With Rep. James Roosevelt (R) During Meeting

MORE NEW SENATORS, ALL DEMOCRATS, EXCEPT SIMPSON, MAN IN MIDDLE (L-R) Birch Bayh Jr., Abraham Ribicoff, Milward Simpson, Edward Kennedy and Thomas McInTyre

United Press International Photo

NEW CONGRESSMAN R. L. LEGGETT IN NEW WASHINGTON HOME
But Furniture Didn't Arrive; Borrowed Beds From Army Quartermaster

United Press International Photo

NEW FOYER UNDER STEPS OF EAST FRONT OF CAPITOL
It Provides No-Step Entrance to Various Parts of the Capitol

bilities are clearly open to question.

Implicit in the election is the danger that Dominicans are liable to equate representative democracy with economic advance. Dominicans are languishing under the impression that once the new, freely elected government takes office in February, a renaissance will flower in the country. Many are anticipating a Utopia of freedom and plenty.

They fail to note, or close their eyes to the fact, that a democratic government, by its structure and philosophy, moves by evolutionary degrees. This may be too slow for their expectations. For the giant economical and political monster which Trujillo fashioned will not easily be destroyed by attrition. Already one hears grumbling because the domestic holdings of Trujillo, covering every facet of the country's economy and estimated at more than $300 million, is "just sitting." This includes 40 per cent of the tillable soil. The Dominican people have not forgotten that while they were queuing up in breadlines, the elder Trujillo was living like a caliph and his playboy son Ramfis was sending his polo ponies to Paris aboard privately chartered planes and favoring Hollywood actresses with furs and sports cars. They expect amends.

Forces which may act as a deterrent to the country's reformation include:

«A pitiful lack of political experience among officeholders and the electorate. Trujillo did their thinking for them and made the decisions. The political parties, even the major ones, are badly organized and without direction.

«The basic elements which helped Trujillo remain in power—hunger, poverty and illiteracy—still exist.

«Nationalism is resurgent and often misdirected along negative anti-American or pro-Communist lines.

«There is a lack of strong leadership, mainly attributable to the previous one-man government and the reluctance of Trujillo to train potential leaders.

«The habits of thirty years are not easily changed. Smashing stone idols (2,000 statues of Trujillo have been destroyed) does not necessarily purge the spirit that built them.

Like the emerging sovereign nations of Asia and Africa, the Dominican Republic must establish political institutions, realign social classes and promote economic rehabilitation.

The job is even tougher for the Dominicans, because they must wipe out all traces of Trujilloism before the country can develop fully. The great danger is that if the social, economic and political reforms urgently needed are not quickly put in motion, the Castro-Communists or the extreme rightists will step in. Though each camp has only a small following, they are led by professionals who know how to pipe tempting tunes to the politically naive.

Should the new government fail to initiate a program of across-the-board reforms and the Dominican people turn to the Left or Right, or the two pressures become locked in a bloody struggle, it would be a severe setback for the United States and the Alliance for Progress. The hemispheric nations are well aware that we are running the show in the Dominican Republic.

Another Cuba in the Caribbean would be too much for Washington's expensively preened posture as leader of the free world and would open the way for further trouble in Latin America.

The New Congress: Prospects and Problems . . . . . Alan Rosenthal

Pw. Rev

Months ago, even before much heat was generated by the midterm election campaign, President Kennedy expressed the choice before the nation in a characteristic cliché: Will the 88th Congress sail or anchor? Although typical of campaign polemic, the proferred choice failed to depict the realities of Congressional politics. For, whatever the outcome of the November balloting, chances were that the Congress which was to convene on January 9 would, like so many of its predecessors, drift along, slowly but inexorably nudged by national needs and Presidential prodding.

Following the election and the initial burst of satisfaction at the happy results, there has been a calculated change of mood at the White House. As he prepares himself for the cliff-hanger politics ahead, the President's public statements about the prospects of his domestic legislative program have taken on a cast of weariness and doubt.

There are reasons for pessimism. As was pointed out by Blanche Blank in a recent Nation article ("The Meaning of Your Vote," Nov. 3, 1962), Congressional parochialism, the schism in the Democratic Party, and above all the organization, or perhaps disorganization, of Congress and its archaic rules are all geared to defend rather than change the status quo. In his mid-December television report, President Kennedy put the problem simply but accurately: ". . . the Constitution and the development of the Congress all give advantages to delay. It is very easy to defeat a bill in the Congress. It is much more difficult to pass one." Congressional power is diffuse power, wielded by independent sovereigns or chieftains, and extremely difficult to mobilize for progressive purposes.

During the past twenty-five years, whatever the leadership capacity of the President, Congressional chieftains, and rank and file as well, have eschewed adventurous domestic programs. They have responded to Presidential leadership in foreign and defense affairs, but they have balked at innovative social and economic policies. Perhaps the steady erosion of Congressional prerogatives in an age that has witnessed the general decline of representative institutions has provoked, by way of compensation, extreme Congressional sensitivity with regard to domestic policies.

---

Alan Rosenthal, author of Toward Majority Rule in the United States Senate (McGraw-Hill), teaches Political Science at Hunter College.

1/12/63

The dominant mood of the 88th Congress will be one of prudence. Legislators, trained in the politics of compromise, recognize no recipe for instant Utopia. And there is little compulsion for reform and innovation. Long experience has convinced many members of Congress that the country will stumble along, in the right direction and at the proper pace.

Many liberals wishfully assume that the Congressional mood ill-represents the popular temper, whereas the President's outlook mirrors public desires. There is no evidence for this. Neither Mr. Kennedy's burgeoning popularity nor the continuation of Democratic Congressional majorities necessarily indicates national support for progressive domestic programs.

For example, the issues of civil rights and medical care for the aged are both close to the hearts of liberal Democrats, but there is relatively little popular pressure for reform in these areas. After the Senate defeated the highly publicized, compromise medicare bill last year, a Gallup poll revealed that while about four out of five people had heard or read of the proposal, few had any knowledge of what the bill provided and less than a majority favored a social-security approach in preference to private insurance.

As for civil rights, all national polls since the 1954 Supreme Court decision have consistently revealed public support for desegregation in principle. Yet, only about 25 per cent have supported the proposition that "every measure" should be used by government to bring about integration in the "near future." Recently, the Gallup poll asked whether the public thought the Kennedy Administration was pushing racial integration too fast, or not fast enough. Almost 60 per cent had no opinion or were satisfied with progress, nearly one-third thought the Administration was moving too fast, and only 11 per cent thought it was moving too slowly. If the public wants the type of progress that befits the challenge of the times, its voice has yet to be heard.

Even better evidence of the prevailing mood of moderation are the Gallup polls which since early 1961 have asked whether the Kennedy Administration should go more to the Right, more to the Left, or keep to the middle. From the standpoint of those who assume that the public, like the President, wants the nation to move, the results are disappointing (see table above).

THE PUBLIC'S ADVICE TO THE ADMINISTRATION

	January 1961	July 1961	January 1962	December 1962
Go more to the Right	24%	19%	20%	21%
Go more to the Left	23	15	18	21
Keep to the middle	42	50	51	42
No opinion	11	16	11	16
	100%	100%	100%	100%

Thus the public is by no means clamoring for reform and innovation. If there is to be change, however moderate, much depends on the most artful Presidential leadership.

Heroic leadership, of the sort promised by Senator Kennedy when he was campaigning for the Presidency, may not be suited to the realities of Congressional organization and public disposition. The setting in which President Kennedy will have to operate will be little different from that in which Roosevelt's later New Deal and Truman's Fair Deal foundered before unresponsive Congresses. That is not to say that Mr. Kennedy's prospects are dismal, but only that there are limits to what he can reasonably be expected to accomplish.

One characteristic of democratic government is that, no matter what the objective urgency, a legislature is unable to reach decisions on controversial issues about which the country itself is undecided. The President can propose a variety of progressive programs with little fear of public reproach; but he can hope to see only a few enacted unless there is an appreciable consensus in their favor. That explains why the President's record in the 87th Congress was mixed—not nearly as successful as he predicted while stumping, but certainly not as bleak as many critics assert. While legislative failures by far outnumbered the few important successes, it is still surprising that the record was as good as it was, given a new Administration, an untried Congressional leadership, and an overwhelming agenda without clearly defined priorities (not to mention the factors already cited).

Just as an assessment of the record of the 87th Congress is shaped by one's expectations, so an interpretation of the significance of the 1962 Congressional elections depends on whether one is looking for radical reorientation or merely a slight shift in Congressional attitudes toward New Frontier policies. From the first perspective, the elections were disheartening, for they did little to crush the coalition of conservative Southern Democrats and Republicans which for years has dominated the House. From the second perspective, however, they were somewhat encouraging.

Kennedy's position in the Senate has been significantly strengthened by a net gain since November of three Democrats. When the Senate convenes, the line-up will be sixty-seven Democrats and thirty-three Republicans. The Democratic margin is not quite as useful to the President as it might seem. Eighteen Democrats are Southern conservatives; of the forty-nine remaining, about thirty-five are hard-core Kennedy supporters, four are conservatives, and about ten are switch hitters. Ten to fifteen Republicans are potential Presidential supporters. All in all, the Senate outlook is favorable for the fashioning of majority coalitions issue by issue.

The effects of the elections on the new House are less obvious. In net terms, the Democrats lost four seats and the Republicans gained two. In gross terms, however, the change of personnel gives the slightest of advantages to the Administration. Some of the sixty-seven new men are more liberal than their predecessors, regardless of party labels. According to an analysis by Congressional Quarterly, of the sixty-nine members (forty Democrats, twenty-nine Republicans) leaving the House because of election defeat, primary defeat, or retirement, only twenty-five generally supported the President. On the other hand, of the sixty-seven new members (thirty-six Democrats, thirty-one Republicans), twenty-seven are expected for the most part to support Mr. Kennedy. Despite this real gain for the Presidential party at a midterm election, the House line-up is far from reassuring. The President should be able to count on a solid base of about 163 Democratic votes and another thirty-two probables. But even with about twenty Republican moderates (primarily from New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Connecticut, Massachusetts and California), the Kennedy coalition of 215 falls short of a majority.

If there is to be even gradual advance on the home front, President Kennedy will have to do his Congressional arithmetic and manage his legislative program with consummate skill. Many believe that his past strategies and techniques, characteristic of a legislative mind accustomed to compromise, will have to be revised. The major criticism of Mr. Kennedy's management during his first two years is that he failed to "go to the country" over the head of Congress. According to this view, the President's main hope lies, not in persuading Congress, but in persuading the people. If he should mobilize public support simply by explaining his programs, the people would not fail him. Rallied behind his goals, they would soon force Congress to follow.

The simplicity of this proposed strategy is appealing. It may succeed on one or two carefully selected issues, but probably no more. FDR's fireside chats did not turn the tide; the unmistakable nature of the crisis did that. In contrast to 1933, there appears today to be no national crisis; consequently, there is no sense of urgency to enact new domestic programs. From time to time, the public does become aroused, as in response to the Soviet sputniks or the deformities caused by the drug thalidomide, and the result is an education act or a drug-control law. But such response cannot be manufactured, even by the most adroit propaganda.

"You see—first women, then Negroes, now Congressmen!"

For better or worse, Congressmen are the people with whom the President must deal. Mr. Kennedy recognizes this. He understands that Congress "has its own will and its own feelings and its own judgment," that getting results is not primarily a matter of trying to turn up the heat of public opinion. In the 87th Congress, he concentrated on broadening the Congressional center and worked constantly at the intricate tasks of creating legislative majorities in order to manipulate at least part of his program through a divided Congress.

It is probable that in the next two years the President will continue to by-pass contests in the public forum (except on a few issues, such as his tax program) and to manage things quietly through further courtship of Democratic legislators. Conciliation, accommodation and compromise will remain the Presidential modus operandi. The pragmatic political art of picking up a vote here, a vote there, while lacking drama, is most applicable to the types of legislative situations Mr. Kennedy will face.

There are good reasons to believe that by employing tested methods of persuasion Mr. Kennedy will achieve a few notable successes, as well as a number of frustrating near misses, in the 88th Congress.

First, his handling of the Cuban situation and the elections have not only given the Administration increased self-confidence but have also convinced a number of marginal Democrats and Republicans of the President's ability and popularity. It is possible, too, that the influence of moderate Republican governors in New York, Pennsylvania and Michigan, and the prospect that GOP Congressmen will have to run with a moderate Presidential candidate in 1964, will erode the amazingly solid bloc of negative votes that Charles Halleck, minority leader, has been able to command in the House.

Second, the President's legislative package will be smaller, better defined and probably easier to sell. There will be few new items, and Congressional familiarity with old ones should mean a slower, friendlier pace and a legislative pipe line that is manageable. If the President also sets some order of priority among his messages and bills, as he did in the closing weeks of the 87th Congress, relations should improve.

Third, the two-year experience of the White House liaison staff and the floor leadership on Capitol Hill may increase efficiency. The liaison operation should become less sporadic and the Senate and House leaderships more skillful. In the previous Congress, for example, Majority Leader Mike Mansfield cost the Administration its medicare and urban-affairs bills in the Senate, through trying too hastily to by-pass the regular committees.

Fourth, greater cooperation between the Administration and sympathetic Republicans, including the acceptance of positive Republican proposals and the sharing of credit (as on the Manpower Retraining Act of 1962), would probably improve the chances of several key bills. Indeed, direct and continuous contact by the White House with a number of rank-and-file GOP Congressmen and the rendering of little kindnesses and courtesies might conceivably bring substantial dividends.

Nevertheless, a few items of the Kennedy program seem destined for defeat. The enactment of a strong agricultural-control bill is most unlikely. The November elections, in which the President lost thirty-five members who had backed him on the first farm bill vote (defeated 215-205) and gained only twenty-seven probable supporters, seem to end all hope for its resurrection. General aid-to-education legislation, enshrouded by the nonnegotiable issues of race and religion and the thorny issue of "federal control," can be saved by little less than a minor miracle. Chances for creation of a department of urban affairs are somewhat better, and prospects for the youth conservation corps and mass transit bills are still brighter. Aid to higher education, after traveling a long and arduous path, was defeated late last year when a joint conference report was rejected by the House, largely because of the many tempers inflamed by the Supreme Court's school-prayer decision and the heightening tension in Mississippi. Barring similar events, it should pass in this Congress.

In the weeks immediately ahead, several critical decisions will be made. Probably the most important will involve assignments to the standing committees. Some of the Senate assignments will make little difference in the short run. Although Democrats will pick up about eight seats on Senate committees, name the successor to the late Senator Kerr and add a man on the influential Finance Committee, there will be no real change in the power alignments. Whoever is added to Finance, Senator Byrd and about ten Democratic and Republican conservatives will continue to dominate. But Senate committees have not generally proved to be insurmountable obstacles. If Mr. Kennedy is able to command support from a majority of Senators, at least some of the damage done his legislative proposals in committee can be remedied through amendment on the floor.

In the House, however, action or inaction by a committee can determine the fate of any bill. The Ways and Means Committee in the last Congress blocked medicare by 15-10 and the bill to extend unemployment compensation by 13-12. Each of these proposals should be able to pass the Senate in this Congress. Consequently, the behavior of Ways and Means may be decisive. With two Democratic vacancies on the committee, as a result of the retirement of two conservatives, much hinges on the attitudes of the new replacements. (So much, in fact, that it has been reported that Rules Chairman Howard Smith is willing to maintain the status quo on the Rules Committee in exchange for the appointment of a conservative to one of the two openings on Ways and Means.) Since the Democratic membership is regionally representative, the new members will undoubtedly come from the Southern states. The choice will be between Democratic moderates and conservatives, and if the leadership, together with a more secure and therefore more amenable Chairman Wilbur Mills, appoints two moderates, medicare, unemployment insurance and the Administration's tax program will be in much better shape.

The most dramatic battles during the opening days of the Congress promise to revolve around maintaining the three-member expansion of the House Rules Committee and liberalizing the cloture rule in the Senate.

Unless the House once more ratifies the 1961 increase to fifteen members, the Rules Committee will revert to twelve. On this, President Kennedy has taken a firm stand. "We are through if we lose . . . our whole program in my opinion would be emasculated," he declared in his recent television report. Chances are excellent that the Administration and Democratic leadership will win this fight, despite the loss of the inestimable influence of the late Speaker Sam Rayburn. The expansion experiment by no means completely curbed the conservative power of the committee, which managed to block a number of Administration bills in the 87th Congress. Thus there is less pressure to alter its membership once more. Furthermore, it is probable that many more than the twenty-two Republicans who supported enlargement in 1961 will vote to keep the expanded committee, fearing that otherwise the GOP will suffer as a result in key urban areas of the nation in 1964. Finally, Congressmen are always reluctant to bump friends and colleagues from important committees; therefore, a number of associates of the three newly appointed members will favor the enlargement now, even if they opposed it two years ago. The related effort by House liberals to reinstitute the twenty-one-day rule and thereby effectively restrict Rules obstructionism is unlikely to succeed, since the President and Democratic leadership are willing to settle for retention of the three-member increase.

In the Senate, a bipartisan group of liberals, supported by Democratic Leader Mansfield and Minority Whip Kuchel, has an excellent opportunity to revise Rule XXII so as to decrease the requirement for cloture from two-thirds of those voting to three-fifths of those voting. Two years ago, primarily because of Mansfield's fear that a battle over restriction of filibusters might harm the new Administration, the liberal attack was stalled. This time, with leadership support, liberal gains as a result of the elections, and a favorable parliamentary ruling (or simply putting the question to a Senate vote) by Vice President Johnson on whether the Senate can, at the beginning of a new Congress and before the initiation of new business, halt a filibuster on new rules by a simple majority, prospects for revision are hopeful.

Even more important than maintenance of the presently constituted House Rules Committee and liberalization of the Senate cloture rule is a general reformation of a legislative system which makes Presidential programs so difficult to enact. Although the current national tendency toward domestic drift is not wholly the result of Congressional disabilities, the diffusion of power within Congress, its irresponsible exercise, and the lack of clear accountability for its use make self-reform of highest priority.

In the last session, a bipartisan group, led by Senators Clark, Kuchel, Case and Humphrey and Representatives Reuss and Lindsay, introduced a concurrent resolution to establish a joint committee on the organization of Congress to study and report on modernization of the rules, procedures and customs of both the Senate and House. The proposal will be reintroduced in the 88th Congress, and although revolutionary advances are unlikely, optimists may hope that some of the built-in impediments to unity and Congressional capacity to govern responsibly and effectively will be removed. Long-term prospects, in the domestic field especially, depend in substantial degree on modernization of much of the creaking and shackling machinery of Congress.

BOOKS AND THE ARTS

Freud's Intellectual Adventure

FREUD. A Critical Re-evaluation of His Theories. By Reuben Fine. David McKay Co. 307 pp. $6.95.

Richard Peters

Reuben Fine claims that no one has hitherto taken the trouble to ask: "What did Freud actually say? How does what Freud said stand up in terms of what we now know?" Dr. Fine has therefore set himself the task of examining the whole body of Freud's writings in order to clarify what was said and to review the ideas there set down critically in the light of modern knowledge.

To make a success of such a many-sided task would require not only the accuracy and conscientiousness of a scholar and the expository gifts of a good historian of ideas, but also a high degree of sympathetic imagination in order to sense the point of the attacks on some of Freud's ideas. Dr. Fine does an admirable job of clarification and exposition. His book should hereafter prove invaluable to all students of Freud who want a short-cut to mastering the tortuous unwindings of his complex theories. On the critical side, however, he is not so strong. His approach lacks imagination; it lacks a feeling for the weight of arguments and objections; it tends too often to come out with the conclusion that, in spite of obvious appearances to the contrary, Freud was fundamentally right after all on most issues.

Dr. Fine's exposition of the development of Freud's thought combines accuracy with a simplified presentation of Freud's theorizing that does not misrepresent its main features. Freud's own language in his technical papers, especially in his early attempts to develop a physiologically based theory, was often tortuous in the extreme, but Dr. Fine manages to convey very skillfully the gist of what Freud was trying to say while sparing the reader many of the conceptual barbarisms by means of which Freud actually said it. He divides the development of Freud's thought, quite rightly, into four main periods: the first from 1886 to 1895 when he was a neurologist doing pioneer work on hysteria and related forms of neurosis; the second, from 1896 to 1899, when his self-analysis culminated in The Interpretation of Dreams; the third, from 1900 to 1914, during which he developed his first psychoanalytic system, centered upon his findings about infantile sexuality and his theory of the development of libido; and the final period when his attention was concentrated more on the ego, aggression and general problems of culture.

To handle the criticism of Freud's ideas, however, requires somewhat different gifts. Dr. Fine, in a way, fails to convey any sense of the greatness of Freud's intellectual adventure as well as any sense of the pertinence of some of the criticisms leveled against him. Freud has often been hailed as the Copernicus of psychology; indeed he regarded himself in this light. But Copernicus' heliocentric theory was mixed up with a most extraordinary farrago of Pythagorean metaphysics. Similarly one of Kepler's laws was embedded in an attempt to work out a strange theory about the harmonies of the heavenly bodies; and Newton was convinced that space was God's sensorium. When one soberly sits down to read Freud, especially his early Project or his correspondence with Fliess or even his Totem and Taboo or his Group Psychology and the Analysis of the Ego, it becomes manifest that he was akin to these great adventurers of science in at least this respect: his speculations were often wild and not at all earth-bound by careful attention to empirical facts. Ernest Jones makes much of Freud's credulity in respect of ideas and people, the constant conflict between his love of speculation and the discipline of empirical confirmation to which he tried to subject himself. In his later years this self-discipline wore very thin. Freud's views on culture, one suspects, owed as much to Schopenhauer, as they did to his experience with patients. But so what? Why should not psychoanalysts be willing to admit that the founder of their system was at heart a speculative metaphysician? For in science it is better to have speculated and been shown to be wrong than never to have speculated at all. One of Freud's great virtues was that he took the risk of being wrong about so many matters.

On certain matters Freud was not entirely wrong. But he was not entirely right either, as Dr. Fine too often tries to suggest. The situation is much more likely to resemble that of other fruitful hypotheses (e.g., Newton's laws); they have been shown not to hold universally but only for a limited range of phenomena. They come to be subsumed under wider generalizations. For instance, few people who have studied the evidence and who are not die-hard Freudians would take seriously Freud's hypothesis about the universality of the Oedipus complex. But this hypothesis could be subsumed under a more general one about the decisive influence of early experien-

Richard Peters is the author of The Concept of Motivation (Humanities Press) and Authority, Responsibility and Education (Taplinger). Dr. Peters is professor of Philosophy of Education, University of London.

African Landscape

There was an eagle overhead, in a late-night sky.
There still was sun, for here the sun burned late.
Some palms waved warmly in a gentle breeze, waters
Were running channel-like, but mostly there was sea.
He wanted an accurate map; the grasses were heavy,
As if in dream. This was a land of constant appetite.
Response was near to death, as comfort always is,
Sense-blunted. Curious item was the weaving cobra,
A happy beast (fine, fine) which fed on mice.
He did not question it, asking little of the land,
Tonight. The air was scented, as if from sugar cane
Or sweetgrass, perhaps a spice from somewhere,
Village or town. The boat was a canoe. Depth
There was not, no great height. A rocky cliff,
The eagle soaring quietly. Not dull but very quiet.

Tracy Thompson

Pal. Gen

U. S. News & World Report

EXCLUSIVE INTERVIEW WITH THE ATTORNEY GENERAL

"The business community—or a good percentage of it—would rather have somebody other than President Kennedy."

ROBERT KENNEDY SPEAKS HIS MIND

The man closest to the President is his brother, Attorney General Robert Kennedy.

No major decisions are made at the White House without his knowledge and advice.

In this exclusive interview, Robert Kennedy talks about the first two years of his brother's Administration, and looks into the future.

Comments cover the full range—relations with business . . . spending and taxes . . . the Meredith affair . . . world problems . . . antitrust . . . Khrushchev, Castro and the Bay of Pigs.

Mr. Kennedy was invited to the conference room of "U. S. News & World Report" and interviewed by members of the magazine's staff.

FIRST TWO YEARS

Q Mr. Attorney General, at the halfway mark in the President's term, what do you regard as the most important accomplishments of the Kennedy Administration?

A Re-establishing the American position throughout the world. Two years ago people in the United States and the world were fully aware of what Mr. Khrushchev was doing, what Communism was doing. I think that the initiative was on that side.

This initiative partially rose out of Sputnik, from the great lift that it gave Communism and the Soviet Union. It was a trend upward for them. I think that that's been reversed now.

Q What did this country do to reverse it?

A What we've done in the United States to build our own military strength has had a major effect. I think that successes we've enjoyed in space have had an effect. Undoubtedly, the steps of the Cuban crisis in October have had an effect.

Our military strength now is recognized throughout the world. The doubling of the Polaris submarines, the increase by 75 per cent of the Minuteman, the increase in our divisions from 11 to 16, the quadrupling of our special services, the efforts that have been made to deal with counter-insurgency and guerrilla warfare—all these things have had an effect.

Q Do they affect the Russians as well?

A Yes. I think that they have an effect on our allies and have an effect on the Soviet Union and Communism. As Mr. Khrushchev said, the "paper tiger" has teeth.

Q Are they going to be able to keep up with us in this race from now on?

A I think they're really going to put great effort and energy in this field, but so will we. And we're going to have to keep up our effort.

All of this has a major effect on their analysis of the world outlook. They felt the United States was such a weak country. Further, at the start, they saw President Kennedy as only a young man who had not used the military power of the United States on Cuba as Khrushchev would have done and did do on Hungary. Based, therefore, on all of this, they felt they could bully the United States.

Q Do you think Mr. Khrushchev felt he could push the President around?

A He probably did for a while.

Q Is that situation clarified now?

A It does not exist any longer. That is clear. Two or three years ago, Mr. Khrushchev, after he left the United States, compared our country to a dying, stumbling, decadent horse. I don't believe he thinks that any more. Our country is the one which has the vitality. We are the ones who have the new ideas.

I think that not only the Government has found itself, but the American people have found themselves.

Q Do you feel that the latest Cuban crisis was a lesson to the Russians?

A I think it makes a great difference because that's the first time that the power position and determination and energy of the American people and their Government—all of this had been brought to bear.

Q That was a ticklish time, wasn't it?

A That was a very difficult time.

Q What domestic accomplishments stand out in your mind?

A A good deal has been done for the economy without Copyright © 1963, U. S. News & World Report, Inc.

"To be quite frank, there is tremendous advantage in having the same last name as the President of the United States."

"Racial discrimination is the biggest internal problem that we have in the United States."

—USN&WR Photos

"Our country is the one which has the vitality. We are the ones who have the new ideas."

gainsaying the fact that a great deal more needs to be done. But the economy has moved out of recession and through a strong recovery—a recovery accompanied by remarkable price stability. Some of the new legislation in the tax field—the incentives for new investments by business, and the liberalized depreciation regulations—the improvements that have been made in Social Security, the minimum wage and in the housing field; the legislation that was passed for retraining of workers who have lost their jobs, and aiding depressed areas—all the work that has been done in these and other fields has been an incentive to the economy and spurred recovery.

Q Has the cost been too high in dollars?

A No. Our total output of goods and services—the gross national product—was up to an annual rate of 562.5 billion dollars for the fourth quarter of 1962—an increase of more than 12 per cent in only 21 months.

The fact that we've cut down on our balance-of-payments deficit is a gain. The deficit had been around 3.9 billion dollars a year. It's down to about 2 billion now, but it still has to be reduced further.

However, almost 6 per cent of our fellow citizens are unemployed and we are utilizing only 83 per cent of our manufacturing capacity, so a great deal needs to be done.

Our economy has not grown as fast as we had hoped that it might, and so a great deal more energy and concentration must be placed in this area.

Q We've been talking here about the accomplishments that stand out in your mind in these last two years. Could you make a similar comment on the disappointments that would stand out in your mind two years later?

A In the foreign field, the greatest disappointment is that we haven't been able to get any agreement to control nuclear testing.

Q How about the Alliance for Progress? Would you say that was a disappointment?

A No, because we're making much more progress now. It hasn't gone as fast or as well as we had hoped. That's a tough, difficult area at best, but we've got a policy and we're moving on it. In areas it has been successful—in others, it has not.

But I think it has looked better over the last three or four months than it did before, although we're still going to have many headaches. I believe from the reports that we have received that there are some major breakthroughs in some important areas.

Domestically, I think a disappointment is that we didn't get further in the field of education.

Q Aid to education?

A Yes. We are short nearly 130,000 classrooms. With our population increasing, the need will be staggering in the coming years unless the States receive financial aid.

But it is more than that. One of the major drags on the economy has been the large number of educationally handicapped persons, while on the other hand there is a severe shortage of highly skilled workers. We need a national effort to provide educational opportunities to all who can use them and to improve the quality of education at every level and in every field.

Q What about unemployment?

A Yes, I would think also that, although the economy has moved ahead in this area, there still is a real problem.

Q How about balancing the Government's budget?

A Well, of course, the budget would have been balanced if the recession hadn't existed when President Kennedy took office and if we had not put the extra effort in the fields of defense and space. As long as we want to make these increases—you know, we are spending almost as much for space in fiscal 1963, some 2.4 billion dollars, as in the previous eight years put together—there is a budget problem.

Q Haven't nondefense expenditures also gone up rather rapidly in the last year or two?

A Well, I think this is not correct. Between fiscal '61 and '63 about two thirds of the increases in the budget were for national security, space and fixed interest. This just does not seem to be understood.

Q Are those necessarily related? Is space the same as defense?

A Yes—at least it is in the area of national security.

WHERE COSTS WENT UP—

Q Haven't such things as public welfare, public works, civilian salaries, things of that sort, all increased rather substantially?

A They are higher, yes. That's true for the States and cities, too. The largest federal increases have been in the farm program where, if Congress had accepted our proposals, major economies could have been made.

The other increases were spread over a wide range, but the amounts were relatively small. You have to provide for resource conservation, small business, medical research, urban renewal and science. Our population increases, and obviously these items will increase also. But they are certainly within reason. Further, these matters are a relatively small proportion of the budget as a whole. And we're trying to offset those increases with decreases elsewhere—such as agriculture and the postal service.

(continued on next page)

. . . Berlin wall "revealed to world the weakness of Communism"

Q Would you include among disappointments the fact that the East Germans were able to put a wall across the middle of Berlin?

A Yes. But I was thinking of things over which we had some control and where we were intimately involved. I think that the fact that they had to put the wall across Berlin revealed to the world the weakness of Communism.

The world sees that they had to build a wall to keep their own people in. I found on my trip around the world that this fact is virtually unanswerable. Communists say that they are a society that is ready to compete with ours on an equal basis, and yet they have to put a wall to keep their people from running away.

AIDE TO PRESIDENT

Q Mr. Kennedy, you've been referred to frequently as "assistant President." We wonder whether you could explain your relationship with the President in an official capacity. Do you have an office at the White House?

A No.

Q The question comes down to whether you can describe your role in this connection—

A I think it's difficult. I'm the Attorney General, so therefore I have responsibilities of that office. I've also been associated with the present incumbent in the White House for 37 years, the first few of which were slow. Obviously, between brothers or people who have worked together and have had a relationship for a long period of time, there is understanding and trust.

Q Is it accurate to say you're the President's most important adviser?

A No. Obviously, his most important adviser in defense is—

Q In all fields together?

A Well, I don't think you can take all fields together. The most important adviser in defense is the Secretary of Defense, or in foreign affairs it is Mr. Rusk. I might be brought into some of these areas when the President is listening to a large number of people. The President decides what he's going to do.

Q Is your field of advice almost unlimited, though?

A No; it depends on what happens to come up.

"WE DISCUSS THINGS"—

Q Is this a fair summary: that the President has Mr. McNamara in defense, he has other people on specific matters, but your role is his top adviser on broad matters that cover all these fields?

A Well, I don't think he has any top adviser. Again, as I said, it depends on what the subject is.

Q Does he thresh things out with you?

A Yes, we discuss things. You know, we were brought up having an interest in government, having an interest in foreign affairs and in domestic matters. Over many years we discussed all of these matters all the time.

Q What relationship do you have to the State Department? When you go around the world or to Brazil, for example, are you stepping on the toes of the State Department?

A No. Any trip I have made since I've been Attorney General has been suggested and arranged by the State Department.

Q Do you go representing the President?

A I'm working for the United States Government, and I go at the request of the Secretary of State.

Q Is there some special function to be performed?

A I could tell you why I went to each one—

Q Why Brazil?

A I was going to Panama to see the Inter-American Police Academy. The President of the United States had expressed concern as to the situation that was developing in Brazil regarding their economy and its tremendous inflation. In addition, we in the United States had found it difficult to work with a number of important officials in Brazil who had an extreme anti-U. S. bias. I received an invitation from the President of Brazil to come and meet with him. We discussed this problem.

The Secretary of State and Edwin M. Martin, Assistant Secretary of State for Inter-American Affairs, as well as Ambassador Lincoln Gordon, thought it would be helpful if we got across our position on a firsthand basis to the President of Brazil so he could understand President Kennedy's considerable concern.

Q Did Mr. Rusk and Mr. Martin feel that our position would be handled more emphatically if you did it rather than one of them? Was Mr. Martin with you?

A Mr. Martin and Ambassador Gordon felt this kind of talk could be helpful. It was only one step in an effort by our Government to clarify our situation with respect to Brazil.

ROLE OF THE CABINET—

Q This isn't the Attorney General's role—

A No, not in the "table of organization," perhaps. But in this Administration there has been a great deal of interaction among the members of the Cabinet. Secretary Rusk probably knows more about the Defense Department than any of his predecessors, and Secretary McNamara has greater knowledge of State Department problems than any previous Secretary of Defense. Secretary Dillon has been of considerable help in matters not relating directly to the Treasury. I think this is a strength, and I went to Brazil to assist in making sure they understood our position.

Q Has Government at your present level been greatly different from what you had imagined it to be?

A Not really, no. As far as I'm concerned, to be quite frank, there is tremendous advantage in having the same last name as the President of the United States. I know that there is, of course, red tape and all the rest in government, but as far as I am concerned, in my experience in government, I think a lot can be accomplished even when you are not related to the President—take Bob McNamara for instance. However, there's a lot more that needs to be accomplished.

Q What proportion of your time do you spend on Department of Justice affairs?

A Most of my time. It depends, however. At the time of the recent Cuba matter, I spent almost all my time on that. During the Bay of Pigs investigation, which went on for three or four months, I split the time. So I think it depends on the projects.

. . . "I don't know that businessmen will ever be in love with us"

Q Are there times when it becomes difficult for you by reason of the fact that you're the President's brother?

A I don't find it so. It might be for him, but it isn't for me.

CRACKDOWN ON STEEL

Q Have you improved relations with businessmen?

A I thought in February of 1962 that we had, and then came the steel dispute. The business community always has greater mistrust of any Democratic Administration than of a Republican Administration. It is an ideological reflex—obsolete, in my opinion—but that's one of the facts of life, so I don't know that businessmen, the big ones, anyway, no matter what we do, will ever be in love with us.

But I think that the relationship is one, somewhat, of mutual respect.

Q Do you feel that the atmosphere is better than it was just after the steel crisis?

A Oh, yes. I think that it couldn't have been worse at that time. So we had only one place to go—up.

I spoke before the Business Advisory Council in March, 1962. Everybody was talking at that meeting about what a good relationship had developed between Government and leaders in business, that there had been mistrust when President Kennedy first took over, but now there was this greater feeling of pleasantness and accomplishment and working together.

Then came steel, and, of course, that was disastrous to our relationship. Now I think we're back up. And I'd hope it would stay, but, as I say, I think that the business community—or probably a good percentage of it—would rather have somebody other than President Kennedy in the White House and somebody other than me as Attorney General.

Q Are you happy with the way the steel situation was handled, Mr. Kennedy?

A I don't believe the President could have done otherwise.

Q Did you feel there was more pressure used than necessary?

A I didn't. No, I thought that, looking at it at the time, going through it at the time, that's really all you could do. We had to make the effort for the reasons that the President has stated.

Q We've been told by steel-company executives that, during the steel controversy, FBI agents "fanned out" through their offices, without warrants, seeking information. Is this true, and, if so, what is the explanation for it?

Q First, no one from this Department enters anyone's office without their express permission. So there was no FBI agent in any company office unless he was told that he should enter.

Second, nothing was done in the steel case differently from hundreds of other investigations. One of the primary functions of the FBI is to make preliminary investigations in antitrust cases. In these or any other preliminary inquiry, search warrants or subpoenas are not used.

The FBI agents are carefully trained and make courteous inquiry into such situations. Further, no one is under any compulsion to answer agents' questions unless they wish to. No documents or records need be made available to agents.

No steel executive made any complaint or report to us that the agents were anything but courteous or proper in making inquiry into the steel companies. One Southwestern executive complained to a newspaper, but when we sought the specifics of his complaint from him he was unable to supply them.

Q Many people could not understand why the President and the Government were surprised at the price rise, because Mr. Blough of U. S. Steel said in an interview in this magazine a few weeks before that there was going to be a price rise. And yet everybody seemed to be taken completely off guard when it occurred—

A Well, Mr. Blough sat in a number of conferences with the President, and with Secretary of Labor Goldberg where efforts were made—which he applauded—to keep David McDonald and the steel union from asking a large increase in wages. That effort was made on the basis that there wouldn't be any rise in the price of steel. Mr. Blough never

Office of the Attorney General, under Robert Kennedy, has become a command post for a wide field of Government operations.

—USN&WR Photo

. . . "We opposed less than 1 per cent of mergers in court" said during that period of time, "Well, no matter what happens, I'm going to have to raise the price of steel."

Q Was he ever asked directly? Was no mention ever made of a price increase?

A There never was a direct request. However, it was clearly understood that the President's efforts with the steel union to keep its demands down were so that it would not be necessary for the steel companies to raise the price of steel based on a wage increase. As you know, pressure was placed on business after the price of steel went up. But, also, the President and Secretary Goldberg had placed tremendous pressure on David McDonald and other officials of the union to keep their demands down.

And Mr. Blough and those associated with him were well aware of that. They didn't say the Administration should stay out of this field. They applauded it, and they were kept advised as to what was going on.

Everything was on the basis that a rise in the price of steel at that time would be harmful to the economy. So when the rise was announced, it came as a complete surprise to us.

Q That was quite a period, wasn't it?

A Yes, I don't think that the situation that followed was very pleasant.

ANTITRUST

Q Do antitrust laws need clarification?

A That is a difficult area for businessmen and those whose activities might bring them into this field. I think that antitrust laws have been very beneficial for the United States, and I think they've been beneficial to business. I believe that they're performing an important function at the present time, but I don't expect that they are perfect.

Q Businessmen at times say that they feel a punitive attitude is involved in applying the laws—

A The same statement is always made, no matter what the Administration. We are trying to be as vigorous as we can be in enforcing the law as we are supposed to do.

Q If a businessman is involved in a merger or other transaction involving doubt about the application of antitrust laws, can he get his questions cleared up?

A Yes. First, if he will present all the facts, in many areas he can get a letter giving the Department's view of his plans. Second, we say that, based on the facts as outlined, the company can or cannot go ahead with a proposal. If our word isn't good on that basis, we should go out of business.

Q Do the letters you give outline specific areas of approval or disapproval?

A Yes.

Q Are there many specific requests in this field?

A Yes, sure. A great number of them. All lawyers with antitrust questions know about the Department's policy in this field.

Price fixing, obviously, never is approved. On the other hand, if a businessman wants to find out whether belonging to a particular association or to find if discussing certain matters would violate an area of antitrust laws, he can get advice and an indication on that.

Obviously, somebody is going to come and say, "These are areas that we do know, but perhaps something is going to happen about which we are not sure." Then that man will not get a letter until the area of doubt is clarified. We have to know all the facts. He can get a letter, or he can get assurance if the facts justify.

Q How long does it take to give an answer to questions arising from antitrust laws?

A It depends on how complicated the deal is. But this happens continuously. Hardly a day goes by that requests of this kind do not come to the Department of Justice. We try to act as quickly as is necessary in each situation. We have given antitrust letters in a day in exceptional circumstances.

Q Is one of the problems here the difficulty in deciding how far a businessman can go in following a practice? Is the issue sometimes not black and white?

A Problems often are difficult. Where there is going to be a merger or where there is going to be some action, it is difficult often to outline all of the facts as they may concern the future. But if businessmen know all the facts and can present them and talk about them, then they can get that clarification from the Department. That happens continuously.

Compliance with the antitrust laws isn't really as hard as some say it is. Out of the total of nearly 5 million businesses in the country only a minute fraction of 1 per cent are ever involved in antitrust difficulty. Last year, for example, we brought about 90 cases with a couple of hundred business defendants. We knew about more than 1,200 mergers but opposed less than 1 per cent of them in court.

I would point out that between 60 and 70 per cent of the complaints that we receive in the Antitrust department come from businessmen. A lot of businessmen feel that the laws are absolutely essential. An instance is the proposed merger of American and Eastern airlines. I've seen editorials that the Antitrust Division is opposed to that merger. But every other major airline in the United States was opposed to that merger.

HOW MERGERS CAN DIFFER—

Q Let's take banks: The Federal Reserve will approve a bank merger. The Comptroller of the Currency will approve it. Then your Department says that the merger violates the antitrust laws. It's the same with some proposed rail mergers—other agencies of the Government will approve, yet your Department will oppose. What is the dividing line?

A Ultimately, of course, the parties can bring the issue to court for a determination as to whether we were correct or not.

But it's wrong to say that bank mergers and rail mergers are in the same situation. The Interstate Commerce Commission has statutory authority to give antitrust exemption to mergers it approves. We have presented arguments to the ICC in the public interest, as the Government sees it, but we have not brought an antitrust suit against any merger approved by the ICC.

One of the major questions in the bank mergers was whether the antitrust laws applied. That's going to be decided by the Supreme Court. We feel very strongly and firmly that it does, that those laws do apply. Therefore, we think that antitrust laws and all the criteria that are set up under the antitrust laws apply to bank mergers. It's incumbent upon us, in our responsibility, to enforce the law. Now, if somebody doesn't like the law—

Q For 50 years or 60 years, 70 years, nobody has thought the antitrust laws did apply, but all of a sudden—

A Well, now, that's not 50, 60, 70 years of experience because the issues were raised under the Kefauver-Celler law that was passed just a few years ago and the bank-merger statute which Congress passed in 1960. The Supreme . . . "Problem of tax-exempt foundations deserves a real study"

Court is ultimately going to decide these questions. If people don't like these laws, they should seek changes. We must enforce the law.

Q Mr. Kennedy, how widespread do you think such things as price collusion rather than price competition are practiced?

A I think these practices are widespread. A very small minority of business concerns are involved, but it's still widespread and involves some of our big corporations. It's going on at the present time, and I'm convinced that price collusion exists in almost every major community in the United States.

Q Would you say in every major industry?

A No. But we know it is occurring, unfortunately, among a large number of companies.

Q Is it more widespread among large industries and companies, or small ones, or what?

A The cases that are brought to my attention, for the most part, involve large companies.

Q Are you opposed to bigness?

A No, I'm not opposed to bigness per se—nor is the Government. We're in favor of the economy gaining, and that means our companies must grow and prosper. This is what we want.

WHEN BIDS ARE FIXED—

Q How can you have, really, much knowledge of price control? A businessman can call up on the telephone and ask somebody a price, and, when he gets that price, that can be his price. How do you get at that problem?

A That's not the problem. It's when you sit down and decide that you're going to get the Government contract this month, the next company is going to get it the next month and another company the next month. Or you're going to be the low bidder this time, he'll be the next time—when the moon is at a quarter you'll get it, when it's half full for that month he'll get it.

Q Do you think that does go on?

A There's no question it goes on. It's going on now. It's going on continuously. And it's going on in the sale of commodities and services to Government installations across the United States. It's going on in sales of, for instance, milk to schoolchildren and schools. It's going on in every area of the United States. And I think it's most unfortunate.

Q Are you concerned about the sort of thing Congressman Patman [Representative Wright Patman (Dem.), of Texas] was talking about in his report on tax-exempt foundations—the foundations replacing the old trusts and controlling competing companies?

A It's an area that we'd be interested in. The whole problem of tax-exempt foundations deserves a real study. I think that he's performing a major service in bringing it to public attention.

Q Do you have an impression that there is a very great deal of abuse of the tax-exempt privilege?

A Yes.

Q Does that require a law rather than an administrative action to correct?

A The question often is whether a particular organization should have a tax-exempt status—where the money is going, and whether they should lose their tax-exempt status. We got into the question to some extent when I was counsel for the Senate subcommittee investigating labor and management. We went into labor organizations which are tax-exempt. There were instances where a union's funds were used by some of these people for their own personal income.

Because it was a tax-exempt organization, none of the tax agents or authorities looked into the organizations. They said, "They're tax-exempt, so therefore we're not going to get any tax, so it's just a waste of time to look into the situation."

I think that that's been the trend, and I think that Congressman Patman is performing a real service to make sure that tax-exempt organizations are not being used just as tax gimmicks for individuals to avoid payment of taxes.

Q He says that the Treasury has been lax to the point of complete irresponsibility in enforcing the law on tax-exempt foundations—

A It's been a matter of great concern to me for a number of years, and I've expressed that to Mr. Caplin [Commissioner of Internal Revenue] and to Congressman Patman. I think that we're going to try to do everything that we can in the executive branch of the Government to co-operate with his efforts.

Q Has that tax-exempt field been growing?

A Yes, I believe it has.

I might say, just going back to the question of our harassment of businessmen, that I looked up the statistics and, since I've been Attorney General, we've indicted and convicted more labor leaders and those associated in the labor field—some crooked deal—under the criminal laws than we have businessmen under the antitrust laws.

HOFFA AND TEAMSTERS

Q There's one labor leader you have a lot of luck indicting, but you never seem to get a conviction—

A Touché!

Q Are you out to get Jimmy Hoffa of the Teamsters Union?

A No. But my responsibility is to see that justice is done, and I hope that justice will be done.

Q Have you set up a special unit down in the Justice Department to deal with Mr. Hoffa?

A We have a group within the Department of Justice that is working on the whole field of labor-management racketeering.

Q Working in what way?

A In 1962, with that group, in grand juries and investigations that have been held across the United States, we've indicted about 80 different individuals.

Q In unions?

A Yes, and people who are associated with unions in some fashion. We've convicted 44 of them in trials and five have been acquitted. Of that group, most of them are Teamster officials and those associated with the Teamsters Union.

Q What type of thing is going on?

A Well, they cover a wide range. For instance, Barney Baker, a major Teamster official who is in the Federal Correctional Institution, Sandstone, Minn., was convicted of accepting payments from an employer in violation of the Taft-Hartley Act.

William Presser, a prominent Teamster in Ohio, was convicted in 1960 for obstruction of justice, and recently that conviction was affirmed by the Supreme Court.

Samuel J. Marroso, a former Teamster official, was convicted in December, 1962, of transportation of counterfeit Ohio Turnpike bonds in foreign commerce.

One of Mr. Hoffa's chief lieutenants in Teamster Local 299 in Detroit was convicted in November, 1962, for violating the Taft-Hartley Act, accepting illegal payments from employers, and another pleaded guilty of the same charge.

George Cottage, secretary-treasurer of Teamster Local 902, Detroit, was recently sentenced to three years' imprisonment for his part in the hijacking of a shipment of whisky.

In October, 1962, three officers of Teamster Local 71, Charlotte, N. C., were convicted of embezzlement of union funds and each sentenced to two years in prison.

Q Does this group in the Department find itself devoting most of its time to the Teamsters?

A Well, we found, in the work of our committee, and since I have been Attorney General, that the corruption and the dishonesty in labor management was centered around some of the hierarchy of that union.

Q What, in your judgment, is to be the ultimate outcome of the Hoffa matter?

A He's under indictment at the present time. I haven't discussed him since I've been Attorney General, and I don't feel I should get into a discussion now.

SPENDING, TAXES

Q Is there a problem in the fact that Government gets bigger all the time?

A Well, do you know there are fewer employes in the Federal Government now than there were 10 years ago? I found out the other day that—excluding the Post Office and the Defense Department—there are fewer people working for the Federal Government than work for the telephone industry.

Expenditures are going to increase. Our country is expanding and costs go up as more services are required. This is the trend but it certainly does not originate with this Administration. In his eight years President Eisenhower, who had five deficit years, spent 180 billion dollars more than President Truman in the previous eight years. So this is the problem facing every President, every Administration.

Q Are we going to be able to keep on increasing, year after year, our expenditures for defense and space?

A Well, I think we are going to have to take whatever steps are necessary. You know, it's been steadily increasing. There's been criticism, but the trend in our gross national product, of course, has gone up tremendously. So I don't think that the economy is in any great danger.

Q What are the chances for a major tax cut this year, in your personal opinion?

A I think we have a good chance for it. The basic problem is that, for more than five years, we've had relatively high unemployment, low profits and our productive capacity has not been used fully. The President believes that the best way to remove the drag on the economy and foster growth toward full employment is to lighten the tax burden. There is growing understanding of the problem and a will to deal with it, so I am optimistic the tax bill will pass.

Q On a compromise basis?

A Yes. Obviously, you're not going to get everything the President wants.

Q How fast can a cut be made effective?

A I don't know. I just don't know.

Q Mr. Kennedy, if the President's advisers are correct about the need for a tax cut to unleash the economy, isn't it almost a political necessity that he get a tax cut effective reasonably soon so the effect will show up by '64, so you can achieve the economic gains that you have promised?

A I think, for the benefit and good of the country, that the tax cut should come as quickly as possible.

CIVIL RIGHTS

Q Do you think James Meredith is going to stay at the University of Mississippi?

A I hope he does, but I have some serious questions as to whether he will or not. The chances at the present time are that he will leave.

Q Do you think that was a mistake—for a Negro to try to get Mississippi integrated ahead of some other place?

A No, no. I think that's a difficult area, but Meredith decided he wanted to do it and these decisions are up to the individual.

Q What have you proved in this case?

A Well, first, we don't get into these cases unless or until there is a violation of a court order or an apparent contempt of our courts. I think we demonstrated in this case that this is a country of laws—not of men—and that the laws of the United States and the orders of the courts will be enforced.

I would point out that the Justice Department was not involved in the Meredith case until Governor Barnett invoked the discredited doctrine of "interposition," and it was apparent that efforts were to be made to interfere with federal-court orders.

Over a three-week period, we made every effort to persuade the State officials to not interfere with the courts' orders and meet their responsibilities to maintain law and order when Meredith went to register. When the State authorities were either unwilling or unable to do so, it was necessary to send marshals and, later, troops to Oxford.

I might add that racial discrimination is the biggest internal problem that we have in the United States.

Q Can you solve it with use of military power?

A No. There was a Supreme Court decision made in 1954 that individuals, no matter what their color, have a right to go to a public school or university of their choice, and we have the responsibility to enforce the law. And the courts acted, and I think we have no other choice, whether I am Attorney General, or the attorney general of Mississippi and I change places. He would have the same responsibility —to make sure the law is enforced.

Q What did the Court decide, though? Did the Court say that you had to integrate schools, or did it just decide that you couldn't have laws separating the races or requiring segregation?

A In the Meredith case, the federal court held that, in this particular university, Mr. Meredith should be permitted to attend. And Mississippi officials have always said in court that the university was integrated. I don't know if you're aware of that. They never claimed the University of Mississippi was other than an integrated institution. They said that they are an integrated university. It's just that they didn't happen to have a Negro at that particular time.

Q Were they turning him down on some ground other than race?

A Yes.

Q On the basis of his grades?

A Well, they had various reasons—they just didn't want him—whatever the reason was. So, on the surface, segrega-

. . . "We can't accept the status quo" in race matters

tion was not the issue, as far as the University of Mississippi was concerned.

Q If he quits, will this have been a rather expensive accomplishment?

A If he stays, it's an expensive accomplishment.

Q If Mr. Meredith quits, will it make it that much more difficult to bring about such things in, say, Alabama or South Carolina?

A I think it does. I think it probably does.

"A STEP BACKWARD"—

Q Is that the basis for your statement that you hoped he would stay?

A First, he made the decision to apply. A great deal of effort went into it by him, and then a great deal of effort went into it by many other people and a great deal of effort was made to enforce the law. Everybody in the United States has contributed something, because the taxpayers' money has been used. So, I would hope that Mr. Meredith would stay for all of these reasons.

I just think that we're going to have to continue to move in this very difficult area. I think a lot of people in the Southern parts of the United States accept this and acknowledge it. As we continue to move ahead, it will make it much easier in the long run if we don't take a step backward. I think Meredith's withdrawing would be a step backward.

Q Will it be as difficult the next time—another student at the same place, one other than Meredith?

A I think that progress has been made, that there are those within the community at Oxford and elsewhere in the State now who would speak out, whereas six months ago they didn't speak out. But the report that I received is that Mr. Meredith is in a frame of mind now that makes it difficult for him to stay.

Q He told our people he was rather discouraged all along—

A Well, he was under a great deal of pressure. I think the fact that he lasted during that most difficult time at the beginning is a great tribute to him. And now I think having his father's house shot at, still not accepted by his fellow students, having had 400 or 500 soldiers around and having marshals—well, I, at least, found college tough enough without having all that.

Q How long will the troops stay?

A If the State of Mississippi and the law-enforcement officials and the school authorities will assume this responsibility in an orderly, dignified fashion—the responsibility of maintaining law and order, the responsibility of keeping peace on the campus—then the troops would be withdrawn immediately. It is completely up to them.

Q What is being done to bring about integration in the schools of Washington? They're resegregating at a rapid rate. All through the North that is occurring. Isn't the problem as great in the North as in the South?

A As I've always said, it's not just schools, but this whole question is a big problem in the North.

Q Might the Administration's housing order help to reverse this resegregation?

A Well, I think a lot of different things improve the situation—whether it's going to be housing or the leadership of the President or the general acceptance by the American people. I think the situation is far better than it was 10, 20 or 30 years ago, and we're going to continue, I think, to make progress. But we have a lot of problems ahead of us in this field in the next 10 years, and they're not centered just in Mississippi.

Q The housing order had to do with those projects which are financed by the Government or supported, insured, guaranteed by the Government. Could this Government legally enforce an order having to do with housing conventionally financed, without the Government's being involved at all?

A No.

Q I'm thinking of a case where a man builds or buys a house. He goes to an insurance company and borrows the money on a mortgage—

A I don't think we'd have any authority.

Q But would you in a bank, because the bank deposits are guaranteed by the Government?

A Well, we could have gone further, but we couldn't have gone as far as where the financing has nothing to do with Government.

Q Was there some thought of going as far as the savings and loan associations?

A There was consideration of savings and loans and there was consideration of the banks and the insurance companies —I think that we didn't have the authority in the latter case.

The problem was that we were getting into a field that was, under ordinary circumstances, left to people themselves. So we wanted to be careful on how far we went.

Q Is this order likely to be subjected to serious legal tests as to whether the Government acted within its authority?

A I think that we are on very good legal grounds.

Q You couldn't do much with mutual savings banks?

A No, not as much.

Q Do you think this race issue has a bearing on the U. S. standing in the rest of the world?

A This area has more of an effect for good or for bad in foreign affairs than any other thing—particularly in the countries of Asia and Africa, South America. We can spend a lot for the United States Information Agency, or we can spend a lot for many of these other programs—the Alliance for Progress—but when we don't meet our responsibilities here in the United States in this field, I think we take a real step back. People just can't understand the fact that we think that there is a portion of our citizenry that is inferior.

When we have an incident, it hurts. But if we have an incident and handle it properly, and try to do what is correct, I think that's acknowledged, generally.

Certainly in the Government, we should take all steps that we can take. And I think it's generally accepted by many more people in the United States than it has been in the past. I'm convinced we must meet this problem because I don't think we can ever go to the rest of the people of the world and talk about the Declaration of Independence or the Constitution and treat a portion of our population as inferior. I think that it's that simple. We can't accept the status quo on this matter.

U.S. vs. CASTRO

Q Mr. Kennedy, we were talking earlier of disappointments of the last two years. Do you want to mention Cuba—the Bay of Pigs?

A I've seen in your magazine so many times so many articles about the President withdrawing "U. S. air cover," that I think it's important we clear that up.

I was on the committee—with General Taylor, Admiral

. . . "Danger of subversion directed by Cuba is considerable"

Burke and Allen Dulles—which investigated the Bay of Pigs invasion. I can't go into that in detail, but I can say unequivocally that President Kennedy never withdrew U. S. air cover. You, as well as others, have reported this on several different occasions and it is just not true. In fact, there never were any plans made for U. S. air cover, so there was nothing to withdraw.

AIR COVER: WHAT HAPPENED—

Q Was it actually air cover from Central America?

A But you had "U. S. air cover." There was never any plan to have U. S. air cover. I mean it was never suggested by the military. It was never considered.

Q At any stage?

A In the planning it was never contemplated that there be U. S. air cover.

Q Not even in the military planning?

A Absolutely not.

Q Where did control of the whole thing lie?

A Well, let's get this straight first:

The first point is that there was not U. S. air cover and none was withdrawn. In fact, the President didn't withdraw any air cover for the landing forces—U. S. or otherwise.

What happened was this: One air attack had been made on Saturday on Cuban airports. There was a flurry at the United Nations and elsewhere and, as a result, U. S. participation in the matter was coming to the surface. This surfacing was contrary to the preinvasion plan. There was supposed to be another attack on the airports on Monday morning.

The President was called about whether another attack which had been planned should take place. As there was this stir about the matter, he gave instructions that it should not take place at that time unless those having the responsibility felt that it was so important it had to take place, in which case they should call him and discuss it further.

And that's what was postponed. It wasn't air cover of the beaches or landings. And, in fact, the attack on the airports took place later that day.

PLANES: "INADEQUATE"—

Q Wasn't there to be air cover of the beaches from Central America?

A That is correct—and that was not disturbed. All of the planes that were supposed to be utilized were utilized—all in the planning. I might say they proved to be inadequate. The air cover at the beaches was definitely inadequate—but not because of some last-minute decision by the President or anyone else.

Q Who did the planning?

A Now, that's the third point. The President has taken responsibility for this whole matter.

Q Well, was the planning by the military, or somebody else?

A The plan that finally went into effect was approved by our military—the Pentagon, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, as well as the Central Intelligence Agency. This wasn't something that was planned by a few fellows over at the White House and then put in operation. However, the President had to give approval to the plan and he quite properly has accepted the responsibility.

Q There have been many reports that the military did not approve the thing—

A As General Lemnitzer, who was Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, has said, they did approve it, although responsibility for the planning lay primarily with the CIA.

The President had made it clear from the beginning, prior to the approval of this operation, American manpower, American air power and American ships would not be used.

And this plan had to go into effect without that. The military approved the plan that finally went into operation on that basis.

Q What accounts for the miscalculation here? You say the forces that went in were not adequate—

A I think it's a difficult question to answer—the plans and the recommendations obviously were not adequate.

Q Why were American forces there if they were not used?

A The plan was that, if the invasion ships starting from Central America were sighted by a Cuban plane, or in some fashion the Communists learned about the invasion, they were going to turn around. Our forces had permission to protect them from attack as they returned.

Q You have quoted the President as saying, "I want it understood that American forces are not going to be used, and if you still think this plan is good enough, we'll go ahead." Is that right?

A That is correct.

Q Who was it he was talking to?

A To all those who were involved in the planning. All those involved in the planning understood that American forces would not be used.

GETTING RID OF CASTRO—

Q Mr. Kennedy, carrying it one step forward, we are told now that the policy is to get rid of Castro and Communist influence in Cuba. How are you going about that?

A Well, over the period of the last year we've taken stringent, strong economic steps against Castro. We've taken steps to isolate him economically and politically, and those efforts will continue.

Q How long do you think it's going to take?

A I have no idea. However, I think Castro's position throughout the world—but particularly in South America—has been greatly weakened in the last 15 months. He has also lost considerable support in Cuba.

Q What is being done in Latin America to curb subversion that comes out of Cuba?

A Well, we have an organization within the Government that is responsible for dealing with counterinsurgency—focused primarily on five or six countries which are particularly vulnerable.

Q Are there subversion schools in Cuba for export to Latin America?

A Yes, and the danger of Communist subversion directed by Cuba is considerable. They bring a student or a dissatisfied political leader over to Cuba. He gets two or three months of instruction and then he goes home and he's got whatever he wants. As for arms, there are plenty of arms around that can be bought. They can furnish the money, which is not traceable.

It's clear there was a tie with Communism and Castro in the dynamiting of the oil rigs in Venezuela and also, obviously, with the people that the FBI arrested in New York in November in an anti-U. S. plot. So there might be an increase in that. But the trend at the present time seems to be a concentration on bringing Communists to Cuba for a period of time and then sending them back to put their training into operation.

. . . "Youth crime doesn't arise from just slums"

Q Do you think it's significant?

A Oh, I do think it's very significant.

Q The scope of it?

A Oh, I do think that's significant. It poses a great danger for all these countries. However, Castro's problems have increased also. The fact that he does not have the same high position that he had a year ago or a year and a half ago—that he's not considered the great savior—has had a very marked effect on those who were willing to follow him. That's been the most serious blow that has been struck against him. If the Alliance for Progress goes into operation fully, if reforms, social, economic and political, are put into effect, then Communism and Castroism will collapse in South America. However, if effort is not made and reforms are not forthcoming, we will have problems in South America even if there is no Cuba or Castro.

"MANAGED NEWS"—

Q One subject that we've heard a lot about is managed news. And somebody told us that you had been sold on the idea of managed news. What is managed news?

A I don't know.

Q This didn't originate with you, then?

A No. I think a person must be out of his mind if he thinks that he can manage news.

Q It has been said this is an unduly sensitive Administration—do you think so?

A No. You know, it's not the most enjoyable thing if you read something that's untrue. You just don't like it. I don't think that you would enjoy it if you were on the receiving end. But, then, newspaper people always say, "Well, why don't you get used to it and relax?"

Q Would you say that, by and large, this Administration has had a good press—fairly friendly?

A Yes.

Q Are the irritations that have come been isolated?

A Yes.

Q Is it possible that you're less sensitive than your brother is?

A Well, he gets more written about him. I think probably he's a perfectionist. We concentrate on facts—they mean a great deal to us—and we think that others should do so also. It's difficult to understand it when the facts aren't reported. That's really the problem.

Q Would those facts be reported more accurately if they were made more accessible?

A I don't think that that's the great problem in this Administration. Further, the factual inaccuracies to which I have reference are not based on a failure to make the facts available.

WAR ON CRIME

Q Mr. Attorney General, we haven't discussed crime—juvenile delinquency and so on. Is the growth of crime throughout the country a matter of concern?

A We have 5,000 young people in our federal institutions out of about 24,000.

Q What is the youngest? Under 21?

A I believe 13.

We went to Congress at the beginning of 1961 and obtained the passage of some legislation dealing with this problem, authorizing a maximum expenditure of 10 million dollars a year.

Obviously, 10 million dollars a year is not going to answer the problem. In New York City, seven years ago, they spent 23 million. In 1960, they spent nearly 90 million dealing with this problem. And during that period—from 1950 through 1959—the number of delinquency cases handled by children's courts went up 163 per cent.

It's not just the expenditure of funds. What we feel is that it's attacking the problem on a broad front and having the local community do it.

Youth crime doesn't arise from just slums. What you need is to see what has to be done in the field of housing, what has to be done in the field of education, what has to be done in the field of recreation, what has to be done in family life, what has to be done in the field of law enforcement—all of these areas plus many more.

Many communities have looked into what their problem is and they decided, "Well, we'll just go in and build better housing." And then they moved the same people in the housing. These same young people who lived in the streets, go into their apartment buildings and get into the same kinds of problems that they got into in the streets before.

Well, they say, "We'll build better schools." And that, by itself, is not the answer.

What we have tried to do with this money is to give an incentive to a community to go out and study their problems in all of the fields. We've asked them to come in, if they're interested in this program—to come in with a plan which will attack juvenile delinquency and youth crime over a period of the next decade or so, and do it in an organized fashion and not in a haphazard, helter-skelter way.

We get 10 million dollars each year—a 30-million-dollar allocation of the Federal Government over a period of three years, and that's started in operation, and I think it's been very successful.

One plan has gone, actually, into operation—Mobilization for Youth—up in New York City, where they put a plan into action and they are starting to work with these young people.

REDUCING DELINQUENCY—

Q In what ways?

A Well, they're working in the schools. They have an overall program for the lower East Side of New York City—and it's an area with the worst possible problems.

They've set up nurseries for the children. They've made efforts to improve education. They've gone in and worked with the young people to get them to come back to school. They've sent in people to establish a recreation program. They've started teaching youngsters a trade.

They've sent in special people to work on narcotics, because it's an area where they have great difficulty in the city of New York.

Q What about young people who get into federal custody?

A In our federal institutions, we've set up "halfway houses"—on a trial basis so far. Young people, about 60 or 90 days before coming out of prison, will go to a "halfway house"—one in New York, and one in Chicago, one in Los Angeles and a new one in Detroit—and there they will be helped in getting a job; they will be helped in what their problem is in their local community.

Ordinarily, what happens is: These young people come out of prison and they go back in the same community. They have exactly the same friends, they don't have any more chance of getting a job than when they went in.

. . . "President's popularity will have its ups and downs"

What we try to do is to set up this institution and then help them get a job, improve their character—in other words, a start in normal life. After a week or two, they'll go out to work and come back to the institution every night. They can visit their families but they live at the "halfway house."

It has been extremely effective, based on the experience with these young people who have come in through the "halfway houses," compared to the ones who have gone out directly. It's been so effective that many of the States now are adopting this procedure and putting this kind of plan into effect.

DATA ON UNDERWORLD—

Q What of crime, generally?

A We've set up a unit within the Department of Justice made up of about 55 lawyers who have the responsibility for organized crime. Before, you had about 26 investigative units of the Federal Government. They all operated independently, but they never really pooled all the information on the big-time underworld operators.

What we have done is to bring all the investigative groups together. We have files now on the big-time gangsters and hoodlums in the United States, pooling all the information—all the information that anybody has—in one place in the Department of Justice.

Then we have branch offices in about five or six cities across the country.

It's intelligence information. It may pay off now—right now—or in five years, but all the information on all of these people who have been around for a long time, have controlled the underworld, will be available.

Q Are those people powerful?

A Oh, yes—very powerful economically, and frequently politically. And from that information, we've achieved some very important convictions: Mickey Cohen on the West Coast; Frankie Carbo, of New York, who also ran boxing on the West Coast, in Los Angeles; Alfred Sica in Los Angeles; "Buster" Wortman in East St. Louis; "Kid" Cann in Minneapolis, who controlled operations there for 30 years; "Trigger Mike" Coppola in Miami.

CRACKDOWN ON BETTING—

Q What kind of operators are these people?

A Well, the ones we are working on are major underworld hoodlums—they run gambling, for the most part. Gambling is the major source of income for organized crime.

We also, as part of this effort, were able to get seven laws passed in the last two years in Congress, which is the most crime legislation that has been passed since 1934. The result has been that the betting "wire services" across the United States, for the most part, have closed down—the one in New Orleans; the one in Newport, Ky.; the one in Minneapolis—

Q Were these race-track wires?

A Yes, and gambling information, generally.

Q Are the gamblers' profits down?

A Yes. In many areas, they've had to go out of business completely.

Q Do places like Las Vegas make the job more difficult?

A Yes.

Q In what way? Nevada will argue with you on that—

A I think the people of Nevada should decide what they want to do themselves. But, on the question of what effect it has on our job across the country, it makes it more difficult.

NEXT TWO YEARS

Q Turning to politics, is the race in 1964 going to be a difficult one?

A Yes. Races are never easy. And then, you know, you go through cycles. The President, I think, is popular now, with Cuba and the elections and everybody being reasonably relaxed, business is doing well, all the rest. But it is inevitable that there will be some fights, and you're going to have some unpleasantness, some disorder and some disappointment, and the President's popularity will have its ups and downs.

Q At this stage, who's going to be the Republican nominee, would you guess?

A Well, I know, but I don't think he does, so I don't think I'd better say.

Q Who, in your judgment, will make the strongest candidate for the Republicans?

A I don't think I want to get into that. We have our problems—

Q Do you think the religious issue will be a problem?

A No. I suppose every factor has some effect, but I don't believe the effect will be substantial by any means.

Q In retrospect, do you think it was very important in '60?

A Yes—very.

Q How many votes, about, were affected?

A Well, I can't tell. The group that I always have some confidence in is the Survey Research Center of the University of Michigan, and I think they said it caused a net loss of about 1.5 million votes.

Q Adverse to Kennedy?

A Adverse.

Q Can you say anything about your plans about running for Governor of Massachusetts?

A I haven't any plans. I went up there and spoke once, and they said I was going to run for Governor. I spoke five or six times in Illinois, a dozen times in New York, a few times in Pennsylvania, and a half dozen times in California, and nobody suggested that I run for Governor in any of those States.

Q Wouldn't it be rather difficult to elect a Governor of Massachusetts if you have a President and a Senator from the same family?

A Yes, I think so. You mean another member of the same family, a third member, a third Kennedy? I think it would be difficult. After our younger brother was elected to the Senate, the President said, "The only trouble with that saying about 'too many Kennedys' is that they're going to start to believe it in 1964."

Q Mr. Kennedy, what accomplishments does the Administration look forward to in the next two years?

A I think to consolidate the gains that we've made, to make use of the increased prestige and position and power of the United States to make this world a little safer. And I think that a good deal needs to be done to improve the economic vitality of the United States and to move in domestic areas where we have not been successful in the past and which, because of our concentration on foreign affairs, have been ignored.

I think, particularly, one great problem is in the field of . . . Needed: "greater awareness abroad of all we've done"

education. We're going to have double the number of students in our colleges alone in 1970. Much, much more needs to be done—teachers' salaries, schoolrooms, colleges, medical institutions, etc.

I think also that a good deal needs to be done for young people to increase the emphasis on finishing school, because the shortage in the United States is not of employment, but rather of skilled workers. The fact that one third of our young people now drop out of school—I think that the necessity and importance of their continuing their education and learning a trade if they don't go on to college is extremely important.

I think these are great domestic matters.

Q Do you think it's going to be possible to, generally, de-emphasize foreign problems?

A No. I think we're just going to have a lot of problems. You get through Cuba and you've got the Congo, and you've got Berlin. Berlin can just go up any time—that problem will be with us for some time, I expect.

Then you have the problems that we have in South America, which are immense. There is Vietnam and the difficulty in Laos. There is India and China.

I mean, you can't look at a place in the world where you could sort of sit back and say, "You don't have to look at that for another 48 hours."

Q Do you think the rest of the world recognizes all we have done to help others abroad?

A Well, we have a special role in the world so people look to us more. They keep forgetting their own faults and they look and say, "Well, look what they're doing in the United States." That's just part of what comes with leadership.

I'd like to say this on that point: I think that, generally, there should be a greater awareness in this country—and abroad—of all that we do and all that we have done. There's too much concentration on what our faults are and what our problems are.

We go into India and help them because they are being invaded by the Chinese, and the Pakistanis get mad. And we take steps to build the Skybolt missile and then we find that it's not a success, and so it's canceled, and other people get mad.

Everybody gets angry over what we are doing. The kind of effort that we've made over the period of the last 20 years, helping and assisting countries around the world, is something of which we should be extremely proud. I don't think we need apologize for our record.

I also don't think we have to accept criticisms that are continuously leveled at us from other countries because we don't do exactly as they desire. They are interested in their countries and frequently that is their sole interest. We have other interests, other responsibilities and I don't think we have to make any apology for what we have done, what we have contributed—the effort and the sacrifice that we make.

Q Do you think we're beginning to stress that side of it more?

A Yes, I think so. We put nations in Europe back on their feet. Look at the percentage that they are contributing to their defense. Look at our tax structure which is so extremely high, and is an honest tax structure that is enforced for all of our people. And all of these sacrifices—Americans are being killed in South Vietnam—and all for the protection and help and assistance of other people around the world.

I think that there should be more awareness of this—and those who write from abroad should make sure that there's greater awareness of what we're doing.

—UPI Photo

Robert Kennedy talks things over with his brother, the President. At midterm, the Attorney General feels that much has been accomplished—both at home and abroad—but much remains to be done to consolidate gains in the next two years.

See back - Kennedy: Profile of a Technician
Ted Lewis

every now and then a consultant for the State Department and a very influential one, represents the Venezuelan Government in the United States.

All this is as it may be. Clearly, however, the matter calls for an airing. Perez Jimenez may deserve hanging, but citizens and aliens alike are entitled to the guarantees of the Constitution of the United States and to due process of law. What was the reason for the revocation of bail? Why can't this alien's lawyer secure a writ of habeas corpus? Is justice to be managed from Washington as the news is managed? These are questions which require an answer, no matter who is involved.

Study in Motivation

If one were to say in so many words that one motivation for military spending in the United States is to hold back other types of spending, the person making such a charge would be denounced as paranoid, or worse, as Marxist. But this very reason is given quite frankly in a series of full-page ads in Look by the "Investor-Owned Electric Light and Power Companies," of which there are stated to be more than 300 across the nation. Whether all of them are paying for this ingenuous publicity is not stated, but the ad invites the reader to write Look for the names of the sponsors.

Almost all the space in the ads is taken up by a picture designed to swell the bosoms of all who delight in American military might. One week it was the Skybolt, now unhappily gone to the boneyard of forgotten missiles. Another week the bow of U.S.S. Enterprise, the world's first atomic-powered aircraft carrier, towered over the reader. The caption under Skybolt was: "WHEN THE SKYBOLT RIDES A BOMBER YOUR TAX DOLLARS BUY DEFENSE. BUT when your tax money is used to build more and more federal-government-owned electric plants and lines, it is spent needlessly. . . . Wouldn't it make more sense for the federal government to stop such needless spending, and use your tax money only for essentials such as defense?"

The Enterprise ad carried the same argument. "WHEN THE ENTERPRISE MAKES KNOTS," it read, "you can actually see your tax dollars at work—working usefully . . . paying for America's world-wide defense. . . . The nation is much better able to pay for it when the government cuts out needless spending. Yet some people are urging the federal government to build more electric plants and lines. . . . Electric power is a field where the government can save your tax dollars—not spend them." (Italics in original.)

Private-utility companies provide light, heat and power. In this case they are providing light, though scarcely the sort they intended.

Cracks in the Blocs

The strains within each of the two great world blocs are rapidly becoming as dominating an issue as the East-West confrontation. How important are these strains and how do they affect the chances for an East-West rapprochement? This subject will soon be discussed in The Nation by Fred Warner Neal, former State Department consultant on Russian Affairs and author of War and Peace and Germany (W. W. Norton, 1962).

'62 Lessons for '64

Pol. Pan.

PEACE AT THE POLLS . . . . . Roger Hagan

Two years into the New Deal, just as we are now two years into the New Frontier, the trial marriage of native American radicalism and the Roosevelt administration appeared to be over, and an insurgency that seemed to promise a fundamental reconstruction of American politics began taking shape. The promise was not fulfilled, but it might have been; and since we now stand at a similar point in the political cycle, there is more than nostalgic interest in recalling the mood of that period. The only radicalism with any grass-roots strength today seems to be the peace movement, which had its meaningful political baptism in last November's elections. Does it hold forth more promise, or less, than the insurgency of the early thirties?

Discussing results of the 1934 elections, The Nation's lead editorial ventured to wish out loud:

> There is genuine cause for rejoicing in the striking triumph of the new Progressive Party in Wisconsin . . . as well as in the splendid victory of [Farmer-Laborites] Governor Olson and Senator Shipstead in Minnesota. If the independent parties in these two states can get together, it is possible that they may yet grow into an effective national third party movement.

The next week's Nation warned that the ugly defeat of Upton Sinclair's "End Poverty in California" Democratic gubernatorial campaign "shows what will happen to any radical who attempts to challenge the existing order through the medium of old party politics." Before long an extended discussion was under way in the letters column about the possibilities for a new United Liberal Party.

The Nation was not unique with these speculations. Many liberals and radicals had concluded that a Democratic administration would never make the serious, deep-reaching changes in the economic and social structure that they felt the times demanded. John T. Flynn had written in Scribners in late 1934 that if the proper kind of economic planning were to be undertaken, it would be because radicals had seized upon the "historic moment" that was developing for "the launching of a powerful third party upon modern radical economic issues." John Dewey and Paul Douglas' League for Independent Political Action had resolved, at a conference in late 1933, that the people must "rise up and win economic and political control" to achieve "a new social order, a scientifically planned system"; and as a beginning, the conference had formed the Farmer-Labor Political Federation and called for a new political party. Wisconsin's Progressives also called themselves a new national party; and Phil La Follette, who won the governorship on their ticket in 1934, insisted that radical state parties could spread on their model and bring about "a national third party — a real leftist party" by 1940.

Roger Hagan, editor of the Council for Correspondence Newsletter, spent much of last year studying the political aspects of the American peace movement on a grant from the Rabinowitz Foundation.

The elections of '34, adding nine Democrats to the House and ten to the Senate, were much more a mandate to the New Deal than those of 1962 were to the New Frontier, but the hopefulness of the insurgents was undiminished. Governor Floyd Olson wrote in Common Sense in 1935 that "a third party must arise"; Montana Senator Burton K. Wheeler looked forward to one; the American Commonwealth Political Federation, led by Congressman Tom Amlie (Prog., Wis.), Alfred Bingham of Common Sense, and (now Senator) Paul Douglas, constituted itself a crypto-party to jell, if necessary, by 1936. In the State of Washington, the Democratic Party, captured by the Commonwealth Builders movement between 1934 and 1936, committed itself to the radical goals of public ownership and production-for-use. In short, entirely apart from the activities of the American Marxist parties, there was a ferment of native radicalism after two years of the New Deal, a mood of insurgency apparently ready to coalesce into a significant political force to bring about structural changes which the New Deal evidently had no intention of attempting. People with radical goals had found themselves still outside the system, and they were devising bold new strategies to get back in.

Currently the equivalent of these native insurgents is a strongly non-political collection of candidates and groups, largely middle class and without serious domestic discontents, whose disillusionment with the Administration is over foreign, not domestic, policy. To a veteran of the thirties, peace politics is no politics at all: no view of history, no domestic agenda, no idea of structural changes that might reach causes rather than symptoms, hardly even a clear idea of what to do to replace what is protested. It seems more a mood than a program, an affaire des femmes, a naive cry of anguish against the hard ironies of contemporary life. Viewed overall, it had no strategy in 1962, no political base, no popular cause to compare with the condemnation of greed and injustice of yesteryear, no strong allies on the inside like Senators Wheeler, Norris and La Follette, Congressmen Amlie, Maverick, Lundeen, Boileau, Walgren and Marcantonio, no strong-rooted politicians like LaGuardia; and, most to the point, no significant victories. After the elections, it looked even less like the making of a third party than before—when to be sure, it had looked little enough like it.

None the less, the problems and prospects of the new peace politicians are not so different from those of the insurgents of the 1930s as it may appear—indeed, their prospects may be better—nor is their weak showing and relative silence since the elections a safe guide to their future potential. To an extent, their weakness may be an advantage and their silence a good omen. They start with fewer illusions and may, as a result, evolve a more practical strategy for affecting American life with their concerns than proved possible for the radicals of 1934-36.

On the other hand, although their demands seem more circumscribed than those of the thirties, they have an immensely more difficult task. For if the 1962 elections taught them anything, it was that significant blocs of votes will not swing their way simply upon the intelligent articulation of peaceful alternatives and initiatives to reduce tension. Tension and polarization, they learned, are not recognized evils like starvation and injustice. Rather they are built into the system, integral parts of present-day life—for all classes.

In other words, the burden of peace politics is not merely to alter a small segment of public policy, but to undertake the most awesome task of reforming popular attitudes ever attempted by a minority in the history of American politics. How far this realization will lead them to extend their critique back into the focus of politics as the older generation of insurgents regarded it—into the structure of American society—remains to be seen. Their experience in the campaigns of 1962 was varied, and the strategy to which it may give rise is still much in question. Vague and incomplete as it is, however, that experience itself is, at the moment, their most valuable asset. Does it add up to anything?

There were thirty-two campaigns in 1962 in which the peace movement took particular interest. The table on the next page ranks the candidates according to the importance they gave the peace issue. Several other candidates, like Senators Clark and McGovern, supported by National SANE or the Council for Abolishing War, would be below those at the end of the list. The table is only a rough indication of how much initiative the peace movement took in the campaigns, however. The second group of candidates generally received less aid from peace groups than the third group because of their poor chances or because of disorganization of peace groups in their areas. Some in the fourth group won strong support because of their credibility as politicians. The list excludes candidates for state and local office who got help from peace groups, such as Assembly candidates Reed Searle in California and Manfred Ohrenstein in New York.

There were ten "pure" peace candidates; or, by a slightly broader definition, seventeen (comprising the first two groups in the table). None of the seventeen won office. Four were nominees of major parties, six ran as independents either on the ballot or as write-ins, and seven more lost primaries seeking major party nomination. One of the latter subsequently ran as a (N.Y.) Liberal. All but two of the remaining fifteen candidates were regular Democrats who could only loosely be called peace candidates. Curiously, these two—Pacht and Kowalski—were opposed by Democratic chieftains on grounds other than their foreign-policy views.

Results of Candidacies Supported by Peace Groups

Name, Office Sought and Party*	District	% of Vote
"PURE" PEACE CANDIDATES
Harry Purvis (H., Ind.)	N.Y. 4th	1
Harrop Freeman (H., Lib.)	N.Y. 33rd	3
Elizabeth Boardman (H., R.)	Mass. 3rd	48 P
Helen Bliss (H., D.)	N.H. 2nd	27 P
William Hefner (H., D.)	Mass. 1st	28
H. Stuart Hughes (S., Ind.)	Mass.	2.4
Sidney Lens (H., Ind.)	Ill. 2d	1
Robert Cosbey (H., Ind.)	Ill. 13th	1
Alva Tompkins (H., Ind.)	Ill. 9th	1
Herbert F. Hoover (S., R.)	Iowa	15 P
OUTSPOKEN CONCERN FOR PEACE
William O. Hart (S., Ind.)	Wis.	1
Elizabeth Weideman (H., D.)	Mich. 16th	14 P
Caroline Ramsay (H., D.)	Md. 7th	30
Alice F. Bryant (H., D.)	Wash. 1st	27
William Meyer (S., D.)	Vt.	45 P
James Youngdale (H., DFL)	Minn. 6th	49 P
Knox Mellon (H., D.)	Calif. 24th	30
SYMPATHETIC BUT NOT OUTSPOKEN
John O'Connell (H., D.)	Calif. 6th	42
George Brown (H., D.)	Calif. 29th	56
Edward Roybal (H., D.)	Calif. 30th	57
Jerry Pacht (H., D.)	Calif. 31st	P
William Stewart (H., D.)	Calif. 12th	38
Jerome Ziegler (H., D.)	Ill. 14th	40
Martin Dworkis (H., D.)	N.Y. 17th	32
Bob Wilson (H., D.)	Ill. 22nd	39
Tom Payne (H., D.)	Mich. 2nd	42
GENERALLY LIBERAL, CAUTIOUS ON PEACE
Blaine Whipple (H., D.)	Ore. 1st	48
Lionel Van Deerlin (H., D.)	Calif. 37th	51
Frank Kowalski (S., D.)	Conn.	****
Robert Kastenmeier (H., D.)	Wis. 2nd	53
Charles Weidner (H., D.)	Calif. 14th	37
William Fitts Ryan (H., D.)	N.Y. 20th	73

*H., House; S., Senate; R., Republican; D., Democrat; L., Liberal; Ind., Independent.
Primary vote; never reached General Election.
Primary vote; ran second to winner in field of nine.
*Defeated in convention before Primary.

Of the thirteen Democrats who reached the General Elections in the lower half of the list, five won House seats, including two incumbents. In the entire list, fourteen candidates lost to incumbents in November, and of these, six cut the incumbents' percentages below the 1960 showing. But only two of these were in unaltered districts, and only one of the eight whose opponents increased their percentages was in an unaltered district. Redistricting has made it impossible to draw conclusions from the figures about such candidates' ability to threaten incumbents on the basis of the peace issue alone.

There was no consistency among the seventeen peace candidates on domestic policy. Excluding Hughes, the first group discussed domestic issues only as related to the arms race; the second group had a broader platform. Three of the seventeen were Republicans and two others more conservative than most of their workers. Ramsay, on the other hand, was by any standards liberal. As to background, the candidates included four professors and three other educators, two bank presidents, an accountant, a lawyer, two farmers, two newsmen, a printer, a manufacturer, a forester and several professional politicians.

This suggests the variety of persons and styles that made up the "peace" campaigns. A focus on candidates such as this can be misleading, however. It is not the candidate or the size of his vote that might ultimately affect the politics of his district, but the people working for him. The vote was unquestionably disappointing, but the experience of politics may count for more in this first year of the peace movement's cautious insurgency.

"I told these peace guys you've got to make up your mind what you want to do: elect Wilson to Congress or use his candidacy as a platform for peace education." The Democratic chairman of a down-state Illinois city was getting hot under the collar just remembering his warning. "Now if you want to build a twenty-foot cross and nail him up there and put footlights on him, go ahead and do it, but if you want to get him elected to Congress then you've got to just shut up. And work like hell ringing doorbells."

He was speaking of Robert Wilson, candidate for Congress from Illinois' 22nd District, a farmer and owner-editor of a string of country weekly newspapers. Wilson is a well-informed liberal with roots in his section of Illinois that go back for generations, and his editorials have made him well known in much of the district. He was, therefore, the best political material the Democrats had laid hands on for years. But he is also a practicing Quaker, and his pacifism made him want to differ with the Administration on defense policy. Around the University of Illinois, in the eastern part of his district, there were some local peace groups eager to support him if he would begin to build a policy on his good instincts.

As it happened, he never did. The peace groups came into his campaign too late with too little. They had also insisted on interviewing the Republican incumbent, who had held them up for weeks. Wilson's closest advisers and managers, while not professional politicians, were predominantly concerned about the problems of winning and turning him into a credible, respectable candidate. Many of these advisers were themselves liberals who had long been engaged in discouraging battle with the entrenched down-state pros. But the chance to hitch a ride with a strong, hard-campaigning candidate with real roots in his district and a mind good enough to explain the Administration to the cautious, prosperous farmers of the 22nd District was enough to turn them into hard-nosed professionals when confronted with the idealists of the academic and women's peace groups.

The pattern here was a familiar one. The Democratic Party official himself expressed the primary dilemma of the peace movement in politics. "Me," he said, "an old NAACP, ACLU, ADA liberal, I have to talk like a real conservative Republican to keep from hurting the poor guy. You've really got to change roles in a hurry if you want to get anything done." The new militants of the peace movement are not about to change roles in a hurry: although, be it said in their favor, they did, here and elsewhere, accept compromise positions and work ringing doorbells, watching polls, distributing literature, raising money, running mimeo machines and licking stamps. Not often, however, did they "shut up."

When it was over, those who had held their tongues for a while and immersed themselves in the machinery of a campaign had to ask if the sacrifice had been vindicated. Where they had worked for a regular party candidate who merely showed sympathy for their concerns, such as Wilson in Illinois, Payne in Michigan, Pacht, Weidner or the more outspoken O'Connell in California, or Whipple in Oregon, the results were often discouraging —no victory, and not much public education. And in the few places where their man won, victory seemed attributable to factors other than themselves. Edward Roybal in the 30th District of California (Los Angeles), for example, seemed most indebted to a lackadaisical opponent and to his Mexican-American nationality. He won with 57 per cent of the vote in a district which includes 35-40 per cent Mexican-Americans. But here at least peace people were useful in getting the Democrats registered, a particular problem in such a district. Elsewhere their aid was even less clearly a benefit.

George Brown's 29th District in Southern California was safe in terms of party registration (62 per cent Democratic) and Brown, as a former city councilman, mayor of Monterey Park and state Assemblyman, was well known to the electorate. Even so, his vote, at 56 per cent, was lower than expected. His opponent had hit hard at Brown's pro-SANE views, and this apparently had cut into his margin. Brown publicly acknowledges the helpfulness of SANE, the women's peace groups and Californians for Liberal Representation (CLR), an offspring of the California Democratic Club movement (CDC) formed to aid candidates strong on disarmament, civil liberties and civil rights. In terms of what campaign managers call "bodies" — precinct workers — and money contributed, the peace groups gave Brown more help than his most important labor support, and more than the national and state Democratic Committees. Privately, however, he wonders if peace-group support did not do enough harm to offset the gains. The consensus of the managers of the few regular party candidates about whom the peace groups were enthusiastic was that their help was fine if restricted to "bodies" with no strings attached. But public endorsements were not always welcomed.

Many in the peace movement knew that working for a party candidate would involve them in compromises without any opportunity for open criticism of Administration policy. The demand to retain their clarity was argued out in local meetings from Boston to Los Angeles, and the decisions were never final. In Boston, the result was a high mortality rate of advisers and campaign managers in the Hughes campaign, some being eased out because they were too rigid for practical politics, some because they were too practical to inspire volunteer energies. In Los Angeles, years of experience in the Democratic club movement made some leaders of CLR and SANE wary of the unknown candidates with good platforms but no organizational base who turned up to contest primaries; there was an unusual abundance of such people in California. Yet the same experience made others wary of formal linkage to the Democratic Party of Jesse Unruh and John F. Kennedy, because they valued their program and their identity. They preferred to adhere to a clear set of policy demands and promised support to whoever agreed with them.

Essentially the same arguments, in other words, took place in Los Angeles on the basis of experience as took place in Massachusetts on the basis of inexperience, only at a different level of possibility. There was little hope of success for the Political Action for Peace (PAX) candidates: Hughes, Hefner and Boardman in Massachusetts, and Bliss in New Hampshire. Of the three seeking regular party nomination, all in districts securely in the opposite camp, only Hefner reached the general election — no other Democrat wanted the nomination — and he took only a quarter of the vote from incumbent Representative Silvio Conte. Los Angeles, on the other hand, presented a choice between allocating resources among all candidates who expressed good views or restricting them to a few real politicians with good sentiments whose districts showed 57 per cent or better registration in their party. Because the latter course was chosen, outspoken candidates like Knox Mellon and William Stewart went unsupported, even though their districts gave them far greater strength than most House candidates elsewhere in the country whom the peace movement would support. The political experience gained by amateurs in the California Democratic Clubs (CDC) made such hard choices possible (much of the peace movement would not have made them); but beyond the primaries, where concentration of resources was clearly fruitful, the choice was not fully vindicated.

Since it was impossible to say whether peace-group support helped or hindered them, the victories probably did not strengthen the peace movement's bargaining position in California politics, which had been one hope of those arguing for practicality over ideology. The most extreme case was that of Lionel Van Deerlin of San Diego. In spite of CLR support, he said nothing about most key peace issues, but discussed only economic planning for reconversion, an obvious need in defense-contract-bound San Diego. He won with 51 per cent of the vote after being attacked vigorously by his opponent for taking CLR support (the group gave him over $1,000, but no workers). His debt to the peace groups was far from unequivocal.

The California groups around Brown, Roybal, Van Deerlin and O'Connell opted for success. They did not entirely abandon clarity, since they published their own platforms and secured some explicit agreement from the candidates they supported, but they saw little made of their issues in the campaigns. As George Brown put it, he saw no value in excessive candor. Nor did they secure any assurance that their men would vote in a particular way when they got to Washington. Elsewhere in the country, groups which followed a similar path had even less satisfaction from their candidates; such was the disorganization of the New York groups that no statement could be agreed upon for the candidates to support, and peace-concerned liberals supporting William Fitts Ryan, Bentley Kassal, Martin Dworkis, Frank Montero, James Scheuer and David Levy did so mostly because of their reform status and their generally liberal outlook, not because they had them on the line for peace.

For many members of peace groups and liberal organizations in Chicago, the story was the same; SANE and the Independent Voters of Illinois (IVI) supported Kennedy Democrats such as Sidney Yates for Senate or Barratt O'Hara for the House with little to show for it in terms of foreign and defense policy agreement except that, as one leader of Chicago SANE said of Yates, "He reads all the literature I send him." But one Chicago organization made the opposite decision. For Voters for Peace and its intellectual entrepreneur, Sidney Lens, a writer and labor official, a political campaign seemed the one opportunity to say what needed to be said and have somebody besides the faithful brethren listening. Lens hoped to begin building a bloc of electoral strength rigorously committed to new policies in foreign and defense affairs, a bloc that would not fall apart at the last minute. Since many Congressmen win by margins of less than 5 per cent, Lens thought that, as candidates, they should be sensitive to small, well-organized blocs of votes. In such districts the peace voters might make the incumbent or a strong candidate jump even if they could not replace him with their own man.

The problem with this theory, of course, begins when the price for peace-bloc support is agreement to policies which alienate larger blocs. An example of its abuse was seen in the 8th and 9th Congressional Districts of North Carolina, where Negro leaders, rather than aiming at a two-party South, urged their people to vote for conservative, segregationist Democrats in close races with conservative, segregationist Republicans on the theory that the winning Democrats, recognizing that their margin of victory came from the Negro, would support the President on civil rights. But what would happen to the larger Southern white bloc after the Congressman had voted for civil-rights legislation? Clearly, the interest of the politician lies in remaining unresponsive even to a crucial Negro bloc except when everyone can be pleased at once. This problem applies equally to peace politics. If not related to an intensive and prolonged program for changing the attitude of the general public, small peace "pressure blocs" will not work wonders on Congress—unless the bloc grows immensely bigger than the peace movement seems able to make it.

Voters for Peace never reached a point where that problem concerned them. They had another: how to build such a bloc with which to influence incumbents. Paradoxically, the answer seemed to be running candidates against unsympathetic incumbents in order to demonstrate strength for next time (if strength there was), or to rally voters and workers for the future. Lens and two other VFP candidates ran as independents.

Unfortunately, in Lens's district, blocs would not make a difference; the incumbent had won by 50,000 votes in 1960. Worse, he was Barratt O'Hara, the most liberal of Chicago's Congressmen, a man Lens could take no pleasure in unseating. For VFP, the presence of a good but cautious liberal like O'Hara posed the challenge to the political hopes of the peace movement in its starkest form. Must basic points of opposition to the arms race give way before the demands of domestic liberalism? O'Hara was undeniably good on labor and welfare causes, had been one of the six Congressmen to vote against the appropriation for the House Un-American Activities Committee in 1961, and had supported the Peace Corps and worked actively for the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. On the other hand, he was an Administration man who would not take a position opposing the White House lest he lose influence. He voted for all major military bills, extension of the draft, military foreign aid and the amendment to increase the current military allotment by $200 million, and all of the basic defense appropriation bills. Worst of all, he favored the nuclear-testing program and supported the shelter program.

Lens had no chance to run against O'Hara in the Democratic primary because of the early filing date in Illinois. (VFP, like all the peace-politics groups except PAX in New England, was formed during the spring of 1962.) If Lens were successful in drawing many votes, therefore, he would merely put a right-wing Republican into the seat. Perhaps the decision was made easier by the size of O'Hara's 1960 plurality; but before Lens and two other VFP House candidates were ruled off the ballot, it appeared that VFP could do considerable damage by drawing away some O'Hara precinct workers. The old Congressman and liberal leaders of the 2nd District were clearly disturbed at this prospect, and for a brief moment there was a gratifying response: thirteen prominent Democrats of the district, most of whom disapproved of Lens's candidacy, sent O'Hara a telegram urging him to declare his opposition to further nuclear testing and his support of a gradual, phased reduction of the arms budget.

Lens, to his credit, agreed to withdraw from the race if these two minimal points were met, but O'Hara stalled until past the filing deadline. Lens was forced to file, and subsequently to battle in the courts for his right to be on the ballot without the requisite number of signatures (on the grounds that redistricting had made the number uncertain). O'Hara's strategy did not win him any affection among the peace-oriented liberals of Chicago, and although the city-wide Independent Voters of Illinois supported O'Hara, some IVI officials worked for Lens and helped him with the court case. In fact, the Fifth Ward IVI, in the University district which is the core of IVI strength in the city, had to be overruled by the city-wide organization after it had resolved to designate Lens and O'Hara as equally qualified so that its workers could support either.

But at the same time, Lens's willingness to jeopardize one of the ablest liberals in Congress won him little affection among Chicago liberals and officials of the labor movement. Lens was aware of the problem: "Sure, this creates divisions. It's a dangerous thing and we may be making a mistake. We're going after a fairly good liberal here, and the only thing is that he won't break with the Establishment. But then, that's the big thing, isn't it?"

In the opinion of some professionals in peace education, it was not. Many, such as the leaders of Turn Toward Peace and SANE, believed that the peace movement's task is to work with liberal groups long enough to lead them out of the embrace of the Administration on matters of defense policy. Voters for Peace may have lost its chance to do so in Chicago. Not only IVI but Lens's colleagues in the labor movement and the older peace movement were badly split on the merits of the effort. His own and other VFP tactics angered many who should have been its allies. In the two remaining districts, where independent write-in candidates were run, the interviews which VFP held with both candidates before refusing them support were conducted a bit like military inquisitions, the interviewers hewing closely to a demanding set of policy proposals and all but insisting that the Democratic candidates declare their opposition to the President on many vital matters. One candidate with a tough district was anxious to get workers and requested a second chance after failing his first "exam." At the next session, he showed signs of having read Blackett and Melman, but the eternal questionnaire was pressed on him in such a way, by some reports, as to force him to disagree. Thus an opportunity was passed by to influence and develop a possible winner and Robert Cosbey was run against him.

Perhaps it was a case of adhering to the check list too strictly—a mistake that only experience and a dose of pragmatism could have corrected. But one can also sympathize with VFP activists who were asked to pour time, money and shoe leather into campaigns on the basis of off-the-cuff agreements, "in principle" concurrences and a few good sentiments. Uninformed politicians do not inspire issues-oriented people. Some will respond to patient briefings, but it is slow work with few immediate returns. One of VFP's explicit goals was public education, and it appeared at the time that they could get more said to people in their district with their own candidate speaking their own message.

In retrospect, it seems that one of VFP's problems, one widely shared with other peace groups, was having two incompatible purposes: exerting pressure on candidates and incumbents, and educating the voting public by inserting issues into the campaigns. Another was their failure to recognize the kinds of pressure and influence available to them, focusing, perhaps too early, on political pressure of the least subtle sort — voter strength — without any clear prospect of achieving it. A third was to alienate some of the groups it would need to gain such strength in the long run.

Paradoxically, this least compromising of peace-political organizations also gave financial aid to a Democratic candidate in the 14th District (a semi-rural district west of Chicago) who was among the most cautious of all "peace candidates." Jerome Ziegler, an old friend of Lens who had long worked with the Chicago American Friends Service Committee, concluded early in his campaign that politics and peace education were not at all as "inextricably interwoven" as VFP believed them to be.

Although his name appeared among the sponsors of Voters for Peace, Ziegler made no call for any of the proposals in the VFP platform. Nominated by the regular Democratic Party organization in a newly reorganized district, he refused to jeopardize his chances by making an educational effort. In part it was a matter of time. Ziegler aimed to meet a thousand people a day for the last ninety days of his campaign. "I can only spend a few seconds with each person, and there is simply not time for education. The most I can hope to do is to identify myself with some good cause in the right direction." But his reluctance to get into the tangled web of foreign and defense policy was also related to his conviction that peace groups make a mistake in talking slogans rather than events and specific issues with which people can identify. He felt that by discussing the Peace Corps and getting across the spirit it represents he could make at least as many points about international reconciliation that an audience might carry away with them as he could have by discussing initiatives, as H. Stuart Hughes did in Massachusetts.

Ziegler lost; his opponent's plurality of 63.8 per cent in 1960 was cut to 60 per cent, but the addition of Will County to Ziegler's district may account for that. None the less, he doubts that he would have spent his energies more fruitfully running an educational campaign on the VFP or the New England model. In any case, to do so would have contradicted his sense of responsibility to the party which nominated and helped him. Ziegler stressed the problem that once people like himself go into party politics seriously, they take on responsibilities to others who may not share their views.

There are both gains and losses in such a course. The apocalyptic sense which compels the peace movement could be silenced by politics as usual, and this would be a serious loss. Ziegler's kind of politics offers an experience which the peace movement needs. One cannot watch the serious candidates like Ziegler, O'Connell, Brown or Blaine Whipple of Oregon without coming away with a certain respect for the awful rigors of democratic politics. A Congressional race is, on the one hand, a silly, superficial sort of popularity contest which makes fearsome demands upon the endurance of the candidate; but on the other, it is a programed contact with the mood and concerns of the people that cannot be had in any other pursuit. Such experience could be an antidote to the tendency, characteristic of peace groups, to over-polarize the community, as well as to over-optimism. It is also an education in the ways of power and influence in our society, a lesson that leads many to cynicism but a few to a rare ability to do good.

In the opinion of George Brown, whose victory in California is the primary source of hope to the new insurgents, the peace movement badly needs to learn that neither social change nor attitude change are simple matters:

> Ray [Sebens, Brown's campaign manager] and I have a hell of a job educating the peace groups. I've been in peace work longer than most of them [Brown is one of the founders of the Friends Committee on Legislation and has long been active in the War Resisters League and the Fellowship of Reconciliation] and I want them to learn the complexity and depth of the problems. Now they have awakened to these problems and want to do something big. Some of them want to take credit for electing me to Congress. I want them to know this didn't come about so simply. They have to learn politics from the bottom up, and what it is to be a politician, and how to build their own politicians.

Most of the peace groups that entered the political arena in 1962 have concluded pretty much the same thing. In California, due in part to Brown's urging, the Californians for Liberal Representation will try to find persons with political potential and develop them as candidates from the city councilman level upward, so as to give them political roots. Voters for Peaceful Alternatives, the group in Ithaca, N. Y., which ran Professor Harrop Freeman for Congress, has also resolved to work on a local level. The debate is now whether to aim at capturing the stagnant Democratic Party machinery by finding people to run for town committees or to build the Liberal Party.

In Massachusetts, the disappointing showing of Stuart Hughes has led his campaign organization and the PAX organization from which it emerged into a similar train of thought. Their effort will now be to hold together the considerable network of town coordinators, workers and donors that the state-wide campaign developed, and make it a recruiting ground for town committee and state legislature candidates aiming at having good people ready for the primaries in 1964. The interim activity designed by Campaign Manager Jerome Grossman to keep the organization active and increase its role in the political life of the state, and to "wean" the organization from the attractive and highly popular figure of Hughes himself, consists of state legislative action—the introduction of bills into the legislative session written by the Hughes campaign organization, making use of the right of petition and the help of interested legislators.

"Is that some sort of status symbol?"

The Chicago VFP organization also intends to involve itself further in traditional politics the next time around. It is aware that by beginning too late to enter the primaries, it missed its best opportunities for improving community contacts and having political effect. Its main effort in 1963 will be to develop promising political material and to enter the primaries of both parties as a disciplined caucus.

There is other evidence of a willingness to attempt a more organic growth and careful allocation of energies. In Ann Arbor, Michigan, a student-faculty group supported a local Democrat with good instincts but little substance in foreign-policy matters. By working closely with him and securing expert academic aid for him on policy proposals, they managed to insert the issue of peace, disarmament and economic reconversion into his campaign. (The candidate lost, but by no more than he had two years previously.) Research being conducted by Students for a Democratic Society (led by the Michigan group) and other organizations promises to locate a number of Congressional districts where such effort may show results. Projects are also under way in Massachusetts and elsewhere to measure the effectiveness with which issues were presented.

All this cautious resolve will amount to nothing, however, if the message of peace politics continues to seem basically wrong to most Americans. In the thirties many flirted with socialism from hunger, anger or because it was intellectually attractive. It had a dynamic and a vision of the future as well as of how to get there. How much of this can be said for the cause of the new insurgents?

On election eve, when the returns were coming in from all over Massachusetts, there was a particular misery in them for a few people in the Hughes campaign like Chester Hartman, who had directed the earlier, vastly successful signature campaign which gathered more than 147,000 signatures to put Hughes on the ballot. Hartman knew the precincts by heart, and he noticed that it was frequently in the precincts most heavily canvassed that Hughes made the poorest showing. The negative correlation was most pronounced in lower-income precincts and disappeared or reversed as the income and education level rose.

Hartman pursued the question of impact with a telephone poll which further revealed the difficulties of delivering a complex issue in politics. It was as Ziegler might have predicted. Nine out of ten persons called had heard of Hughes, but some of them had to be pushed: "Who ran for Senate?" "Lodge and Kennedy." "Was there anybody else?" "Oh yes, Hughes. . . ." In a lower-income precinct, however, few had heard of Hughes, even after a campaign costing nearly $150,000. When asked what they liked about Hughes—most who knew of him liked him—the respondents listed personal qualities: honesty, courage, personality, "a professor." Few mentioned issues. Just over half the respondents knew that Hughes had a platform concerned with disarmament, but most of these knew only labels. They considered his views "nice but impractical," "visionary," "way out," "twenty years ahead of his time," those of a "dreamer." Interestingly, India was mentioned as a factor discrediting Hughes more than Cuba; for although Hughes is not a pacifist he was associated with pacifism because he opposed war, and India's need to fight against China was said to prove him wrong.

With such results, the handwriting was on the wall. Hughes was as articulate a spokesman as the peace movement would ever find, and while his somewhat donnish appearance may have contributed to these results, it was hard to avoid the conclusion that the issues themselves were to blame — unpopular, unpleasant, touching on deep sources of anxiety, in some way they seemed to be their own obstruction.

In part, being "Independent" was a hindrance. Whatever the corruption and nepotism of the two parties, the poll showed that it seemed worse to be outside the system, particularly after Cuba. Hughes himself had recognized the extent to which this disrupted communication long before his organization did. Often, after shaking hands through a factory and being well received, as was usually the case, he would think to himself, "Well, there are two or three more votes—maybe," while his aides made rosy predictions. After the election, he advised SANE not to encourage further independent candidacies like his own unless all possibilities for supporting a party man were exhausted.

The basic problem was not in being an independent candidate but in saying what Hughes said. The defeat of the O'Connell campaign, the most outspoken of all the regular party campaigns, well staffed with peace-movement and other volunteers, operating in a district newly favorable since redistricting, came as a harsh surprise to most observers. Those running the campaign blamed the issues themselves. This is the hard lesson. To build from the bottom as the peace movement now intends, it will be necessary to confront as never before the basic unpopularity of the cause — and more than that, to do something about it.

This unpopularity is no news to the old peace movement, but politics is no place for people who readily accustom themselves to being in a losing minority, and the new activists of the peace campaigns will not rest easily with the popular verdict. The question of how far to accommodate to popular attitudes will therefore be an increasing source of tension within the movement.

What I have called "peace people" and "peace groups" are in almost all cases not old-line pacifists or seasoned dissenters. They are unhappy outside the system of accepted values. They are liberals who most properly should be called peace-concerned, not pacifistic. They want to change the trend of events, to find alternatives to military solutions, to calm the hysterias of the cold war, but not to dump weapons in the sea all at once. Only the failure of the Kennedy Administration to change the trend towards militarization alienates them from the Democratic Party; if things were moving in a hopeful direction, most of them would return to the fold. With few exceptions, their candidates demanded only such hopeful steps as ending testing, strengthening the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, beginning serious study of the economics of disarmament and — where they went at all into the specifics of defense policy (as did Hughes) — opposing counterforce doctrine. Most accepted the need, at least for the time being, of a minimum deterrent nuclear capability. This was a significant break from the policies of the older peace movement, and one still not accepted by many community peace organizations.

In short, much of the traditional pacifist peace movement that knows, perhaps too well, how to live with failure was not active in the campaigns. The ranks were filled with the new peace movement which SANE was first to develop: a middle-class, college-educated, issues-concerned rank and file reminiscent of the Stevenson troops of 1952 and 1956. The hardest work was done by the women's groups and by students, with support from young professional and academic men. The trajectory of these people has been rapid, from apathy through signing protests to demonstrations to political action. Each stage had its rapid disillusionments, and the danger is that the disappointments of politics and the realization of the size of the task ahead may propel them on into cynicism on the one hand, or by the persuasion of numbers, to doubt their own cause on the other. The new peace movement is not inured to failure, nor should it be; yet, to an extent, it has to be.

The early signs after the elections were favorable. After a few weeks of dejection following November 6, a surprising number of campaign workers bounced back into meetings to plan how to keep their organizations functioning and make use of what they had learned ("how not to spend money," as a coordinator put one of the chief lessons). A graduate student at Cornell who had done the hard, door-to-door precinct work of Freeman's campaign in the small cities of New York's 33rd District summed up the hopeful side of the experience for a campus political magazine: "There are many who go to rallies, to Washington and New York. It is not so much fun to go door to door; it's not a social event to the tune of folksongs. Guitars are to be left at home. It's hard work, and a day of campaigning means ten hours. But it is rewarding, and it works."

But many will ask: does it? It works to overcome the campaign worker's sense of political alienation, but what else? Freeman's was perhaps the most successful independent campaign (Liberal Party support in upstate New York means nothing more than a place on the ballot) in terms of injecting the issues of disarmament and reconversion into political discourse. He was invited to all gatherings where the Democratic and Republican candidates were to be heard, and usually succeeded in making them look pale and ill-informed on foreign policy. The regulars were forced to discuss Freeman's issues and insist that they were for peace too. Furthermore, Freeman's showing in the Democratic primary, which he lost very closely, shook the Democratic leaders of Elmira and Binghamton who had been drifting along in the profit-by-losing pattern so often found among minority party politicians with a little urban strength and a federal Administration of their party.

But only extremely sophisticated techniques of analysis could determine whether or not the campaign had changed the politics of the district for the future or softened the ground for new ideas in foreign and defense policy. Aside from identifying allies around the district, no early gains were discernible.

Before the campaign, many of these people showed signs of having thought about forming a third party: but the way they showed it is by insisting that that is not their intention, that they intended to work within the two-party system. Some said this because they were Democrats and had hopes for reforming their party (in the South, this is a nearly total distraction among peace and civil-rights advocates), some because they wanted to retain leverage on both parties by entering primary fights, and some because the experience of 1948 taught them that it is a mistake for many reasons to form a party too soon. The rejection of third-party plans was even more pronounced after the election. This is probably just as well, for the third-party effort of the thirties broke up over the prospect of throwing the election of 1936 to a Republican President: because it had aimed too high for what its people were ready to dare, it fell apart.

None the less I think it safe, in spite of their disclaimers, to call the veterans of the peace campaigns a third force at this point. They have not evaporated since the elections, and the trend of their thought is toward avoiding commitments or alliances with either party, even though it is also toward working with party candidates. This edging away from the kind of commitment which characterized the older club movements is true even where ties to the Democratic Party have been strongest and most rewarding, as in California.

The likelihood is that "leakage groups" will form to catch those who find themselves edged out of the system. Their structure and methods will be fluid, and they will "flow" to whatever candidate or tactic promises them increased effectiveness. In the process they may begin to operate in a "professional" manner, ready to make deals or apply pressure and to play the same games the pros play with skill and without rancor. The California club movement is already confronting the need to do this. As one officer of the CDC put it, only half jokingly: "We were dealt out of the L. A. County Committee by paper clubs, maybe we will have to build a few paper clubs of our own." Means unquestionably matter to men like Hefner and Hughes, but there are a lot of tactical lessons short of dishonesty and manipulation that can be learned.

Not only do peace people in politics recognize themselves increasingly as outside the parties, but, unlike the liberal reform movements of New York and Chicago, their groups are linked: intellectually by sharing a primary concern with national policy, and physically by informal communications networks: newsletters, SANE personnel, occasional conferences and organizations such as the Committee of 1,000 and the Council for Abolishing War formed to raise and distribute campaign funds.

This "third force" quality is an uncertain trend, however. The internal debate between those who hope to establish a role for themselves within the traditional parties, at some cost in "ideological clarity," and those who value this clarity above all, will not quickly be resolved.

Many are certain that the hope of politics lies in reforming the parties. They may be right; but they must ask themselves how the struggle for "citizen" politics will fare against the professionalization of the activists as they move up in the party as CDC's former leaders have. They will be racing against the new national machine which Kennedy is building to replace the dying city machines, a machine of which Jesse Unruh is a characteristic "new man." They must be aware that the effort to work as a caucus within the old parties may be doomed to perpetual frustration by the President's famous victories and the "restriction by partial incorporation" which perpetually undercuts the foreign-policy Left. And they must recognize that most real candidates will go Ziegler's way, staying respectable and supporting the President; that the President's strongest point with the voters, on which the candidate will differ at greatest peril to his electoral chances, is foreign policy, the one place where the peace groups will most want criticism; and that if their men win they will go to Washington with obligations to the Administration and to crucial war-economy elements at home which will further mute their critical stance.

Are they then right who, like Hughes or Lens, insist that only a politics not committed to winning, a politics based on the young and what Lens calls the "left-outs" (those who have a sense of having lost their vote in the direction of domestic and foreign policy) can retain the clarity to contribute a new position to our political dialogue? This is the politics of losing so familiar to the Left and unpalatable to the new insurgents. Its danger is that, never needing to compromise, it falls into sectarian bickering over fine points of theory. If the "leakage groups" lose contact with the major parties, they run this risk.

At the moment, then, the debate comes down to this: will it be necessary over the next decade to try once again to reconstruct democracy within the parties on the lowest level, as reformers have repeatedly tried to do, and thus to battle head-on the accelerating trend toward centralized policy formation? Or must the peace movement build from small beginnings and early disappointments a new force with a radically critical program which links the problem of cold-war escalation to the organic problems of the domestic society and economy as no standard politician can dare to do? In a way it comes down to whether one believes in power or in ideas. The question was not resolved in 1962, but fortunately, it did not have to be. The political insurgency of the peace movement has the benefit of a pragmatism new to the American Left which may enable it to unite many who would fall apart over this question. The decision can be supended for some time to come.

Pol. Sci.

Kennedy: Profile of a Technician . . . Ted Lewis

Washington, D.C.

For two years now, President Kennedy has been an activist, displaying his managerial and manipulation techniques in almost every facet of goverment. As a result, the public knows a lot about the President's techniques of leadership and yet paradoxically little about the direction in which he is moving or how he will act when obstacles confront him.

Normally our Presidents, after two years in office, become more or less stereotyped in the public mind; it has always been fairly clear how they would act in any given situation. It is uniquely different today as Kennedy enters his third year in office. It should be possible, but it isn't, to say that he is a strong President, or that he is developing into one; or, perhaps, that he is an energetic President who applies his energies unpredictably. With Kennedy, all such estimates are hazardous, at best. His record shows that he displays power, sometimes ruthlessly, in facing up to one problem, and then meets another with caution and uncertainty.

Any examination of his operations to date suggests the basic reason for the fog over the Kennedy image. His methods and style vary, and the unfortunate impression is left that they vary with the economic, political and global climate. This flexibility suggests to some the lack of deep-rooted political ideals and purposefulness in connection with domestic policy. More serious is the effect of his apparent opportunism in the foreign-affairs arena. Even the simplest pronouncement by the President on a cold-war policy problem raises doubts abroad whether it carries the conviction of real intentions.

This is the price that Kennedy is paying for his manipulation techniques—some of them devious.

The Cuba crisis operation certainly showed that the President could move with power and daring. But the real significance of this grave crisis has never been properly emphasized. This centers on one fact—that in twenty-one previous months of dealing with Nikita Khrushchev, the President had failed to convince Moscow that he would stand firm when the issue of a nuclear war was posed starkly.

Could it be that Kennedy's flexible style in handling his Presidential responsibilities both on the home front and in dealings with our own allies contributed to Khrushchev's need to try to solve the Kennedy enigma? Why else were the Soviet missiles and bombers placed in full view in Cuba? By forcing the issue, Khrushchev was finding out what he wanted to know about Kennedy—and, incidentally, what the American people were even more desirous of knowing.

Cuba provided solid evidence, then, as to how the President would act in a grave international emergency. There are few sound clues to be found in his record as to how he will respond in any particular domestic home crisis, big or minor. His rhetoric—inspirational as it often is— is of scant help, for too often he has followed tough talk by accepting compromise. At various times, and under varying conditions, he has displayed great impetuosity, an excess of caution and both impatience and admirable perseverance.

One of the keenest inquirers into the Kennedy modus operandi is probably James MacGregor Burns of Williams College. In his friendly but penetrating 1960 political biography, John Kennedy: A Political Profile, Burns predicted that Kennedy, if elected, would > . . . mobilize traditional tools of Presidential power and use them with force, astuteness and tenacity. He would show a flair for personal influence and manipulation, perhaps some of the flair Roosevelt had. He would drive hard bargains, forming alliances with Republicans when necessary, but compromising too, when he lacked the votes.

This was perspicacious forecasting. Yet it is not so much the President's personalized methods of operating as it is the complex nature of his personality and the uncertainty as to his goals that disturb the American people, even those — and they are in the majority—who admire and support him. His motives, in any given situation, are becoming more and more suspect. This is already developing as a political problem, although it is clearly one the Democratic Party is going to have to live with as long as Kennedy is in office.

Consider, for example, the questions being raised around the country: Why is the President unwilling to take on Congress and go to the people for support of the social-reform and other "forward looking" domestic measures he once considered vitally needed? Is there still something about the Cuba crisis we haven't been told about? Have we been playing British politics with the Skybolt missile? Will Kennedy really make a fight to get the new Congress to act on medicare and education aid? Or will he go all out only to get passage of his tax-cut—tax-reform program?

This questioning state of mind often breeds ugly suspicions. Hence, for example, the whispers that the President and his brother, Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy, are pursuing a personal vendetta against Jimmy Hoffa, the Teamster boss. Hence the suspicion that the President, while appearing the essence of frankness, is actually quite a conniver, vide the Adlai Stevenson affair. Hence the Republican-fed report that Kennedy timed the Cuban missile crisis for just before the November elections.

The examples could be multiplied many times. The President, however, appears impervious to these widely aired suspicions. He obviously remains supremely confident of his standing with the American public.

In the view of some liberals, the fairly widespread wonder as to what really goes on in Washington is founded on loss of faith in the President's political philosophy. Kennedy won the election in 1960 as a liberal. He has since performed as a middle-of-the-road progressive. The view of the Democratic Party expressed by White House aide and historian Arthur Schlesinger, Jr., probably comes closest to revealing what the party is up to as it functions here under Kennedy. The party, wrote Schlesinger in The Politics of Hope, is "humane, skeptical and pragmatic . . . has no dogma, no sense of Messianic mission, no belief that mortal man can attain

---

Ted Lewis is Washington correspondent for the New York Daily News.

Utopia, no faith that fundamental problems have final solutions."

A President subscribing generally to that belief would operate about as Kennedy has. He has Republicans high in his Administration like Treasury Secretary Dillon and Defense Secretary McNamara, on whom he counts for advice. He keeps on friendly terms with those in Congress, like Senator Harry F. Byrd (D., Va.), who oppose virtually all bills embodying the party's national economic and social philosophy as espoused by Kennedy in the 1960 campaign.

The liberal disillusionment with Kennedy of 1963 is, of course, one factor responsible for the questions constantly raised as to the President's motivations. In this connection, there is an interesting off-beat estimate which suggests that, under Kennedy, a vacuum on Democratic Party issues exists in Washington. It comes from Maurice Rosenblatt, chairman of the Board of Advisers of the National Committee for an Effective Congress. Rosenblatt had this to say about the President:

> One of the accepted generalities or clichés of our time is that he [Kennedy] is a master politician. He certainly is a master at election politics, at getting elected. But what we say is that he needs to use more of the arts of persuasion and more of the arts of politics to get his program through [Congress].

Rosenblatt said that while historically the Democratic Party was able to create issues very well, it has been a long time since it did so. He credited Eisenhower with making the last two big issues—that of the balanced budget and inflation. And he did so by carrying his cause to the people; as a result, his "message" got through to Congress.

Kennedy's refusal to use his popular leadership to put national pressures on Congress rankles with the reformist element in his party. But in true pragmatist fashion, Kennedy says he is convinced he can fare better working with Congress than by fighting it. This wheeling and dealing with the legislators is one of Kennedy's most intricate techniques. His wheel horse in this operation is his legislative lieutenant, Lawrence O'Brien; but the Chief Executive is always battle-available, making personal phone calls to Capitol Hill as he practices the soft art of persuasion.

The dealing is occasionally of precinct-politics character: a suggestion that defense contracts may be at stake, or that patronage may be frozen; or a reminder that the President is most likely to find time to campaign in behalf of a Senator or Representative who votes "right."

Not all of the pressures come from the White House; they can come from the Administration's leaders in Congress. But with the President and the White House staff in the thick of the operations, one assumes that the pressures originate with the Chief Executive.

This manipulating method of dealing with Congress is the basis for the suspicion that the President moves in similar devious ways in all other affairs of state. The reasoning is unfortunate. Dealing with a recalcitrant Congress, particularly one dominated by one's own party, presents a problem wholly different from that posed by world and domestic issues not subject to the legislative mill.

When a critical decision must be reached at his own official family level, the President's technique is something else again, although the technique may vary from issue to issue. On cold-war problems, he is an inveterate brain-picker, using those whose grasp of the situation, and willingness to propose and defend effectively the solution they favor, he has learned to respect. It would be almost axiomatic, therefore, should a crisis of the order of Cuba develop again, that he would move toward his own decision by listening to men like Dean Acheson, Secretary McNamara, Secretary Dillon, Chief of Staff General Maxwell Taylor, his brother Robert and, of course, his own national security adviser, McGeorge Bundy. Secretary of State Dean Rusk's absence from this list should be noted. What Rusk thinks, he would keep to himself, as he wants to be in a position to carry out loyally whatever decision Kennedy makes.

Sometimes, of course, a major issue involves the jurisdiction of both the Executive Branch and of Congress. This, in the past, has called for a different managerial technique. Kennedy has shown himself at his most skillful in this type of operation. In the last Congress, Kennedy succeeded in bringing about passage of the important tariff-reduction act aimed at fitting the United States into the trade pattern of the developing European Community. Name Republicans like former Secretary of State Christian Herter were called in as high-level lobbyists. Key public-relations men from private industry were "loaned" to the White House to make the build-up effective.

The same sort of elaborate selling job will be done on the new Congress to get the tax-cut program through, with Republican talent carefully brought into the act along with respected business leaders.

Where the White House technique has fumbled—and is likely to do so again—will be generally in actions taken on the domestic scene in which the President and the Attorney General find themselves involved together. This has been particularly true in the Administration's attempt to "manage" the news. It is natural, of course, for the Administration to be open and aboveboard with the communications media when it has nothing to hide, i.e., when the White House considers that it has handled a problem adroitly and successfully. But when there has been a failure, the trap door on "authoritative" information is slammed shut, as after the Cuban invasion fiasco of April, 1961. Or, as in the University of Mississippi story, the media are used to cover mistakes.

"We'll rock around the clock!"

In Mississippi, there had been pre-crisis negotiations by telephone with Governor Ross Barnett of a nature suggesting that Attorney General Kennedy actually thought that he could persuade the arch-segregationist to fall in line—and stay there. There was also the highly questionable final decision to send federal marshals into Oxford first, not troops.

Except in the South, the whole nasty episode receded in public interest with the Cuban crisis of late October. But last month it was revived in an "authoritative" Look magazine article that carried the imprint of helping Administration hands. Why? News management again: to convince the public that the Barnett-Bobby Kennedy phone talks made sense—which they never did and never will.

The Administration's management of the news after the Cuban crisis was more disturbing to many people than the controls exercised during the crisis itself. This involved "authoritative" revelations of what supposedly went on in the secret sessions of the National Security Council. And more recently there has been the questionable news management of the Cuban prisoner-ransom deal. Once the prisoners had been returned and American reaction was highly favorable, it suddenly developed that the deal had been masterminded by Robert F. Kennedy, not lawyer James B. Donovan, though that certainly had not been the impression given the public earlier.

Undeniably, the President's overall handling of his office has been unusually controversial. On the other hand, few Presidents in our history have been subjected to so close a day-in, day-out scrutiny. This was in part because of Kennedy's comparative youth and the great national interest in how he would sail the ship of state. But there was something more. Kennedy followed Eisenhower and whipped Nixon to gain office. The man he succeeded in the White House had occupied the Presidency for eight years. Eisenhower was a most undevious character; his every move was easily comprehended, almost predictable. Those who know him say that he had neither the capacity nor the inclination for intrigue. Then, in 1960, Kennedy campaigned against Nixon, who had already established a reputation for deviousness—"Tricky Dick," many people called him. By comparison Kennedy, despite his admitted mental ability, seemed simple and disarming—ironically, more in the mold of Eisenhower than was Nixon.

So, once elected, Kennedy's frequent use of intricate, usually skillful but occasionally devious, techniques came as a surprise to his supporters and was disconcerting to many of them. James MacGregor Burns, in his new book, The Deadlock of Democracy, cautiously implies a little disillusionment on his own part. Referring to the trouble met by the Administration's proposals in the 1962 Congress, he said the difficulties "aroused complaints by some liberals that the Administration lacked a central purpose of vision or grand design, that it had bent before every gust of public opinion instead of coming to grips with its enemies, that the Augustan age of poetry and power forecast by Robert Frost had become a managerial age of empty rhetoric and manipulation." Burns somewhat softly gives it as his opinion that these critics underestimate the "centrifugal forces operating on the President and the sheer intractability of the operational problems." But he still thinks there is something to their point of view.

An estimate of the Kennedy operation in the future based on the past still must be highly tenuous. About all that can be guaranteed is that life in these United States, as long as Kennedy is in the White House, is likely to be exciting—and somewhat insecure.

Does the 'Profit Squeeze' Hurt? . . . Peter L. Bernstein

Even though 1962 set an all-time record for corporate profits—about $26 billion after taxes—businessmen were clearly dissatisfied with the results. Complaints about the hard sell, price competition and rising costs were just as frequent and audible as in years when earnings were lower. A typical comment came from one chemical company executive who summed it all up by saying, "Sure, they're new highs, but they're not the kind of highs to reflect the full effort thrown into them."

Complaints about the profit squeeze have been coming along in such profusion and regularity as to give the appearance of a chronic ailment of American business. If so, this is serious. But how valid is the evidence of deteriorating corporate earning power? Even more important, to what extent is the lagging trend in profits causing a similarly sluggish performance by the economy in general and business capital investment in particular?

An impressive array of statistics can be gathered to show that the profit squeeze is a matter of genuine concern. For example, although Gross National Product — that is, the nation's total output of goods and services — has increased by 120 per cent since the early postwar years of 1947-49, corporate profits before taxes are up only 67 per cent. This lag has become increasingly noticeable in recent years: profits have risen only 11

Peter L. Bernstein, an investment counselor, lectures on economics at the New School for Social Research, New York City. He is the author of The Price of Prosperity (Doubleday).

ouse of Representatives

RENCY

-Tex)

(D-Ala)
(D-N.Y.)
(D-Pa)

(D-Mo)
D-Wisc)
(D-Ohio)
D-Ohio)
(D-Pa)
(D-Ga)
(D-R.I.)
(D-Tex)
(D-Fla)
(D-N.J.)
(D-Ga)
D-Calif)
D-Conn)
D-Calif)
R-N.Y.)
(R-N.J.)
(R-Ky)
R-N.Y.)
(R-N.J.)
R-N.Y.)
R-Mich)
R-Ohio)
R-Tenn)
R-Ohio)
(R-Pa)
R-Utah)
R-Calif)

BOR

.Y.)

(D-Ky)
(D-Ga)
D-Ore)
D-Calif)
D-N.J.)
(D-Pa)
(D-Pa)
(D-Ill)
D-N.J.)
D-Ind)
-Mich)
D-N.C.)
D-N.Y.)
-Calif)
D-Md)
D-Fla)
awaii)
-Calif)

William H. Ayers (R-Ohio)
Robert P. Griffin (R-Mich)
Albert H. Quie (R-Minn)
Charles E. Goodell (R-N.Y.)
Donald C. Bruce (R-Ind)
James M. Ashbrook (R-Ohio)
Dave Martin (R-Nebr)
Alphonzo Bell (R-Calif)
M. G. (Gene) Snyder (R-Ky)
Paul Findley (R-Ill)
Robert Taft, Jr. (R-Ohio)

INTERSTATE AND FOREIGN COMMERCE

Oren Harris (D-Ark)
Chairman

John Bell Williams (D-Miss)
Kenneth A. Roberts (D-Ala)
Harley O. Staggers (D-W.Va)
Walter Rogers (D-Tex)
Samuel N. Friedel (D-Md)
Torbert H. Macdonald (D-Mass)
George M. Rhodes (D-Pa)
John Jarman (D-Okla)
Leo W. O'Brien (D-N.Y.)
John E. Moss (D-Calif)
John D. Dingell (D-Mich)
Paul G. Rogers (D-Fla)
Robert W. Hemphill (D-S.C.)
Dan Rostenkowski (D-Ill)
James C. Healey (D-N.Y.)
Horace R. Kornegay (D-N.C.)
W. R. Hull, Jr. (D-Mo)
Gillis W. Long (D-La)
Lionel Van Deerlin (D-Calif)
John B. Bennett (R-Mich)
William L. Springer (R-Ill)
Paul F. Schenck (R-Ohio)
J. Arthur Younger (R-Calif)
Milton W. Glenn (R-N.J.)
Samuel L. Devine (R-Ohio)
Ancher Nelsen (R-Minn)
Hastings Keith (R-Mass)
Willard S. Curtin (R-Pa)
Abner W. Sibal (R-Conn)
Glenn Cunningham (R-Nebr)
James T. Broyhill (R-N.C.)
Donald G. Brotzman (R-Col)

RULES

Howard W. Smith (D-Va)
Chairman

William M. Colmer (D-Miss)
Ray J. Madden (D-Ind)

House Leadership

SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE
John W. McCormack (D-Mass)

MAJORITY FLOOR LEADER
Carl Albert (D-Okla)

MAJORITY WHIP
Hale Boggs (D-La)

MINORITY FLOOR LEADER
Charles A. Halleck (R-Ind)

MINORITY WHIP
Leslie C. Arends (R-Ill)

James W. Trimble (D-Ark)
Homer Thornberry (D-Tex)
Richard Bolling (D-Mo)
Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr. (D-Mass)
Carl Elliott (D-Ala)
B. F. Sisk (D-Calif)
Clarence J. Brown (R-Ohio)
Katherine St. George (R-N.Y.)
H. Allen Smith (R-Calif)
Elmer J. Hoffman (R-Ill)
William H. Avery (R-Kans)

WAYS AND MEANS

Wilbur D. Mills (D-Ark)
Chairman

Cecil R. King (D-Calif)
Thomas J. O'Brien (D-Ill)
Hale Boggs (D-La)
Eugene J. Keogh (D-N.Y.)
Frank M. Karsten (D-Mo)
A. S. Herlong, Jr. (D-Fla)
William J. Green, Jr. (D-Pa)
John C. Watts (D-Ky)
Al Ullman (D-Ore)
James A. Burke (D-Mass)
Clark W. Thompson (D-Tex)
Martha W. Griffiths (D-Mich)
Ross Bass (D-Tenn)
W. Pat Jennings (D-Va)
John W. Byrnes (R-Wisc)
Howard H. Baker (R-Tenn)
Thomas B. Curtis (R-Mo)
Victor A. Knox (R-Mich)
James B. Utt (R-Calif)
Jackson E. Betts (R-Ohio)
Bruce Alger (R-Tex)
Steven B. Derounian (R-N.Y.)

CONGRESSIONAL ROSTER

88th Congress
First Session

February 12, 1963

Senate: 67 Democrats; 33 Republicans
House: 259 Democrats; 176 Republicans

D—Democrat R—Republican AL—At Large Numbers indicate Congressional districts.

ALABAMA

Sen. Lister Hill	D	Montgomery
Sen. John Sparkman	D	Huntsville
AL Rep. George Grant	D	Troy
AL Rep. George W. Andrews	D	Union Springs
AL Rep. Kenneth A. Roberts	D	Anniston
AL Rep. Albert Rains	D	Gadsden
AL Rep. Armistead I. Selden, Jr.	D	Greensboro
AL Rep. Carl Elliott	D	Jasper
AL Rep. Robert E. Jones, Jr.	D	Scottsboro
AL Rep. George Huddleston, Jr.	D	Birmingham

ALASKA

Sen. E. L. Bartlett	D	Juneau
Sen. Ernest Gruening	D	Juneau
AL Rep. Ralph J. Rivers	D	Fairbanks

ARIZONA

Sen. Carl Hayden	D	Phoenix
Sen. Barry Goldwater	R	Phoenix
1. Rep. John J. Rhodes	R	Mesa
2. Rep. Morris K. Udall	D	Tucson
3. Rep. George F. Senner, Jr.	D	Miami

ARKANSAS

Sen. John L. McClellan	D	Camden
Sen. J. W. Fulbright	D	Fayetteville
1. Rep. E. C. Gathings	D	West Memphis
2. Rep. Wilbur D. Mills	D	Kensett
3. Rep. James W. Trimble	D	Berryville
4. Rep. Oren Harris	D	El Dorado

CALIFORNIA

Sen. Thomas H. Kuchel	R	Anaheim
Sen. Clair Engle	D	Red Bluff
1. Rep. Don H. Clausen	D	Crescent City
2. Rep. Harold T. Johnson	D	Roseville
3. Rep. John E. Moss	D	Sacramento
4. Rep. Robert L. Leggett	D	Vallejo
5. Rep. John F. Shelley	D	San Francisco
6. Rep. William S. Mailliard	R	San Francisco
7. Rep. Jeffery Cohelan	D	Berkeley
8. Rep. George P. Miller	D	Alameda
9. Rep. W. Donlon Edwards	D	San Jose
10. Rep. Charles S. Gubser	R	Gilroy
11. Rep. J. Arthur Younger	R	San Mateo
12. Rep. Burt L. Talcott	R	Salinas
13. Rep. Charles M. Teague	R	Ojai
14. Rep. John F. Baldwin, Jr.	R	Martinez
15. Rep. John J. McFall	D	Manteca
16. Rep. B. F. Sisk	D	Fresno
17. Rep. Cecil R. King	D	Los Angeles
18. Rep. Harlan Hagen	D	Hanford
19. Rep. Chet Holifield	D	Montebello
20. Rep. H. Allen Smith	R	Glendale
21. Rep. Augustus F. Hawkins	D	Los Angeles
22. Rep. James C. Corman	D	Van Nuys
23. Rep. Clyde Doyle	D	South Gate
24. Rep. Glenard P. Lipscomb	R	Los Angeles
25. Rep. Ronald Brooks Cameron	D	Whittier
26. Rep. James Roosevelt	D	Los Angeles
27. Rep. Everett G. Burkhalter	D	North Hollywood
28. Rep. Alphonzo Bell	R	Beverly Hills
29. Rep. George E. Brown, Jr.	D	Monterey Park
30. Rep. Edward R. Roybal	D	Los Angeles
31. Rep. Charles H. Wilson	D	Los Angeles
32. Rep. Craig Hosmer	R	Long Beach
33. Rep. Harry R. Sheppard	D	Yucaipa
34. Rep. Richard T. Hanna	D	Fullerton
35. Rep. James B. Utt	R	Santa Ana
36. Rep. Bob Wilson	R	San Diego
37. Rep. Lionel Van Deerlin	D	San Diego
38. Rep. Minor C. Martin	R	Riverside

COLORADO

Sen. Gordon Allott	R	Lamar
Sen. Peter H. Dominick	R	Englewood
1. Rep. Byron G. Rogers	D	Denver
2. Rep. Donald G. Brotzman	R	Boulder
3. Rep. J. Edgar Chenoweth	R	Trinidad
4. Rep. Wayne N. Aspinall	D	Palisade

CONNECTICUT

Sen. Thomas J. Dodd	D	West Hartford
Sen. Abraham A. Ribicoff	D	Hartford
1. Rep. Emilio Q. Daddario	D	Hartford
2. Rep. William L. St. Onge	D	Putnam
3. Rep. Robert N. Giaimo	D	North Haven
4. Rep. Abner W. Sibal	R	Norwalk
5. Rep. John S. Monagan	D	Waterbury
AL Rep. Bernard F. Grabowski	D	Bristol

DELAWARE

Sen. John J. Williams	R	Millsboro
Sen. J. Caleb Boggs	R	Wilmington
AL Rep. Harris B. McDowell, Jr.	D	Middletown

FLORIDA

Sen. Spessard L. Holland	D	Bartow
Sen. George A. Smathers	D	Miami Beach
1. Rep. Robert L. F. Sikes	D	Crestview
2. Rep. Charles E. Bennett	D	Jacksonville
3. Rep. Claude Pepper	D	Coral Gables
4. Rep. Dante B. Fascell	D	Miami
5. Rep. A. S. Herlong, Jr.	D	Leesburg
6. Rep. Paul G. Rogers	D	West Palm Beach
7. Rep. James A. Haley	D	Sarasota
8. Rep. D. R. (Billy) Matthews	D	Gainesville
9. Rep. Don Fuqua	D	Altha
10. Rep. Sam Gibbons	D	Tampa
11. Rep. Edward J. Gurney	R	Winter Park
12. Rep. William C. Cramer	R	St. Petersburg

GEORGIA

Sen. Richard B. Russell	D	Winder
Sen. Herman E. Talmadge	D	Lovejoy
1. Rep. G. Elliott Hagan	D	Sylvania
2. Rep. J. L. Pilcher	D	Meigs
3. Rep. E. L. (Tic) Forrester	D	Leesburg
4. Rep. John J. Flynt, Jr.	D	Griffin
5. Rep. Charles L. Weltner	D	Atlanta
6. Rep. Carl Vinson	D	Milledgeville
7. Rep. John W. Davis	D	Summerville
8. Rep. J. Russell Tuten	D	Brunswick
9. Rep. Phil M. Landrum	D	Jasper
10. Rep. Robert G. Stephens, Jr.	D	Athens

HAWAII

Sen. Hiram L. Fong	R	Honolulu
Sen. Daniel K. Inouye	D	Honolulu
AL Rep. Thomas P. Gill	D	Honolulu
AL Rep. Spark M. Matsunaga	D	[illegible]

IDAHO

Sen. Frank Church	D	Boise
Sen. Len B. Jordan	R	Burley
1. Rep. Compton I. White, Jr.	D	Clark Fork
2. Rep. Ralph R. Harding	D	Blackfoot

ILLINOIS

Sen. Paul H. Douglas	D	Chicago
Sen. Everett McKinley Dirksen	R	Pekin
1. Rep. William L. Dawson	D	Chicago
2. Rep. Barratt O'Hara	D	Chicago
3. Rep. William T. Murphy	D	Chicago
4. Rep. Edward J. Derwinski	R	Chicago
5. Rep. John C. Kluczynski	D	Chicago
6. Rep. Thomas J. O'Brien	D	Chicago
7. Rep. Roland V. Libonati	D	Chicago
8. Rep. Dan Rostenkowski	D	Chicago
9. Rep. Edward R. Finnegan	D	Chicago
10. Rep. Harold R. Collier	R	Berwin
11. Rep. Roman C. Pucinski	D	Chicago
12. Rep. Robert McClory	R	Lake Bluff
13. Rep. Donald Rumsfeld	R	Glenview
14. Rep. Elmer J. Hoffman	R	Wheaton
15. Rep. Charlotte T. Reid	R	Aurora
16. Rep. John B. Anderson	R	Rockford
17. Rep. Leslie C. Arends	R	Melvin
18. Rep. Robert H. Michel	R	Peoria
19. Rep. Robert T. McLoskey	R	Monmouth
20. Rep. Paul Findley	R	Pittsfield
21. Rep. Kenneth J. Gray	D	West Frankfort
22. Rep. William L. Springer	R	Champaign
23. Rep. George E. Shipley	D	Olney
24. Rep. Melvin Price	D	East St. Louis

INDIANA

Sen. R. Vance Hartke	D	Evansville
Sen. Birch E. Bayh, Jr.	D	Terre Haute
1. Rep. Ray J. Madden	D	Gary
2. Rep. Charles A. Halleck	R	Rensselaer
3. Rep. John Brademas	D	South Bend
4. Rep. E. Ross Adair	R	Fort Wayne
5. Rep. J. Edward Roush	D	Huntington
6. Rep. Richard L. Roudebush	R	Noblesville
7. Rep. William G. Bray	R	Martinsville
8. Rep. Winfield K. Denton	D	Evansville
9. Rep. Earl Wilson	R	Bedford
10. Rep. Ralph Harvey	R	New Castle
11. Rep. Donald C. Bruce	R	Indianapolis

IOWA

Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper	R	Cedar Rapids
Sen. Jack Miller	R	Sioux City
1. Rep. Fred Schwengel	R	Davenport
2. Rep. James E. Bromwell	R	Cedar Rapids
3. Rep. H. R. Gross	R	Waterloo
4. Rep. John Kyl	R	Bloomfield
5. Rep. Neal Smith	D	Altoona
6. Rep. Charles B. Hoeven	R	Alton
7. Rep. Ben F. Jensen	R	Exira

KANSAS

Sen. Frank Carlson	R	Concordia
Sen. James B. Pearson	R	Topeka
1. Rep. Robert Dole	R	Russell
2. Rep. William H. Avery	R	Wakefield
3. Rep. Robert F. Ellsworth	R	Lawrence
4. Rep. Garner E. Shriver	R	Wichita
5. Rep. Joe Skubitz	R	Pittsburg

KENTUCKY

Sen. John Sherman Cooper	R	Somerset
Sen. Thruston B. Morton	R	Glenview
1. Rep. Frank A. Stubblefield	D	Murray
2. Rep. William H. Natcher	D	Bowling Green
3. Rep. M. G. (Gene) Snyder	R	Jeffersontown
4. Rep. Frank Chelf	D	Lebanon
5. Rep. Eugene Siler	R	Williamsburg
6. Rep. John C. Watts	D	Nicholasville
7. Rep. Carl D. Perkins	D	Hindman

LOUISIANA

Sen. Allen J. Ellender	D	Houma
Sen. Russell B. Long	D	Baton Rouge
1. Rep. F. Edward Hébert	D	New Orleans
2. Rep. Hale Boggs	D	New Orleans
3. Rep. Edwin E. Willis	D	St. Martinville
4. Rep. Joe D. Waggonner, Jr.	D	Plain Dealing
5. Rep. Otto E. Passman	D	Monroe
6. Rep. James H. Morrison	D	Hammond
7. Rep. T. A. Thompson	D	Ville Platte
8. Rep. Gillis William Long	D	Winnfield

MAINE

Sen. Margaret Chase Smith	R	Skowhegan
Sen. Edmund S. Muskie	D	Waterville
1. Rep. Stanley R. Tupper	R	Boothbay Harbor
2. Rep. Clifford G. McIntire	R	Perham

MARYLAND

Sen. J. Glenn Beall	R	Frostburg
Sen. Daniel B. Brewster	D	Towson
1. Rep. Rogers C. B. Morton	R	Easton
2. Rep. Clarence D. Long	D	Ruxton
3. Rep. Edward A. Garmatz	D	Baltimore
4. Rep. George H. Fallon	D	Baltimore
5. Rep. Richard E. Lankford	D	Annapolis
6. Rep. Charles McC. Mathias, Jr.	R	Frederick
7. Rep. Samuel N. Friedel	D	Baltimore
AL Rep. Carlton R. Sickles	D	Lanham

MASSACHUSETTS

Sen. Leverett Saltonstall	R	Dover
Sen. Edward M. Kennedy	D	Boston
1. Rep. Silvio O. Conte	R	Pittsfield
2. Rep. Edward P. Boland	D	Springfield
3. Rep. Philip J. Philbin	D	Clinton
4. Rep. Harold D. Donohue	D	Worcester
5. Rep. F. Bradford Morse	R	Lowell
6. Rep. William H. Bates	R	Salem
7. Rep. Torbert H. Macdonald	D	Malden
8. Rep. Thomas P. O'Neill, Jr.	D	Cambridge
9. Rep. John W. McCormack	D	Dorchester
10. Rep. Joseph W. Martin, Jr.	R	North Attleboro
11. Rep. James A. Burke	D	Milton
12. Rep. Hastings Keith	R	West Bridgewater

MICHIGAN

Sen. Pat McNamara	D	Detroit
Sen. Philip A. Hart	D	Lansing
1. Rep. Lucien N. Nedzi	D	Detroit
2. Rep. George Meader	R	Ann Arbor
3. Rep. August E. Johansen	R	Battle Creek
4. Rep. Edward Hutchinson	R	Fennville
5. Rep. Gerald R. Ford, Jr.	R	Grand Rapids
6. Rep. Charles E. Chamberlain	R	East Lansing
7. Rep. James G. O'Hara	D	Utica
8. Rep. James Harvey	R	Saginaw
9. Rep. Robert P. Griffin	R	Traverse City
10. Rep. Elford A. Cederberg	R	Bay City
11. Rep. Victor A. Knox	R	Sault Ste. Marie
12. Rep. John B. Bennett	R	Ontonagon
13. Rep. Charles C. Diggs, Jr.	D	Detroit
14. Rep. Harold M. Ryan	D	Detroit
15. Rep. John D. Dingell	D	Detroit
16. Rep. John Lesinski	D	Dearborn
17. Rep. Martha W. Griffiths	D	Detroit
18. Rep. William S. Broomfield	R	Royal Oak
AL Rep. Neil Staebler	D	Ann Arbor

MINNESOTA

Sen. Hubert H. Humphrey	D	Waverly
Sen. Eugene J. McCarthy	D	St. Paul
1. Rep. Albert H. Quie	R	Dennison
2. Rep. Ancher Nelsen	R	Hutchinson
3. Rep. Clark MacGregor	R	Plymouth Village
4. Rep. Joseph E. Karth	D	St. Paul
5. Rep. Donald M. Fraser	D	Minneapolis
6. Rep. Alex G. Olson	D	Montevideo
7. Rep. Odin Langen	R	Kennedy
8. Rep. John A. Blatnik	D	Chisholm

MISSISSIPPI

Sen. James O. Eastland	D	Doddsville
Sen. John Stennis	D	DeKalb
1. Rep. Thomas G. Abernethy	D	Okolona
2. Rep. Jamie L. Whitten	D	Charleston
3. Rep. John Bell Williams	D	Raymond
4. Rep. Arthur Winstead	D	Philadelphia
5. Rep. William M. Colmer	D	Pascagoula

MISSOURI

Sen. Stuart Symington	D	Creve Coeur
Sen. Edward V. Long	D	Bowling Green
1. Rep. Frank M. Karsten	D	St. Louis
2. Rep. Thomas B. Curtis	R	Webster Groves
3. Rep. Leonor K. Sullivan (Mrs. John B.)	D	St. Louis
4. Rep. William J. Randall	D	Independence

5. Rep. Richard Bolling	D	Kansas City
6. Rep. W. R. Hull, Jr.	D	Weston
7. Rep. Durward G. Hall	R	Springfield
8. Rep. Richard H. Ichord	D	Houston
9. Rep. Clarence Cannon	D	Elsberry
10. Rep. Paul C. Jones	D	Kennett

MONTANA

Sen. Mike Mansfield	D	Missoula
Sen. Lee Metcalf	D	Helena
1. Rep. Arnold Olsen	D	Helena
2. Rep. James F. Battin	R	Billings

NEBRASKA

Sen. Roman L. Hruska	R	Omaha
Sen. Carl T. Curtis	R	Minden
1. Rep. Ralph F. Beermann	R	Dakota City
2. Rep. Glenn Cunningham	R	Omaha
3. Rep. Dave Martin	R	Kearney

NEVADA

Sen. Alan Bible	D	Reno
Sen. Howard W. Cannon	D	Las Vegas
AL Rep. Walter S. Baring	D	Reno

NEW HAMPSHIRE

Sen. Norris Cotton	R	Lebanon
Sen. Thomas J. McIntyre	D	Laconia
1. Rep. Louis C. Wyman	R	Manchester
2. Rep. James C. Cleveland	R	New London

NEW JERSEY

Sen. Clifford P. Case	R	Rahway
Sen. Harrison A. Williams, Jr.	D	Westfield
1. Rep. William T. Cahill	R	Collingswood
2. Rep. Milton W. Glenn	R	Margate
3. Rep. James C. Auchincloss	R	Rumson
4. Rep. Frank Thompson, Jr.	D	Trenton
5. Rep. Peter Frelinghuysen, Jr.	R	Morristown
6. Rep. Florence P. Dwyer	R	Elizabeth
7. Rep. William B. Widnall	R	Saddle River
8. Rep. Charles S. Joelson	D	Paterson
9. Rep. Frank C. Osmers, Jr.	R	Tenafly
10. Rep. Peter W. Rodino, Jr.	D	Newark
11. Rep. Joseph G. Minish	D	West Orange
12. Rep. George M. Wallhauser	R	Maplewood
13. Rep. Cornelius E. Gallagher	D	Bayonne
14. Rep. Dominick V. Daniels	D	Jersey City
15. Rep. Edward J. Patten	D	Perth Amboy

NEW MEXICO

Sen. Clinton P. Anderson	D	Albuquerque
Sen. Edwin L. Mechem	R	Las Cruces
AL Rep. Joseph M. Montoya	D	Santa Fe
AL Rep. Thomas G. Morris	D	Tucumcari

NEW YORK

Sen. Jacob K. Javits	R	New York City
Sen. Kenneth B. Keating	R	Rochester
1. Rep. Otis G. Pike	D	Riverhead
2. Rep. James R. Grover, Jr.	R	Babylon
3. Rep. Steven B. Derounian	R	Roslyn
4. Rep. John W. Wydler	R	Garden City
5. Rep. Frank J. Becker	R	Lynbrook
6. Rep. Seymour Halpern	R	Forest Hills
7. Rep. Joseph P. Addabbo	D	Ozone Park
8. Rep. Benjamin S. Rosenthal	D	Elmhurst
9. Rep. James J. Delaney	D	Long Island City
10. Rep. Emanuel Celler	D	Brooklyn
11. Rep. Eugene J. Keogh	D	Brooklyn
12. Rep. Edna F. Kelly	D	Brooklyn
13. Rep. Abraham J. Multer	D	Brooklyn
14. Rep. John J. Rooney	D	Brooklyn
15. Rep. Hugh L. Carey	D	Brooklyn
16. Rep. John M. Murphy	D	Staten Island
17. Rep. John V. Lindsay	R	New York City
18. Rep. Adam C. Powell	D	New York City
19. Rep. Leonard Farbstein	D	New York City
20. Rep. William Fitts Ryan	D	New York City
21. Rep. James C. Healey	D	New York City
22. Rep. Jacob H. Gilbert	D	New York City
23. Rep. Charles A. Buckley	D	New York City
24. Rep. Paul A. Fino	R	New York City
25. Rep. Robert R. Barry	R	Yonkers
26. Rep. Ogden R. Reid	R	Purchase
27. Rep. Katharine St. George	R	Tuxedo Park
28. Rep. J. Ernest Wharton	R	Richmondville
29. Rep. Leo W. O'Brien	D	Albany
30. Rep. Carleton J. King	R	Saratoga Springs
31. Rep. Clarence E. Kilburn	R	Malone
32. Rep. Alexander Pirnie	R	New Hartford
33. Rep. Howard W. Robinson	R	Owego
34. Rep. R. Walter Riehlman	R	Tully
35. Rep. Samuel S. Stratton	D	Schenectady
36. Rep. Frank J. Horton	R	Rochester
37. Rep. Harold C. Ostertag	R	Attica
38. Rep. Charles E. Goodell	R	Jamestown
39. Rep. John R. Pillion	R	Lakeview
40. Rep. William E. Miller	R	Olcott
41. Rep. Thaddeus J. Dulski	D	Buffalo

NORTH CAROLINA

Sen. Sam J. Ervin, Jr.	D	Morganton
Sen. B. Everett Jordan	D	Saxapahaw
1. Rep. Herbert C. Bonner	D	Washington
2. Rep. L. H. Fountain	D	Tarboro
3. Rep. David N. Henderson	D	Wallace
4. Rep. Harold D. Cooley	D	Nashville
5. Rep. Ralph J. Scott	D	Danbury
6. Rep. Horace R. Kornegay	D	Greensboro
7. Rep. Alton Lennon	D	Wilmington
8. Rep. Charles Raper Jonas	R	Lincolnton
9. Rep. James T. Broyhill	R	Lenoir
10. Rep. Basil L. Whitner	D	Gastonia
11. Rep. Roy A. Taylor	D	Black Mountain

NORTH DAKOTA

Sen. Milton R. Young	R	Berlin
Sen. Quentin Burdick	D	Fargo
1. Rep. Hjalmar C. Nygaard	R	Enderlin
2. Rep. Don L. Short	R	Medora

OHIO

Sen. Frank J. Lausche	D	Cleveland
Sen. Stephen M. Young	D	Cleveland
1. Rep. Carl W. Rich	R	Cincinnati
2. Rep. Donald D. Clancy	R	Cincinnati
3. Rep. Paul F. Schenck	R	Dayton
4. Rep. William M. McCulloch	R	Piqua
5. Rep. Delbert L. Latta	R	Bowling Green
6. Rep. William H. Harsha, Jr.	R	Portsmouth
7. Rep. Clarence J. Brown	R	Blanchester
8. Rep. Jackson E. Betts	R	Findlay
9. Rep. Thomas L. Ashley	D	Waterville
10. Rep. Homer E. Abele	R	McArthur
11. Rep. Oliver P. Bolton	R	Mentor
12. Rep. Samuel L. Devine	R	Columbus
13. Rep. Charles A. Mosher	R	Oberlin
14. Rep. William H. Ayres	R	Akron
15. Rep. Robert T. Secrest	D	Senecaville
16. Rep. Frank T. Bow	R	Canton
17. Rep. John M. Ashbrook	R	Johnstown
18. Rep. Wayne L. Hays	D	Flushing
19. Rep. Michael J. Kirwan	D	Youngstown
20. Rep. Michael A. Feighan	D	Cleveland
21. Rep. Charles A. Vanik	D	Cleveland
22. Rep. Frances P. Bolton	R	Lyndhurst
23. Rep. William E. Minshall	R	Cleveland
AL Rep. Robert Taft, Jr.	R	Indian Hill

OKLAHOMA

Sen. A. S. "Mike" Monroney	D	Oklahoma City
Sen. J. Howard Edmondson	D	Oklahoma City
1. Rep. Page Belcher	R	Enid
2. Rep. Ed Edmondson	D	Muskogee
3. Rep. Carl Albert	D	McAlester
4. Rep. Tom Steed	D	Shawnee
5. Rep. John Jarman	D	Oklahoma City
6. Rep. Victor Wickersham	D	Mangum

OREGON

Sen. Wayne Lyman Morse	D	Eugene
Sen. Maurine B. Neuberger	D	Portland
1. Rep. Walter Norblad	R	Stayton
2. Rep. Al Ullman	D	Baker
3. Rep. Edith Green	D	Portland
4. Rep. Robert B. Duncan	D	Medford

PENNSYLVANIA

Sen. Joseph S. Clark, Jr.	D	Philadelphia
Sen. Hugh Scott	R	Philadelphia
1. Rep. William A. Barrett	D	Philadelphia
2. Rep. Robert N. C. Nix	D	Philadelphia
3. Rep. James A. Byrne	D	Philadelphia
4. Rep. Herman Toll	D	Philadelphia
5. Rep. William J. Green, Jr.	D	Philadelphia
6. Rep. George M. Rhodes	D	Reading
7. Rep. William H. Milliken	R	Sharon Hill

8.	Rep. Willard S. Curtin	R	Morrisville
9.	Rep. Paul B. Dague	R	Downingtown
10.	Rep. Joseph M. McDade	R	Scranton
11.	Rep. Daniel J. Flood	D	Wilkes-Barre
12.	Rep. J. Irving Whalley	R	Windber
13.	Rep. Richard S. Schweiker	R	Lansdale
14.	Rep. William S. Moorhead	D	Pittsburgh
15.	Rep. Francis E. Walter	D	Easton
16.	Rep. John C. Kunkel	R	Harrisburg
17.	Rep. Herman T. Schneebeli	R	Williamsport
18.	Rep. Robert J. Corbett	R	Pittsburgh
19.	Rep. George A. Goodling	R	Loganville
20.	Rep. Elmer J. Holland	D	Pittsburgh
21.	Rep. John H. Dent	D	Jeannette
22.	Rep. John P. Saylor	R	Johnstown
23.	Rep. Leon H. Gavin	R	Oil City
24.	Rep. James D. Weaver	R	Erie
25.	Rep. Frank M. Clark	D	Bessemer
26.	Rep. Thomas E. Morgan	D	Fredericktown
27.	Rep. James G. Fulton	R	Pittsburgh

RHODE ISLAND

Sen.	John O. Pastore	D	Providence
Sen.	Claiborne Pell	D	Newport
1.	Rep. Fernand J. St. Germain	D	Woonsocket
2.	Rep. John E. Fogarty	D	Harmony

SOUTH CAROLINA

Sen.	Olin D. Johnston	D	Spartanburg
Sen.	Strom Thurmond	D	Aiken
1.	Rep. L. Mendel Rivers	D	Charleston
2.	Rep. Albert W. Watson	D	Columbia
3.	Rep. W. J. Bryan Dorn	D	Greenwood
4.	Rep. Robert T. Ashmore	D	Greenville
5.	Rep. Robert W. Hemphill	D	Chester
6.	Rep. John L. McMillan	D	Florence

SOUTH DAKOTA

Sen.	Karl E. Mundt	R	Madison
Sen.	George S. McGovern	D	Mitchell
1.	Rep. Ben Reifel	R	Aberdeen
2.	Rep. E. Y. Berry	R	McLaughlin

TENNESSEE

Sen.	Estes Kefauver	D	Chattanooga
Sen.	Albert Gore	D	Carthage
1.	Rep. James H. (Jimmy) Quillen	R	Kingsport
2.	Rep. Howard H. Baker	R	Huntsville
3.	Rep. W. E. (Bill) Brock	R	Chattanooga
4.	Rep. Joe L. Evins	D	Smithville
5.	Rep. Richard Fulton	D	Nashville
6.	Rep. Ross Bass	D	Pulaski
7.	Rep. Tom Murray	D	Jackson
8.	Rep. Robert A. Everett	D	Union City
9.	Rep. Clifford Davis	D	Memphis

TEXAS

Sen.	Ralph W. Yarborough	D	Austin
Sen.	John G. Tower	R	Wichita Falls
1.	Rep. Wright Patman	D	Texarkana
2.	Rep. Jack Brooks	D	Beaumont
3.	Rep. Lindley Beckworth	D	Gladewater
4.	Rep. Ray Roberts	D	McKinney
5.	Rep. Bruce Alger	R	Dallas
6.	Rep. Olin E. Teague	D	College Station
7.	Rep. John Dowdy	D	Athens
8.	Rep. Albert Thomas	D	Houston
9.	Rep. Clark W. Thompson	D	Galveston
10.	Rep. Homer Thornberry	D	Austin
11.	Rep. W. R. Poage	D	Waco
12.	Rep. Jim Wright	D	Weatherford
13.	Rep. Graham B. Purcell, Jr.	D	Wichita Falls
14.	Rep. John Young	D	Corpus Christi
15.	Rep. Joe M. Kilgore	D	McAllen
16.	Rep. Ed Foreman	R	Odessa
17.	Rep. Omar Burleson	D	Anson
18.	Rep. Walter Rogers	D	Pampa
19.	Rep. George Mahon	D	Lubbock
20.	Rep. Henry B. Gonzalez	D	San Antonio
21.	Rep. O. C. Fisher	D	San Angelo
22.	Rep. Bob Casey	D	Houston
AL	Rep. Joe R. Pool	D	Dallas

UTAH

Sen.	Wallace F. Bennett	R	Salt Lake City
Sen.	Frank E. Moss	D	Salt Lake City
1.	Rep. Laurence J. Burton	R	Ogden
2.	Rep. Sherman P. Lloyd	R	Salt Lake City

VERMONT

Sen.	George D. Aiken	R	Putney
Sen.	Winston L. Prouty	R	Newport
AL	Rep. Robert T. Stafford	R	Rutland City

VIRGINIA

Sen.	Harry Flood Byrd	D	Berryville
Sen.	A. Willis Robertson	D	Lexington
1.	Rep. Thomas N. Downing	D	Newport News
2.	Rep. Porter Hardy, Jr.	D	Churchland
3.	Rep. J. Vaughan Gary	D	Richmond
4.	Rep. Watkins M. Abbitt	D	Appomattox
5.	Rep. William M. Tuck	D	South Boston
6.	Rep. Richard H. Poff	R	Radford
7.	Rep. John O. Marsh, Jr.	D	Strasburg
8.	Rep. Howard W. Smith	D	Broad Run
9.	Rep. W. Pat Jennings	D	Marion
10.	Rep. Joel T. Broyhill	R	Arlington

WASHINGTON

Sen.	Warren G. Magnuson	D	Seattle
Sen.	Henry M. Jackson	D	Everett
1.	Rep. Thomas M. Pelly	R	Seattle
2.	Rep. Jack Westland	R	Everett
3.	Rep. Julia Butler Hansen	D	Cathlamet
4.	Rep. Catherine May	R	Yakima
5.	Rep. Walt Horan	R	Wenatchee
6.	Rep. Thor C. Tollefson	R	Tacoma
7.	Rep. K. W. (Bill) Stinson	R	Bellevue

WEST VIRGINIA

Sen.	Jennings Randolph	D	Elkins
Sen.	Robert C. Byrd	D	Sophia
1.	Rep. Arch A. Moore, Jr.	R	Glen Dale
2.	Rep. Harley O. Staggers	D	Keyser
3.	Rep. John M. Slack, Jr.	D	Charleston
4.	Rep. Ken Hechler	D	Huntington
5.	Rep. Elizabeth Kee	D	Bluefield

WISCONSIN

Sen.	William Proxmire	D	Madison
Sen.	Gaylord Nelson	D	Madison
1.	Rep. Henry C. Schadeberg	R	Burlington
2.	Rep. Robert W. Kastenmeier	D	Watertown
3.	Rep. Vernon W. Thomson	R	Richland Center
4.	Rep. Clement J. Zablocki	D	Milwaukee
5.	Rep. Henry S. Reuss	D	Milwaukee
6.	Rep. William K. Van Pelt	R	Fond du Lac
7.	Rep. Melvin R. Laird	R	Marshfield
8.	Rep. John W. Byrnes	R	Green Bay
9.	Rep. Lester R. Johnson	D	Black River Falls
10.	Rep. Alvin E. O'Konski	R	Mercer

WYOMING

Sen.	Gale W. McGee	D	Laramie
Sen.	Milward L. Simpson	R	Cody
AL	Rep. William Henry Harrison	R	Sheridan

PUERTO RICO

Resident Commissioner— Antonio Fernós-Isern		D	Santurce

House:

The Honorable John Q._____
House Office Building
Washington 25, D. C.

Senate:

The Honorable John Q._____
Senate Office Building
Washington 25, D. C.

The Machinist
PUBLISHED BY THE INTERNATIONAL ASSOCIATION OF MACHINISTS
SPECIAL SECTION

Pol. Gen

1963

DIRECTORY FOR UNION MEMBERS

Committees of Congress: The REAL Control

Mother, father, son and daughter walk gingerly up the wide marble staircase to the visitors' gallery overlooking the U.S. Senate. They are typical vacation visitors to Washington, D.C., come to see how their government operates.

In the gallery, they settle into theater-type seats, eager to hear the lawmakers at work. Below, the Senate floor is almost empty. One Senator is droning through a speech. Five others are sitting at their desks. Two are whispering together. One is reading the afternoon newspaper. The two others are reading mail. The presiding officer could be asleep he is so still.

"Come on, let's go!" Junior stage-whispers. Out they troop, disappointed and bewildered by what they have seen. It could happen to any of us. It has happened to many union families on their first visit under the great dome. That first i cause Congressmen and Senators have to specialize. Usually, when a majority on any committee makes a judgment the rest of the Senate or the House go along with few, if any, changes.

Altogether, the Senate and House have 50 standing, special and joint committees.

Last year, the 36 standing committees reported out 2,452 bills after study and consideration. It is possible for a bill to be voted on by Congress without advance approval by the appropriate committee, but it is a rare occurrence.

Because committees do all the preparation of bills, committee chairmen are key members of Congress. They have wide powers. They decide when the committee will meet; the order in which bills will be considered; when hearings are held; who will be permitted to testify, for how long that these 11 states with 13 per cent of the country's voters control nearly half the committee chairmanships.

Members of Congress are assigned to committees through the seniority system, also. The oldest members get choice committee assignments. As a result, the most important committees are overloaded with members from one-party states—Democrats from the South and Republicans from rural and small town areas in the North and Midwest.

Committee assignments in the Senate are controlled by the party Steering Committees. Like other important committees, that one is dominated by Senators from one-party states, mostly chairmen of the key committees.

Recently U.S. Senator Joseph Clark of Pennsylvania spoke out against the system is reading the afternoon newspaper. The two others are reading mail. The presiding officer could be asleep he is so still.

"Come on, let's go!" Junior stage-whispers. Out they troop, disappointed and bewildered by what they have seen. It could happen to any of us. It has happened to many union families on their first visit under the great dome. That first impression is misleading and inaccurate.

George Nelson, the IAM's legislative representative, compares the sight you see from the Senate gallery on most days with the sight of a submarine, cruising below surface with only its conning tower out of water.

Like that submerged submarine, there is a lot more to Congress than you can see from above. Of course, when a full-dress debate is scheduled, the floor is packed. Always, the major work of Congress is done by committees. It has to be that way because of the vast number of bills that Congress is asked to consider every session. It has to be that way be- approved by the appropriate committee, but it is a rare occurrence.

Because committees do all the preparation of bills, committee chairmen are key members of Congress. They have wide powers. They decide when the committee will meet; the order in which bills will be considered; when hearings are held; who will be permitted to testify, for how long and in what order. They control the committee's staff.

Congressmen and Senators become chairmen of committees through a strict seniority system. Usually they are the oldest members of Congress in years as well as length of service. Twelve of the 36 chairmen of standing committees are over 70 years old. They come from so-called "safe" districts or one-party states.

Democrats now have a majority in both House and Senate. As a result, all committee chairmen are Democrats. Most of the so-called safe Democratic seats are in the South. Thus today 17 of the 36 chairmen of standing committees in Congress come from Southern States. That means Committee assignments in the Senate are controlled by the party Steering Committees. Like other important committees, that one is dominated by Senators from one-party states, mostly chairmen of the key committees.

Recently U.S. Senator Joseph Clark of Pennsylvania spoke out against the system and asked for an easing of the seniority rule to permit all sections of the country to be represented on key committees. Said Clark on the Senate floor:

"The Senate establishment, as I see it... is almost the antithesis of democracy. It is not selected by any democratic process. It appears to be quite unresponsive to the caucus of the two parties, be they Republican or Democratic."

To give union members a clearer picture of the committee system in Congress, THE MACHINIST is publishing this Special Section. The three following pages carry the rosters of all standing and special committees of the Senate and House. Keep this section for future reference.

Typical scene at a Congressional committee hearing. Great part of the work of Congress is done in House and Senate committee sessions.

Committees of the U.S. Senate

HERE are the 18 standing and special committees of the U.S. Senate. Members' names appear in order of committee seniority with Democrats, the majority party, on the left in ordinary type and Republicans on the right in italic. Committee chairmen are all Democrats, since the Democrats have the majority. A brief description of its jurisdiction precedes each committee roster. The Senate Special Committee on the Aging is not included. Its membership has not yet been announced.

Aeronautical and Space Sciences

Aeronautical and space activities and matters relating to the scientific aspects of these activities, except those peculiar to or primarily associated with the development of weapons systems or military operations; National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

Democrats, 10—Republicans, 5

Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.), Chairman

Richard B. Russell (Ga.)	Margaret Chase Smith (Maine)
Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.)	Clifford P. Case (N.J.)
Stuart Symington (Mo.)	Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa)
John Stennis (Miss.)	Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
Stephen M. Young (Ohio)	Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.)
Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)
Howard W. Cannon (Nev.)
Spessard L. Holland (Fla.)
J. Howard Edmondson (Okla.)

Agriculture and Forestry

Agriculture in general, including farm credit and security, crop insurance, soil conservation and rural electrification; forestry in general.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

Allen J. Ellender (La.), Chairman

Armed Services

Military affairs, Panama Canal and Canal Zone, conservation of petroleum resources, strategic and critical materials; aeronautical and space activities peculiar to or primarily associated with development of weapons systems or military operations.

Democrats, 12—Republicans, 5

Richard B. Russell (Ga.), Chairman

Harry Flood Byrd (Va.)	Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.)
John Stennis (Miss.)	Margaret Chase Smith (Maine)
Stuart Symington (Mo.)	J. Glenn Beall (Md.)
Henry M. Jackson (Wash.)	Barry Goldwater (Ariz.)
Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.)	Clifford P. Case (N.J.)
Strom Thurmond (S.C.)
Clair Engle (Calif.)
Howard W. Cannon (Nev.)
Robert C. Byrd (W.Va.)
Stephen M. Young (Ohio)
Daniel K. Inouye (Hawaii)

Robertson

Banking and Currency

Banking and currency generally; financial matters other than taxes and appropriations, public and private housing and economic controls.

Democrats, 10—Republicans, 5

A. Willis Robertson (Va.), Chairman

John J. Sparkman (Ala.)	Wallace F. Bennett (Utah)
Paul H. Douglas (Ill.)	Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)	James B. Pearson (Kan.)
William Proxmire (Wis.)	Peter H. Dominick (Colo.)
Harrison A. Williams Jr. (N.J.)	Milward L. Simpson (Wyo.)
Edmund S. Muskie (Maine)
Edward V. Long (Mo.)
Maurine B. Neuberger (Ore.)
Thomas J. McIntyre (N.H.)

Commerce

Regulation of interstate transportation, communications, inland waterways, Coast Guard, merchant marine, civil aeronautics

Foreign Relations

Relations of United States with foreign nations generally; treaties, Red Cross, diplomatic service, United Nations, foreign loans.

Democrats, 12—Republicans 5

J. W. Fulbright (Ark.), Chairman

John J. Sparkman (Ala.)	Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa)
Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.)	George D. Aiken (Vt.)
Mike Mansfield (Mont.)	Frank Carlson (Kan.)
Wayne Morse (Ore.)	John J. Williams (Del.)
Russell B. Long (La.)	Karl E. Mundt (S.D.)
Albert Gore (Tenn.)
Frank J. Lausche (Ohio)
Frank Church (Idaho)
Stuart Symington (Mo.)
Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)
George A. Smathers (Fla.)

Government Operations

Budgeting and accounting measures; reorganization of the Executive Branch; general governmental and administrative problems; intergovernmental relationships between the Federal Government and the states and municipalities, and between the United States and international organizations of which the United States is a member.

Democrats, 10—Republicans 5

John L. McClellan (Ark.), Chairman

Henry M. Jackson (Wash.)	Karl E. Mundt (S.D.)
Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.)	Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.)	Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.)
Ernest Gruening (Alaska)	Jack Miller (Iowa)
Edmund S. Muskie (Maine)	John G. Tower (Texas)
Claiborne Pell (R.I.)
Thomas J. McIntyre (N.H.)
Abraham A. Ribicoff (Conn.)
Daniel B. Brewster (Md.)

Interior and Insular Affairs

Public lands, natural resources, territorial possessions of the U.S., Indian affairs.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

Henry M. Jackson (Wash.), Chairman

Agriculture and Forestry

Agriculture in general, including farm credit and security, crop insurance, soil conservation and rural electrification; forestry in general.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

Allen J. Ellender (La.), Chairman

Olin D. Johnston (S.C.)	George D. Aiken (Vt.)
Spessard L. Holland (Fla.)	Milton R. Young (N.D.)
James O. Eastland (Miss.)	Bourke B. Hickenlooper (Iowa)
Herman E. Talmadge (Ga.)	John Sherman Cooper (Ky.)
William Proxmire (Wis.)	J. Caleb Boggs (Del.)
B. Everett Jordan (N.C.)	Edwin L. Mechem (N.M.)
Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.)
Maurine B. Neuberger (Ore.)
George McGovern (S.D.)
J. Howard Edmondson (Okla.)

Hayden

Appropriations

Appropriation of Government revenues to provide funds for authorized programs.

Democrats, 18—Republicans, 9

Carl Hayden (Ariz.), Chairman

Richard B. Russell (Ga.)	Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.)
Allen J. Ellender (La.)	Milton R. Young (N.D.)
Lister Hill (Ala.)	Karl E. Mundt (S.D.)
John L. McClellan (Ark.)	Margaret Chase Smith (Maine)
A. Willis Robertson (Va.)	Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.)
Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.)	Roman L. Hruska (Neb.)
Spessard L. Holland (Fla.)	Gordon Allot (Colo.)
John Stennis (Miss.)	Norris Cotton (N.H.)
John O. Pastore (R.I.)	Clifford P. Case (N.J.)
Estes Kefauver (Tenn.)
A. S. Mike Monroney (Okla.)
Alan Bible (Nev.)
Robert C. Byrd (W. Va.)
Gale W. McGee (Wyo.)
Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.)
Mike Mansfield (Mont.)
E. L. (Bob) Bartlett (Alaska)

Eleven Joint Committees probe in various fields

Congress has eleven Joint Committees which are not included on this roster. These committees have members from both the House and the Senate. They conduct studies and make investigations but cannot report out specific bills. They include the Joint Committees on Atomic Energy, Defense Production, Economics, Internal Revenue Taxation, Reduction of Non-Essential Federal Expenditures, Printing, Library, the Disposition of Executive Papers, Smithsonian Museum of History and Technology, Immigration and Nationality Policy, and Navajo-Hopi Indians.

William Proxmire (Wis.)	Peter H. Dominick (Colo.)
Harrison A. Williams Jr. (N.J.)	Milward L. Simpson (Wyo.)
Edmund S. Muskie (Maine)
Edward V. Long (Mo.)
Maurine B. Neuberger (Ore.)
Thomas J. McIntyre (N.H.)

Commerce

Regulation of interstate transportation, communications, inland waterways, Coast Guard, merchant marine, civil aeronautics except activities of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; fisheries and wildlife, Weather Bureau, Coast and Geodetic Survey, Bureau of Standards.

Democrats, 12—Republicans, 5

Warren G. Magnuson (Wash.), Chairman

John O. Pastore (R.I.)	Norris Cotton (N.H.)
A. S. Mike Monroney (Okla.)	Thruston B. Morton (Ky.)
Strom Thurmond (S.C.)	Hugh Scott (Pa.)
Frank J. Lausche (Ohio)	Winston L. Prouty (Vt.)
Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas)	J. Glenn Beall (Md.)
Clair Engle (Calif.)
E. L. (Bob) Bartlett (Alaska)
Vance Hartke (Ind.)
Gale W. McGee (Wyo.)
Howard W. Cannon (Nev.)
Philip A. Hart (Mich.)

District of Columbia

All measures relating to municipal affairs of the District of Columbia, except appropriations for its operation.

Democrats, 4— Republicans, 3

Alan Bible (Nev.), Chairman

Wayne Morse (Ore.)	J. Glenn Beall (Md.)
Vance Hartke (Ind.)	Winston L. Prouty (Vt.)
Thomas J. McIntyre (N.H.)	Peter H. Dominick (Colo.)

Byrd

Finance

Taxes, tariffs, import quotas, social security, veterans' compensation pensions and armed forces' life insurance.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

Harry Flood Byrd (Va.), Chairman

Russell B. Long (La.)	John J. Williams (Del.)
George A. Smathers (Fla.)	Frank Carlson (Kan.)
Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.)	Wallace F. Bennett (Utah)
Paul H. Douglas (Ill.)	Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
Albert Gore (Tenn.)	Thruston B. Morton (Ky.)
Herman E. Talmadge (Ga.)	Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.)
Eugene J. McCarthy (Minn.)
Vance Hartke (Ind.)
J. W. Fulbright (Ark.)
Abraham A. Ribicoff (Conn.)

Abraham A. Ribicoff (Conn.)
Daniel B. Brewster (Md.)

Interior and Insular Affairs

Public lands, natural resources, territorial possessions of the U.S., Indian affairs.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

Henry M. Jackson (Wash.), Chairman

Clinton P. Anderson (N.M.)	Thomas H. Kuchel (Calif.)
Alan Bible (Nev.)	Gordon Allott (Colo.)
Frank Church (Idaho)	Len B. Jordan (Idaho)
Ernest Gruening (Alaska)	Peter H. Dominick (Colo.)
Frank E. Moss (Utah)	Edwin L. Mechem (N.M.)
Quentin N. Burdick (N.D.)	Milward L. Simpson (Wyo.)
Lee Metcalf (Mont.)
Carl Hayden (Ariz.)
George McGovern (S.D.)
Gaylord A. Nelson (Wis.)

Judiciary

Federal courts and judges, civil rights, civil liberties, constitutional amendments, interstate compacts, immigration and naturalization, apportionment of Representatives, meetings of Congress and attendance of Members, claims against the U.S., Patent Office.

Democrats, 10—Republicans, 5

James O. Eastland (Miss.), Chairman

Estes Kefauver (Tenn.)	Everett McKinley Dirksen (Ill.)
Olin D. Johnston (S.C.)	Roman L. Hruska (Neb.)
John L. McClellan (Ark.)	Kenneth B. Keating (N.Y.)
Sam J. Ervin Jr. (N.C.)	Hiram L. Fong (Hawaii)
Thomas J. Dodd (Conn.)	Hugh Scott (Pa.)
Philip A. Hart (Mich.)
Edward V. Long (Mo.)
Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.)
Birch Bayh (Ind.)

Hill

Labor and Public Welfare

Labor-management laws, minimum wage, child labor, schools, scholarships, welfare, veterans' affairs, medical care.

Democrats, 10—Republicans, 5

Lister Hill (Ala.), Chairman

Pat McNamara (Mich.)	Barry Goldwater (Ariz.)
Wayne Morse (Ore.)	Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.)
Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas)	Winston L. Prouty (Vt.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)	John G. Tower (Texas)
Jennings Randolph (W. Va.)	Len B. Jordan (Idaho)
Harrison A. Williams Jr. (N.J.)
Quentin N. Burdick (N.D.)
Claiborne Pell (R.I.)
Edward M. Kennedy (Mass.)

Post Office and Civil Service

Postal and federal civil services; census; National Archives.

Democrats, 6—Republicans, 3

Olin D. Johnston (S.C.), Chairman

A. S. Mike Monroney (Okla.)
Ralph W. Yarborough (Texas)
Jennings Randolph (W. Va.)
Gale W. McGee (Wyo.)
Daniel B. Brewster (Md.)

Frank Carlson (Kan.)
Hiram L. Fong (Hawaii)
J. Caleb Boggs (Del.)

Public Works

Public buildings, roads; flood control, rivers and harbors, stream pollution, water power.

Democrats, 12—Republicans, 5

Pat McNamara (Mich.), Chairman

Jennings Randolph (W. Va.)
Stephen M. Young (Ohio)
Edmund S. Muskie (Maine)
Ernest Gruening (Alaska)
Frank E. Moss (Utah)
Lee Metcalf (Mont.)
B. Everett Jordan (N.C.)
Daniel B. Brewster (Md.)
Daniel K. Inouye (Hawaii)
Birch Bayh (Ind.)
Gaylord A. Nelson (Wis.)

John Sherman Cooper (Ky.)
Hiram L. Fong (Hawaii)
J. Caleb Boggs (Del.)
Jack R. Miller (Iowa)
James B. Pearson (Kan.)

Rules and Administration

Senate administration generally; management of the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, etc.

Democrats, 6—Republicans, 3

B. Everett Jordan (N.C.), Chairman

Carl Hayden (Ariz.)
Howard W. Cannon (Nev.)
Claiborne Pell (R.I.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)

Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
John Sherman Cooper (Ky.)
Hugh Scott (Pa.)

The 21 committees of the House of Representatives

THESE are the standing and special committees of the U.S. House of Representatives. Members' names appear in order of committee seniority with Democrats, the majority party, on the left in ordinary type and Republicans on the right in italic. Committee chairmen are all Democrats since their party has the majority. A brief description of its jurisdiction precedes each committee roster.

Agriculture

Agriculture and forestry in general; farm credit and security, crop insurance, soil conservation and rural electrification.

Democrats, 21—Republicans, 14

Harold D. Cooley (N.C.), Chairman

W. R. Poage (Texas)
George M. Grant (Ala.)
E. C. Gathings (Ark.)
John L. McMillan (S.C.)
Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.)
Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.)
Paul C. Jones (Mo.)
Harlan Hagen (Calif.)
Lester R. Johnson (Wis.)
D. R. (Billy) Matthews (Fla.)
Frank A. Stubblefield (Ky.)
Ralph R. Harding (Idaho)
G. Elliott Hagan (Ga.)
Graham Purcell (Texas)
James H. Morrison (La.)
Benjamin S. Rosenthal (N.Y.)
Robert B. Duncan (Ore.)
Alec G. Olson (Minn.)
Robert L. Leggett (Calif.)
Spark M. Matsunaga (Hawaii)
A. Fernos-Isern (Puerto Rico)

Charles B. Hoeven (Iowa)
Paul B. Dague (Pa.)
Page Belcher (Okla.)
Clifford G. McIntire (Maine)
Charles M. Teague (Calif.)
Albert H. Quie (Minn.)
Don L. Short (N.D.)
Catherine May (Wash.)
Delbert L. Latta (Ohio)
Ralph Harvey (Ind.)
Paul Findley (Ill.)
Robert Dole (Kan.)
Ralph F. Beermann (Neb.)
Edward Hutchinson (Mich.)

Appropriations

Appropriation of Government revenues to provide funds for authorized programs.

Banking and Currency

Banking and currency generally; financial matters other than taxes and appropriations; public and private housing.

Democrats, 18—Republicans, 13

Wright Patman (Texas), Chairman

Albert Rains (Ala.)
Abraham J. Multer (N.Y.)
William A. Barrett (Pa.)
Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (Mo.)
Henry S. Reuss (Wis.)
Thomas L. Ashley (Ohio)
Charles A. Vanik (Ohio)
William S. Moorhead (Pa.)
Robert G. Stephens Jr. (Ga.)
Fernand J. St. Germain (R.I.)
Henry B. Gonzalez (Texas)
Claude Pepper (Fla.)
Joseph G. Minish (N.J.)
Charles L. Weltner (Ga.)
Richard T. Hanna (Calif.)
Bernard F. Grabowski (Conn.)
Charles H. Wilson (Calif.)

Clarence E. Kilburn (N.Y.)
William B. Widnall (N.J.)
Eugene Siler (Ky.)
Paul A. Fino (N.Y.)
Florence P. Dwyer (N.J.)
Seymour Halpern (N.Y.)
James Harvey (Mich.)
Oliver P. Bolton (Ohio)
William E. Brock III (Tenn.)
Robert A. Taft Jr. (Ohio)
Joseph M. McDade (Pa.)
Sherman P. Lloyd (Utah)
Burt L. Talcott (Calif.)

District of Columbia

All measures relating to municipal affairs of the District of Columbia except its appropriations.

Democrats, 15—Republicans, 10

John L. McMillan (S.C.), Chairman

Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.)
Howard W. Smith (Va.)
William L. Dawson (Ill.)
John Bell Williams (Miss.)
Abraham J. Multer (N.Y.)
John Dowdy (Texas)
George Huddleston Jr. (Ala.)
Basil L. Whitener (N.C.)
Jeffery Cohelan (Calif.)
Fernand J. St. Germain (R.I.)
James W. Trimble (Ark.)
B. F. Sisk (Calif.)

Joel T. Broyhill (Va.)
James C. Auchincloss (N.J.)
William L. Springer (Ill.)
Ancher Nelsen (Minn.)
Alvin E. O'Konski (Wis.)
William H. Harsha Jr. (Ohio)
Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (Md.)
Fred Schwengel (Iowa)
Frank J. Horton (N.Y.)
Vacancy

agement of the Library of Congress, the Smithsonian Institution, etc.

Democrats, 6—Republicans, 3

B. Everett Jordan (N.C.), Chairman

Carl Hayden (Ariz.)	Carl T. Curtis (Neb.)
Howard W. Cannon (Nev.)	John Sherman Cooper (Ky.)
Claiborne Pell (R.I.)	Hugh Scott (Pa.)
Joseph S. Clark (Pa.)
Robert C. Byrd (W. Va.)

Select Small Business

Studies and investigates problems of small business and reports findings and makes recommendations to the Senate, but cannot report legislation.

Democrats, 11—Republicans, 6

John J. Sparkman (Ala.), Chairman

Russell B. Long (La.)	Leverett Saltonstall (Mass.)
Hubert H. Humphrey (Minn.)	Jacob K. Javits (N.Y.)
George A. Smathers (Fla.)	John Sherman Cooper (Ky.)
Wayne Morse (Ore.)	Hugh Scott (Pa.)
Alan Bible (Nev.)	Winston L. Prouty (Vt.)
Jennings Randolph (W. Va.)	Norris Cotton (N.H.)
Clair Engle (Calif.)
E. L. (Bob) Bartlett (Alaska)
Harrison A. Williams Jr. (N.J.)
Frank E. Moss (Utah)

WRITING TO CONGRESS

Here's how to address your letters to U.S. Senators and Representatives. George Nelson, IAM legislative representative, advises that it's best to keep letters short and temperate. Write legibly if you don't have access to a typewriter. Avoid form letters.

Cannon

Appropriations

Appropriation of Government revenues to provide funds for authorized programs.

Democrats, 30—Republicans 20

Clarence Cannon (Mo.), Chairman

George H. Mahon (Texas)	Ben F. Jensen (Iowa)
Harry R. Sheppard (Calif.)	Walt Horan (Wash.)
Albert Thomas (Texas)	Gerald R. Ford (Mich.)
Michael J. Kirwan (Ohio)	Harold C. Ostertag (N.Y.)
Jamie L. Whitten (Miss.)	Frank T. Bow (Ohio)
George W. Andrews (Ala.)	Charles Raper Jonas (N.C.)
John J. Rooney (N.Y.)	Melvin R. Laird (Wis.)
J. Vaughan Gary (Va.)	Elford A. Cederberg (Mich.)
John E. Fogarty (R.I.)	Glenard P. Lipscomb (Calif.)
Robert L. F. Sikes (Fla.)	John J. Rhodes (Ariz.)
Otto E. Passman (La.)	John R. Pillion (N.Y.)
Joe L. Evins (Tenn.)	William E. Minshall (Ohio)
John F. Shelley (Calif.)	Robert H. Michel (Ill.)
Edward P. Boland (Mass.)	Silvio O. Conte (Mass.)
William H. Natcher (Ky.)	William H. Milliken Jr. (Pa.)
Daniel J. Flood (Pa.)	Earl Wilson (Ind.)
Winfield K. Denton (Ind.)	Odin Langen (Minn.)
Tom Steed (Okla.)	William Henry Harrison (Wyo.)
Joseph M. Montoya (N.M.)	Ben Reifel (S.D.)
George E. Shipley (Ill.)	Louis C. Wyman (N.H.)
John M. Slack Jr. (W. Va.)
John Lesinski (Mich.)
John J. Flynt Jr. (Ga.)
Neal Smith (Iowa)
Robert N. Giaimo (Conn.)
Julia Butler Hansen (Wash.)
Edward R. Finnegan (Ill.)
Charles S. Joelson (N.J.)
Joseph P. Addabbo (N.Y.)

Vinson

Armed Services

All matters relating to the national military establishment; conservation of petroleum resources; strategic and critical materials; scientific research and development in support of the armed services.

Democrats, 21—Republicans, 16

Carl Vinson (Ga.), Chairman

L. Mendel Rivers (S.C.)	Leslie C. Arends (Ill.)
Philip J. Philbin (Mass.)	Leon H. Gavin (Pa.)
F. Edward Hebert (La.)	Walter Norblad (Ore.)
Arthur Winstead (Miss.)	William H. Bates (Mass.)
Melvin Price (Ill.)	Alvin E. O'Konski (Wis.)
O. C. Fisher (Texas)	William G. Bray (Ind.)
Porter Hardy Jr. (Va.)	Bob Wilson (Calif.)
Clyde Doyle (Calif.)	Frank C. Osmers Jr. (N.J.)
Charles E. Bennett (Fla.)	Charles S. Gubser (Calif.)
Richard E. Lankford (Md.)	Frank J. Becker (N.Y.)
George Huddleston Jr. (Ala.)	Charles E. Chamberlain (Mich.)
James A. Byrne (Pa.)	Alexander Pirnie (N.Y.)
Samuel S. Stratton (N.Y.)	Durward G. Hall (Mo.)
Jeffery Cohelan (Calif.)	Donald D. Clancy (Ohio)
Victor Wickersham (Okla.)	Robert T. Stafford (Vt.)
Otis G. Pike (N.Y.)	Ed Foreman (Texas)
Joe M. Kilgore (Texas)
Richard H. Ichord (Mo.)
Lucien N. Nedzi (Mich.)
Clarence D. Long (Md.)
A. Fernos-Isern (Puerto Rico)
Thomas G. Abernethy (Miss.)	Joel T. Broyhill (Va.)
Howard W. Smith (Va.)	James C. Auchincloss (N.J.)
William L. Dawson (Ill.)	William L. Springer (Ill.)
John Bell Williams (Miss.)	Ancher Nelsen (Minn.)
Abraham J. Multer (N.Y.)	Alvin E. O'Konski (Wis.)
John Dowdy (Texas)	William H. Harsha Jr. (Ohio)
George Huddleston Jr. (Ala.)	Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (Md.)
Basil L. Whitener (N.C.)	Fred Schwengel (Iowa)
Jeffery Cohelan (Calif.)	Frank J. Horton (N.Y.)
Fernand J. St. Germain (R.I.)	Vacancy
James W. Trimble (Ark.)
B. F. Sisk (Calif.)
Charles C. Diggs Jr. (Mich.)
G. Elliott Hagan (Ga.)

Powell

Education and Labor

Schools, scholarships, labor-management laws, minimum wage, and welfare matters.

Democrats, 19—Republicans, 12

Adam C. Powell (N.Y.), Chairman

Carl D. Perkins (Ky.)	Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (N.J.)
Phil M. Landrum (Ga.)	William H. Ayres (Ohio)
Edith Green (Ore.)	Robert P. Griffin (Mich.)
James Roosevelt (Calif.)	Albert H. Quie (Minn.)
Frank Thompson Jr. (N.J.)	Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.)
Elmer J. Holland (Pa.)	Donald C. Bruce (Ind.)
John H. Dent (Pa.)	John M. Ashbrook (Ohio)
Roman C. Pucinski (Ill.)	Dave Martin (Neb.)
Dominick V. Daniels (N.J.)	Alphonzo Bell (Calif.)
John Brademas (Ind.)	M. G. (Gene) Snyder (Ky.)
James G. O'Hara (Mich.)	Paul Findley (Ill.)
Ralph J. Scott (N.C.)	Robert A. Taft Jr. (Ohio)
Hugh L. Carey (N.Y.)
Augustus F. Hawkins (Calif.)
Carlton R. Sickles (Md.)
Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.)
Thomas P. Gill (Hawaii)
Vacancy

Foreign Affairs

Relations of the United States with other nations and international organizations and movements.

Democrats, 20—Republicans, 13

Thomas E. Morgan (Pa.), Chairman

Clement J. Zablocki (Wis.)	Frances P. Bolton (Ohio)
Omar Burleson (Texas)	E. Ross Adair (Ind.)
Edna F. Kelly (N.Y.)	William S. Mailliard (Calif.)
Wayne L. Hays (Ohio)	Peter Frelinghuysen Jr. (N.J.)
Armistead I. Selden Jr. (Ala.)	William S. Broomfield (Mich.)
J. L. Pilcher (Ga.)	Robert R. Barry (N.Y.)
Barratt O'Hara (Ill.)	J. Irving Whalley (Pa.)
L. H. Fountain (N.C.)	H. R. Gross (Iowa)
Dante B. Fascell (Fla.)	E. Y. Berry (S.D.)
Leonard Farbstein (N.Y.)	Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.)
Charles C. Diggs Jr. (Mich.)	F. Bradford Morse (Mass.)
Lindley Beckworth (Texas)	James F. Battin (Mont.)
Harris B. McDowell Jr. (Del.)	Vernon W. Thomson (Wis.)
William T. Murphy (Ill.)
Cornelius E. Gallagher (N.J.)
Robert N. C. Nix (Pa.)
John S. Monagan (Conn.)
Donald M. Fraser (Minn.)
Ronald Brooks Cameron (Calif.)

(Continued on next page)

(Continued from preceding page)

Government Operations

Budget and accounting measures; reorganization in the Executive Branch; intergovernmental relationships.

Democrats, 19—Republicans, 12

William L. Dawson (Ill.), Chairman

Chet Holifield (Calif.)	R. Walter Riehlman (N.Y.)
Jack Brooks (Texas)	George Meader (Mich.)
L. H. Fountain (N.C.)	Clarence J. Brown (Ohio)
Porter Hardy Jr. (Va.)	Florence P. Dwyer (N.J.)
John A. Blatnik (Minn.)	Robert P. Griffin (Mich.)
Robert E. Jones (Ala.)	George M. Wallhauser (N.J.)
Edward A. Garmatz (Md.)	John B. Anderson (Ill.)
John E. Moss (Calif.)	Richard S. Schweiker (Pa.)
Dante B. Fascell (Fla.)	Frank J. Horton (N.Y.)
Henry S. Reuss (Wis.)	Robert McClory (Ill.)
John S. Monagan (Conn.)	Ogden R. Reid (N.Y.)
Richard E. Lankford (Md.)	K. William Stinson (Wash.)
Torbert H. Macdonald (Mass.)
J. Edward Roush (Ind.)
William S. Moorhead (Pa.)
Cornelius E. Gallagher (N.J.)
Wm. J. Randall (Mo.)
Benjamin S. Rosenthal (N.Y.)

House Administration

House administration generally; printing and correction of the Congressional Record; federal elections generally; management of the Library of Congress, supervision of Smithsonian Institution, etc.

Democrats, 15—Republicans, 10

Omar Burleson (Texas), Chairman

Samuel N. Friedel (Md.)	Paul F. Schenck (Ohio)
Robert T. Ashmore (S.C.)	Robert J. Corbett (Pa.)
Wayne L. Hays (Ohio)	John B. Bennett (Mich.)
Paul C. Jones (Mo.)	Glenard P. Lipscomb (Calif.)
George M. Rhodes (Pa.)	Charles E. Chamberlain (Mich.)
Frank Thompson Jr. (N.J.)	Charles E. Goodell (N.Y.)
Watkins M. Abbitt (Va.)	John H. Kyl (Iowa)
Robert A. Everett (Tenn.)	John B. Anderson (Ill.)
John J. McFall (Calif.)	Willard S. Curtin (Pa.)
Joe D. Waggonner Jr. (La.)	Joe Skubitz (Kan.)
Carl D. Perkins (Ky.)
John H. Dent (Pa.)
Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.)
Vacancy

Judiciary

Celler

Judicial proceedings generally; constitutional amendments, civil rights, interstate compacts, immigration and naturalization, apportionment of Representatives, meetings of Congress and attendance of Members; Presidential succession.

Democrats, 21—Republicans, 14

Emanuel Celler (N.Y.), Chairman

Francis E. Walter (Pa.)	William M. McCulloch (Ohio)
Michael A. Feighan (Ohio)	William E. Miller (N.Y.)
Frank Chelf (Ky.)	Richard H. Poff (Va.)
Edwin E. Willis (La.)	William C. Cramer (Fla.)
Peter W. Rodino Jr. (N.J.)	Arch A. Moore Jr. (W. Va.)
E. L. Forrester (Ga.)	George Meader (Mich.)
Byron G. Rogers (Colo.)	John V. Lindsay (N.Y.)
Harold D. Donohue (Mass.)	William T. Cahill (N.J.)
Jack Brooks (Texas)	Garner E. Shriver (Kan.)
William M. Tuck (Va.)	Clark MacGregor (Minn.)
Robert T. Ashmore (S.C.)	Charles McC. Mathias Jr. (Md.)
John Dowdy (Texas)	James E. Bromwell (Iowa)
Basil L. Whitener (N.C.)	Carleton J. King (N.Y.)
Roland V. Libonati (Ill.)	Pat Minor Martin (Calif.)
Herman Toll (Pa.)
Robert W. Kastenmeier (Wis.)
Jacob H. Gilbert (N.Y.)
James C. Corman (Calif.)
William L. St. Onge (Conn.)
George F. Senner Jr. (Ariz.)

Merchant Marine and Fisheries

Bonner

Merchant marine generally; Coast Guard, Coast and Geodetic Survey, maintenance and operation of Panama Canal and administration of Canal Zone; fisheries and wildlife.

Democrats, 19—Republicans, 12

Herbert C. Bonner (N.C.), Chairman

Edward A. Garmatz (Md.)	Thor C. Tollefson (Wash.)
Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (Mo.)	William K. Van Pelt (Wis.)
T. Ashton Thompson (La.)	William S. Mailliard (Calif.)
Frank M. Clark (Pa.)	Thomas M. Pelly (Wash.)
Thomas L. Ashley (Ohio)	Milton W. Glenn (N.J.)
John D. Dingell (Mich.)	Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.)
L. Mendell Rivers (S.C.)	George A. Goodling (Pa.)
Alton Lennon (N.C.)	Stanley R. Tupper (Maine)
Thomas N. Downing (Va.)	Charles A. Mosher (Ohio)
Bob Casey (Texas)	James A. Grover Jr. (N.Y.)
James A. Byrne (Pa.)	Rogers C. B. Morton (Md.)
Charles A. Vanik (Ohio)	Hastings Keith (Mass.)
Harlan Hagen (Calif.)

Rules

Smith

Rules and order of business of the House.

Democrats, 10—Republicans, 5

Howard W. Smith (Va.), Chariman

William M. Colmer (Miss.)	Clarence J. Brown (Ohio)
Ray J. Madden (Ind.)	Katharine St. George (N.Y.)
James J. Delaney (N.Y.)	H. Allen Smith (Calif.)
James W. Trimble (Ark.)	Elmer J. Hoffman (Ill.)
Homer Thornberry (Texas)	William H. Avery (Kan.)
Richard Bolling (Mo.)
Thomas P. O'Neill Jr. (Mass.)
Carl Elliott (Ala.)
B. F. Sisk (Calif.)

Science and Astronautics

Scientific and astronautical research and development generally; National Aeronautics and Space Administration, National Aeronautics and Space Council, National Science Foundation; outer space, science scholarships; Bureau of Standards.

Democrats, 18—Republicans, 13

George P. Miller (Calif.), Chairman

Olin E. Teague (Texas)	Joseph W. Martin Jr. (Mass.)
Joseph E. Karth (Minn.)	James G. Fulton (Pa.)
Ken Hechler (W. Va.)	J. Edgar Chenoweth (Colo.)
Emilio Q. Daddario (Conn.)	William K. Van Pelt (Wis.)
J. Edward Roush (Ind.)	R. Walter Riehlman (N.Y.)
Thomas G. Morris (N.M.)	Charles A. Mosher (Ohio)
Bob Casey (Texas)	Richard L. Roudebush (Ind.)
William J. Randall (Mo.)	Alphonzo Bell (Calif.)
John W. Davis (Ga.)	Thomas M. Pelly (Wash.)
Wiliam Fitts Ryan (N.Y.)	Donald Rumsfeld (Ill.)
Thomas N. Downing (Va.)	James D. Weaver (Pa.)
Joe D. Waggonner Jr. (La.)	Edward J. Gurney (Fla.)
Edward J. Patten (N.J.)	John W. Wydler (N.Y.)
Richard H. Fulton (Tenn.)
Don Fuqua (Fla.)
Neil Staebler (Mich.)
Carl Albert (Okla.)

Un-American Activities

Investigation of activities to determine if they are subversive.

Democrats, 5—Republicans, 4

Francis E. Walter (Pa.), Chairman

Clyde Doyle (Calif.)	August E. Johansen (Mich.)
Edwin E. Willis (La.)	Donald C. Bruce (Ind.)
William M. Tuck (Va.)	Henry C. Schadeberg (Wis.)
Joe R. Pool (Texas)	John M. Ashbrook (Ohio)

Veterans' Affairs

Carl D. Perkins (Ky.)
John H. Dent (Pa.)
Sam M. Gibbons (Fla.)
Vacancy

Interior and Insular Affairs

Public lands, natural resources, territorial possessions of the U.S., Indian affairs.

Democrats, 19—Republicans, 14

Wayne N. Aspinall (Colo.), Chairman

Leo W. O'Brien (N.Y.)	John P. Saylor (Pa.)
Walter Rogers (Texas)	J. Ernest Wharton (N.Y.)
James A. Haley (Fla.)	E. Y. Berry (S.D.)
Ed Edmondson (Okla.)	Jack Westland (Wash.)
Walter S. Baring (Nev.)	Craig Hosmer (Calif.)
Thomas G. Morris (N.M.)	J. Edgar Chenoweth (Colo.)
Ralph J. Rivers (Alaska)	John H. Kyl (Iowa)
Roy A. Taylor (N.C.)	Hjalmar C. Nygaard (N.D.)
Harold T. Johnson (Calif.)	Homer E. Abele (Ohio)
Hugh L. Carey (N.Y.)	Joe Skubitz (Kan.)
Morris K. Udall (Ariz.)	Charlotte T. Reid (Ill.)
Elizabeth Kee (W. Va.)	Laurence J. Burton (Utah)
Ray Roberts (Texas)	Rogers C. B. Morton (Md.)
Robert B. Duncan (Ore.)	Patrick M. Martin (Calif.)
Compton I. White Jr. (Idaho)
John O. Marsh Jr. (Va.)
Edward R. Roybal (Calif.)
Thomas P. Gill (Hawaii)
A. Fernos-Isern (Puerto Rico)

Interstate and Foreign Commerce

Regulation of interstate and foreign commerce and communications, regulation of interstate transmission of power (except between Government projects), inland waterways, railroad labor, civil aeronautics, Weather Bureau, securities and exchanges.

Democrats, 20—Republicans, 13

Oren Harris (Ark.), Chairman

John Bell Williams (Miss.)	John B. Bennett (Mich.)
Kenneth A. Roberts (Ala.)	William L. Springer (Ill.)
Harley O. Staggers (W. Va.)	Paul F. Schenck (Ohio)
Walter Rogers (Texas)	J. Arthur Younger (Calif.)
Samuel N. Friedel (Md.)	Milton W. Glenn (N.J.)
Torbert H. Macdonald (Mass.)	Samuel L. Devine (Ohio)
George M. Rhodes (Pa.)	Ancher Nelsen (Minn.)
John Jarman (Okla.)	Hastings Keith (Mass.)
Leo W. O'Brien (N.Y.)	Willard S. Curtin (Pa.)
John E. Moss (Calif.)	Abner W. Sibal (Conn.)
John D. Dingell (Mich.)	Glenn Cunningham (Neb.)
Paul G. Rogers (Fla.)	James T. Broyhill (N.C.)
Robert W. Hemphill (S.C.)	Donald G. Brotzman (Colo.)
Dan Rostenkowski (Ill.)
James C. Healey (N.Y.)
Horace R. Kornegay (N.C.)
W. R. Hull Jr. (Mo.)
Gillis William Long (La.)
Lionel Van Deerlin (Calif.)

Herbert C. Bonner (N.C.), Chairman

Edward A. Garmatz (Md.)	Thor C. Tollefson (Wash.)
Leonor Kretzer Sullivan (Mo.)	William K. Van Pelt (Wis.)
T. Ashton Thompson (La.)	William S. Mailliard (Calif.)
Frank M. Clark (Pa.)	Thomas M. Pelly (Wash.)
Thomas L. Ashley (Ohio)	Milton W. Glenn (N.J.)
John D. Dingell (Mich.)	Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.)
L. Mendell Rivers (S.C.)	George A. Goodling (Pa.)
Alton Lennon (N.C.)	Stanley R. Tupper (Maine)
Thomas N. Downing (Va.)	Charles A. Mosher (Ohio)
Bob Casey (Texas)	James A. Grover Jr. (N.Y.)
James A. Byrne (Pa.)	Rogers C. B. Morton (Md.)
Charles A. Vanik (Ohio)	Hastings Keith (Mass.)
Harlan Hagen (Calif.)
Edith Green (Ore.)
Paul G. Rogers (Fla.)
Frank A. Stubblefield (Ky.)
John M. Murphy (N.Y.)
Vacancy

Post Office and Civil Service

Postal and federal civil services; census, national archives.

Democrats, 14—Republicans, 11

Tom Murray (Tenn.), Chairman

James H. Morrison (La.)	Robert J. Corbett (Pa.)
Thaddeus J. Dulski (N.Y.)	H. R. Gross (Iowa)
David N. Henderson (N.C.)	Joel T. Broyhill (Va.)
Arnold Olsen (Mont.)	August E. Johansen (Mich.)
Morris K. Udall (Ariz.)	Glenn Cunningham (Neb.)
Dominick V. Daniels (N.J.)	George M. Wallhauser (N.J.)
Lindley Beckworth (Texas)	Robert R. Barry (N.Y.)
Harley O. Staggers (W. Va.)	Katharine St. George (N.Y.)
Robert N. C. Nix (Pa.)	Edward J. Derwinski (Ill.)
Everett G. Burkhalter (Calif.)	Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.)
W. Donlon Edwards (Calif.)	Homer E. Abele (Ohio)
Joe R. Pool (Texas)
Albert W. Watson (S.C.)

Public Works

Buckley

Public buildings and roads, flood control, improvement of rivers and harbors, water power, stream pollution.

Democrats, 20—Republicans, 14

Charles A. Buckley (N.Y.), Chairman

George H. Fallon (Md.)	James C. Auchincloss (N.J.)
Clifford Davis (Tenn.)	William C. Cramer (Fla.)
John A. Blatnik (Minn.)	John F. Baldwin Jr. (Calif.)
Robert E. Jones (Ala.)	Fred Schwengel (Iowa)
John C. Kluczynski (Ill.)	Howard W. Robison (N.Y.)
T. Ashton Thompson (La.)	William H. Harsha Jr. (Ohio)
James C. Wright Jr. (Texas)	James Harvey (Mich.)
Kenneth J. Gray (Ill.)	John C. Kunkel (Pa.)
Frank M. Clark (Pa.)	James R. Grover Jr. (N.Y.)
Ed Edmondson (Okla.)	Robert T. McLoskey (Ill.)
John J. McFall (Calif.)	James H. Quillen (Tenn.)
John Young (Texas)	Carl W. Rich (Ohio)
Harold T. Johnson (Calif.)	James C. Cleveland (N.Y.)
W. J. Bryan Dorn (S.C.)	Don H. Clausen (Calif.)
David N. Henderson (N.C.)
Arnold Olsen (Mont.)
Harold M. Ryan (Mich.)
J. Russell Tuten (Ga.)
John M. Murphy (N.Y.)

Investigation of activities to determine if they are subversive.

Democrats, 5—Republicans, 4

Francis E. Walter (Pa.), Chairman

Clyde Doyle (Calif.)	August E. Johansen (Mich.)
Edwin E. Willis (La.)	Donald C. Bruce (Ind.)
William M. Tuck (Va.)	Henry C. Schadeberg (Wis.)
Joe R. Pool (Texas)	John M. Ashbrook (Ohio)

Veterans' Affairs

Veterans' measures generally; pensions, armed forces life insurance; rehabilitation, education, medical care and treatment of veterans; veterans' hospitals.

Democrats, 15—Republicans, 10

Olin E. Teague (Texas), Chairman

W. J. Bryan Dorn (S.C.)	William H. Ayres (Ohio)
Elizabeth Kee (W. Va.)	E. Ross Adair (Ind.)
James A. Haley (Fla.)	Paul A. Fino (N.Y.)
Walter S. Baring (Nev.)	John P. Saylor (Pa.)
Robert A. Everett (Tenn.)	Charles M. Teague (Calif.)
Thaddeus J. Dulski (N.Y.)	Seymour Halpern (N.Y.)
Roland V. Libonati (Ill.)	Henry C. Schadeberg (Wis.)
Harris B. McDowell Jr. (Del.)	Robert F. Ellsworth (Kan.)
Horace R. Kornegay (N.C.)	Vacancy
Ray Roberts (Texas)	Vacancy
Robert T. Secrest (Ohio)
W. Donlon Edwards (Calif.)
John O. Marsh Jr. (Va.)
George E. Brown Jr. (Calif.)

Mills

Ways and Means

Revenue measures generally; tariffs and reciprocal trade agreements; Social Security.

Democrats, 15—Republicans, 10

Wilbur D. Mills (Ark.), Chairman

Cecil R. King (Calif.)	John W. Byrnes (Wis.)
Thomas J. O'Brien (Ill.)	Howard H. Baker (Tenn.)
Hale Boggs (La.)	Thomas B. Curtis (Mo.)
Eugene J. Keogh (N.Y.)	Victor A. Knox (Mich.)
Frank M. Karsten (Mo.)	James B. Utt (Calif.)
A. Sydney Herlong Jr. (Fla.)	Jackson E. Betts (Ohio)
William J. Green Jr. (Pa.)	Bruce Alger (Texas)
John C. Watts (Ky.)	Steven B. Derounian (N.Y.)
Al Ullman (Ore.)	Herman T. Schneebeli (Pa.)
James A. Burke (Mass.)	Harold R. Collier (Ill.)
Clark W. Thompson (Texas)
Martha W. Griffiths (Mich.)
Ross Bass (Tenn.)
W. Pat Jennings (Va.)

Special Small Business

Studies and investigates problems of small business and reports findings and makes recommendations to the House, but cannot report legislation.

Democrats, 7—Republicans, 6

Wright Patman (Texas), Chairman

Joe L. Evins (Tenn.)	William M. McCulloch (Ohio)
Abraham J. Multer (N.Y.)	Arch A. Moore Jr. (W. Va.)
Tom Steed (Okla.)	William H. Avery (Kan.)
James Roosevelt (Calif.)	H. Allen Smith (Calif.)
John C. Kluczynski (Ill.)	Howard W. Robison (N.Y.)
John D. Dingell (Mich.)	Ralph Harvey (Ind.)

LWD ✓
JS

Pol. Isen.

new and vigorous leadership and a determination to get something done. For this, we are thankful.

Mr. GRUENING. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished senior Senator from Idaho. He has always been an advocate of an enlightened and progressive policy, not only with respect to our mining resources, but for all the resources of the West—indeed, of the whole Nation.

I think it is time we looked into this problem searchingly and seriously and came up with some constructive proposals that will take this great industry, mining, which once was so promising and productive, from its present doldrums.

I thank the Senator from Idaho for his unfaltering, helpful encouragement.

AGENCY IN LEGISLATIVE BRANCH TO CONDUCT ELECTIONS OF MEMBERS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I introduce, for appropriate reference, a bill which would create an agency of the legislative branch of the Federal Government designed to insure that the right of all citizens to vote for Members of Congress shall be adequately protected.

Congress recently has given the executive branch additional enforcement tools to protect the rights of American citizens to participate in all Federal elections. These are contained in the Civil Rights Acts of 1957 and 1960. The President, in his message to the Congress on February 28, outlined further amendments which the administration believes will be helpful in meeting continuing pockets of resistance to the full exercise of the right of franchise.

While all of this is progress, Congress has an additional responsibility that goes quite directly to the election of its own Members—to the problem of assuring full citizen rights in the election of the Members of Congress. The proposed act would give Congress the machinery to meet this problem, one which is and should be of special concern to the legislative branch of our National Government.

The Constitution, under article I, section 4, and under the 15th amendment, authorizes the Congress to make regulations as to the time, place, and "manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives or to alter regulations prescribed by the State legislatures for such purposes, except as to the place of choosing Senators."

The Federal judiciary cannot be expected to bear the full burden of litigating the dilatory actions of innumerable local registration officials intent on frustrating the desires of eligible voters.

This problem is the active election-by-election responsibility of the Congress, placed on the Congress by the Constitution, to insure the right to vote in each Federal election.

Nor is this a matter of States rights. The States have only that authority in this field of congressional elections expressly given them by the Congress. The Congress itself has the duty to see to it that those who sit as its Members are elected by all the people. The buck on this issue stops here.

There is a long history of widespread and flagrant denials of the right to vote. The record of the hearings held by the Constitutional Rights Subcommittee of the Senate Judiciary Committee over the years tells the story. Further, the hearings held by the Commission on Civil Rights, expressly established by the Congress to look into voting practices, emphasizes the need for congressional action.

The proposal I make to establish a Congressional Elections Commission as an arm of the Congress, is, as far as I know, a unique one. I first introduced it in 1959. The virtue of the bill I now introduce lies in the fact that it establishes a continuing agency of the Congress itself, designed to insure that registration and election procedures shall be reasonable, fair, and equally available to all our citizens. It can perform the same service for the Congress in the vital area of its elections which the Government Accounting Office, another agency of the legislative branch, does in matters involving the public purse.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill, together with a summary of its provisions, be printed with my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the bill will be printed in the RECORD.

The bill (S. 1281) to establish an agency of the legislative branch of the Federal Government authorized to conduct the elections of Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, introduced by Mr. HART, was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Congressional Elections Act".

TITLE I—STATEMENT OF PURPOSE: DEFINITIONS

SEC. 101. Taking cognizance of the fact that, although ninety-three years have passed since the fifteenth amendment was adopted, American citizens otherwise qualified to vote continue to be denied that right because of their race or color, and that qualified voters are thus arbitrarily and discriminatorily being denied the right to cast a vote for the selection and election of their representatives in the Senate and the House of Representatives; and recognizing the authority and the obligation of the Congress under the fifteenth amendment, and more particularly under article I, section 4, to assure that Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives are nominated and elected in a manner and pursuant to procedures which best assure that every qualified elector is afforded full opportunity to cast his vote, the Congress hereby determines that it is necessary, in order to assure to all qualified electors the opportunity to participate in the selection and election of Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, that Congress establish an agency to conduct registration and voting in the primary, special, and general elections at which nominees to the Senate and the House of Representatives are elected.

SEC. 102. As used in this Act—

(a) The term "Commission" means the Congressional Elections Commission established by this Act.

(b) The term "special or general election" means any special or general election in any State or congressional district for the purpose of electing Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States.

(c) The term "primary election" means any election, whether by convention, meeting, popular primary, or otherwise, in any State or congressional district for the purpose of choosing party nominees as candidates for the Senate or House of Representatives of the United States.

TITLE II—ESTABISHMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION

SEC. 201 (a) There is hereby established, as an agency of the legislative branch of the Federal Government, a Congressional Elections Commission, as an authority to conduct primary, special, and general elections for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

(b) The Commission shall be composed of three members who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Not more than two of the members shall belong to the same political party. The President is requested in appointing members to provide, insofar as possible, representation for the various geographical areas of the United States.

(c) Each member of the Commission shall be appointed for a term of nine years, except that—

(1) the three members first appointed shall be appointed for terms expiring respectively on December 31, 1965; December 31, 1968; and December 31, 1971; and

(2) a person appointed to fill a vacancy in the Commission occurring by reason of the death, disability, resignation, or removal of a member before the expiration of his term shall be appointed to serve for the remainder of such term.

(d) The President shall designate one of the members of the Commission as Chairman and one as Vice Chairman. The Vice Chairman shall act as Chairman in the absence of disability of the Chairman or in the event of a vacancy in the office of Chairman.

(e) Subject to the provisions of subsection (f), a vacancy in the membership of the Commission shall not affect its powers.

(f) Two members of the Commission shall constitute a quorum thereof.

SEC. 202. Each member of the Commission, other than the Chairman, shall receive compensation at a rate of $20,000 per year. The Chairman of the Commission shall receive compensation at a rate of $20,500 per year.

TITLE III—REGISTRATION OF VOTERS BY THE COMMISSION

SEC. 301. The Commission is authorized to make and maintain temporary and permanent registers of voters qualified to participate in primary, special, and general elections in the various congressional districts. The Commission's making and maintenance of such registers of voters shall be in its discretion and it shall not be necessary, for the making and maintenance of such registers in any congressional district, for the Commission to have first determined to hold an election therein pursuant to title IV of this Act.

SEC. 302. No person shall be registered as a voter under section 301 who does not have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the congressional district is situated. The Commission shall establish adequate procedures to assure that all persons placed upon its registers as qualified voters continue to have the residence and other qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the congressional district is situated.

SEC. 303. No State or local laws or ordinance governing the time, place, or manner of the registration of voters shall be applicable to or limit the power of the Commission to conduct registrations of voters pursuant to this title, but the Commission shall endeavor as far as in its judgment is conducive to uniform and orderly election procedures, to conform its conduct of the registration of voters to the procedures governing time, place, and manner of registration, prescribed in the State or local laws or ordinances in effect in the congressional district.

TITLE IV—CONDUCT OF ELECTIONS BY THE COMMISSION

SEC. 401. The Commission is authorized in any congressional district to conduct the primary, special, or general elections for the purpose of selecting and electing Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives whenever—

(1) the Commission is officially requested so to do by the duly empowered official of the State in which the congressional district is situated; or

(2) the Commission determines that unless such election is conducted by the Commission, persons having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the congressional district is located are likely to be denied their right in such primary, special, or general election to cast their votes and to have them fairly counted.

SEC. 402. Whenever the Commission conducts a primary, special, or general election, such election shall be the sole primary, special, or general election for the congressional district for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives, and the results thereof shall, in any primary election, determine the authorized nominees, and in any special or general election, determine the duly elected Member of the House of Representatives, and the official vote of such congressional district for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives at large.

SEC. 403. No person shall cast a vote in an election conducted pursuant to section 401 unless (a) he has been found by the Commission, pursuant to title III foregoing, to have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the congressional district is situated, or (b) he is registered on a State registration list, which the Commission determines to be appropriate for utilization in the election conducted by it, as a person having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature of the State in which the congressional district is situated.

SEC. 404. The Commission shall, immediately upon determining to conduct an election pursuant to the authority contained in section 401 (a) or (b), give notice of such determination to the Governor of the State concerned.

SEC. 405. No State or local laws or ordinances governing the time, place, and manner of conducting elections shall be applicable to, or limit the power of, the Commission to conduct elections pursuant to this title, but the Commission shall endeavor, as far as in its judgment is conducive to uniform and orderly election procedures, to conform its conduct of elections to the standards of time, place, and manner prescribed in State or local laws or ordinances in effect in the congressional district.

TITLE V—CERTIFICATION OF RESULTS

SEC. 501. The Commission shall, upon the determination of the results of any primary, special, or general election conducted pursuant to title IV, certify the results of such election to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, to the Secretary of the Senate, to the Governor of the State in which the election was conducted, and to other appropriate persons. Such a certification shall constitute the binding and conclusive determination of the results of the election.

TITLE VI—DELEGATION OF POWERS

SEC. 601. The Commission is authorized to delegate to any appropriate officer or officers of a State or local government, or to any agent, employee, or designee of the Commission, any or all of the powers granted by this Act, with the exception of the authority granted pursuant to section 301 to determine whether or not to make and maintain registers of voters in any congressional district, and the authority granted pursuant to section 401 to determine whether or not to conduct an election thereunder, which determinations shall be made only by a quorum of the Commission itself.

TITLE VII—JUDICIAL REVIEW

SEC. 701. Any citizen of a State, having the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the legislature, who has made appropriate application for inclusion upon a register of qualified electors maintained by the Commission for the congressional district in which he is a resident, who is denied such registration or who, having once been so registered, is removed from such register or denied the opportunity to vote in a primary, special, or general election conducted by the Commission in such congressional district, shall have an action for declaratory and injunctive relief in the United States district court for such district.

TITLE VIII—PERFORMANCE OF COMMISSION FUNCTIONS

SEC. 801. The Commission is authorized to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary to enable it to perform its functions and duties.

SEC. 802. In carrying out its functions the Commission is authorized to utilize on a temporary basis employees of the departments and agencies of the executive branch of the Government. Each department and agency of the executive branch of the Government shall fully cooperate with the Commission to the end that it may effectively carry out its functions and duties and shall, at the request of the President, assign on a temporary basis employees of such department or agency to the Commission.

SEC. 803. In carrying out its functions the Commission is authorized to utilize the services of State and local governmental officers and employees and the facilities of State and local governments. The Commission is authorized to reimburse any State or local officer or employee whose services are utilized under the authority of this section for travel expenses incurred, and to pay to any such officer or employee per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same amounts as authorized by law for persons in the Government service serving without compensation. The Commission is authorized to reimburse any State or local government for the services of any officer or employee of such government, and for the facilities of such government, utilized under the authority of this section.

SEC. 804. (a) In carrying out its functions and duties, the Commission may sit and act at such times and places, hold such hearings, take such testimony, administer such oaths, require the attendance and testimony of such witnesses and the production of such books, records, or other written matter, procure such printing and binding, and make such expenditures as the Commission deems advisable. Any member of the Commission may administer oaths or affirmations to witnesses appearing before the Commission. Subpenas for the attendance and testimony of witnesses or for the production of written matter may be issued over the signature of the Chairman, or any member designated by him, and may be issued by any person designated by the Chairman or by such member.

(b) A witness attending any session of the Commission shall receive $4 for each day's attendance and for the time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from the same, and 8 cents per mile for going from and returning to his place of residence. Witnesses who attend at points so far removed from their respective residences as to prohibit return thereto from day to day shall be entitled to an additional allowance of $12 per day for expenses of subsistence, including the time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from the place of attendance. Mileage payments shall be tendered to the witness upon service of a subpena issued on behalf of the Commission.

(c) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued on behalf of the Commission, any district court of the United States or the United States court of any possession, or the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on or within the jurisdiction of which the person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the Attorney General of the United States shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Commission, there to produce evidence if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter under investigation; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by the court as a contempt thereof.

SEC. 805. The Commission may promulgate such rules and regulations, not inconsistent with the provisions of this Act, as it deems necessary or desirable for the performance of its functions and duties under this Act.

SEC. 806. The Commission shall, on or before January 31 of each year, submit to the Congress a report of its activities under this Act, together with any recommendations for suggested legislation which it finds desirable.

SEC. 807. There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 808. No provision of law contained in section 5 of the Act entitled, "An Act for the Apportionment of Representatives in Congress among the several States under the Thirteenth Census", approved August 8, 1911; section 26 of the Revised Statutes; and section 27 of the Revised Statutes, which is inconsistent with this Act, shall be applicable to elections conducted under this Act.

The analysis presented by Mr. HART is as follows:

ANALYSIS OF CONGRESSIONAL ELECTIONS COMMISSION BILL INTRODUCED BY SENATOR PHILIP A. HART

It is the purpose of the Congressional Elections Act to establish an agency of the legislative branch of the Federal Government with authority to conduct the elections of Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives.

TITLE I

Title I states that because of the continuing denial to American citizens, on grounds of their race or color, of their right to vote, particularly to vote in the election of Representatives and Senators, recognizing the authority of Congress under the 15th amendment and under article I, section 4 of the Constitution to assure fullest participation of qualified electors in congressional elections, the Congress determines it necessary to establish an agency to conduct registration and voting in the primary, special and general elections at which Representatives and Senators are elected.

TITLE II

Title II establishes the Congressional Elections Commission as an agency of the legislative branch of the Federal Government authorized to conduct primary, special and general elections for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives. The Commission is composed of three members appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. Commissioners to be appointed for a term of 9 years.

TITLE III

Title III authorizes the Commission to make and maintain registers of voters in various congressional districts who are qualified to participate in primary, special and general elections of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives. The Commission may maintain registration lists in various congressional districts whether or not it has determined to run an election in the district. It is also provided that no person can become or stay registered on the Commission's lists who does not have the qualifications for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature. It is also provided that State and local laws and ordinances covering the time, place or manner of registration are not applicable to registrations conducted by the Commission, but the Commission is instructed to conform its conduct of registration as far as possible to the procedures in effect under State or local laws.

TITLE IV

Title IV authorizes the Commission to conduct primary, special or general elections in any congressional district for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives either when (1) the Commission is officially requested so to do by the State in which the district is located, or (2) the Commission determines that unless it conducts such an election qualified voters are likely to be denied their right in such a primary, special or general election to cast their votes and have them fairly counted. Whenever the Commission conducts a primary, special or general election that shall be the sole primary, special or general election in the congressional district for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives and the results thereof shall determine the party nominees, the elected Members of the House of Representatives and the official vote of the congressional district for Members of the Senate and the House of Representatives at large. No person may vote in an election conducted by the Commission unless he has either been registered under title III by the Commission or he is registered on a State registration list determined by the Commission to be appropriate for use in its own elections. The Commission, if it decides to conduct an election, shall immediately notify the Governor of the State.

TITLE V

Title V provides for the certification of results of election by the Commission to the Speaker of the House, the Secretary of the Senate, and the Governor of the State, and that such certification constitutes the binding and conclusive determination of the results of the primary, special or general election.

TITLE VI

Title VI authorizes the Commission to delegate to its own agents and employees or to appropriate officials of the State and local governments any of the powers provided by the act with the exception of the authority of the Commission to determine whether or not to maintain registers of voters or to conduct an election in any particular congressional district which powers shall be exercised only by the Commission itself.

TITLE VII

Title VII authorizes suits for declaratory and injunctive relief in the U.S. district court by any citizen qualified to vote who has applied for registration by the Commission and is denied it or after being granted registration is removed from the registry or is denied opportunity to vote in an election conducted by the Commission.

TITLE VIII

Title VIII contains miscellaneous provisions concerning the compensation of agents and employees of the Commission as well as officials of the State to whom Commission functions may be delegated; provisions for the taking of testimony by the Commission; attendance of witnesses; refusals to testify promulgation of the Commission rules and regulations; reports to the Congress; and amendment of prior laws.

Mr. HART. Also, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the bill lie at the table until the end of business on Wednesday, April 10, so that Senators who might wish to join in sponsoring it will have an opportunity to do so.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

REPORT AND QUESTION PERIOD

Mr. KEFAUVER. Mr. President, I submit, for appropriate reference, a resolution to amend the rules so as to make it possible to invite heads of departments and independent agencies to report and answer questions on the floor of the Senate. I ask that the resolution be held at the desk for 5 days, to enable other Senators to join in sponsoring it.

When I was a Member of the other body, I suggested that a similar procedure be adopted there; and that suggestion was very favorably received. At that time, more than 350 daily newspapers commented editorially on this suggestion, and all referred approvingly to it. A survey of the Gallup poll showed that 72 percent of those interviewed were favorable to the proposal, and only 7 percent were opposed. In addition, a poll throughout the country of leading citizens, political scientists, and men with governmental experience resulted in a virtually unanimous approval of this idea.

I think the report and question period would be even better suited to the Senate than it would be to the other body, because of the smaller membership and more intimate atmosphere of the Senate.

The resolution would allow the Rules Committee to provide for a report and question period on the floor of the Senate at least once every 4 weeks, but not more often than once a week. The sessions would not last more than 2 hours.

During the first half of the report and question period, members of the Cabinet or the heads of agencies would be invited to appear on the floor of the Senate and to answer written questions, which would have been prepared and submitted to them in advance. The last half of the question period would be taken up by questions by Members from the floor of the Senate, with the time to be allocated by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the committee.

I believe that much good would result if administrators were brought face to face with representatives of the people under an ordinary procedure, in order that the country might have the benefit of free and open consultation between them.

As a result, we in the Senate would have the benefit of a regular accounting from the heads of the departments as to how they are administering and interpreting the laws we pass. This would bring about better teamwork between the Congress and the executive departments, and would foster better public understanding of both.

It would also give the Senate a fresh source of initiative in governmental matters, and would give Members of the Senate direct and fuller information with regard to the operation of all departments—not just those supervised by their committees. It would also give the Cabinet members a chance to give their proposals directly to all Members of the Senate.

I am pleased that the Senator from Alaska [Mr. GRUENING], the Senator from Hawaii [Mr. INOUYE], the Senator from California [Mr. KUCHEL], the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. MCGEE], the Senator from Oregon [Mrs. NEUBERGER], the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. PELL], and the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. RANDOLPH] have joined with me as cosponsors of this resolution.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the text of the resolution printed at this point in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be received and appropriately referred; and, without objection, the resolution will be printed in the RECORD.

The resolution (S. Res. 120) was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration, as follows:

Resolved, That rule XXXIII of the Rules of the Senate be amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"There shall be held in the Senate immediately following the reading of the Journal on at least 1 day in each period of 4 calendar weeks, but not oftener than 1 day in any 1 calendar week, a 'report-and-question period,' which shall not consume more than 2 hours, during which heads of departments, agencies, and independent establishments in the executive branch of the Government are requested to answer orally written and oral questions propounded by Members of the Senate. Each written question shall be submitted in triplicate to the committee having jurisdiction of the subject matter of such question, and, if approved by such committee, one copy shall be transmitted to the head of the department, agency, or independent establishment concerned, with an invitation to appear before the Senate, and one copy to the Committee on Rules and Administration with a request for allotment of time in a report-and-question period to answer such question. Subject to the limitations prescribed in this paragraph, the Committee on Rules and Administration shall determine the date for, and the length of time of, each report-and-question period, and shall allot the time in each period to the head of a department, agency, or independent establishment who has indicated his readiness to deliver oral answers to the questions transmitted to him. All written questions to be propounded in any one period shall be approved by one committee. With the consent of the committee which has approved the written questions to be propounded in any period, the head of a department, agency, or independent establishment may designate to represent him in such period the head of a principal division of such department, agency, or independent establishment, and, in the case of a department, the head thereof may designate the Under Secretary or an assistant secretary of such department. The latter half of each period shall be reserved for oral questions by Members of the Senate, one-half of such time to be controlled by the chairman of the committee which has approved the written questions propounded in such period and one-half by the ranking minority member of such committee. Each oral question shall be germane to the subject matter of at least one of the written questions propounded in such period. The time of each report-and-question period and the written questions to be answered in such period shall be printed in two daily editions of the RECORD appearing before the day on which such period is to be held, and the proceedings during such period shall be printed in the RECORD for such day."

YOUTH EMPLOYMENT ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. GOLDWATER submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to the bill (S. 1) to authorize the establishment of a Youth Conservation Corps to provide a healthful outdoor training and employment for young men and to advance the conservation, development, and management of natural resources and recreational areas; and to authorize local area youth employment programs, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

WILDERNESS ACT—AMENDMENTS

Mr. ALLOTT (for himself, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. BENNETT, Mr. CANNON, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. FONG, Mr. GOLDWATER, Mr. HAYDEN, Mr. JORDAN of Idaho, Mr. LAUSCHE, Mr. MECHEM, Mr. MUNDT, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. SIMPSON, and Mr. THURMOND), submitted an amendment, intended to be proposed by them, jointly, to the bill (S. 4) to establish a National Wilderness Preservation System for the permanent good of the whole people, and for other purposes, which was ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

Mr. ALLOTT submitted amendments, intended to be proposed by him, to Senate bill 4, supra, which were ordered to lie on the table and to be printed.

YOUTH CONSERVATION CORPS—MINORITY AND INDIVIDUAL VIEWS

Mr. CLARK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that minority and individual views on Senate bill 1, the youth education bill, may be filed while the Senate is in adjournment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS OF BILLS AND CONCURRENT RESOLUTION

Under authority of the orders of the Senate, as indicated below, the following names have been added as additional cosponsors for the following bills and concurrent resolution:

Authority of April 1, 1963:

S. 1238. A bill to amend the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, with respect to the purposes for which surplus personal property may be donated: Mr. ANDERSON, Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. BIBLE, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. BYRD of West Virginia, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. CLARK, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. FULBRIGHT, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. MCGEE, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MOSS, Mr. NELSON, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. YARBOROUGH, Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota, and Mr. YOUNG of Ohio.

Authority of April 2, 1963:

S. 1250. A bill to provide for advance consultation with the Fish and Wildlife Service and with State wildlife agencies before the beginning of any Federal program involving the use of pesticides or other chemicals designed for mass biological controls: Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. LONG of Missouri, and Mr. MCINTYRE.

S. 1251. A bill to amend the act of August 1, 1958, in order to prevent or minimize injury to fish and wildlife from the use of insecticides, herbicides, fungicides, and pesticides: Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. LONG of Missouri, and Mr. MCINTYRE.

S. 1255. A bill for the establishment of a Commission on Revision of the Antitrust Laws of the United States: Mr. COOPER.

Authority of April 3, 1963:

S. 1262. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits thereunder for any individual who is blind and has at least 20 quarters of coverage, and for other purposes: Mr. LONG of Missouri and Mr. SCOTT.

S. 1268. A bill to amend title II of the Social Security Act to provide disability insurance benefits thereunder for any individual who is blind and has at least six quarters of coverage, and for other purposes: Mr. LONG of Missouri and Mr. SCOTT.

Authority of March 21 and April 1, 1963:

S. Con. Res. 34. Concurrent resolution to express the sense of Congress that the President appoint a committee to evaluate our foreign aid program in each country and report its finding to the President and the Congress: Mr. CASE, Mr. FONG, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. KEATING, Mr. KUCHEL, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MILLER, Mr. MORTON, Mr. PEARSON, and Mr. RANDOLPH.

NOTICE OF HEARINGS ON SENATE BILL 777, TO AMEND THE ARMS CONTROL AND DISARMAMENT ACT

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Foreign Relations will hold public hearings on Wednesday, April 10, on S. 777. This is an administration bill to amend the Arms Control and Disarmament Act in order to increase the authorization for appropriations and to modify the personnel security procedures for contractor employees. S. 777 was introduced by Senator HUMPHREY for himself and Senators CLARK and RANDOLPH on February 11, 1963.

The hearing will be held at 10:30 a.m. in room 4221 of the New Senate Office Building.

CHANGE IN HEARINGS DATE ON AREA REDEVELOPMENT LEGISLATION BY THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON PRODUCTION AND STABILIZATION OF THE SENATE COMMITTEE ON BANKING AND CURRENCY

Mr. DOUGLAS. Mr. President, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Production and Stabilization of the Committee on Banking and Currency, I wish to announce a change in the date for beginning hearings on S. 1163, a bill to amend certain provisions of the Area Redevelopment Act.

The hearings will begin at 10 a.m., Tuesday, April 30, 1963, rather than Monday, April 22, as previously announced. The hearings will be held in room 5302, New Senate Office Building, and will continue on the following days of that week.

All persons who wish to appear and testify on this bill are requested to notify Mr. Jonathan Lindley, Senate Committee on Banking and Currency, room 5300, New Senate Office Building, telephone CApitol 4-3121, extension 3921.

ADDRESSES, EDITORIALS, ARTICLES, ETC., PRINTED IN THE APPENDIX

On request, and by unanimous consent, addresses, editorials, articles, etc., were ordered to be printed in the Appendix, as follows:

By Mr. SCOTT:

Article entitled "That Marfan's Syndrome 'Affliction' of Lincoln," to be published in the Philadelphia, Pa., Blumhaven Digest.

By Mr. MCGOVERN:

Article entitled "Just an Average Lawyer," written by Helen Rezatto, published in the April 1963, issue of Kiwanis magazine.

By Mr. COTTON:

Column entitled "The Responsibility for Deficits," written by David Lawrence, published in the Evening Star, Washington, D.C., on April 5, 1963.

By Mr. TALMADGE:

Column entitled "Seldom Have So Many Been Ruled By So Few," written by Jack Spalding, published in the Atlanta, Ga., Journal.

By Mr. RANDOLPH:

Comments praising the six recipients of the 1963 Federal Woman's Award.

NOMINATIONS FOR BRIGADIER GENERALS

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, there is now pending before the Senate nomination reference 41, containing the names of 49 Army colonels for promotion to temporary brigadier general in the Army. The Committee on Armed Services has unanimously recommended that this list be approved.

Mr. President, the Armed Services Subcommittee on Officer Grade Limitations held a hearing on this nomination list. I emphasize that the subcommittee did not challenge the fitness of any officer nominated for promotion. The hearing did involve a matter of policy, however, which I feel should be called to the attention of the Senate.

With respect to this list, the average age of those recommended for promotion to brigadier general is about 46½ years. This represents an average drop of about 2 years in age as compared with the lists of the last several years. Futhermore, speaking in terms of prior service before promotion, in 1961 and 1962 more than 75 percent of the officers had completed at least 24 years of service at the time of their selection. With regard to the pending list, however, only about 37 percent will complete 24 years or more of service. On the whole, therefore, the officers selected for general on this list were younger and had less years

The New Republic
5/25/63
Pol. Gen.

ADAM POWELL

The Ocelot of the House of Representatives

by Murray Kempton

There are Negroes who write from the South and address their letters to "Adam Clayton Powell, the White House, Washington" and who even come sometimes to his Congressional office – finding the door locked as often as not – to say they are from Alabama and Mississippi and want to see their Congressman.

Lord Melbourne said once that he cherished the Order of the Garter because there was no damned merit in it. No damned merit made Powell chairman of the House Committee on Education and Labor. He just sat on the committee longer than any other Democrat. He is unique. No other Negro in the United States can frustrate the President of the United States all by himself, just by being a road block.

A colleague confides that having Adam Powell as your committee chairman is like having an ocelot for a pet. He does purr when soothed; he has style and quickness. He is unpredictable. He is generally disliked, partly by Southerners who think that he doesn't know his place as a Negro, but also by men less blessed with those simple prejudices who must settle for the vaguer notion that Powell does not know his place as a member of the House. He is outsize. Other Congressmen have their wives on the payroll; only Adam Powell has his wife 1,500 miles across the water with a $13,000 House salary and no discernible duties. Other Congressmen wander abroad, drawing their pocket money from counterpart funds and drawing more of it than Adam Powell does – "Could you," he asks, "eat five days in Paris for $87.50?" – but none of them takes with him two young ladies from his staff whose intelligence can be established only by talking to them.

The House fell upon Adam Powell late last winter with a rancor developed through months of watching itself parodied by one of its own members. It was a cruel March for the chairman. The House cut his $697,000 budget request for Education and Labor down to $200,000. It passed a bill to limit junkets abroad; the provisions were hazy, but its purpose was clearly to tell the world that Adam Clayton Powell, because of his effrontery and lack of discretion, could not eat on the Marshall Plan at the Lido in Paris ever again. Powell was in Puerto Rico most of that time; he said little for himself that was not further parody; he had few defenders; the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People maintained a generally embarrassed silence.

Then in the latter part of March, Adam Powell rose in majestic pique. He threatened to attach a civil rights rider to every Administration bill in his committee. In the delicate balance of the House, the Powell amendment can defeat most bills of substance. An Administration which had found him wonderfully agreeable until now – he frames his White House invitations on his office wall – discovered that he had to be appeased again, as Talmadge and Eastland must be appeased.

Powell went back to the source of his power, as does every politician when he is in trouble. There had come to him, as to Eastland in a primary, the moment when he needed the weight and sympathy of the poor in his district. He cried out to great rallies from Harlem to Washington. He sat on a platform with, among others, Malcolm X, then the Black Muslim Harlem leader, and he warned an audience that filled Harlem Square that the NAACP was controlled by white people and that the Negro must fight alone for anything he gets. The menace in Powell's voice on these occasions affronts respectable people. The black nationalists had better judgment; they welcomed Powell's brief rest in their temple with that charming realism which is one of their many distinctions from the White Citizens Council.

"We are not really comfortable with Adam Powell on our side because it happens so seldom," Lowell Beveridge wrote in Liberator, a left black nationalist journal. "But Powell has demonstrated an important difference between himself and his critics." When another Negro leader "gets in trouble," Beveridge went on, "he takes off his hat" and goes to some white power figure whose client he is. "But, when Adam Powell gets in trouble, he puts on his hat and goes to Harlem Square because that is where his power lies."

Adam Powell's voice moved over his great audience: "The white man has given the Negro just about all he intends to give him. . . . There is no future for the black man that he does not fight for. . . . There is no future for the Negro until he is proud that he is black and black in his thinking."

That is his platform prose. The style when Powell really cares is sparser, as all real emotion is. He is at his most intense in the message the State Department sent to the embassies last August announcing the arrival of Adam Powell and staff to study Western Europe: "Congressman Adam C. Powell . . . . and staff members traveling Western Europe in accordance following itinerary: August 8, sailing Queen Mary arriving Southampton, August 13; Paris, August 16; Venice, August 20; Rome, August 23; Athens, August 27; Delphi, August 30; sailing Leonardo DaVinci, September 15 from Gibraltar. . . . Codel and party authorized use local currencies 19FT561. . . . London request three tickets August 14 and 15 best shows playing, except Broadway plays. Paris codel desires use US Army car with chauffeur. Reserve three for first show and dinner best table for Lido August 16. Southampton codel requests be met at Queen Mary Cherbourg with equivalent $100 in local currencies for each member party."

Only Powell could have dictated those terms; this is the ground upon which he stands and fights for his rights as an American; this tone, not the other, is Adam Powell, the defiant.

Pastor and the Elders

What he defies may be something more complicated than we usually think. He carries another load on top of the burden of having been born a Negro. He was also born into the respectable Negro upper middle class of New York in 1906, which brought him into active adolescence after the First World War. The Elders of the Abyssinian Baptist Church he inherited must remind him of the Elders he grew up with, in composite a quiet man with gold-rimmed glasses and bald head neatly set in a white backdrop, in a black suit, free of sin or hunger and tempted last no one remembers when. These obscure people have, in ritual at least, effected a comfortable compromise with their conspicuous pastor; their church is country Episcopal in decorative tone; Powell appears before them in a cassock with red frogging. Their taste for the discreet and his for the elegant have found a common ground of the simple.

The Elders are as proud of him as he is of himself. His first two wives were public entertainers. The Elders have accepted this defiance without the smallest resentment. Powell does not, though, seem quite so satisfied with the Elders. "I told them," he said after his first sermon this month, "that if they did not understand what was happening in Birmingham, their children would some day spit on their graves." That is a strange statement from a loving pastor who comes to a devoted congregation. But these old people may have the misfortune of reminding him of the prison of his childhood. You think of Adam Powell's gaudy reputation as a sinner and then you remember that he is one of its prime sources. A man who contributes quite this much brushwork to his own image as romantic adventurer must have some point to make.

When Powell had finished in church on that first Sunday in May, he stood in his office and began loosing his cassock to uncover the blue-striped collar underneath. He evoked the memory of Rinehart in Ralph Ellison's Invisible Man, a numbers runner by day, an evangelist by night. Powell was saying that he had just finished an article on the malpractices of Congressmen for a national magazine; the transition from the spiritual Powell to the temporal Powell was almost over. He snapped his braces; the Deacons had gone, the political runners had come; and there stood broker and prophet, the great mystic symbol of moral ambivalence which necessity has enforced on Harlem.

The next Wednesday, the one before Mother's Day, Adam Powell came early to his Congressional office; he had been on television in the morning to explain that he hadn't really said what he had really said two days before. Now he had nothing to do until 11, when he would go to the Rules Committee, "because Judge Smith promised me a rule."

He talked about Birmingham and wondered if he should call a press conference; he talked about how his picture in Ebony was a higher artistic product than his picture in Look; he asked if I had read a piece about him in Newsweek. He passed then to the work of his Committee on Education and Labor.

"I have," he said, "four or five PhD's down there." It was the tone of the collector; the Jaguar is 10 years old now; he has moved to a higher form of display; he subsidizes the social sciences. "Have you seen my study of Labor and the Common Market. That's what came out of my trip to Europe last August." He took a telephone call; I thumbed through the committee study, noted the chairman's acknowledgement of all the distinguished, unnamed, Europeans who had helped him in his studies, ran through a text that a competent man could have whipped up without leaving the Library of Congress, and found no mention of the teeming industrial complexes which drew the chairman and his staff to Europe. "Now," said Powell proudly, "Kefauver's going to go and make the same study."

"I was sitting in Spain and I read in Newsweek about shared time which is one way to help the parochial schools. I tore it out and mailed it to my education chief and told her to get to work on it and call a conference of the Catholics and the Protestants and work out something and, when I got back she had a bill ready for me. It could be the first breakthrough on this issue."

It is not easy to take seriously a man who is chairman of a great Congressional committee and who studies industrial development on the Grand Canal or sits on the rock of Gibraltar and thinks up solutions to the parochial school problem. Yet, the reality seems to be that Education and Labor is a good committee and is advancing toward excellence. Men who bear him minimum goodwill judge Powell to be a brilliant chairman, brilliant being a word to define talent and not application. When one considers all his distractions, his operation of this committee with barely half his mind is the best witness to the size of that talent. Education and Labor is enormous; it is charged to engage and manages to pass more bills of substance than any other in the House. Powell keeps it moving by delegating authority to his subcommittees. He listens to his chairmen and takes their advice and is a prodigy with the gavel when they need it. His attention span is limited, but he astounds his colleagues by the speed with which he can grasp a bill and the positions on it and then direct a coherent discussion of its merits on no more than a briefing five minutes before a session.

Congressman at Large

Detached observers rate him low only as a tactician managing a bill on the floor; he goes against the hostility of a basic portion of the House and his old impulse at public defiance cannot always be held back.

"Still, I worry when I think that son-of-a-bitch is going away for a month," one Congressman said last week. "I don't know what will happen to that committee without him if it has some important legislation."

And there sat Adam Powell in his office, having earned these compliments from men who do not cherish him. He went on talking about his committee as if it were a boat he owned and wasn't quite sure how it ran. He stopped because he had to get to his only real business of the day.

Study Abroad

He is going to Geneva in June as a delegate to the International Labor Organization Conference, and the rule he wanted from Howard Smith was one authorizing him to draw counterpart funds during his stopover in France. He and Congressman James Roosevelt came together and sat side by side; Judge Smith expressed his anxiety to serve them. Powell explained that a month was too long for one man to be away during the heat of the Congressional session, so he and Mr. Roosevelt were dividing the ILO delegate's assignment. Each planned to be away for three weeks, which seemed odd because it meant that, with two delegates sharing the load, the House would be short the equivalent of one body for six weeks while, if one had gone alone, it would be a body short only four.

Then Congressman Roosevelt said that his committee was interested in the problem of national strikes and that he thought this would be a good time to study the European practice of arbitration, etc., and he had decided that the three best capitals in which to discuss labor problems are Rome, Paris and Tel Aviv. He would need counterpart funds to finance these researches. Powell almost snickered aloud at this modest effort at counter-parody, but Judge Smith looked gravely courteous and asked Roosevelt what were the counterpart regulations at the moment. Powell intervened with an answer so thunderingly authoritative that no one tried again; Powell stood unchallenged, the Clarence Cannon of the free load.

"How we gonna operate without you two boys?" asked Clarence Brown of Ohio.

"We'll miss you," Powell answered.

"We've missed you quite often in the past," said Clarence Brown and Powell laughed with the delight of a man who sees at last the light shining in the window for him. Then his voice shifted to the tone of high state business: "Inasmuch as I'm going by surface. . . ."

Some poor Republican said he was confused; he'd voted the other day for a bill limiting Congressional junkets; he didn't understand the bill but might it not apply here?

"No," Judge Smith answered, "that bill has to pass the Senate before it becomes law." Another moral fire was burning out. It ended with Jimmy Roosevelt offering a story lame from inexperience at this sort of thing, while Adam Powell sat beside him injecting severities like: "The best thing to do is to get receipts for everything and bring the receipts back."

"Now wasn't that civilized?" he said on the way out of the committee chamber. "Clarence Brown, the arch conservative, kidding us and me kidding him back. After all this fuss, you walk in there and they give you counterpart funds without a word." It had been so long since he could feel this clubbable. He felt absolved; somewhere in some invisible world of the spirit another Adam Powell could be sensed absolving the NAACP. There remained just one more switch of the tail before he settled at the fireside. He stopped by the press gallery and announced a conference on Birmingham in 20 minutes; he could not have conceived a neater way to measure just how much his three weeks wild and on the loose had impressed the Administration with his capacity for mischief.

It took him 10 minutes to get to his office. The Attorney General's office was waiting at the telephone. "That was quick," said Powell. He had tested loud and clear.

He was silent for a long while; the Attorney General must have been talking with an urgency a little larger than needed. "Concessions?" Powell said at last. "Token concessions? Real concessions. Fine." He assured the Attorney General of his lasting benevolence and hung up. There was a call from Mrs. Powell in Puerto Rico. "I've just come back from Judge Smith's; he gave me the money for our trip." He would be home for Mother's Day. The reporters came in; Adam Powell explained that the Attorney General had just called to lift the cloud of Birmingham from his brooding spirit. "I want personally to pay tribute. . . ."

It was a little after three. The workday was over. "Hell, I'm pooped," he said. "I'm going home to get some sleep." Walking away, he talked about how much he liked the Southerners and what a gentleman Judge Smith is. Two colleagues passed him. His smile – it had been such a good day – was a shade more effusive than theirs; but theirs was up to the standard of club members. "Mississippi," said Adam Powell. Perhaps they were Mississippi Congressmen; they were certainly anonymous enough to be anything. Still it seemed so pat for them to come along at precisely the moment when they were needed on stage to support the part that Adam Powell was once again writing for himself. It is the part of Gaylord Ravenel.

Five day later, the House voted to disapprove Powell's and Roosevelt's trip. The State Department, of course, automatically took over their bills, since they are US delegates to an international conference. Powell still had his trip but he no longer had his sense of a place in the club. "It's stupid," he said seriously. "They vote not to give me counterpart funds, so I just turn around and get more than that from State. Now they won't even know how much I spend." But then he settled back and offered the illusion of the week before: "Look at the record; they talked about Roosevelt more than about me." There was the balm, too, that Judge Smith and Clarence Brown, the elders of the Rules Committee, had kept their faith and voted on the House floor to approve his trip. Judge Smith, he said again, was a gentleman. Thus do two civilized men, Adam Powell of New York and Howard Smith of Virginia, look at one another across the mass of yahoos.

Let's Spend More

by Hobart Rowen

The President says that it is the responsibility of those who oppose his tax program to offer an alternative. He was addressing himself to his conservative critics – those who would cut the budget – and certainly not to me, but his proposal is fair, and I will try to meet it. My thesis is an extremely simple one: President Kennedy's tax program will not stimulate the kind of economic growth that is needed by the United States.

Whatever benefits would be derived from the tax program, assuming that it passes, would be at a very high cost – namely, a budget control policy which already is reflected in a freeze of non-defense spending in the 1964 budget, and which will be continued under present plans for three years. What is needed instead is more federal spending on worthwhile programs for slum clearance, education, health, power, and not just public works. This spending policy will and should

---

Hobart Rowen is Business Trends Editor of Newsweek magazine.

Intergroup Org.
Off. Comm.

NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE
14 East 48th Street
New York 17, New York
Plaza 1-0300

A statement by the Board of Trustees of the NATIONAL URBAN LEAGUE, made public on Sunday, June 9, 1963, urging a crash program of special effort to close the gap between the conditions of Negro and white citizens.

As justified as are the concerns of the National Urban League over the current demonstrations in the South by Negro citizens seeking elementary and fundamental rights, these incidents are mild in comparison with those on the verge of taking flame in the tinder-box of racial unrest in Northern cities.

In these teeming Northern ghettos, hundreds of thousands of Negro citizens -- struggling beneath the mounting burden of automation, overcrowding and subtle discrimination -- are reaching the breaking point.

These are the unemployed, the ill-housed, the disillusioned. It is they who are seething with the lava of deprivation and denial, out of which violence and bloodshed can erupt at any moment unless swift and realistic effort is exerted to prevent it.

The belated actions by the Federal administration toward solution of the South's civil rights disturbances are commendable in some respects, and insofar as they reach into the agonies of the problem. But obviously they are too little -- and may well be too late -- to offset the inevitable explosion.

The National Urban League challenges the responsible leadership of our country to undertake a massive "Marshall plan" approach program of intensified special effort to close the wide economic, social and educational gap which separates the large majority of Negro citizens from other Americans.

Such special effort, which may appear to be in conflict with the principle of equal treatment for all, is required to overcome the damaging effects of generations of deprivation and denial and to make it possible for the majority of American Negroes to reach the point at which they can compete on a basis of equality in the nation's increasingly complex and fast-moving industrial economy.

The primary justification for such special effort lies in the fact that the nation itself is in jeopardy as long as it has within its body politic a large group of citizens who are socially and economically handicapped, often dependent, poorly educated and unable to assume the normal responsibilities of citizenship. And with the impact of automation, it appears possible that these conditions will become worse before they improve and that we may well create a permanent class of dependents unable to make a useful contribution to our way of life.

The second reason for such an effort arises from the fact that the intense needs and problems which are evident in so many Negro communities around the country are a direct result of past and present discrimination and exclusion based on race. Thus, as a matter of historic equity, compensatory effort is justified and may well be the only means of overcoming the heavy aftermath of past neglect. As the following indices suggest, despite progress in certain areas, a large segment of the American Negro population continues to lag seriously behind other Americans in almost every type of measurement which can be used to determine social and economic well being. And in certain catagories the gap is widening rather than closing.

The median annual income for the Negro family today is $3,233 as compared with $5,835 for whites, a gap of 45 per cent. That the trend is in the wrong direction is evidenced by the fact that the gap in 1952 was 43 per cent. Hence, that one element in the gap has widened rather than narrowed in barely more than a decade.

More than 75 per cent of all Negro workers are found in the three lowest occupational categories -- service workers, semi-skilled, and unskilled laborers and farm workers. Less than 39 per cent of all white workers are in these categories. And these are the very categories which are being most drastically affected by automation.

One of every six Negro dwelling units in the nation is dilapidated, obsolete or otherwise substandard, as compared to one in 32 white dwellings. In 1961 Negroes occupied 47 per cent of all public housing units in the country.

The lower earning power of Negro men and the more frequent break-up of Negro families make it necessary for more Negro than white women to become breadwinners. One in every four Negro women with pre-school children is at work and not at home.

More Negro youth drop out of high school than white youth, the fewer high school graduates enter college. During the 1960 school year, 21 per cent of the school dropouts were Negroes. Of youth graduating from high school only seven per cent were Negro youth.

Unemployment rates for Negroes are substantially higher than for whites at all ages: In 1961, 13 per cent of non-white men were unemployed as compared with 5.7 per cent of whites. Nationwide, Negro young people constitute only 15 per cent of the total youth population between the ages of 16 and 21, yet are 50 per cent of the youth population in this age bracket who are both out of school and unemployed.

To correct the problems indicated by these statistics, the cooperative effort of many social agencies, both public and private, in a massive "crash" attack on the problem is required. Such a crash program, sustained for a reasonable period of time, will realize savings of millions of dollars in the cost of welfare services and public hospitalization. Such a program will reverse the widespread social deterioration of urban families and communities and also help us develop the tools and understanding which will prevent the development of such deterioration in the future.

Specifically, what is involved in this kind of special effort which the Urban League now proposes?

(1) Our basic definition of equal opportunity must be broadened and deepened to include recognition of the need for special effort to overcome serious disabilities resulting from historic handicaps.

(2) Our society must recognize and put a higher value than it has ever before placed on the human potential possessed by Negro citizens. And then it must move positively to develop that potential.

(3) The best school and the best teachers are needed to prepare Negro children and other educationally disadvantaged youth to the point where they will have the desire for excellence in education and will be motivated to achieve and prepare to advance up the economic ladder with full realization of the rewards that will accrue in the process.

(4) Token integration and pilot placement in business and industry, labor and government, are not enough. A conscious planned effort must be made to place qualified Negroes in entrance jobs in all types of employment and in positions of responsibility, including lower and upper management positions.

(5) Affirmative action must be taken to destroy the racial ghetto and open housing opportunities of all types on the basis of need and ability to buy or rent.

(6) Public and private agencies in the health and welfare field must offer to the ghettoized segments of the population the best services, with highly competent personnel who understand the reasons for unstable family patterns, the relation between low socio-economic status and social problems, and what must be done to rehabilitate urban Negro families.

(7) Qualified Negroes should be sought and named to all public and private boards and commissions, and particularly those which shape policy in the areas of employment, housing, education and health and welfare services, the areas in which the racial differential is greatest and the need for dramatic change is most urgent.

To achieve this objective, strong leadership within the Negro community must be developed. This leadership then will be ready to step into the vanguard of the teamwork effort demanded in resolving the smoldering problems involved in civil rights.

(8) Negro citizens themselves, adults as well as young people, must maintain and even accelerate the sense of urgency which now characterizes the drive for first-class citizenship. Every opportunity for the acquisition of education and technical skills must be utilized. Every means of strengthening the social and economic fabric of the Negro community must be employed.

(9) It is vital that government, philanthropic foundations, business and industry reasses the extent of their financial support to established organizations committed to securing equal opportunity for Negro citizens to share in the fundamental privileges and rights of American democracy. It is imperative that all of these major sources of financial support substantially increase their contributions to the preventive programs carried on by established, responsible Negro leadership organizations.

(10) Constructive efforts on the part of Negro citizens must be exerted to carry their full share of the responsibilities for participation in a meaningful way in every phase of community life.

The kinds of action set forth in the foregoing represent the only way in which significant breakthroughs on a broad scale can be accomplished. This is compensatory consideration in the form of inclusion, selection and preference.

The consequences of the "Negro revolt," as it has been characterized are yet to be seen. It, therefore, behooves America's leadership to give serious consideration to a radical new approach by which the democracy we profess to practice is granted without further delay to all citizens.

# #

New Leader
6/10/63
Pal-an

A Chance for Greatness

By Karl E. Meyer

WASHINGTON

IN A SPEECH that was widely quoted in the capital last week, Secretary of State Rusk spoke of the "deep injury" that racial injustice was inflicting on America's world standing. "Our voice is muted," he said, "our friends are embarrassed, and our enemies gleeful because we have not really put our hands fully and effectively to this problem at every level of our national life." Because of this, Rusk continued, American diplomats must conduct foreign policy as if they were in a foot race with one leg in a cast.

Yet as one reflects on the meaning of today's Negro revolt, it is possible to argue quite the reverse proposition. In the process of freeing himself, the American Negro may shake his own society out of the complacent torpor—indeed, the sleeping sickness—that is the pervasive national malady. If he can reawaken the dormant radical tradition in American life, the Negro could give a greater lift to national prestige than any conceivable feat in outer space. There are signs that a miracle of this magnitude might occur.

Not since the economic collapse of the 1930s has any domestic crisis so shaken the country. No longer the invisible man, the Negro has chased Cuba and Laos off the front page and forced his countrymen to confront an evil within remedial range. Magazines are thrusting deeper; not long ago, the New Yorker published James Baldwin's cry of despair—an essay on being black that has become the manifesto of a minority—and last month Life creditably ran a report by a Negro journalist on the Black Muslims that was free from the usual cliches.

It is difficult, too, to over-state the effect of television. The coaxial cable has made the country a single community and virtually every evening the news programs carry film footage that makes comment superfluous. An example was a report the other day on a sit-in demonstration in a Mississippi department store in which Negroes were dragged from a lunch counter and were stamped upon or had catsup squirted on their heads. This is a passion play with a hundred million witnesses—for once, one is grateful for television.

The word passion can be used in a double sense. No quality has been more absent from national politics, and in Washington one can feel the tingling of a long-sleeping limb. A fortnight ago, Attorney General Robert Kennedy had his now-famous encounter in a New York apartment with a group of Negroes rounded up by James Baldwin. The President's brother was shocked by the depth of passion.

KARL E. MEYER is a member of the editorial board of the Washington Post and Washington correspondent for the British New Statesman, where this article also appears.

"He didn't get the point," Baldwin said afterward. "He was naive. He doesn't know pain. He just doesn't know."

The Kennedys are learning. The President is moving with a tide that may take him in directions hitherto uncongenial to his temper. This is the kind of problem that does not yield simply to adroit managerialism—and yet the White House has grounds for gratification. It has been the standing complaint that a lack of urgency in national opinion has tied the President's hands. There is now no lack of urgency; President Kennedy has come to a Finland Station in which the momentum of events can be influenced by his own leadership.

One path ahead, clearly, is legislative. Civil rights measures which a few months ago were considered unobtainable are now given chance of passage in Congress. The Administration is belatedly presenting proposals that would broaden Federal authority in dealing with demonstrations against segregation in stores, theaters, hotels and restaurants. This would finally ease the unfair burden placed on the courts, which, by virtue of political paralysis, have been forced to preside over a piecemeal social revolution and take the full brunt of the segregationist attack.

BUT A CHANGE of laws can only work if there is a change of heart, and here President Kennedy meets the more exacting test. He must be able to articulate the Negro cause in a way that makes change seem not only necessary but also wholly just. Thus far, he has dealt circumspectly with the race question, stressing the need for law and order and for community responsibility. Yet without being preachy, the President must surely use the pulpit of his office for a series of addresses modeled in the tradition of Lincoln (and not, for a change, of Churchill).

If Kennedy succeeds, his Presidency may prove more memorable than anyone dared to hope. One has the impression that a country sated with material wealth is ready for an appeal to the radical ideals of equality charted in the Declaration of Independence and sustained in a Civil War. A response to this appeal could be more decisive in foreign affairs than any grisly weapon the Pentagon could concoct. "In the final analysis," President Kennedy wisely observed before his election, "our foreign policy, our relations with other countries, will be most affected by what we do here in the United States. . . . It was Franklin Roosevelt's compassionate actions here at home that built his great reputation abroad. What we are speaks much louder than what we say."

Hence one can argue that the Negro revolt in America is as much a national opportunity as a handicap. It opens a field for the compassionate action of a Roosevelt. A confirming statement comes from an unexpected source, Premier Sékou Touré, an African nationalist who is nobody's puppet. Asked in Ethiopia about the Birmingham riots, Premier Touré replied: "We cannot say that the American people are racists—racism exists everywhere, even in Guinea. We know that in the United States a fight is being organized by the Government of President Kennedy. We approve without reserve of this policy by President Kennedy."

No American astronaut could elicit the same tribute; technology is not what differentiates America from the Soviet Union. Indeed, the United States has fallen into a Soviet trap by letting ideological competition focus on gadgetry—and the Negro has given his country a chance to get out of the trap. The question that the racial revolt, North and South, poses is whether the majority of Americans can rededicate themselves to some purpose more ennobling than supremacy in supermarkets, superhighways and superbombs.

"We talk about ourselves these days," Walter Lippmann wrote a few years ago, "as if we were a completed society, one which has achieved its purposes and has no further great business to transact." Great business now beckons to President Kennedy, and Dean Rusk may yet bless the cast on his leg.

Pol. Gen.

88TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1731

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

JUNE 19, 1963

Mr. MANSFIELD (for himself, Mr. KUCHEL, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KEATING, Mr. MORSE, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. BEALL, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. FONG, Mr. CLARK, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. HART, Mr. CASE, Mr. YOUNG of Ohio, Mr. COOPER, Mr. DODD, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MCINTYRE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NELSON, Mrs. NEUBERGER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. PELL, Mr PROXMIRE, Mr RANDOLPH, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MOSS, and Mr. MCGEE) introduced the following bill; which was read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To enforce the constitutional right to vote, to confer jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to provide injunctive relief against discrimination in public accommodations, to authorize the Attorney General to institute suits to protect constitutional rights in education, to establish a Community Relations Service, to extend for four years the Commission on Civil Rights, to prevent discrimination in federally assisted programs, to establish a Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights Act of 4 1963."

1 SEC. 2. (a) Discrimination by reason of race, color,
2 religion, or national origin is incompatible with the concepts
3 of liberty and equality to which the Government of the 4 United States is dedicated. In recent years substantial steps
5 have been taken toward eliminating such discrimination
6 throughout the Nation. Nevertheless, many citizens of the 7 United States, solely because of their race, color, or national
8 origin, are denied rights and privileges accorded to other
9 citizens and thereby subjected to inconveniences, humilia-
10 tions, and hardships. Such discrimination impairs the gen-
11 eral welfare of the United States by preventing the fullest
12 development of the capabilities of the whole citizenry and by 13 limiting participation in the economic, political, and cultural 14 life of the Nation.

15 (b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act
16 to promote the general welfare by eliminating discrimina-
17 tion based on race, color, religion, or national origin in 18 voting, education, and public accommodations through the 19 exercise by Congress of the powers conferred upon it to 20 regulate the manner of holding Federal elections, to enforce
21 the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments,
22 to regulate commerce among the several States, and to
23 make laws necessary and proper to execute the powers
24 conferred upon it by the Constitution.

25 (c) It is also desirable that disputes or disagreements

1 arising in any community from the discriminatory treatment
2 of individuals for reasons of race, color, or national origin
3 shall be resolved on a voluntary basis, without hostility or
4 litigation. Accordingly, it is the further purpose of this Act
5 to promote this end by providing machinery for the volun-
6 tary settlement of such disputes and disagreements.

7 TITLE I—VOTING RIGHTS

8 SEC. 101. Section 2004 of the Revised Statutes (42
9 U.S.C. 1971), as amended by section 131 of the Civil
10 Rights Act of 1957 (71 Stat. 637), and as further amended
11 by section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (74 Stat.
12 90), is further amended as follows:

13 (a) Insert "1" after "(a)" in subsection (a) and add at 14 the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraphs:

15 "(2) No person acting under color of law shall—

16 "(A) in determining whether any individual is
17 qualified under State law to vote in any Federal election
18 apply any standard, practice, or procedure different from 19 the standards, practices, or procedures applied to in-
20 dividuals similarly situated who have been found by
21 State officials to be qualified to vote.

22 "(B) deny the right of any individual to vote in 23 any Federal election because of an error or omission of 24 such individual on any record or paper relating to 25 any application, registration, payment of poll tax, or

1 other act requisite to voting, if such error or omission is
2 not material in determining whether such individual is
3 qualified under State law to vote in such election; or
4 "(C) employ any literacy test as a qualification for
5 voting in any Federal election unless (i) such test is
6 administered to each individual wholly in writing and
7 (ii) a certified copy of the test and of the answers
8 given by the individual is furnished to him within
9 twenty-five days of the submission of his written request
10 made within the period of time during which records
11 and papers are required to be retained and preserved
12 pursuant to title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1960
13 (42 U.S.C. 1974–74e; 74 Stat. 88).
14 "(3) For purposes of this subsection—
15 "(A) the term 'vote' shall have the same meaning
16 as in subsection (e) of this section;
17 "(B) the words 'Federal election' shall have the 18 same meaning as in subsection (f) of this section; and 19 "(C) the phrase 'literacy test' includes any test
20 of the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret
21 any matter."
22 (b) Insert immediately following the period at the end
23 of the first sentence of subsection (c) the following new 24 sentence: "If in any such proceeding literacy is a relevant
25 fact it shall be presumed that any person who has not been

1 adjudged an incompetent and who has completed the sixth
2 grade in a public school in, or a private school accredited
3 by, any State or territory or the District of Columbia where
4 instruction is carried on predominantly in the English lan-
5 guage, possesses sufficient literacy, comprehension, and intel-
6 ligence to vote in any Federal election as defined in
7 subsection (f) of this section."
8 (c) Add the following subsection "(f)" and designate
9 the present subsection "(f)" as subsection "(g)":
10 "(f) Whenever in any proceeding instituted pursuant
11 to subsection (c) the complaint requests a finding of a pat-
12 tern or practice pursuant to subsection (e), and such com-
13 plaint, or a motion filed within twenty days after the effective
14 date of this Act in the case of any proceeding which is pend-
15 ing before a district court on such effective date, (1) is 16 signed by the Attorney General (or in his absence the Act-
17 ing Attorney General), and (2) alleges that in the affected
18 area fewer than 15 per centum of the total number of voting
19 age persons of the same race as the persons alleged in the 20 complaint to have been discriminated against are registered
21 (or otherwise recorded as qualified to vote), any person
22 resident within the affected area who is of the same race
23 as the persons alleged to have been discriminated against
24 shall be entitled, upon his application therefor, to an order
25 declaring him qualified to vote, upon proof that at any elec-

1 tion or elections (1) he is qualified under State law to vote,
2 and (2) he has since the filing of the proceeding under sub-
3 section (c) been (A) deprived of or denied under color of 4 law the opportunity to register to vote or otherwise to
5 qualify to vote, or (B) found not qualified to vote by any
6 person acting under color of law. Such order shall be
7 effective as to any Federal or State election held within the 8 longest period for which such applicant could have been 9 registered or otherwise qualified under State law at which
10 the applicant's qualifications would under State law entitle
11 him to vote: Provided, That in the event it is determined
12 upon final disposition of the proceeding, including any re-
13 view, that no pattern or practice of deprivation of any right
14 secured by subsection (a) exists, the order shall thereafter
15 no longer qualify the applicant to vote in any subsequent 16 election.

17 "Notwithstanding any inconsistent provision of State
18 law or the action of any State officer or court, an applicant
19 so declared qualified to vote shall be permitted to vote as 20 provided herein. The Attorney General shall cause to be
21 transmitted certified copies of any order declaring a person
22 qualified to vote to the appropriate election officers. The re-
23 fusal by any such officer with notice of such order to permit
24 any person so qualified to vote at an appropriate election
25 shall constitute contempt of court.

1 "An application for an order pursuant to this subsection
2 shall be heard within ten days, and the execution of any order
3 disposing of such application shall not be stayed if the effect
4 of such stay would be to delay the effectiveness of the order
5 beyond the date of any election at which the applicant would
6 otherwise be enabled to vote.

7 "The court may appoint one or more persons, to be
8 known as temporary voting referees, to receive applications
9 pursuant to this subsection and to take evidence and report to
10 the court findings as to whether at any election or elections
11 (1) any applicant entitled under this subsection to apply for 12 an order declaring him qualified to vote is qualified under 13 State law to vote, and (2) he has since the filing of the 14 proceeding under subsection (c) been (A) deprived of or 15 denied under color of law the opportunity to register to vote
16 or otherwise to qualify to vote, or (B) found not qualified
17 to vote by any person acting under color of law. The pro-
18 cedure for processing applications under this subsection and 19 for the entry of orders shall be the same as that provided for 20 in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of subsection (e).

21 "In appointing a temporary voting referee the court
22 shall make its selection from a panel provided by the judicial
23 conference of the circuit. Any temporary voting referee
24 shall be a resident and a qualified voter of the State in 25 which he is to serve. He shall subscribe to the oath of office

1 required by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes (5 U.S.C.
2 16), and shall to the extent not inconsistent herewith have
3 all the powers conferred upon a master by rule 53 (c) of the 4 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The compensation to be
5 allowed any persons appointed by the district court pursuant
6 to this subsection shall be fixed by the court and shall be
7 payable by the United States. In the event that the district
8 court shall appoint a retired officer or employee of the United 9 States to serve as a temporary voting referee, such officer or
10 employee shall continue to receive, in addition to any com-
11 pensation for services rendered pursuant to this subsection, all
12 retirement benefits to which he may otherwise be entitled.
13 "The court or temporary voting referee shall entertain
14 applications and the court shall issue orders pursuant to this
15 subsection until final disposition of the proceeding under sub-
16 section (c), including any review, or until the finding of a
17 pattern or practice pursuant to subsection (e), whichever
18 shall first occur. Applications pursuant to this subsection
19 shall be determined expeditiously, and this subsection shall 20 in no way be construed as a limitation upon the existing
21 powers of the court.
22 "When used in this subsection, the words 'Federal elec-
23 tion' shall mean any general, special, or primary election
24 held solely or in part for the purpose of electing or selecting
25 any candidate for the office of President, Vice President,

1 presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of
2 the House of Representatives; the words 'State election'
3 shall mean any other general, special, or primary election
4 held solely or in part for the purpose of electing or selecting
5 any candidate for public office; the words 'affected area'
6 shall mean that county, parish, or similar subdivision of the 7 State in which the laws of the State relating to voting
8 are or have been administered by a person who is a defend-
9 ant in the proceeding instituted under subsection (c) on
10 the date the original complaint is filed; and the words
11 'voting age persons' shall mean those persons who meet the 12 age requirements of State law for voting."
13 (d) Add the following subsection "(h)":
14 "(h) In any civil action brought in any district court
15 of the United States under this section or title III of the 16 Civil Rights Act of 1960 (42 U.S.C. 1974–74e; 74 Stat.
17 88) wherein the United States or the Attorney General
18 is plaintiff, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the 19 district (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) in which 20 the case is pending immediately to designate a judge in such 21 district to hear and determine the case. In the event that
22 no judge in the district is available to hear and determine
23 the case, the chief judge of the district, or the acting chief
24 judge, as the case may be, shall certify this fact to the chief

1 judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the acting chief judge)
2 who shall then designate a district or circuit judge of the
3 circuit to hear and determine the case.

4 "It shall be the duty of the judge designated pursuant
5 to this section to assign the case for hearing at the earliest
6 practicable date and to cause the case to be in every way
7 expedited."

8 TITLE II—INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AGAINST DIS-
9 CRIMINATION IN PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

10 FINDINGS

11 SEC. 201. (a) The American people have become in-
12 creasingly mobile during the last generation, and millions of 13 American citizens travel each year from State to State by 14 rail, air, bus, automobile, and other means. A substantial
15 number of such travelers are members of minority racial and 16 religious groups. These citizens, particularly Negroes, are
17 subjected in many places to discrimination and segregation,
18 and they are frequently unable to obtain the goods and serv-
19 ices available to other interstate travelers.

20 (b) Negroes and members of other minority groups
21 who travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain adequate
22 lodging accommodations during their travels, with the result
23 that they may be compelled to stay at hotels or motels of 24 poor and inferior quality, travel great distances from their
25 normal routes to find adequate accommodations, or make

1 detailed arrangements for lodging far in advance of scheduled
2 interstate travel.

3 (c) Negroes and members of other minority groups
4 who travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain food
5 service at convenient places along their routes, with the
6 result that many are dissuaded from traveling interstate,
7 while others must travel considerable distances from their in-
8 tended routes in order to obtain adequate food service.

9 (d) Goods, services, and persons in the amusement and
10 entertainment industries commonly move in interstate com-
11 merce, and the entire American people benefit from the in-
12 creased cultural and recreational opportunities afforded
13 thereby. Practices of audience discrimination and segrega-
14 tion artificially restrict the number of persons to whom the 15 interstate amusement and entertainment industries may offer
16 their goods and services. The burdens imposed on inter-
17 state commerce by such practices and the obstructions to the 18 free flow of commerce which result therefrom are serious
19 and substantial.

20 (e) Retail establishments in all States of the Union
21 purchase a wide variety and a large volume of goods from
22 business concerns located in other States and in foreign
23 nations. Discriminatory practices in such establishments,
24 which in some instances have led to the withholding of 25 patronage by those affected by such practices, inhibit and

1 restrict the normal distribution of goods in the interstate
2 market.
3 (f) Fraternal, religious, scientific, and other organiza-
4 tions engaged in interstate operations are frequently dis-
5 suaded from holding conventions in cities which they would
6 otherwise select because the public facilities in such cities
7 are either not open to all members of racial or religious
8 minority groups or are available only on a segregated basis.
9 (g) Business organizations are frequently hampered in 10 obtaining the services of skilled workers and persons in the 11 professions who are likely to encounter discrimination based
12 on race, creed, color, or national origin in restaurants, retail
13 stores, and places of amusement in the area where their 14 services are needed. Business organizations which seek to 15 avoid subjecting their employees to such discrimination and 16 to avoid the strife resulting therefrom are restricted in the 17 choice of location for their offices and plants. Such dis-
18 crimination thus reduces the mobility of the national labor
19 force and prevents the most effective allocation of national 20 resources, including the interstate movement of industries,
21 particularly in some of the areas of the Nation most in need
22 of industrial and commercial expansion and development.
23 (h) The discriminatory practices described above are in 24 all cases encouraged, fostered, or tolerated in some degree by 25 the governmental authorities of the States in which they

1 occur, which license or protect the businesses involved by
2 means of laws and ordinances and the activities of their
3 executive and judicial officers. Such discriminatory prac-
4 tices, particularly when their cumulative effect throughout
5 the Nation is considered, take on the character of action by
6 the States and therefore fall within the ambit of the equal
7 protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Con-
8 stitution of the United States.

9 (i) The burdens on and obstructions to commerce which 10 are described above can best be removed by invoking the 11 powers of Congress under the fourteenth amendment and
12 the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States
13 to prohibit discrimination based on race, color, religion, or 14 national origin in certain public establishments.

15 RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION IN PLACE OF PUBLIC
16 ACCOMMODATION

17 SEC. 202. (a) All persons shall be entitled, without
18 discrimination or segregation on account of race, color, reli-
19 gion, or national origin, to the full and equal enjoyment of 20 the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages and
21 accommodations of the following public establishments:

22 (1) any hotel, motel, or other public place engaged
23 in furnishing lodging to transient guests, including guests
24 from other States or traveling in interstate commerce;

25 (2) any motion picture house, theater, sports arena,

1 stadium, exhibition hall, or other public place of amuse-
2 ment or entertainment which customarily presents mo-
3 tion pictures, performing groups, athletic teams, exhibi-
4 tions, or other sources of entertainment which move in
5 interstate commerce; and

6 (3) any retail shop, department store, market,
7 drugstore, gasoline station, or other public place which
8 keeps goods for sale, any restaurant, lunchroom, lunch
9 counter, soda fountain, or other public place engaged in 10 selling food for consumption on the premises, and any
11 other establishment where goods, services, facilities,
12 privileges, advantages, or accommodations are held out
13 to the public for sale, use, rent, or hire, if—

14 (i) the goods, services, facilities, privileges,
15 advantages, or accommodations offered by any such
16 place or establishment are provided to a substantial
17 degree to interstate travelers,

18 (ii) a substantial portion of any goods held out
19 to the public by any such place or establishment
20 for sale, use, rent, or hire has moved in interstate
21 commerce,

22 (iii) the activities or operations of such place
23 or establishment otherwise substantially affect inter-
24 state travel or the interstate movement of goods in 25 commerce, or

1 (iv) such place or establishment is an integral
2 part of an establishment included under this sub-
3 section.
4 For the purpose of this subsection, the term "integral part"
5 means physically located on the premises occupied by an
6 establishment, or located contiguous to such premises and
7 owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by or
8 for the benefit of, or leased from the persons or business
9 entities which own, operate or control an establishment.
10 (b) The provisions of this title shall not apply to a
11 bona fide private club or other establishment not open to the 12 public, except to the extent that the facilities of such estab-
13 lishment are made available to the customers or patrons of 14 an establishment within the scope of subsection (a).
15 PROHIBITION AGAINST DENIAL OF OR INTERFERENCE WITH
16 THE RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION
17 SEC. 203. No person, whether acting under color of 18 law or otherwise, shall (a) withhold, deny, or attempt to 19 withhold or deny, or deprive or attempt to deprive, any 20 person of any right or privilege secured by section 202, or 21 (b) interfere or attempt to interfere with any right or 22 privilege secured by section 202, or (c) intimidate, threaten,
23 or coerce any person with a purpose of interfering with any 24 right or privilege secured by section 202, or (d) punish 25 or attempt to punish any person for exercising or attempting

1 to exercise any right or privilege secured by section 202,
2 or (e) incite or aid or abet any person to do any of the
3 foregoing.

4 CIVIL ACTION FOR PREVENTIVE RELIEF

5 SEC. 204. (a) Whenever any person has engaged or 6 there are reasonable grounds to believe that any person is
7 about to engage in any act or practice prohibited by section
8 203, a civil action for preventive relief, including an applica-
9 tion for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining
10 order, or other order, may be instituted (1) by the person
11 aggrieved, or (2) by the Attorney General for or in the 12 name of the United States if he certifies that he has received
13 a written complaint from the person aggrieved and that in 14 his judgment (i) the person aggrieved is unable to initiate 15 and maintain appropriate legal proceedings and (ii) the 16 purposes of this title will be materially furthered by the 17 filing of an action.

18 (b) In any action commenced pursuant to this title
19 by the person aggrieved, he shall if he prevails be allowed
20 a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.

21 (c) A person shall be deemed unable to initiate and
22 maintain appropriate legal proceedings within the meaning
23 of subsection (a) of this section when such person is unable,
24 either directly or through other interested persons or or-
25 ganizations, to bear the expense of the litigation or to obtain

1 effective legal representation; or when there is reason to
2 believe that the institution of such litigation by him would
3 jeopardize the employment or economic standing of, or
4 might result in injury or economic damage to, such person,
5 his family, or his property.

6 (d) In case of any complaint received by the Attorney
7 General alleging a violation of section 203 in any jurisdic-
8 tion where State or local laws or regulations appear to him
9 to forbid the act or practice involved, the Attorney General
10 shall notify the appropriate State and local officials and, upon 11 request, afford them a reasonable time to act under such 12 State or local laws or regulations before he institutes an
13 action. In the case of any other complaint alleging a viola-
14 tion of section 203, the Attorney General shall, before in-
15 stituting an action, refer the matter to the Community Rela-
16 tions Service established by title IV of this Act, which shall
17 endeavor to secure compliance by voluntary procedures. No
18 action shall be instituted by the Attorney General less than
19 thirty days after such referral unless the Community Rela-
20 tions Service notifies him that its efforts have been unsuccess-
21 ful. Compliance with the foregoing provisions of this
22 subsection shall not be required if the Attorney General shall 23 file with the court a certificate that the delay consequent
24 upon compliance with such provisions in the particular case

1 would adversely affect the interests of the United States, or
2 that, in the particular case, compliance with such provisions
3 would be fruitless.

4 JURISDICTION

5 SEC. 205. (a) The district courts of the United States
6 shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to
7 this title and shall exercise the same without regard to
8 whether the aggrieved party shall have exhausted any 9 administrative or other remedies that may be provided by 10 law.

11 (b) This title shall not preclude any individual or any
12 State or local agency from pursuing any remedy that may be
13 available under any Federal or State law, including any State
14 statute or ordinance requiring nondiscrimination in public
15 establishments or accommodations.

16 TITLE III—DESEGREGATION OF PUBLIC
17 EDUCATION

18 DEFINITIONS

19 SEC. 301. As used in this title—

20 (a) "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of 21 Education.

22 (b) "Desegregation" means the assignment of students
23 to public schools and within such schools without regard
24 to their race, color, religion, or national origin.

25 (c) "Public school" means any elementary or secondary

1 educational institution, and "public college" means any in-
2 stitution of higher education or any technical or vocational
3 school above the secondary school level, operated by a State,
4 subdivision of a State, or governmental agency within a
5 State, or operated wholly or predominantly from or through
6 the use of governmental funds or property, or funds or prop-
7 erty derived from a governmental source.

8 (d) "School board" means any agency or agencies
9 which administer a system of one or more public schools and
10 any other agency which is responsible for the assignment
11 of students to or within such system.

12 ASSISTANCE TO FACILITATE DESEGREGATION

13 SEC. 302. The Commissioner shall conduct investiga-
14 tions and make a report to the President and the Congress,
15 within two years of the enactment of this title, upon the 16 extent to which equal educational opportunities are denied
17 to individuals by reason of race, color, religion, or national 18 origin in public educational institutions at all levels in the 19 United States, its territories and possessions, and the District
20 of Columbia.

21 SEC. 303. (a) The Commissioner is authorized, upon
22 the application of any school board, State, municipality,
23 school district, or other governmental unit, to render tech-
24 nical assistance in the preparation, adoption, and implemen-
25 tation of plans for the desegregation of public schools or

1 other plans designed to deal with problems arising from racial
2 imbalance in public school systems. Such technical assist-
3 ance may, among other activities, include making available
4 to such agencies information regarding effective methods of
5 coping with special educational problems occasioned by de-
6 segregation or racial imbalance, and making available to
7 such agencies personnel of the Office of Education or other
8 persons specially equipped to advise and assist them in coping
9 with such problems.

10 (b) The Commissioner is authorized to arrange, through 11 grants or contracts, with institutions of higher education for 12 the operation of short-term or regular session institutes for 13 special training designed to improve the ability of teachers,
14 supervisors, counselors, and other elementary or secondary
15 school personnel to deal effectively with special educational
16 problems occasioned by desegregation or measures to adjust
17 racial imbalance in public school systems. Individuals who
18 attend such an institute may be paid stipends for the period
19 of their attendance at such institute in amounts specified by 20 the Commissioner in regulations, including allowances for 21 dependents and including allowances for travel to attend
22 such institute.

23 SEC. 304. (a) A school board which has failed to 24 achieve desegregation in all public schools within its juris-
25 diction, or a school board which is confronted with problems

1 arising from racial imbalance in the public schools within its
2 jurisdiction, may apply to the Commissioner, either directly
3 or through another governmental unit, for a grant or loan, as
4 hereinafter provided, for the purpose of aiding such school
5 board in carrying out desegregation or in dealing with prob-
6 lems of racial imbalance.

7 (b) The Commissioner may make a grant under this
8 section, upon application therefor, for—

9 (1) the cost of giving to teachers and other school
10 personnel inservice training in dealing with problems
11 incident to desegregation or racial imbalance in public
12 schools; and

13 (2) the cost of employing specialists in problems
14 incident to desegregation or racial imbalance and of 15 providing other assistance to develop understanding of 16 these problems by parents, schoolchildren, and the gen-
17 eral public.

18 (c) Each application made for a grant under this section
19 shall provide such detailed information and be in such form
20 as the Commissioner may require. Each grant under this 21 section shall be made in such amounts and on such terms and
22 conditions as the Commissioner shall prescribe, which may 23 include a condition that the applicant expend certain of its 24 own funds in specified amounts for the purpose for which

1 the grant is made. In determining whether to make a grant,
2 and in fixing the amount thereof and the terms and conditions
3 on which it will be made, the Commissioner shall take into
4 consideration the amount available for grants under this sec-
5 tion and the other applications which are pending before
6 him; the financial condition of the applicant and the other
7 resources available to it; the nature, extent, and gravity of
8 its problems incident to desegregation or racial imbalance,
9 and such other factors as he finds relevant.

10 (d) The Commissioner may make a loan under this sec-
11 tion, upon application, to any school board or to any local
12 government within the jurisdiction of which any school
13 board operates if the Commissioner finds that—

14 (1) part or all of the funds which would otherwise
15 be available to any such school board, either directly or 16 through the local government within whose jurisdiction
17 it operates, have been withheld or withdrawn by State
18 or local governmental action because of the actual or
19 prospective desegregation, in whole or in part, of one
20 or more schools under the jurisdiction of such school
21 board;

22 (2) such school board has authority to receive and
23 expend, or such local government has authority to re-
24 ceive and make available for the use of such board,
25 the proceeds of such loan; and

1 (3) the proceeds of such loan will be used for the
2 same purposes for which the funds withheld or with-
3 drawn would otherwise have been used.
4 (e) Each application made for a loan under this section
5 shall provide such detailed information and be in such form
6 as the Commissioner may require. Any loan under this
7 section shall be made upon such terms and conditions as the
8 Commissioner shall prescribe.
9 (f) The Commissioner may suspend or terminate assist-
10 ance under this section to any school board which, in his
11 judgment, is failing to comply in good faith with the terms
12 and conditions upon which the assistance was extended.
13 SEC. 305. Payments pursuant to a grant or contract
14 under this title may be made (after necessary adjustments
15 on account of previously made overpayments or under-
16 payments) in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in
17 such installments, and on such conditions, as the Com-
18 missioner may determine.
19 SEC. 306. The Commissioner shall prescribe rules and
20 regulations to carry out the provisions of sections 301
21 through 305 of this title.
22 SUITS BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
23 SEC. 307. (a) Whenever the Attorney General receives
24 a complaint—
25 (1) signed by a parent or group of parents to the

1 effect that his or their minor children, as members of a
2 class of persons similarly situated, are being deprived
3 of the equal protection of the laws by reason of the 4 failure of a school board to achieve desegregation, or
5 (2) signed by an individual, or his parent, to the 6 effect that he has been denied admission to or not per-
7 mitted to continue in attendance at a public college by
8 reason of race, color, religion, or national origin,
9 and the Attorney General certifies that in his judgment the 10 signer or signers of such complaint are unable to initiate 11 and maintain appropriate legal proceedings for relief and 12 that the institution of an action will materially further the 13 orderly progress of desegregation in public education, the 14 Attorney General is authorized to institute for or in the name
15 of the United States a civil action in a district court of the 16 United States against such parties and for such relief as 17 may be appropriate, and such court shall have and shall 18 exercise jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this
19 section. The Attorney General may implead as defendants
20 such additional parties as are or become necessary to the 21 grant of effective relief hereunder.
22 (b) A person or persons shall be deemed unable to
23 initiate and maintain appropriate legal proceedings within 24 the meaning of subsection (a) of this section when such 25 person or persons are unable, either directly or through other

1 interested persons or organizations, to bear the expense of
2 the litigation or to obtain effective legal representation; or
3 when there is reason to believe that the institution of such
4 litigation would jeopardize the employment or economic
5 standing of, or might result in injury or economic damage to,
6 such person or persons, their families, or their property.
7 (c) Whenever an action has been commenced in any
8 court of the United States seeking relief from the denial of 9 equal protection of the laws by reason of the failure of a
10 school board to achieve desegregation, or of a public college
11 to admit or permit the continued attendance of an individual,
12 the Attorney General for or in the name of the United States
13 may intervene in such action if he certifies that, in his judg-
14 ment, the plaintiffs are unable to maintain the action for any 15 of the reasons set forth in subsection (b) of this section, and 16 that such intervention will materially further the orderly
17 progress of desegregation in public education. In such an 18 action the United States shall be entitled to the same relief
19 as if it had instituted the action under subsection (a) of this 20 section.
21 (d) The term "parent" as used in this section includes
22 other legal representatives.
23 SEC. 308. Nothing in this title shall be construed to 24 deny, impair, or otherwise affect any right or authority
25 of the Attorney General or of the United States under exist-

1 ing law to institute or intervene in any action or proceeding.

2 SEC. 309. In any action or proceeding under this title
3 the United States shall be liable for costs the same as a
4 private person.

5 SEC. 310. Nothing in this title shall affect adversely the
6 right of any person to sue for or obtain relief in any court
7 against discrimination in public education.

8 TITLE IV—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMUNITY
9 RELATIONS SERVICE

10 SEC. 401. There is hereby established a Community
11 Relations Service (hereinafter referred to as the "Service"),
12 which shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed
13 by the President. The Director shall receive compensation
14 at a rate of $20,000 per year. The Director is authorized to 15 appoint such additional officers and employees as he deems
16 necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

17 SEC. 402. It shall be the function of the Service to pro-
18 vide assistance to communities and persons therein in resolv-
19 ing disputes, disagreements, or difficulties relating to dis-
20 criminatory practices based on race, color, or national origin
21 which impair the rights of persons in such communities under 22 the Constitution or laws of the United States or which affect
23 or may affect interstate commerce. The Service may offer
24 its services in cases of such disputes, disagreements, or diffi-
25 culties whenever in its judgment peaceful relations among

1 the citizens of the community involved are threatened
2 thereby, and it may offer its services either upon its own
3 motion or upon the request of an appropriate local official
4 or other interested person.

5 SEC. 403. (a) The Service shall whenever possible in 6 performing its functions under this title seek and utilize the 7 cooperation of the appropriate State or local agencies and
8 may seek and utilize the cooperation of any nonpublic agency
9 which it believes may be helpful.

10 (b) The activities of all officers and employees of the 11 Service in providing assistance under this title shall be con-
12 ducted in confidence and without publicity, and the Service
13 shall hold confidential any information acquired in the regu-
14 lar performance of its duties upon the understanding that it
15 would be so held. No officer or employee of the Service
16 shall engage in the performance of investigative or prose-
17 cuting functions for any department or agency in any litiga-
18 tion arising out of a dispute in which he acted on behalf of 19 the Service.

20 SEC. 404. Subject to the provisions of section 403 (b),
21 the Director shall, on or before January 31 of each year,
22 submit to the Congress a report of the activities of the Serv-
23 ice during the preceding fiscal year. Such report shall also 24 contain information with respect to the internal administra-
25 tion of the Service and may contain recommendations for

1 legislation necessary for improvements in such internal
2 administration.

3 TITLE V—COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

4 SEC. 501. Section 102 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
5 (42 U.S.C. 1975a; 71 Stat. 634) is amended to read as
6 follows:

7 "RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE COMMISSION HEARINGS

8 "SEC. 102. (a) The Chairman, or one designated by 9 him to act as Chairman at a hearing of the Commission, shall
10 announce in an opening statement the subject of the hearing.

11 "(b) A copy of the Commission's rules shall be made
12 available to the witness before the Commission.

13 "(c) Witnesses at the hearings may be accompanied by
14 their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concern-
15 ing their constitutional rights.

16 "(d) The Chairman or Acting Chairman may punish 17 breaches of order and decorum and unprofessional ethics on 18 the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the 19 hearings.

20 "(e) If the Commission determines that evidence or 21 testimony at any hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or 22 incriminate any person, it shall receive such evidence or 23 testimony or summary of such evidence or testimony in 24 executive session. In the event the Commission determines
25 that such evidence or testimony shall be given at a public

1 session, it shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily
2 to appear as a witness and receive and dispose of requests
3 from such person to subpena additional witnesses.

4 "(f) Except as provided in sections 102 and 105 (f) of
5 this Act, the Chairman shall receive and the Commission
6 shall dispose of requests to subpena additional witnesses.

7 "(g) No evidence or testimony or summary of evidence
8 or testimony taken in executive session may be released or
9 used in public sessions without the consent of the Commis-
10 sion. Whoever releases or uses in public without the con-
11 sent of the Commission such evidence or testimony taken
12 in executive session shall be fined not more than $1,000, or 13 imprisoned for not more than one year.

14 "(h) In the discretion of the Commission, witnesses
15 may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing
16 for inclusion in the record. The Commission is the sole
17 judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced
18 at its hearings.

19 "(i) Upon payment of the cost thereof, a witness may 20 obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public
21 session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized
22 by the Commission.

23 "(j) A witness attending any session of the Commis-
24 sion shall receive $6 for each day's attendance and for the 25 time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from

1 the same, and 10 cents per mile for going from and return-
2 ing to his place of residence. Witnesses who attend at 3 points so far removed from their respective residences as to
4 prohibit return thereto from day to day shall be entitled to
5 an additional allowance of $10 per day for expenses of 6 subsistence, including the time necessarily occupied in going
7 to and returning from the place of attendance. Mileage
8 payments shall be tendered to the witness upon service of
9 a subpena issued on behalf of the Commission or any sub-
10 committee thereof.

11 "(k) The Commission shall not issue any subpena for 12 the attendance and testimony of witnesses or for the pro-
13 duction of written or other matter which would require the 14 presence of the party subpenaed at a hearing to be held
15 outside of the State wherein the witness is found or resides
16 or is domiciled or transacts business, or has appointed an 17 agent for receipt of service of process except that, in any
18 event, the Commission may issue subpenas for the attendance
19 and testimony of witnesses and the production of written or 20 other matter at a hearing held within fifty miles of the 21 place where the witness is found or resides or is domiciled
22 or transacts business or has appointed an agent for receipt
23 of service of process."

1 SEC. 502. Section 103 (a) of the Civil Rights Act of
2 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975b (a); 71 Stat. 634) is amended to
3 read as follows:

4 "SEC. 103. (a) Each member of the Commission who
5 is not otherwise in the service of the Government of the 6 United States shall receive the sum of $75 per day for each
7 day spent in the work of the Commission, shall be paid
8 actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence
9 expenses when away from his usual place of residence, in
10 accordance with section 5 of the Administrative Expenses
11 Act of 1946, as amended (5 U.S.C. 73b-2; 60 Stat. 808)."

12 SEC. 503. Section 103 (b) of the Civil Rights Act of 13 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975 (b); 71 Stat. 634) is amended to
14 read as follows:

15 "(b) Each member of the Commission who is otherwise
16 in the service of the Government of the United States shall 17 serve without compensation in addition to that received for 18 such other service, but while engaged in the work of the 19 Commission shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per 20 diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from his
21 usual place of residence, in accordance with the provisions
22 of the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C.
23 835-42; 63 Stat. 166)."

1 SEC. 504. Section 104 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
2 (42 U.S.C. 1975c; 71 Stat. 635), as amended, is further
3 amended to read as follows:

4 "DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

5 "SEC. 104. (a) The Commission shall—

6 "(1) investigate allegations in writing under oath
7 or affirmation that certain citizens of the United States
8 are being deprived of their right to vote and have that 9 vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion, or
10 national origin; which writing, under oath or affirma-
11 tion, shall set forth the facts upon which such belief
12 or beliefs are based;

13 "(2) study and collect information concerning legal
14 developments constituting a denial of equal protection
15 of the laws under the Constitution;

16 "(3) appraise the laws and policies of the Federal
17 Government with respect to equal protection of the laws
18 under the Constitution; and

19 "(4) serve as a national clearinghouse for informa-
20 tion, and provide advice and technical assistance to
21 Government agencies, communities, industries, orga-
22 nizations, or individuals in respect to equal protection of 23 the laws, including but not limited to the fields of vot-
24 ing, education, housing, employment, the use of public
25 facilities, transportation, and the administration of justice.

1 The Commission may, for such periods as it deems neces-
2 sary, concentrate the performance of its duties on those spec-
3 ified in either paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) and may
4 further concentrate the performance of its duties under any
5 of such paragraphs on one or more aspects of the duties im-
6 posed therein.

7 "(b) The Commission shall submit interim reports to
8 the President and to the Congress at such times as either
9 the Commission or the President shall deem desirable, and
10 shall submit to the President and to the Congress a final
11 and comprehensive report of its activities, findings, and
12 recommendations not later than September 30, 1967.

13 "(c) Sixty days after the submission of its final report
14 and recommendations the Commission shall cease to exist."

15 SEC. 505. (a) Section 105(a) of the Civil Rights Act
16 of 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975(d); 71 Stat. 636) is amended
17 by striking out in the last sentence thereof "$50 per diem"
18 and inserting in lieu thereof "$75 per diem."

19 SEC. 506. Section 105(g) of the Civil Rights Act of 20 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975d(g); 71 Stat. 636) is amended to
21 read as follows:

22 "(g) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena,
23 any district court of the United States or the United States
24 court of any territory or possession, or the District Court
25 of the United States for the District of Columbia, within the

1 jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on or within the
2 jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or
3 refusal to obey is found or resides or is domiciled or transacts
4 business, or has appointed an agent for receipt of service of
5 process, upon application by the Attorney General of the 6 United States shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person
7 an order requiring such person to appear before the Com-
8 mission or a subcommittee thereof, there to produce evidence
9 if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter
10 under investigation; and any failure to obey such order of 11 the court may be punished by said court as a contempt
12 thereof."

13 SEC. 507. Section 105 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
14 (42 U.S.C. 1975d; 71 Stat. 636), as amended by section
15 401 of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (42 U.S.C. 1975d (h);
16 74 Stat. 89), is further amended by adding a new subsection
17 at the end to read as follows:

18 "(i) The Commission shall have the power to make
19 such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry
20 out the purposes of this Act."

21 TITLE VI—NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY
22 ASSISTED PROGRAMS

23 SEC. 601. Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary
24 in any law of the United States providing or authorizing
25 direct or indirect financial assistance for or in connection

1 with any program or activity by way of grant, contract, loan,
2 insurance, guaranty, or otherwise, no such law shall be inter-
3 preted as requiring that such financial assistance shall be
4 furnished in circumstances under which individuals partici-
5 pating in or benefiting from the program or activity are 6 discriminated against on the ground of race, color, religion,
7 or national origin or are denied participation or benefits
8 therein on the ground of race, color, religion, or national 9 origin. All contracts made in connection with any such pro-
10 gram or activity shall contain such conditions as the President
11 may prescribe for the purpose of assuring that there shall be 12 no discrimination in employment by any contractor or sub-13 contractor on the ground of race, color, religion, or national 14 origin.

15 TITLE VII—COMMISSION ON EQUAL EMPLOY-
16 MENT OPPORTUNITY

17 SEC. 701. The President is authorized to establish a 18 Commission to be known as the "Commission on Equal 19 Employment Opportunity," hereinafter referred to as the 20 Commission. It shall be the function of the Commission to 21 prevent discrimination against employees or applicants for 22 employment because of race, color, religion, or national ori-
23 gin by Government contractors and subcontractors, and by 24 contractors and subcontractors participating in programs or 25 activities in which direct or indirect financial assistance by

1 the United States Government is provided by way of grant,
2 contract, loan, insurance, guaranty, or otherwise. The Com-
3 mission shall have such powers to effectuate the purposes of 4 this title as may be conferred upon it by the President. The 5 President may also confer upon the Commission such powers
6 as he deems appropriate to prevent discrimination on the 7 ground of race, color, religion, or national origin in Govern-
8 ment employment.

9 SEC. 702. The Commission shall consist of the Vice Pres-
10 ident, who shall serve as Chairman, the Secretary of Labor,
11 who shall serve as Vice Chairman, and not more than fifteen 12 other members appointed by and serving at the pleasure of 13 the President. Members of the Commission, while attend-
14 ing meetings or conferences of the Commission or otherwise
15 serving at the request of the Commission, shall be entitled to 16 receive compensation at a rate to be fixed by it but not ex-
17 ceeding $75 per diem, including travel time, and while 18 away from their homes or regular places of business they 19 may be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu 20 of subsistence, as authorized by section 73b–2 of title 5 of 21 the United States Code for persons in the Government serv-
22 ice employed intermittently.

23 SEC. 703. (a) There shall be an Executive Vice Chair-
24 man of the Commission who shall be appointed by the Presi-

1 dent and who shall be ex officio a member of the Commis-
2 sion. The Executive Vice Chairman shall assist the Chair-
3 man, the Vice Chairman, and the members of the Com-
4 mission and shall be responsible for carrying out the orders
5 and recommendations of the Commission and for performing 6 such other functions as the Commission may direct.

7 (b) Section 106 (a) of the Federal Executive Pay Act
8 of 1956, as amended (5 U.S.C. 2205 (a)), is further
9 amended by adding the following clause thereto:

10 "(52) Executive Vice Chairman, Commission on Equal
11 Employment Opportunity."

12 (c) The Commission is authorized to appoint, subject
13 to the civil service laws and regulations, such other personnel
14 as may be necessary to enable it to carry out its functions
15 and duties, and to fix their compensation in accordance with 16 the Classification Act of 1949, and is authorized to procure
17 services as authorized by section 14 of the Act of August 2,
18 1946 (60 Stat. 810; 5 U.S.C. 55a), but at rates for individ-
19 uals not in excess of $50 a day.

20 TITLE VIII—MISCELLANEOUS

21 SEC. 801. There are hereby authorized to be appropri-
22 ated such sums as are necessary to carry out the provisions
23 of this Act.

24 SEC. 802. If any provision of this Act or the applica-

1 tion thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid,
2 the remainder of the Act and the application of the provi-
3 sion to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected
4 thereby.

88TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

S. 1731

A BILL

To enforce the constitutional right to vote, to confer jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to provide injunctive relief against discrimination in public accommodations, to authorize the Attorney General to institute suits to protect constitutional rights in education, to establish a Community Relations Service, to extend for four years the Commission on Civil Rights, to prevent discrimination in federally assisted programs, to establish a Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and for other purposes.

By Mr. MANSFIELD, Mr. KUCHEL, Mr. HUMPHREY, Mr. KEATING, Mr. MORSE, Mr. SCOTT, Mr. DOUGLAS, Mr. BEALL, Mr. SYMINGTON, Mr. FONG, Mr. CLARK, Mr. JAVITS, Mr. HART, Mr. CASE, Mr. YOUNG of Ohio, Mr. COOPER, Mr. DODD, Mr. BAYH, Mr. BREWSTER, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. ENGLE, Mr. GRUENING, Mr. HARTKE, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. JACKSON, Mr. KENNEDY, Mr. LONG of Missouri, Mr. MAGNUSON, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. MCGOVERN, Mr. MCINTYRE, Mr. MCNAMARA, Mr. METCALF, Mr. MUSKIE, Mr. NELSON, Mrs. NEUBERGER, Mr. PASTORE, Mr. PELL, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. RANDOLPH, Mr. RIBICOFF, Mr. WILLIAMS of New Jersey, Mr. DOMINICK, Mr. CHURCH, Mr. MOSS, and Mr. MCGEE.

JUNE 19, 1963

Read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

Politics Gen.

88TH CONGRESS
1ST SESSION

H. R. 7152

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

JUNE 20, 1963

Mr. CELLER introduced the following bill; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

A BILL

To enforce the constitutional right to vote, to confer jurisdiction upon the district courts of the United States to provide injunctive relief against discrimination in public accommodations, to authorize the Attorney General to institute suits to protect constitutional rights in education, to establish a Community Relations Service, to extend for four years the Commission on Civil Rights, to prevent discrimination in federally assisted programs, to establish a Commission on Equal Employment Opportunity, and for other purposes.

1 Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representa-
2 tives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,
3 That this Act may be cited as the "Civil Rights Act of 4 1963."

1 SEC. 2. (a) Discrimination by reason of race, color,
2 religion, or national origin is incompatible with the concepts
3 of liberty and equality to which the Government of the
4 United States is dedicated. In recent years substantial steps
5 have been taken toward eliminating such discrimination
6 throughout the Nation. Nevertheless, many citizens of the 7 United States, solely because of their race, color, or national
8 origin, are denied rights and privileges accorded to other
9 citizens and thereby subjected to inconveniences, humilia-
10 tions, and hardships. Such discrimination impairs the gen-
11 eral welfare of the United States by preventing the fullest
12 development of the capabilities of the whole citizenry and by 13 limiting participation in the economic, political, and cultural 14 life of the Nation.

15 (b) It is hereby declared to be the policy of this Act
16 to promote the general welfare by eliminating discrimina-
17 tion based on race, color, religion, or national origin in 18 voting, education, and public accommodations through the
19 exercise by Congress of the powers conferred upon it to 20 regulate the manner of holding Federal elections, to enforce
21 the provisions of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments,
22 to regulate commerce among the several States, and to
23 make laws necessary and proper to execute the powers
24 conferred upon it by the Constitution.

25 (c) It is also desirable that disputes or disagreements

1 arising in any community from the discriminatory treatment
2 of individuals for reasons of race, color, or national origin
3 shall be resolved on a voluntary basis, without hostility or
4 litigation. Accordingly, it is the further purpose of this Act
5 to promote this end by providing machinery for the volun-
6 tary settlement of such disputes and disagreements.

7 TITLE I—VOTING RIGHTS

8 SEC. 101. Section 2004 of the Revised Statutes (42
9 U.S.C. 1971), as amended by section 131 of the Civil
10 Rights Act of 1957 (71 Stat. 637), and as further amended
11 by section 601 of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (74 Stat.
12 90), is further amended as follows:

13 (a) Insert "1" after "(a)" in subsection (a) and add at
14 the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraphs:

15 "(2) No person acting under color of law shall—

16 "(A) in determining whether any individual is
17 qualified under State law to vote in any Federal election
18 apply any standard, practice, or procedure different from 19 the standards, practices, or procedures applied to in-
20 dividuals similarly situated who have been found by
21 State officials to be qualified to vote.

22 "(B) deny the right of any individual to vote in 23 any Federal election because of an error or omission of 24 such individual on any record or paper relating to
25 any application, registration, payment of poll tax, or

1 other act requisite to voting, if such error or omission is
2 not material in determining whether such individual is
3 qualified under State law to vote in such election; or
4 "(C) employ any literacy test as a qualification for
5 voting in any Federal election unless (i) such test is
6 administered to each individual wholly in writing and
7 (ii) a certified copy of the test and of the answers
8 given by the individual is furnished to him within
9 twenty-five days of the submission of his written request
10 made within the period of time during which records
11 and papers are required to be retained and preserved
12 pursuant to title III of the Civil Rights Act of 1960
13 (42 U.S.C. 1974–74e; 74 Stat. 88).
14 "(3) For purposes of this subsection—
15 "(A) the term 'vote' shall have the same meaning
16 as in subsection (e) of this section;
17 "(B) the words 'Federal election' shall have the 18 same meaning as in subsection (f) of this section; and
19 "(C) the phrase 'literacy test' includes any test
20 of the ability to read, write, understand, or interpret
21 any matter."
22 (b) Insert immediately following the period at the end
23 of the first sentence of subsection (c) the following new 24 sentence: "If in any such proceeding literacy is a relevant
25 fact it shall be presumed that any person who has not been

1 adjudged an incompetent and who has completed the sixth
2 grade in a public school in, or a private school accredited
3 by, any State or territory or the District of Columbia where
4 instruction is carried on predominantly in the English lan-
5 guage, possesses sufficient literacy, comprehension, and intel-
6 ligence to vote in any Federal election as defined in
7 subsection (f) of this section."

8 (c) Add the following subsection "(f)" and designate
9 the present subsection "(f)" as subsection "(g)":

10 "(f) Whenever in any proceeding instituted pursuant
11 to subsection (c) the complaint requests a finding of a pat-
12 tern or practice pursuant to subsection (e), and such com-
13 plaint, or a motion filed within twenty days after the effective
14 date of this Act in the case of any proceeding which is pend-
15 ing before a district court on such effective date, (1) is
16 signed by the Attorney General (or in his absence the Act-
17 ing Attorney General), and (2) alleges that in the affected
18 area fewer than 15 per centum of the total number of voting
19 age persons of the same race as the persons alleged in the 20 complaint to have been discriminated against are registered
21 (or otherwise recorded as qualified to vote), any person
22 resident within the affected area who is of the same race
23 as the persons alleged to have been discriminated against
24 shall be entitled, upon his application therefor, to an order
25 declaring him qualified to vote, upon proof that at any elec-

1 tion or elections (1) he is qualified under State law to vote,
2 and (2) he has since the filing of the proceeding under sub-
3 section (c) been (A) deprived of or denied under color of
4 law the opportunity to register to vote or otherwise to
5 qualify to vote, or (B) found not qualified to vote by any
6 person acting under color of law. Such order shall be
7 effective as to any Federal or State election held within the
8 longest period for which such applicant could have been
9 registered or otherwise qualified under State law at which
10 the applicant's qualifications would under State law entitle
11 him to vote: Provided, That in the event it is determined
12 upon final disposition of the proceeding, including any re-
13 view, that no pattern or practice of deprivation of any right
14 secured by subsection (a) exists, the order shall thereafter
15 no longer qualify the applicant to vote in any subsequent 16 election.

17 "Notwithstanding any inconsistent provision of State
18 law or the action of any State officer or court, an applicant
19 so declared qualified to vote shall be permitted to vote as 20 provided herein. The Attorney General shall cause to be
21 transmitted certified copies of any order declaring a person
22 qualified to vote to the appropriate election officers. The re-
23 fusal by any such officer with notice of such order to permit
24 any person so qualified to vote at an appropriate election
25 shall constitute contempt of court.

1 "An application for an order pursuant to this subsection
2 shall be heard within ten days, and the execution of any order
3 disposing of such application shall not be stayed if the effect
4 of such stay would be to delay the effectiveness of the order
5 beyond the date of any election at which the applicant would
6 otherwise be enabled to vote.

7 "The court may appoint one or more persons, to be
8 known as temporary voting referees, to receive applications
9 pursuant to this subsection and to take evidence and report to
10 the court findings as to whether at any election or elections
11 (1) any applicant entitled under this subsection to apply for 12 an order declaring him qualified to vote is qualified under 13 State law to vote, and (2) he has since the filing of the 14 proceeding under subsection (c) been (A) deprived of or 15 denied under color of law the opportunity to register to vote
16 or otherwise to qualify to vote, or (B) found not qualified
17 to vote by any person acting under color of law. The pro-
18 cedure for processing applications under this subsection and
19 for the entry of orders shall be the same as that provided for 20 in the fourth and fifth paragraphs of subsection (e).

21 "In appointing a temporary voting referee the court
22 shall make its selection from a panel provided by the judicial
23 conference of the circuit. Any temporary voting referee
24 shall be a resident and a qualified voter of the State in 25 which he is to serve. He shall subscribe to the oath of office

1 required by section 1757 of the Revised Statutes (5 U.S.C.
2 16), and shall to the extent not inconsistent herewith have
3 all the powers conferred upon a master by rule 53 (c) of the 4 Federal Rules of Civil Procedure. The compensation to be
5 allowed any persons appointed by the district court pursuant
6 to this subsection shall be fixed by the court and shall be
7 payable by the United States. In the event that the district
8 court shall appoint a retired officer or employee of the United 9 States to serve as a temporary voting referee, such officer or
10 employee shall continue to receive, in addition to any com-
11 pensation for services rendered pursuant to this subsection, all
12 retirement benefits to which he may otherwise be entitled.
13 "The court or temporary voting referee shall entertain
14 applications and the court shall issue orders pursuant to this
15 subsection until final disposition of the proceeding under sub-
16 section (c), including any review, or until the finding of a
17 pattern or practice pursuant to subsection (e), whichever
18 shall first occur. Applications pursuant to this subsection
19 shall be determined expeditiously, and this subsection shall 20 in no way be construed as a limitation upon the existing
21 powers of the court.
22 "When used in this subsection, the words 'Federal elec-
23 tion' shall mean any general, special, or primary election
24 held solely or in part for the purpose of electing or selecting
25 any candidate for the office of President, Vice President,

1 presidential elector, Member of the Senate, or Member of
2 the House of Representatives; the words 'State election'
3 shall mean any other general, special, or primary election
4 held solely or in part for the purpose of electing or selecting
5 any candidate for public office; the words 'affected area'
6 shall mean that county, parish, or similar subdivision of the 7 State in which the laws of the State relating to voting
8 are or have been administered by a person who is a defend-
9 ant in the proceeding instituted under subsection (c) on
10 the date the original complaint is filed; and the words
11 'voting age persons' shall mean those persons who meet the 12 age requirements of State law for voting."
13 (d) Add the following subsection "(h)":
14 "(h) In any civil action brought in any district court
15 of the United States under this section or title III of the 16 Civil Rights Act of 1960 (42 U.S.C. 1974–74e; 74 Stat.
17 88) wherein the United States or the Attorney General
18 is plaintiff, it shall be the duty of the chief judge of the 19 district (or in his absence, the acting chief judge) in which 20 the case is pending immediately to designate a judge in such 21 district to hear and determine the case. In the event that
22 no judge in the district is available to hear and determine
23 the case, the chief judge of the district, or the acting chief
24 judge, as the case may be, shall certify this fact to the chief

1 judge of the circuit (or in his absence, the acting chief judge)
2 who shall then designate a district or circuit judge of the
3 circuit to hear and determine the case.

4 "It shall be the duty of the judge designated pursuant
5 to this section to assign the case for hearing at the earliest
6 practicable date and to cause the case to be in every way
7 expedited."

8 TITLE II—INJUNCTIVE RELIEF AGAINST DIS-
9 CRIMINATION IN PUBLIC ACCOMMODATIONS

10 FINDINGS

11 SEC. 201. (a) The American people have become in-
12 creasingly mobile during the last generation, and millions of 13 American citizens travel each year from State to State by 14 rail, air, bus, automobile, and other means. A substantial
15 number of such travelers are members of minority racial and 16 religious groups. These citizens, particularly Negroes, are
17 subjected in many places to discrimination and segregation,
18 and they are frequently unable to obtain the goods and serv-
19 ices available to other interstate travelers.

20 (b) Negroes and members of other minority groups
21 who travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain adequate
22 lodging accommodations during their travels, with the result
23 that they may be compelled to stay at hotels or motels of 24 poor and inferior quality, travel great distances from their
25 normal routes to find adequate accommodations, or make

1 detailed arrangements for lodging far in advance of scheduled
2 interstate travel.

3 (c) Negroes and members of other minority groups
4 who travel interstate are frequently unable to obtain food
5 service at convenient places along their routes, with the
6 result that many are dissuaded from traveling interstate,
7 while others must travel considerable distances from their in-
8 tended routes in order to obtain adequate food service.

9 (d) Goods, services, and persons in the amusement and
10 entertainment industries commonly move in interstate com-
11 merce, and the entire American people benefit from the in-
12 creased cultural and recreational opportunities afforded
13 thereby. Practices of audience discrimination and segrega-
14 tion artificially restrict the number of persons to whom the 15 interstate amusement and entertainment industries may offer
16 their goods and services. The burdens imposed on inter-
17 state commerce by such practices and the obstructions to the 18 free flow of commerce which result therefrom are serious
19 and substantial.

20 (e) Retail establishments in all States of the Union
21 purchase a wide variety and a large volume of goods from
22 business concerns located in other States and in foreign
23 nations. Discriminatory practices in such establishments,
24 which in some instances have led to the withholding of 25 patronage by those affected by such practices, inhibit and

1 restrict the normal distribution of goods in the interstate
2 market.

3 (f) Fraternal, religious, scientific, and other organiza-
4 tions engaged in interstate operations are frequently dis-
5 suaded from holding conventions in cities which they would
6 otherwise select because the public facilities in such cities
7 are either not open to all members of racial or religious
8 minority groups or are available only on a segregated basis.

9 (g) Business organizations are frequently hampered in
10 obtaining the services of skilled workers and persons in the 11 professions who are likely to encounter discrimination based
12 on race, creed, color, or national origin in restaurants, retail
13 stores, and places of amusement in the area where their 14 services are needed. Business organizations which seek to 15 avoid subjecting their employees to such discrimination and
16 to avoid the strife resulting therefrom are restricted in the
17 choice of location for their offices and plants. Such dis-
18 crimination thus reduces the mobility of the national labor
19 force and prevents the most effective allocation of national 20 resources, including the interstate movement of industries,
21 particularly in some of the areas of the Nation most in need
22 of industrial and commercial expansion and development.

23 (h) The discriminatory practices described above are in 24 all cases encouraged, fostered, or tolerated in some degree by 25 the governmental authorities of the States in which they

1 occur, which license or protect the businesses involved by
2 means of laws and ordinances and the activities of their
3 executive and judicial officers. Such discriminatory prac-
4 tices, particularly when their cumulative effect throughout
5 the Nation is considered, take on the character of action by
6 the States and therefore fall within the ambit of the equal
7 protection clause of the fourteenth amendment to the Con-
8 stitution of the United States.

9 (i) The burdens on and obstructions to commerce which
10 are described above can best be removed by invoking the 11 powers of Congress under the fourteenth amendment and
12 the commerce clause of the Constitution of the United States
13 to prohibit discrimination based on race, color, religion, or 14 national origin in certain public establishments.

15 RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION IN PLACES OF PUBLIC
16 ACCOMMODATION

17 SEC. 202. (a) All persons shall be entitled, without
18 discrimination or segregation on account of race, color, reli-
19 gion, or national origin, to the full and equal enjoyment of 20 the goods, services, facilities, privileges, advantages and
21 accommodations of the following public establishments:

22 (1) any hotel, motel, or other public place engaged
23 in furnishing lodging to transient guests, including guests
24 from other States or traveling in interstate commerce;

25 (2) any motion picture house, theater, sports arena

1 stadium, exhibition hall, or other public place of amuse-
2 ment or entertainment which customarily presents mo-
3 tion pictures, performing groups, athletic teams, exhibi-
4 tions, or other sources of entertainment which move in
5 interstate commerce; and

6 (3) any retail shop, department store, market,
7 drugstore, gasoline station, or other public place which
8 keeps goods for sale, any restaurant, lunchroom, lunch
9 counter, soda fountain, or other public place engaged in 10 selling food for consumption on the premises, and any
11 other establishment where goods, services, facilities,
12 privileges, advantages, or accommodations are held out
13 to the public for sale, use, rent, or hire, if—

14 (i) the goods, services, facilities, privileges,
15 advantages, or accommodations offered by any such
16 place or establishment are provided to a substantial
17 degree to interstate travelers,

18 (ii) a substantial portion of any goods held out
19 to the public by any such place or establishment
20 for sale, use, rent, or hire has moved in interstate
21 commerce,

22 (iii) the activities or operations of such place
23 or establishment otherwise substantially affect inter-
24 state travel or the interstate movement of goods in 25 commerce, or

1 (iv) such place or establishment is an integral
2 part of an establishment included under this sub-
3 section.
4 For the purpose of this subsection, the term "integral part"
5 means physically located on the premises occupied by an
6 establishment, or located contiguous to such premises and
7 owned, operated, or controlled, directly or indirectly, by or
8 for the benefit of, or leased from the persons or business
9 entities which own, operate or control an establishment.
10 (b) The provisions of this title shall not apply to a
11 bona fide private club or other establishment not open to the
12 public, except to the extent that the facilities of such estab-
13 lishment are made available to the customers or patrons of 14 an establishment within the scope of subsection (a).
15 PROHIBITION AGAINST DENIAL OF OR INTERFERENCE WITH
16 THE RIGHT TO NONDISCRIMINATION
17 SEC. 203. No person, whether acting under color of 18 law or otherwise, shall (a) withhold, deny, or attempt to 19 withhold or deny, or deprive or attempt to deprive, any 20 person of any right or privilege secured by section 202, or 21 (b) interfere or attempt to interfere with any right or 22 privilege secured by section 202, or (c) intimidate, threaten,
23 or coerce any person with a purpose of interfering with any 24 right or privilege secured by section 202, or (d) punish 25 or attempt to punish any person for exercising or attempting

1 to exercise any right or privilege secured by section 202,
2 or (e) incite or aid or abet any person to do any of the
3 foregoing.

4 CIVIL ACTION FOR PREVENTIVE RELIEF

5 SEC. 204. (a) Whenever any person has engaged or
6 there are reasonable grounds to believe that any person is
7 about to engage in any act or practice prohibited by section
8 203, a civil action for preventive relief, including an applica-
9 tion for a permanent or temporary injunction, restraining
10 order, or other order, may be instituted (1) by the person
11 aggrieved, or (2) by the Attorney General for or in the 12 name of the United States if he certifies that he has received
13 a written complaint from the person aggrieved and that in
14 his judgment (i) the person aggrieved is unable to initiate 15 and maintain appropriate legal proceedings and (ii) the 16 purposes of this title will be materially furthered by the 17 filing of an action.

18 (b) In any action commenced pursuant to this title
19 by the person aggrieved, he shall if he prevails be allowed
20 a reasonable attorney's fee as part of the costs.

21 (c) A person shall be deemed unable to initiate and
22 maintain appropriate legal proceedings within the meaning
23 of subsection (a) of this section when such person is unable,
24 either directly or through other interested persons or or-
25 ganizations, to bear the expense of the litigation or to obtain

1 effective legal representation; or when there is reason to
2 believe that the institution of such litigation by him would
3 jeopardize the employment or economic standing of, or
4 might result in injury or economic damage to, such person,
5 his family, or his property.

6 (d) In case of any complaint received by the Attorney
7 General alleging a violation of section 203 in any jurisdic-
8 tion where State or local laws or regulations appear to him
9 to forbid the act or practice involved, the Attorney General
10 shall notify the appropriate State and local officials and, upon
11 request, afford them a reasonable time to act under such 12 State or local laws or regulations before he institutes an
13 action. In the case of any other complaint alleging a viola-
14 tion of section 203, the Attorney General shall, before in-
15 stituting an action, refer the matter to the Community Rela-
16 tions Service established by title IV of this Act, which shall
17 endeavor to secure compliance by voluntary procedures. No
18 action shall be instituted by the Attorney General less than
19 thirty days after such referral unless the Community Rela-
20 tions Service notifies him that its efforts have been unsuccess-
21 ful. Compliance with the foregoing provisions of this
22 subsection shall not be required if the Attorney General shall
23 file with the court a certificate that the delay consequent
24 upon compliance with such provisions in the particular case

1 would adversely affect the interests of the United States, or
2 that, in the particular case, compliance with such provisions
3 would be fruitless.

4 JURISDICTION

5 SEC. 205. (a) The district courts of the United States
6 shall have jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to
7 this title and shall exercise the same without regard to
8 whether the aggrieved party shall have exhausted any 9 administrative or other remedies that may be provided by 10 law.

11 (b) This title shall not preclude any individual or any
12 State or local agency from pursuing any remedy that may be
13 available under any Federal or State law, including any State
14 statute or ordinance requiring nondiscrimination in public
15 establishments or accommodations.

16 TITLE III—DESEGREGATION OF PUBLIC
17 EDUCATION

18 DEFINITIONS

19 SEC. 301. As used in this title—

20 (a) "Commissioner" means the Commissioner of 21 Education.

22 (b) "Desegregation" means the assignment of students
23 to public schools and within such schools without regard
24 to their race, color, religion, or national origin.

25 (c) "Public school" means any elementary or secondary

1 educational institution, and "public college" means any in-
2 stitution of higher education or any technical or vocational
3 school above the secondary school level, operated by a State,
4 subdivision of a State, or governmental agency within a
5 State, or operated wholly or predominantly from or through
6 the use of governmental funds or property, or funds or prop-
7 erty derived from a governmental source.

8 (d) "School board" means any agency or agencies
9 which administer a system of one or more public schools and
10 any other agency which is responsible for the assignment
11 of students to or within such system.

12 ASSISTANCE TO FACILITATE DESEGREGATION

13 SEC. 302. The Commissioner shall conduct investiga-
14 tions and make a report to the President and the Congress,
15 within two years of the enactment of this title, upon the
16 extent to which equal educational opportunities are denied
17 to individuals by reason of race, color, religion or national 18 origin in public educational institutions at all levels in the 19 United States, its territories and possessions, and the District
20 of Columbia.

21 SEC. 303. (a) The Commissioner is authorized, upon
22 the application of any school board, State, municipality,
23 school district, or other governmental unit, to render tech-
24 nical assistance in the preparation, adoption, and implemen-
25 tation of plans for the desegregation of public schools or

1 other plans designed to deal with problems arising from racial
2 imbalance in public school systems. Such technical assist-
3 ance may, among other activities, include making available
4 to such agencies information regarding effective methods of
5 coping with special educational problems occasioned by de-
6 segregation or racial imbalance, and making available to
7 such agencies personnel of the Office of Education or other
8 persons specially equipped to advise and assist them in coping
9 with such problems.

10 (b) The Commissioner is authorized to arrange, through
11 grants or contracts, with institutions of higher education for 12 the operation of short-term or regular session institutes for
13 special training designed to improve the ability of teachers,
14 supervisors, counselors, and other elementary or secondary
15 school personnel to deal effectively with special educational
16 problems occasioned by desegregation or measures to adjust
17 racial imbalance in public school systems. Individuals who
18 attend such an institute may be paid stipends for the period
19 of their attendance at such institute in amounts specified by 20 the Commissioner in regulations, including allowances for 21 dependents and including allowances for travel to attend
22 such institute.

23 SEC. 304. (a) A school board which has failed to
24 achieve desegregation in all public schools within its juris-
25 diction, or a school board which is confronted with problems

1 arising from racial imbalance in the public schools within its
2 jurisdiction, may apply to the Commissioner, either directly
3 or through another governmental unit, for a grant or loan, as
4 hereinafter provided, for the purpose of aiding such school
5 board in carrying out desegregation or in dealing with prob-
6 lems of racial imbalance.

7 (b) The Commissioner may make a grant under this
8 section, upon application therefor, for—

9 (1) the cost of giving to teachers and other school
10 personnel inservice training in dealing with problems
11 incident to desegregation or racial imbalance in public
12 schools; and

13 (2) the cost of employing specialists in problems
14 incident to desegregation or racial imbalance and of 15 providing other assistance to develop understanding of 16 these problems by parents, schoolchildren, and the gen-
17 eral public.

18 (c) Each application made for a grant under this section
19 shall provide such detailed information and be in such form
20 as the Commissioner may require. Each grant under this 21 section shall be made in such amounts and on such terms and
22 conditions as the Commissioner shall prescribe, which may 23 include a condition that the applicant expend certain of its 24 own funds in specified amounts for the purpose for which

1 the grant is made. In determining whether to make a grant,
2 and in fixing the amount thereof and the terms and conditions
3 on which it will be made, the Commissioner shall take into
4 consideration the amount available for grants under this sec-
5 tion and the other applications which are pending before
6 him; the financial condition of the applicant and the other
7 resources available to it; the nature, extent, and gravity of
8 its problems incident to desegregation or racial imbalance,
9 and such other factors as he finds relevant.

10 (d) The Commissioner may make a loan under this sec-
11 tion, upon application, to any school board or to any local
12 government within the jurisdiction of which any school
13 board operates if the Commissioner finds that—

14 (1) part or all of the funds which would otherwise
15 be available to any such school board, either directly or
16 through the local government within whose jurisdiction
17 it operates, have been withheld or withdrawn by State
18 or local governmental action because of the actual or
19 prospective desegregation, in whole or in part, of one
20 or more schools under the jurisdiction of such school
21 board;

22 (2) such school board has authority to receive and
23 expend, or such local government has authority to re-
24 ceive and make available for the use of such board,
25 the proceeds of such loan; and

1 (3) the proceeds of such loan will be used for the
2 same purposes for which the funds withheld or with-
3 drawn would otherwise have been used.
4 (e) Each application made for a loan under this section
5 shall provide such detailed information and be in such form
6 as the Commissioner may require. Any loan under this
7 section shall be made upon such terms and conditions as the
8 Commissioner shall prescribe.
9 (f) The Commissioner may suspend or terminate assist-
10 ance under this section to any school board which, in his
11 judgment, is failing to comply in good faith with the terms
12 and conditions upon which the assistance was extended.
13 SEC. 305. Payments pursuant to a grant or contract
14 under this title may be made (after necessary adjustments
15 on account of previously made overpayments or under-
16 payments) in advance or by way of reimbursement, and in
17 such installments, and on such conditions, as the Com-
18 missioner may determine.
19 SEC. 306. The Commissioner shall prescribe rules and
20 regulations to carry out the provisions of sections 301
21 through 305 of this title.
22 SUITS BY THE ATTORNEY GENERAL
23 SEC. 307. (a) Whenever the Attorney General receives
24 a complaint—
25 (1) signed by a parent or group of parents to the

1 effect that his or their minor children, as members of a
2 class of persons similarly situated, are being deprived
3 of the equal protection of the laws by reason of the 4 failure of a school board to achieve desegregation, or
5 (2) signed by an individual, or his parent, to the 6 effect that he has been denied admission to or not per-
7 mitted to continue in attendance at a public college by
8 reason of race, color, religion, or national origin,
9 and the Attorney General certifies that in his judgment the
10 signer or signers of such complaint are unable to initiate 11 and maintain appropriate legal proceedings for relief and
12 that the institution of an action will materially further the 13 orderly progress of desegregation in public education, the 14 Attorney General is authorized to institute for or in the name
15 of the United States a civil action in a district court of the 16 United States against such parties and for such relief as 17 may be appropriate, and such court shall have and shall 18 exercise jurisdiction of proceedings instituted pursuant to this
19 section. The Attorney General may implead as defendants
20 such additional parties as are or become necessary to the
21 grant of effective relief hereunder.
22 (b) A person or persons shall be deemed unable to
23 initiate and maintain appropriate legal proceedings within 24 the meaning of subsection (a) of this section when such
25 person or persons are unable, either directly or through other

1 interested persons or organizations, to bear the expense of
2 the litigation or to obtain effective legal representation; or
3 when there is reason to believe that the institution of such
4 litigation would jeopardize the employment or economic
5 standing of, or might result in injury or economic damage to,
6 such person or persons, their families, or their property.
7 (c) Whenever an action has been commenced in any
8 court of the United States seeking relief from the denial of 9 equal protection of the laws by reason of the failure of a
10 school board to achieve desegregation, or of a public college
11 to admit or permit the continued attendance of an individual,
12 the Attorney General for or in the name of the United States
13 may intervene in such action if he certifies that, in his judg-
14 ment, the plaintiffs are unable to maintain the action for any 15 of the reasons set forth in subsection (b) of this section, and
16 that such intervention will materially further the orderly
17 progress of desegregation in public education. In such an 18 action the United States shall be entitled to the same relief
19 as if it had instituted the action under subsection (a) of this 20 section.
21 (d) The term "parent" as used in this section includes
22 other legal representatives.
23 SEC. 308. Nothing in this title shall be construed to 24 deny, impair, or otherwise affect any right or authority
25 of the Attorney General or of the United States under exist-

1 ing law to institute or intervene in any action or proceeding.

2 SEC. 309. In any action or proceeding under this title

3 the United States shall be liable for costs the same as a

4 private person.

5 SEC. 310. Nothing in this title shall affect adversely the

6 right of any person to sue for or obtain relief in any court

7 against discrimination in public education.

8 TITLE IV—ESTABLISHMENT OF COMMUNITY

9 RELATIONS SERVICE

10 SEC. 401. There is hereby established a Community

11 Relations Service (hereinafter referred to as the "Service"),

12 which shall be headed by a Director who shall be appointed

13 by the President. The Director shall receive compensation

14 at a rate of $20,000 per year. The Director is authorized to

15 appoint such additional officers and employees as he deems

16 necessary to carry out the purposes of this title.

17 SEC. 402. It shall be the function of the Service to pro-

18 vide assistance to communities and persons therein in resolv-

19 ing disputes, disagreements, or difficulties relating to dis-

20 criminatory practices based on race, color, or national origin

21 which impair the rights of persons in such communities under

22 the Constitution or laws of the United States or which affect

23 or may affect interstate commerce. The Service may offer

24 its services in cases of such disputes, disagreements, or diffi-

25 culties whenever in its judgment peaceful relations among

1 the citizens of the community involved are threatened
2 thereby, and it may offer its services either upon its own
3 motion or upon the request of an appropriate local official
4 or other interested person.

5 SEC. 403. (a) The Service shall whenever possible in
6 performing its functions under this title seek and utilize the
7 cooperation of the appropriate State or local agencies and
8 may seek and utilize the cooperation of any nonpublic agency
9 which it believes may be helpful.

10 (b) The activities of all officers and employees of the 11 Service in providing assistance under this title shall be con-
12 ducted in confidence and without publicity, and the Service
13 shall hold confidential any information acquired in the regu-
14 lar performance of its duties upon the understanding that it
15 would be so held. No officer or employee of the Service
16 shall engage in the performance of investigative or prose-
17 cuting functions for any department or agency in any litiga-
18 tion arising out of a dispute in which he acted on behalf of 19 the Service.

20 SEC. 404. Subject to the provisions of section 403 (b),
21 the Director shall, on or before January 31 of each year,
22 submit to the Congress a report of the activities of the Serv-
23 ice during the preceding fiscal year. Such report shall also 24 contain information with respect to the internal administra-
25 tion of the Service and may contain recommendations for

1 legislation necessary for improvements in such internal
2 administration.

3 TITLE V—COMMISSION ON CIVIL RIGHTS

4 SEC. 501. Section 102 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
5 (42 U.S.C. 1975a; 71 Stat. 634) is amended to read as
6 follows:

7 "RULES OF PROCEDURE OF THE COMMISSION HEARINGS

8 "SEC. 102. (a) The Chairman, or one designated by 9 him to act as Chairman at a hearing of the Commission, shall
10 announce in an opening statement the subject of the hearing.

11 "(b) A copy of the Commission's rules shall be made
12 available to the witness before the Commission.

13 "(c) Witnesses at the hearings may be accompanied by
14 their own counsel for the purpose of advising them concern-
15 ing their constitutional rights.

16 "(d) The Chairman or Acting Chairman may punish
17 breaches of order and decorum and unprofessional ethics on 18 the part of counsel, by censure and exclusion from the 19 hearings.

20 "(e) If the Commission determines that evidence or
21 testimony at any hearing may tend to defame, degrade, or
22 incriminate any person, it shall receive such evidence or 23 testimony or summary of such evidence or testimony in 24 executive session. In the event the Commission determines
25 that such evidence or testimony shall be given at a public

1 session, it shall afford such person an opportunity voluntarily
2 to appear as a witness and receive and dispose of requests
3 from such person to subpena additional witnesses.

4 "(f) Except as provided in sections 102 and 105 (f) of
5 this Act, the Chairman shall receive and the Commission
6 shall dispose of requests to subpena additional witnesses.

7 "(g) No evidence or testimony or summary of evidence
8 or testimony taken in executive session may be released or
9 used in public sessions without the consent of the Commis-
10 sion. Whoever releases or uses in public without the con-
11 sent of the Commission such evidence or testimony taken
12 in executive session shall be fined not more than $1,000, or 13 imprisoned for not more than one year.

14 "(h) In the discretion of the Commission, witnesses
15 may submit brief and pertinent sworn statements in writing
16 for inclusion in the record. The Commission is the sole
17 judge of the pertinency of testimony and evidence adduced
18 at its hearings.

19 "(i) Upon payment of the cost thereof, a witness may 20 obtain a transcript copy of his testimony given at a public
21 session or, if given at an executive session, when authorized
22 by the Commission.

23 "(j) A witness attending any session of the Commis-
24 sion shall receive $6 for each day's attendance and for the 25 time necessarily occupied in going to and returning from

1 the same, and 10 cents per mile for going from and return-
2 ing to his place of residence. Witnesses who attend at
3 points so far removed from their respective residences as to
4 prohibit return thereto from day to day shall be entitled to
5 an additional allowance of $10 per day for expenses of
6 subsistence, including the time necessarily occupied in going
7 to and returning from the place of attendance. Mileage
8 payments shall be tendered to the witness upon service of
9 a subpena issued on behalf of the Commission or any sub-
10 committee thereof.

11 "(k) The Commission shall not issue any subpena for 12 the attendance and testimony of witnesses or for the pro-
13 duction of written or other matter which would require the 14 presence of the party subpenaed at a hearing to be held
15 outside of the State wherein the witness is found or resides
16 or is domiciled or transacts business, or has appointed an 17 agent for receipt of service of process except that, in any
18 event, the Commission may issue subpenas for the attendance
19 and testimony of witnesses and the production of written or 20 other matter at a hearing held within fifty miles of the 21 place where the witness is found or resides or is domiciled
22 or transacts business or has appointed an agent for receipt
23 of service of process."

1 SEC. 502. Section 103 (a) of the Civil Rights Act of
2 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975b (a); 71 Stat. 634) is amended to
3 read as follows:

4 "SEC. 103. (a) Each member of the Commission who
5 is not otherwise in the service of the Government of the 6 United States shall receive the sum of $75 per day for each
7 day spent in the work of the Commission, shall be paid
8 actual travel expenses, and per diem in lieu of subsistence
9 expenses when away from his usual place of residence, in
10 accordance with section 5 of the Administrative Expenses
11 Act of 1946, as amended (5 U.S.C. 73b–2; 60 Stat. 808)."

12 SEC. 503. Section 103 (b) of the Civil Rights Act of 13 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975 (b); 71 Stat. 634) is amended to
14 read as follows:

15 "(b) Each member of the Commission who is otherwise
16 in the service of the Government of the United States shall 17 serve without compensation in addition to that received for 18 such other service, but while engaged in the work of the 19 Commission shall be paid actual travel expenses, and per 20 diem in lieu of subsistence expenses when away from his
21 usual place of residence, in accordance with the provisions
22 of the Travel Expense Act of 1949, as amended (5 U.S.C.
23 835–42; 63 Stat. 166)."

1 SEC. 504. Section 104 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
2 (42 U.S.C. 1975c; 71 Stat. 635), as amended, is further
3 amended to read as follows:

4 "DUTIES OF THE COMMISSION

5 "SEC. 104. (a) The Commission shall—

6 "(1) investigate allegations in writing under oath
7 or affirmation that certain citizens of the United States
8 are being deprived of their right to vote and have that
9 vote counted by reason of their color, race, religion, or
10 national origin; which writing, under oath or affirma-
11 tion, shall set forth the facts upon which such belief
12 or beliefs are based;

13 "(2) study and collect information concerning legal
14 developments constituting a denial of equal protection
15 of the laws under the Constitution;

16 "(3) appraise the laws and policies of the Federal
17 Government with respect to equal protection of the laws
18 under the Constitution; and

19 "(4) serve as a national clearinghouse for informa-
20 tion, and provide advice and technical assistance to
21 Government agencies, communities, industries, orga-
22 nizations, or individuals in respect to equal protection of 23 the laws, including but not limited to the fields of vot-
24 ing, education, housing, employment, the use of public
25 facilities, transportation, and the administration of justice.

1 The Commission may, for such periods as it deems neces-
2 sary, concentrate the performance of its duties on those spec-
3 ified in either paragraph (1), (2), (3), or (4) and may
4 further concentrate the performance of its duties under any
5 of such paragraphs on one or more aspects of the duties im-
6 posed therein.

7 "(b) The Commission shall submit interim reports to
8 the President and to the Congress at such times as either
9 the Commission or the President shall deem desirable, and
10 shall submit to the President and to the Congress a final
11 and comprehensive report of its activities, findings, and
12 recommendations not later than September 30, 1967.

13 "(c) Sixty days after the submission of its final report
14 and recommendations the Commission shall cease to exist."

15 SEC. 505. (a) Section 105 (a) of the Civil Rights Act
16 of 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975 (d); 71 Stat. 636) is amended
17 by striking out in the last sentence thereof "$50 per diem"
18 and inserting in lieu thereof "$75 per diem."

19 SEC. 506. Section 105 (g) of the Civil Rights Act of 20 1957 (42 U.S.C. 1975d (g); 71 Stat. 636) is amended to
21 read as follows:

22 "(g) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena,
23 any district court of the United States or the United States
24 court of any territory or possession, or the District Court
25 of the United States for the District of Columbia, within the

1 jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on or within the
2 jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or
3 refusal to obey is found or resides or is domiciled or transacts
4 business, or has appointed an agent for receipt of service of
5 process, upon application by the Attorney General of the 6 United States shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person
7 an order requiring such person to appear before the Com-
8 mission or a subcommittee thereof, there to produce evidence
9 if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter
10 under investigation; and any failure to obey such order of 11 the court may be punished by said court as a contempt
12 thereof."

13 SEC. 507. Section 105 of the Civil Rights Act of 1957
14 (42 U.S.C. 1975d; 71 Stat. 636), as amended by section
15 401 of the Civil Rights Act of 1960 (42 U.S.C. 1975d (h);
16 74 Stat. 89), is further amended by adding a new subsection
17 at the end to read as follows:

18 "(i) The Commission shall have the power to make
19 such rules and regulations as it deems necessary to carry
20 out the purposes of this Act."

21 TITLE VI—NONDISCRIMINATION IN FEDERALLY
22 ASSISTED PROGRAMS

23 SEC. 601. Notwithstanding any provision to the contrary
24 in any law of the United States providing or authorizing
25 direct or indirect financial assistance for or in connection

1 with any program or activity by way of grant, contract, loan,
2 insurance, guaranty, or otherwise, no such law shall be inter-
3 preted as requiring that such financial assistance shall be
